Under the Act here referred to, it was incumbent on a party who resorted to proof of a deed by producing a copy of it certified as prescribed, to establish the fact that the deed itself was lost or beyond his control, before he could avail himself of the use of a copy. In 1851 the Act concerning County Recorders was enacted, the twenty-first section of which reads as follows: "Copies of all papers duly filed in the Recorder's office, and transcripts from the books of records kept therein, certified by the Recorder to be full, true and perfect copies or transcripts, shall be received in all Courts, and in all actions and proceedings with the like effect as the original instruments, papers and notices recorded or filed, could be if produced."

This provision of the Act of 1851, gave to a certified copy of a deed duly filed in the Recorder's office, or which being so filed was duly recorded the like effect as evidence as the original of which it was a copy. The certified copy of a duly filed and recorded deed was proof of the execution of the deed, because the execution of it by the grantor necessarily had to exist as a condition precedent to its becoming duly filed in the Recorder's office, or to its becoming duly recorded. Then when, after the passage of this Act, a copy of a deed, duly filed and recorded, might be given in evidence in an action in a Court of justice, it became of equal probative force as the original deed would have been, had it been produced and its execution proved, and then given in evidence. (Powell's Heirs v. Hendricks, 3 Cal. 430.)

The deed from Maume to Dundon, as found copied in the book of records, was not duly filed for record nor duly recorded, because it was not acknowledged or proved so as to entitle it to be filed and recorded, and therefore a certified copy of the deed as it stood recorded did not prove the genuineness and due execution of the deed itself; and hence it was necessary, in order to make the certified copy evidence, to prove the existence of the original deed, and that it was executed by the person purporting in the copy thereof to be the grantor. For this purpose evidence was introduced of the execution by Mathew Maume of the deed of which the certified copy obtained from the Recorder was given in evidence. No objection seems to have been made to this species of evidence on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown to the Court that the original was lost or not within his power; and if such an objection had been made, we do not see how it could have prevailed without disregarding the twenty-first section of the Act of 1851, provided the deed in question, with the certificate of the Consular Agent, is to be deemed of a character falling within the purview of the Act of 1860; and that it was and is of such character we must hold in the affirmative upon the construction of that Act by this Court in the cases of Wallace v. Moody, 26 Cal. 387, and Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393.

Another objection was made to the introduction of this copy of the deed, which was that as from the copy produced, the deed purported to have been executed in the presence of an attesting witness, it was not competent to prove its execution otherwise than by him.

The deed was executed in Ireland, and the presumption is that the subscribing witness resided and remained there, and being a resident of a foreign country at the time of the trial, it was competent to prove the execution of the deed without producing the attesting witness, or otherwise accounting for his absence beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. But it is insisted on the part of the defendants that the handwriting of the attesting witness to the absent deed should have been proved before admitting the certified copy in evidence. The questions of law herein involved have been fully considered in the case of Landers and Wife v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, and to that case and the authorities therein cited, we refer in justification of the ruling of the Court below.

The plaintiff having established a case which entitled him to recover the demanded premises, the defendants offered to show that one of the defendants had acquired title thereto by a deed bearing date on the 11th of June, 1861, through a judgment obtained by Timothy Gleason, on the 27th of October, 1860, against Mathew Maume, in an action commenced in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, on the 2d day of November, 1859; and for this purpose the defendants proposed and offered to produce in evidence the judgment roll and all the proceedings in the case of Gleason, plaintiff, against Mathew Maume and others, defendants, and the deed of the 11th of June, 1861. The plaintiff objected to the evidence so offered on the ground that the record in that case showed that the Court acquired no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, Mathew Maume, and the objection was sustained.

The defendants' counsel have directed their argument very fully to the point that the Court below erred in excluding the evidence so offered, and on the side of the plaintiff the questions involved in this point made on the part of the defendants, have been elaborately discussed. We have examined this jurisdictional objection interposed by the plaintiff, and regard it as well founded. The same question exists in the case of McMinn v. Whelan and O'Connor, post, 300. and to our opinion in that case we refer for the reasons for our determination respecting the judgment in the case of Gleason v. Maume.

For the purpose of showing that as to a portion of the demanded premises the title had passed to one of the defendants since the action was commenced, the defendants offered in evidence a tax deed executed on the 19th day of July, 1862, by the Tax Collector, to the defendant, R. F. Ryan. This evidence was objected to by the plaintiff, on the ground that it could not be given in evidence without pleading it by supplemental answer, and the objection seems to have been sustained, though the record is somewhat ambiguous on the point, and to this ruling the defendants excepted.

The two hundred and fifty-sixth section of the Practice Act provides that "in an action for the recovery of real property, where the plaintiff shows a right to recover at the time the action was commenced, but it appears that his right has terminated during the pendency of the action, the verdict and judgment shall be according to the fact; and the plaintiff may recover damages for withholding the property." The plaintiff's right to recover a specific portion of the property, the defendants proposed to controvert by matters arising after the commencement of the action and two months before the trial. The fact proposed to be proved by the tax deed was affirmative matter and should have been set up by a supplemental answer, and then the plaintiff would have been apprised of what he would in such event have been required to meet. Facts which occur subsequent to filing an answer materially affecting the rights of the respective parties to the advantage of the defendant, and which if in evidence would necessarily change the result to the detriment of the plaintiff, should be embodied in a supplemental answer to authorize evidence of them without the plaintiff's consent. (Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.) Whether the tax deed would have constituted evidence of a transfer of any portion of the premises to the grantee therein named it is not necessary to decide in this case. It is enough that it was objected to at the threshold for the reason assigned. Its exclusion by the Court, which we hold to have been correct, also excludes the question as to its validity from consideration.

The defendants also offered in evidence a judgment of a Justice's Court, obtained by George E. Worn against Michael Dundon and others, and proposed, further, to prove that an execution was issued on this judgment and that a sale was made thereunder of Dundon's interest in the premises, and that the defendants had become the assignees of the certificate issued to the purchaser at such sale. The plaintiff objected that the proposed evidence should have been pleaded as an equitable defense, and the Court sustained the objection. It does not appear, by the offer or otherwise, when the sale under this judgment was made. If the time for redemption had not expired, the evidence was wholly incompetent to establish any right in the defendants, either legal or equitable, to the possession of the premises. If the time for redemption had passed, the defendants should have obtained their deed to which they would have been entitled, and then interposed their new defense by a supplemental answer. There can be no doubt of the correctness of the decision of the Court in excluding the evidence which the defendants thus proposed to give.

The defendants allege that the Court erred in refusing to postpone the trial of their cause upon the motion and affidavits in support of it, and also in refusing their application to be allowed to amend their answer so as to obviate the objections interposed by the plaintiff to the evidence offered by the defendants and excluded by the Court. Matters of this kind rest very much in the discretion of the Court, which should be exercised for the promotion of just ends, and in the case before us we are of opinion this discretion was properly exercised.

there was no evidence to warrant the verdict, unless a motion is made for a new trial, and a statement made which shows that no evidence was introduced to prove the fact. The presumption of the law is that there was evidence to sustain every material fact found by the jury.

OCCASION OF PRODUCING TESTIMONY ON TRIAL.—The assignee of a contract who claims under it may introduce it in evidence before giving proof that the opposite party had notice of its assignment.

APPEAL from the District Court, Second Judicial District, Tehama County.

John P. Welsh was the owner of a stallion, and on the 18th day of February, 1862, he contracted in writing with the plaintiff, to deliver him the horse for one year from that date. The defendant was to pay him one thousand dollars for the use of the horse for the year, and Welsh reserved the right to have the horse cover ten mares, to be brought to such place as the plaintiff might stand him in the State of California; provided, that no mares in Tehama County, or any county adjoining thereto, other than those owned by Welsh, should be included in the number. Plaintiff had the privilege of keeping the horse two years at the same rate.

On the 6th day of September, 1862, Welsh sold the stallion to defendant, and assigned to him the contract. Afterwards, plaintiff elected to keep the horse for another year.

The defendant had nine mares served by the horse in the season of 1863. Plaintiff brought this action to recover nine hundred dollars for the use of the horse in covering the mares. Defendant recovered judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

The Court, as a matter of law, erred in admitting the contract and assignment in evidence, without proof that plaintiff had notice thereof. It was said by Mr. Justice Baldwin, in Jackson v. Feather Water Company, 14 Cal. 25: "The rule is that every error is prima facie an injury to the party against whom it is made, and it rests with the other party clearly to show, not that probably no hurt was done, but that none could have been done by the error."

Adverse counsel seem to say in their brief that this Court must presume there was evidence showing notice to Doll of the assignment previous to the service of the mares, and quotes, in italics, the certificate of the judge to the effect that both plaintiff and defendant testified as to the question whether plaintiff had notice.

We will concede that the error would be cured, if the statement had said there was evidence before the jury tending to show that Doll had notice of the assignment before the mares were served — but there is nothing of the kind; the statement simply says the plaintiff and defendant both testified as to the question whether the defendant had notice of the assignment. Now, the Court will mark that the Judge don't say how they testified, nor whether they testified that plaintiff had notice, nor whether the burden of the testimony was to that effect that he had notice, nor, if he had notice, whether it was before or after the service of the mares, nor whether both parties testified alike on the question, nor that there was a conflict in the testimony.

Townsend & Combs, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

Upon the calling of this cause for trial the defendant demanded a jury, and the plaintiff objected to a trial by a jury on the ground that the defendant had waived a jury by failing to file a notice that a jury would be required six days before the commencement of the term. The Court overruled the objection and the plaintiff excepted. That decision is now assigned as error.

It is provided by section twenty-three of the Act of 1863, concerning grand and trial jurors, that "a jury shall be deemed waived unless the parties, or one of them, to the action or proceeding, shall, at least six days before the commencement of the term at which the same may be tried, file with the Clerk a notice that a jury will be required," and there can be no doubt that a jury may in that manner be waived by the parties. The Court, however, has the right, notwithstanding such waiver, to direct an issue of fact to be tried by a jury. Besides this, it would not be presumed that any injury had accrued to the plaintiff in consequence of the issues of fact being tried by a jury instead of the Court.

The contract made by the plaintiff and Welsh was assignable, and the defendant, as the assignee of the contract and the purchaser of the horse from Welsh, was entitled to all the benefits arising out of the contract and the ownership of the horse that Welsh would have been entitled to, had he continued to be the owner of the horse and the contract.

The remaining error assigned by the plaintiff is, "That the Court as a matter of law erred in admitting the contract and assignment in evidence without proof that plaintiff had had notice thereof." The appeal is taken from the judgment, and the record contains, besides the judgment roll, a statement on appeal, which appears to have been settled and certified as a bill of exceptions and as a statement on appeal, by the Judge of the District Court. The statement sets out the contract and its assignment, the fact that they were offered in evidence, that the plaintiff objected to their admission on the ground that the defendant had not proved notice to the plaintiff of the assignment, that the objection was overruled and the evidence admitted; and that the defendant duly excepted to the decision. The statement contains none of the evidence in the case except the contract and its assignment to the defendant and the bill of sale of the horse, by Welsh to the defendant, and it does not affirmatively appear that all the evidence in the case, or all that relates to the question of notice of the assignment is set out in the statement, but on the contrary it appears from the certificate to the statement that evidence was given upon that point, for it is stated in the certificate that "The plaintiff and defendant both having been sworn and having testified before the jury upon the trial of the cause as to the question whether the plaintiff had notice of the assignment of the contract prior to the service of the mares by the horse." The defendant in his answer alleges that the plaintiff had "actual and full notice" of the sale of the horse and the assignment of the contract to the defendant before the "season" of 1863. The argument of the plaintiff shows that this is an allegation of a material fact in the case. The verdict having been for the defendant, the presumption, in the absence of a motion for a new trial on the ground that such material fact in the case had not been proven, and of a statement in some part of the record, showing that no material evidence was introduced to prove the fact, is that the fact was sufficiently proven before the jury to warrant their verdict. The objection of the plaintiff to the introduction in evidence of the contract and assignment on the ground stated, does not show whether any evidence of notice to the plaintiff had then been introduced, and certainly it does not tend to show whether or not such evidence was subsequently given by either or both of the parties. The objection amounts in substance to this — that the defendant should not have been permitted to prove the assignment of the contract until after he had proven notice thereof to the plaintiff; that is, that the proof of notice should precede the proof of the fact, of which notice was given. The contract and its assignment were admissible in evidence before proof of notice to the plaintiff was introduced; but if the notice was not proven before the jury in some stage of the proceedings, then the important question discussed by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, as to the effect of the absence of proof of notice, would arise, and probably would be held to be a material question in the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, if he had moved for a new trial and had assigned as the cause the insufficiency of the evidence in that respect to justify the verdict. But we are not authorized from the mere statement of the plaintiff's ground of objection to the admission of the contract and its assignment to presume that no evidence was given during the trial, of notice to the plaintiff, and thereupon to determine the consequences flowing from the failure of the defendant to notify the plaintiff of the assignment of the contract.

CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND AS EVIDENCE.—In an action for the recovery of real estate, a contract in writing signed by both plaintiff and defendant, for the sale and conveyance of the land in dispute by plaintiff to defendant, is admissible in evidence on behalf of plaintiff, for the purpose of proving that defendant obtained possession of the premises from plaintiff, and went in under him.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Moore & Laine, for Appellants.

Whitman & Wells, for Respondent.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

This is an action to recover real estate. The plaintiff avers seizin and possession on the second day of June, 1862, and entry and ouster by the defendants on the same day. The complaint is not verified, and the answer, after denying generally all the allegations of the complaint, proceeds and avers: First—That all the title or claim which the plaintiff has to the land in controversy is derived from a pretended Spanish grant, which has been rejected and declared null and void by the Supreme Court of the United States; and that said land is public land belonging to the Government of the United States. Second—That the defendant, John R. Price, has taken up and holds said land under the possessory Act of this State, and had done so prior to the alleged entry and ouster. Third—That the defendant, Mary E. Price, is the wife of her codefendant, John R. Price, and has therefore been improperly joined as a defendant. Fourth—That plaintiff's cause of action has not accrued within five years, etc.

The trial was by the Court, without a jury. The findings and judgment were for the plaintiff as against John R. Price, and as to Mary E. Price, the plaintiff took a nonsuit.

The defendants offered no evidence, but after the plaintiff had closed his case, moved for a nonsuit, which was denied; and the question presented for our consideration is whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon his testimony.

It appears that the plaintiff sought to recover as landlord and upon notice to quit; and to make out his case he offered in evidence two instruments in writing, one signed by himself and the defendant John R. Price, and the other by himself and Mary E. Price. Both are contracts for the sale and conveyance of the land in question. The first was dated on the 20th day of February, 1856, and the last on the 24th day of December, in the same year. At the foot of the first appears a release by Price of all his interest in the contract, dated on the 23d of December, being the day next preceding that on which the contract with his wife was executed. At the time these instruments were offered, the counsel for plaintiff stated that they were offered solely for the purpose of proving that the defendants obtained possession of the premises from the plaintiff, and went in under him. Both instruments contain a covenant that the defendants may enter, possess and enjoy the premises until a breach of the contract on their part. Both of these instruments were objected to by the defendants upon the ground that they were "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent testimony." The objection was overruled, and the defendants excepted.

Both instruments were certainly relevant, material and competent for the purpose of proving that the defendants received the possession from the plaintiff, and, inferentially, a prior possession in him, which was all that was claimed for them. So far as the purposes for which they were introduced are concerned, the fact that Price had released his interest in the first, and the fact that his wife had no capacity in law to make the second, is of no consequence. They were, nevertheless, written admissions, by both of the defendants, of the prior possession of the plaintiff, and that they obtained their possession from him. It is obvious from the date of the release of the first and the date of the second that the release of the first was made merely to clear the way for the second contract, for some reason which does not appear, and not for the purpose of changing the substantial relation of the parties, or the tenure by which the defendants held the premises. Doubtless all parties supposed that the wife had legal capacity to make the second contract, and it was intended as a substitute for the first. The first contract was ended by the release by Price and acceptance thereof by the plaintiff, and the second was a nullity for the want of capacity in one of the contracting parties; but although thus of no account as contracts, they were still good as evidence to show from whom and upon what terms the defendants obtained possession of the premises.

The plaintiff next introduced two papers purporting to be notices to quit by plaintiff to each of the defendants. They were objected to by defendants, upon the ground that they were irrelevant and incompetent. The objection was overruled and the defendants excepted.

They were neither irrelevant nor incompetent. The action was between landlord and tenants at will, and in order to give the former a right of action notices to quit are necessary.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The defendant was a corporation. The following is a copy of the note sued, and on which plaintiffs failed to recover:

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action on two promissory notes, claimed to have been executed by defendant in favor of plaintiffs. Judgment was rendered for plaintiffs on the first note set out in the complaint, and against them on the second. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

The Court finds as follows, viz: "The second note, set up in the second count of the complaint, was given to secure the personal indebtedness of one E. M. Banvard to plaintiffs, and no part of the consideration of said note was received by defendant, or went to its benefit. The said Banvard was individually indebted to plaintiffs, who wanted security for such indebtedness, and the note in question was given as such security. After the note was given, it was ratified and approved by the Board of Directors of said turnpike company defendant, by an order spread upon the minutes to that effect."

The officers of a corporation have no power to authorize the execution of a note as surety for another in respect to a matter having no relation to the corporate business, and in which the corporation has no interest. Such a transaction is not within the scope of its business, and a party receiving such note with notice of the circumstances under which it is given cannot recover on it. (1 Parsons on Notes and Bills, 166; Bank of Genessee v. Patchin Bank, 13 N. Y. 309; Angell and Ames on Corp., Secs. 257 and 258.) The note in question was given to plaintiffs for a debt due them from Banvard, one of the Directors of the corporation, and creates no liability in the plaintiffs' hands against the corporation. The Directors acted without authority in making and ratifying the note, and it is, therefore, not the note of the corporation.

The only other point is, that the evidence showing the note to have been given for a debt due from Banvard was improperly admitted, for the reason that the facts constituting the defense were not pleaded. The answer denies the making and delivery of the note by defendant, and the evidence introduced establishes the fact that the making and delivery of the note was not the act of defendant. It shows that there never was any liability. There is no confession and avoidance. The evidence was admissible under the issues.

CHARLES L. WILSON v. SAMUEL BRANNAN.

MORTGAGE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—The mortgagee of personal property may, after the conditions of the mortgage are broken, upon giving reasonable notice to the mortgagor of the time and place of sale, sell the property mortgaged at public auction, and if the sale be bona fide, an absolute title to the property passes to the purchaser.

MORTGAGE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY HAS TWO REMEDIES.—The mortgagee of personal property has two remedies, either of which he may pursue at his election. He may resort to a Court of equity to foreclose the mortgagor's right to redeem, or to compel a redemption, or he may obtain the same object by a fair public sale of property after due notice to the mortgagor.

NOTICE OF SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY MORTGAGED.—What is a reasonable notice to the mortgagor of the time and place of sale at auction of personal property mortgaged, must be determined from all the circumstances of each particular case, and he who alleges that a notice is not sufficient must assign some reason for his allegation.

SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY PLEDGED.—Personal property pledged to secure a debt may be sold by the pledgee, after the debt to secure which it was pledged has become due, if the sale be made at public auction and after reasonable notice of the time and place of sale be given to the pledgee.

RIGHTS OF MORTGAGOR IN PERSONAL PROPERTY MORTGAGED.—The mortgagor of personal property has an equity of redemption in the mortgaged property after the conditions of the mortgage are broken, which he may assert by paying the debt and redeeming the property at any time before this equity of redemption has been cut off by a foreclosure or by a sale at auction.

RIGHT OF MORTGAGOR TO REDEMPTION PERSONAL PROPERTY.—If the mortgagee of personal property refuses, after condition broken, to allow the mortgagor to redeem the property mortgaged, the mortgagor may assert this right by a bill in equity, if he brings his suit within a reasonable time.

RIGHT OF ONE OF TWO MORTGAGEES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—If a mortgage on personal property is made to two persons, to secure the separate debt of each, either mortgagee, after condition broken, may advertise and sell at public auction the undivided interest which he holds in the property as security for his debt, and the purchaser will become a tenant in common with the owner of the unsold portion.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff appealed from the order refusing the injunction.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Cook, and Hittell, for Appellant.

Can the mortgagee of a chattel mortgage in California sell the mortgaged property without a judicial foreclosure?

It is well known that the old common law doctrine regarded a mortgage as an absolute sale of the property mortgaged, to be defeated upon the performance of the condition; and this doctrine applied as well to mortgages of personal as of real estate. But the equitable interposition of the English chancery early changed the rule in regard to real property, and it soon became settled law that real mortgages were mere securities and that there could be no sales of mortgaged real estate by the mortgagee without foreclosure. In regard to chattels, on account probably of their being sold with delivery, and easily transferred from hand to hand, the old idea of absolute sale upon condition subsequent had a firmer hold; and it will be seen that such sales, which are still possible as to personal though not as to real estate, still occur, and are more or less confounded in the books with what we now understand to be meant by the term "mortgage" — that is to say, a security in contradistinction to a sale on condition.

The mortgage of the present day, unless the nature of the transaction or the express terms of the contract show otherwise, is regarded as a mere security, and resembles what was known in the old common law and in the civil law, as a pledge.

Argument for Appellant.

While the notion of a mortgage being a sale upon condition remained, it was held that the property upon default became absolute in the mortgagee. But from the earliest times there was a recognized distinction between such mortgages in the way of conditional sales and mortgages in the way of securities, or pledges.

Glanville, the earliest of writers on the common law whose works have come down to us, says that a loan is sometimes made on the security of a pledge, (sub vadi positione) and the pledge may consist of chattels, lands, or rent. Sometimes possession is immediately given of the pledge on receipt of the loan, and sometimes it is not. Sometimes the thing is pledged for a term, and sometimes without. When a chattel is pledged, and possession is given, and for a certain term, the creditor is bound to keep the pledge safely, and not to use it to its detriment. If it be agreed that, in case the debtor should not redeem the pledge at the end of the term, the pledge shall remain with the creditor as his own property — the agreement must be observed. But if there be no such agreement, and there be a fixed time of redemption, and the debtor make delay in payment, the creditor may quicken the redemption by a writ (of which he gives the form) and which requires the debtor without delay to redeem (acquietet rem quam invadiavit) the pledge. On the return of the writ, if the defendant confessed the pledge, he was commanded to redeem in a reasonable time, and on default, the creditor had license to treat the pledge as his own. But if the pledge was made without mention of any particular term, the creditor might (debitum petere) demand his debt at any time, and the debt being discharged, the creditor was bound to restore the pledge without any deterioration.

And Mr. Chief Justice Kent, from whose opinion we cite the above extract, regards the doctrine laid down by Glanville, and followed by a number of early cases in England, which he also refers to, as correct. The property was to be considered as a mere deposit to be detained as security. (See Cortelyou v. Lansing, 2 Caines' Cases, 203.)

Argument for Appellant.

It is unnecessary to particularly cite the old cases upon this subject; but it may be stated generally that one series of them, commencing in Capper v. Dickinson, 1 Rolle, 315, followed the notion of a conditional sale, and the other series that of a pledge in the way of security. The case in Rolle went so far as to hold that if the property was not redeemed at the day, it was forfeited; and this decision, though as rigorous and as odious as the lex commissoria of Rome, which it resembled, was no more than the logical and legitimate result of the premiss upon which it was based, namely, an absolute sale upon condition subsequent. It never could properly or equitably be applied to cases of delivery of property in the way of security, or to a case, such as the one at bar, where the delivery was expressly as "collateral security" and in no respect as a sale.

The same reasons in favor of the equity of redemption, which apply to a mortgage of real estate, apply to a mortgage of personal property; and there is no good reason why the law should be different in respect to the two cases. We do not deny that there are cases, and some comparatively late ones, in which the old doctrine that a mortgagee after default may sell upon notice, is repeated; but we believe that in all those cases the term "mortgage" was misapplied, and that the contracts embraced something more than mere security, and either amounted to absolute sales with conditions of defeasance, or expressly contained powers of sale. (See Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 John. Ch. 99; 2 Story Eq. Jur. § 1,033; Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392.)

We therefore feel safe in affirming, that by the general rules of law, unless a power of sale is expressly given or necessarily to be implied from the nature of the contract, there is no authority in a mortgagee to sell personal property without a judicial foreclosure.

In California, as we have intimated above, we do not know that the point has ever been raised; but all the decisions in regard to real estate mortgages and the nature of mortgages in general, as well as a fair construction of our statutes, lead irresistibly in our opinion to the conclusion that whatever may be the law in England, and other States, in California there can be no nonjudicial sale of pledged or mortgaged personal property except under an express power. (Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461; Smith v. '49 and '56 Quartz Mining Co. 14 Cal. 242; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 287; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Practice Act, Sec. 246.)

J. W. Winans, for Respondent.

The common law doctrine that a mortgagee of chattels has the absolute title, subject only to be defeated by performance of the contingency, and may sell or otherwise dispose of them after forfeiture, is asserted in Tucker v. Williams, 1 Peere Williams, 261; Lockwood v. Ewer, 2 Atk. 303; Westerdell v. Dale, 7 Term, 306, 312; Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Vesey, 365, and elsewhere. It is thus clearly set forth in Parker v. Banker, 22 Pick. 46: "The law appears to be well settled, both in England and in this country, that the pledgee of personal property, after the debt becomes due, may sell without a judicial process and a decree of foreclosure, upon giving reasonable notice to the debtor to redeem. It was so decided in Tucker v. Wilson, 1 P. Wms. 261, and in Lockwood v. Ewer, 2 Atk. 303. The same rule of law was laid down in De Lisle v. Priestman, 1 Browne's Penn. Rep. 176, and in New York by Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 100, and again in his Commentaries, 2 Kent, 3 ed. 582. The principle thus settled seems to be founded in good sense, and may be essentially necessary to enable the pledgee to avail himself of his pledge in a reasonable manner, for the discharge of his demand." This doctrine of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts is also sanctioned in Alabama. "By the contract of mortgage," (says the Court in Brown v. Lipscomb, 9 Porter, 475,) "the title was vested in the mortgagee, subject to be divested by the payment of the money on or before the day stipulated. On the failure to pay, the title became absolute, and the mortgagee had nothing but an equity of redemption.

the possession having accompanied the mortgage." And, again, it has been so held in Missouri: "It is well settled that a mortgagee of personal chattels, after the day of redemption has passed, is regarded in law as the absolute owner." (Robinson v. Campbell, 8 Missouri, 366.) And in the same case, page 616, the Court thus decides: "Unquestionably, after forfeiture, the mortgagee has the legal title — is, in the eye of the law, the absolute owner of the chattels. It is difficult to conceive of a title of this character accompanied with such restrictions as to prevent its transfer to another. How can a man be said to be the absolute owner of a chattel, and yet unable to make any valid disposition of that chattel, by sale, gift, or otherwise?" Such is also the view taken in New Jersey; for says the Court, in Hall v. Snowhill, 2 Green's N. J. 18: "The mortgage is a grant in presenti, subject to be defeated on payment of the money intended to be secured. The legal title to these chattels passed by the mortgage, and vested in the plaintiff." And the same principle prevails in North Carolina. (Holmes v. Hall, 3 Dev. N. C. 98.) In Flanders v. Barstow, 6 Shepley, Maine, 357. the Court sanctions the doctrine.

Although the character and effect of real mortgages have changed under the influence of modern decisions, yet no such change has taken place in regard to personal mortgages, nor has the distinction between real and personal mortgages been removed or affected by modern rulings.

The whole reasoning of appellant is based upon the proposition that there is no difference between real and personal mortgages, and that the decisions of this Court in reference to mortgages on real estate apply with equal force to mortgages on chattels. "Is it not evident," he says, "that the Legislature not only did, but intended to place personal property mortgages upon the same footing as real, and in both to take away the right claimed under the strict old notion of the common law to belong to the mortgagee, of selling without a judicial foreclosure?" This view of appellant is neither sustained by reasoning, analogy, or the authorities. The distinction between real and personal mortgages is just as decided and just as arbitrary now as it was a century ago, and just as absolute in this State as elsewhere. Our Supreme Court has in no instance applied its decisions affecting real mortgages to those upon the personalty. Indeed, the very reasoning of those decisions shows them inapplicable to the case of chattels.

On the other hand, the case of Wildman v. Radenaker, already cited, and the case of Smith v. '49 and '56 Quartz Mining Company, 14 Cal. 242, sustain the distinction which we claim. But let us examine what the books say upon this point. "There is a wide difference," holds the Court in Stewart v. Slater, 6 Duer, 99, "between a mortgage of lands and a mortgage of chattels. In the first case, as the law in this State is now settled, the estate, subject to the mortgage, remains in the mortgagor, is bound by a judgment, and may be sold under an execution against him; the mortgage is regarded merely as a security for the debt, and not as a transfer of the title. But a mortgage of personal chattels in all cases vests the legal title in the mortgagee, and when by the terms, or by the legal construction of the instrument, he has an immediate right to the possession, although the possession may not in fact have been changed, he is, in judgment of law, the absolute owner, and it is merely as his bailee, and by his sufferance that the mortgagor retains the possession." Here we are furnished with a description, both full and clear, of the difference between a mortgage on real and one on personal estate. Again, the distinction between them is as important and absolute in regard to remedies as in regard to rights. Thus Mr. Chancellor Kent says, in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 99, 100: "It seems now to be admitted (though Lord Chancellor Harcourt once held otherwise) that the creditor who holds the stock in mortgage is not bound to wait for a bill of foreclosure and decree of sale, as in the case of a mortgage on land, but may sell on reasonable previous notice to the creditor to redeem. * * *

But if a freehold estate be held by way of mortgage for a debt, then it may be laid down as an invariable rule that the creditor must first obtain a decree for a sale under a bill of foreclousura." The learned Chancellor proceeds to say, that for a party holding land in pledge, to sell the same at his own pleasure, "would open a door to the most shameful imposition and abuse;" which remark, appellant, by an easy but not very ingenious transition, has assumed the author to have applied to sales of personal instead of real property. The opinion of the Court, in Butler v. Miller, 1 Comstock, 500, is equally explicit. "A mortgage upon real estate," they declare, "is a mere security upon the land, and gives the mortgagee no title or estate therein whatever." Now this is precisely what this Court has determined in the cases quoted by appellant, and in other cases. Does it then follow that a personal mortgage is in the same category? Hear what the New York Supreme Court says in continuation: "Whereas a personal mortgage is more than a mere security, it is a sale of the thing mortgaged, and operates as a transfer of the whole legal title to the mortgagee, subject only to be defeated by the full performance of the condition." This question, then, is here fully passed upon by the Supreme Court of a State whose system of jurisprudence is analagous to our own, or rather identical, since we have preferred the appropriation of her system to the adoption for ourselves of any independent plan.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This case has come to this Court on an appeal from an order refusing to grant an injunction. The respondent being about to sell at auction certain personal property, mortgaged or pledged to him by the appellant, the latter filed a complaint to prevent the sale, and obtained an order requiring respondent to show cause why an injunction should not issue as prayed for, and a further order temporarily restraining the sale. The respondent appeared and showed cause, and thereupon the injunction was refused and the temporary restraining order discharged.

The facts of the case are in substance as follows: On the 10th day of June, 1861, respondent loaned to appellant seventy.

five thousand dollars, and one William A. Dana loaned him fifteen thousand dollars; for the payment of these sums, one year from that date, with interest at the rate of two per cent per month, appellant gave his promissory notes, to wit: to the respondent a note for fifty-thousand dollars and a note for twenty-five thousand dollars, and to said Dana a note for fifteen thousand dollars. To secure the payment of these notes at their maturity, appellant executed and delivered to the respondent and Dana, a chattel mortgage of personal property consisting of four hundred tons of iron and one hundred bonds of the California Central Railroad Company of one thousand dollars each, with a quantity of cars and locomotives not then set up and put together, all of which property was at the time delivered to the mortgagees. The parties at the time contemplated that the appellant should thereafter have possession of the cars and locomotives, and it was agreed between them that they should be set up and put together when a new mortgage under and in accordance with the provisions of the Chattel Mortgage Act of 1857 (Laws 1857, p. 347,) should be executed, by which the mortgagor should mortgage to the same mortgagees the cars and locomotives so put together, and then the same should be delivered to the appellant. The cars and locomotives were accordingly set up and their construction completed in October, 1861, when the new mortgage was executed and the cars and locomotives were delivered to the appellant. This new mortgage was given not only to secure the sum of money specified in the first mortgage, but also the further sum of ten thousand dollars loaned to appellant by respondent on the 20th of June, 1861. The iron and bonds were held by respondent and Dana in possession under and subject to the mortgage first executed, and after the execution of the second mortgage the appellant held the possession of the cars and locomotives under and subject to its provisions.

The first mortgage contained therein apt words of bargain and sale of the property described and declared to be delivered by the mortgagor to the mortgagees, but it was also declared that such sale was intended as collateral security for the payment of certain promissory notes described, given by the appellant to the respondent and to Dana respectively, which were payable, according to their tenor and effect, on the 10th of June, 1862, with interest at a specified rate; and it was provided by the mortgage that if the notes should not be paid at maturity the mortgagees or their assigns should have power to foreclose as to the property sold and delivered, or to subject the same in any legal manner to the payment of the sums of money advanced to the mortgagees respectively, with interest according to the tenor and effect of the notes.

The first mortgage also provided that the mortgagor should give to the respondent and Dana additional security in case it should be ascertained that the property mortgaged was insufficient as security for the amount of his indebtedness to them, and by the complaint it appears that afterwards, in June, 1862, eighty-five second class bonds of the California Central Railroad Company, each of which was in the sum of one thousand dollars, were delivered to the respondent as an additional security in pursuance of the stipulation in the mortgage thereto relating, and it is alleged in the complaint that at the time the last mentioned bonds were delivered they were so delivered with the understanding and on the condition that the appellant should have a reasonable extension of time to allow him to make negotiations for raising money to discharge the mortgages and the debts thereby secured. The respondent, by his answer, denied that these bonds were delivered to him with the understanding and condition alleged, but, on the contrary, averred that they were delivered in pursuance of the stipulation so to do contained in the mortgage first executed.

The notes made and delivered to the respondent remaining unpaid, he gave notice to the appellant on the 15th of February, 1863, that unless the same were paid and the iron and the bonds mentioned in the first mortgage, and the eighty-five bonds given as additional security, were redeemed, he, the respondent, would cause the same, to the extent of the respondent's interest, together with the appellant's equity of redemption therein, to be sold at public auction on the 28th day of the same month of February, at a particular hour of the day and at a place specified. This notice also stated that such sale would be made at the time and place designated after giving public notice thereof for eight days in the Alta California newspaper. Such notice was first published in the newspaper named on the 20th of February, 1863, and this action was commenced on the 24th of the same month.

The question raised and to be determined is, whether the mortgagee or pledgee of goods and chattels delivered to him by the mortgagor or pledgor as security for the payment of a debt at a particular day can sell the property after the debt has become due, in the manner proposed by the respondent in this case.

The iron and bonds which are involved in this controversy were not a part of the property mentioned in the second mortgage, and as security, could only be subjected to sale under the first mortgage, in some mode sanctioned by the law of the land, other than the Chattel Mortgage Act of 1857. By the seventeenth section of the Act concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts (Laws of 1850, p. 267), it is provided that "no mortgage of personal property hereafter made, shall be valid against any other persons than the parties thereto, unless possession of the property be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee." When this statute was passed, the common law had been adopted by legislative enactment. (Laws 1850, p. 219.) And as between the parties to a mortgage of chattels, their rights were to be determined by the rules of the common law on the subject. (Wildman v. Rademaker, 20 Cal. 617.)

The first mortgage seems to have been executed and the property delivered to the mortgagees, with the view to conform to the requirements of the seventeenth section of the Act concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts. By the common law a grant or conveyance of goods in gage or mortgage passes the legal title conditionally to the mortgagee, and if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute at law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. (Story on Bailments, Sec. 287.)

Opinion of the Court.

The Supreme Court of New York, in Langdon v. Buel, 9 Wend. 83, held that a mortgagee of personal property, upon failure of the mortgagor to perform the condition of the mortgage, acquires an absolute title to the property. This, say the Court, is well established to be the legal effect and operation of a chattel mortgage. The same doctrine is laid down in Brown v. Bement, 8 John. 96; in Ackley v. Finch, 7 Cow. 292; in Case v. Boughton, 11 Wend. 109; in Patchin v. Pierce, 12 Wend. 61; in Smith v. Acker, 23 Wend. 667, 668; in Burdick v. McVanner, 2 Denio, 171; in Fuller v. Acker, 1 Hill, 475; and in Butler v. Miller, 1 Coma. 500. To these might be added many decisions to the same effect of the highest Courts of that State. The same doctrine in substance was held by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Williams v. Roger, 7 Mo. 556, and in Robinson v. Campbell, 8 Mo. 366, 615; by the Supreme Court of Alabama in Brown v. Lipscomb, 9 Porter, 475; by the Supreme Court of Maine, in Flanders v. Barstow, 18 Maine, 357, and by the Court of Errors and Appeals of Mississippi in Thornhill v. Gilmer, 4 Sm. & Marsh, 153. The Supreme Court of New Jersey held, in Hall v. Snowhill, 2 Green, 9, 18, that the mortgagee of personal property is considered the true owner, and has a right to the actual possession and control of it in the event of the non-payment of the debt due him from the mortgagor—that the mortgage is a grant in presenti, subject to be defeated on payment of the money intended to be secured.

The cases which hold that at law the title of the mortgagee to the chattels mortgaged becomes absolute upon the breach of the stipulation to pay at a particular day, recognize that the mortgagor has an equitable right or interest in the property of which he may avail himself by paying the debt due and thus redeeming the property; and as long as the right of redemption remains in the mortgagor, it may be said, viewing the subject from an equitable stand-point, that the title of the mortgagee is not to every intent absolute. In mortgages of personal property there exists, after condition broken as in mortgages of land, an equity of redemption, which may be asserted by the mortgagor, if he brings his suit to redeem within a reasonable time. (2 Story's Eq. Jur. Section 1,031; Westbrook v. Kemp, 1 Vesey, 278.)

The argument on the part of the appellant is to the effect that the mortgagee of personal property is limited to the remedy of judicial foreclosure for the purpose of subjecting the property to a sale for the satisfaction of the debt due. The rule that prevails in relation to the foreclosure of mortgages on real property is invariable that the creditor must obtain a decree of a competent Court for a sale of the mortgaged premises, unless the mortgage deed provides otherwise for the sale of the lands mortgaged. (Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 John. Ch. 99, 100; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 593.) But Judge Story says (2 Story's Eq. Jur. Section 1,031): "There is a difference between mortgages of land and mortgages of personal property, in regard to the rights of the mortgagee, after a breach of the condition. In the latter case there is no necessity to bring a bill of foreclosure; but the mortgagee, upon due notice, may sell the personal property mortgaged, as he could under the civil law, and the title, if the sale be bona fide made, will vest absolutely in the vendee. And it makes no difference whether the personal property mortgaged consists of goods or of stock, or of personal annuities," and he cites cases and elementary authorities in support of the doctrine thus declared. (See, also, 2 Story's Eq. Jur. Secs. 1,008, 1,009; Story on Bailments, Sec. 309, and the authorities cited; Patchin v. Pierce, 12 Wend. 61.)

The mortgagee has two remedies, either of which he may pursue at his election. He may resort to a Court of equity to compel a redemption or to foreclose the mortgagor's right to redeem, or he may obtain the same object by a fair public sale of the property after due notice to the mortgagor. (Charter v. Stevens, 3 Denio, 35.) The mortgagor's right of redemption remains until foreclosure by judicial sentence in the one case, or sale after due notice in the other; and this right may be enforced in equity. (Powell on Mortgages, Sec. 1,041, and cases before cited.)

Personal property pledged may in like manner be sold after the debt which it was delivered to secure has become due, if such sale be made at public auction and upon reasonable notice thereof to the pledgor (Mauge v. Heringhi, 26 Cal. 577;) or, if the pledgee prefers, he may file a bill in a Court of equity against the pledgor for a foreclosure and sale. (Story on Bailments, Sec. 310; Edwards on Bailments, 249, 250.)

Whether the iron and bonds delivered be regarded as a pledge or mortgage can make no practical difference, as in either case the mode of subjecting the security to sale for the payment of the debt may be the same, and hence we have made no reference to the distinction to be found in the books between a pledge and mortgage, and we deem it unnecessary in disposing of the case before us to do so. (See on the subject, Wilson v. Little, 2 Coms. 445; Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 148.)

It is insisted on the part of the appellant that the two hundred and forty-sixth section of the Practice Act is virtually a denial of any right in the mortgagee to any other remedy for the recovery of a debt or the enforcement of a right secured by a mortgage or other lien on personal property than by an action. The statute generally denominated the Practice Act, is an Act to regulate proceedings in civil cases in the Courts of justice in this State, and the language of the two hundred and forty-sixth section providing that there shall be but one action for the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage or lien upon real or personal property must be understood as relating to civil actions commenced and prosecuted in the Courts of justice of the State, and not to embrace and control proceedings sanctioned by the common law, which in no just legal sense can be called actions at law or suits in equity.

Notwithstanding the general doctrine that real property mortgaged can only be subjected to sale for the payment of the debt thereby secured, by judicial decree, in the absence of any express power granted by the mortgagor to sell and convey the premises for the payment of the debt, the Court in

Opinion of the Court.

Fogarty against Sawyer, 17 Cal. 593, held that a sale of mortgaged real estate might be made in accordance with the conditions of the power, and that a sale so made would pass to the purchaser a good title upon its consummation by a conveyance. If a sale of real property could be made under a power granted in the mortgage, we see no reason why a sale of personal property, mortgaged or pledged, could not be made for the debt secured by it and due, under the authority conferred on the mortgagee by the law of the land.

It is maintained by the appellant that as the two mortgages had relation to one and the same transaction, and as the second mortgage could not, under the provisions of the Act of 1857, be enforced otherwise than by judicial foreclosure, that therefore the mortgagee could not proceed under the first mortgage to an enforcement of payment of the debt in any other mode than by an action in a Court of equity to obtain a foreclosure and a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. Though the object of the second mortgage was to secure the debt for which the first was given, it does not follow that the first mortgage, as to the iron and bonds, was in any degree affected by the second. In fact it is manifest that the second mortgage was intended, as originally contemplated, as a substitute for the first only so far as the cars and locomotives were concerned.

If it had not been the purpose of the parties that the appellant should have the possession of the cars and locomotives, there would have been no necessity for the second mortgage, and it is fair to presume it would not have been executed except to preserve the security on the portion of the property delivered to the appellant. It is by the first mortgage alone that the mortgagees have any lien on the iron and bonds, and their rights in respect thereto are the same as they would have been if the second mortgage had not been executed.

The respondent and Dana were joint mortgagees, holding the property mortgaged and in their possession as security for the debts due them respectively in the proportions that their respective demands bore to each other, and it is suggested on behalf of appellant that the respondent could not proceed to sell the property to the extent of his interest in it without the co-operation of Dana. The respondent did not propose to sell any greater proportion of the property than the undivided interest which he held as security for his own debt. That he might do so is decided in Tyler v. Taylor, 8 Barb. 585. The purchaser at such sale of the undivided interest would become the owner of such interest or share as a tenant in common with the owner of the remaining and unsold portion of the property, and hold it discharged of the appellant's former equity of redemption.

The objection that the notice to the appellant calling on him to redeem, and of the sale, was not a reasonable notice, we think is not well founded. The appellant was aware that the debt had at that time been due for more than eight months, and it does not appear that he had any valid reason for delaying payment, nor does it appear that the period of thirteen days within which he was at liberty to redeem after notice given, was not sufficient if he could redeem at all. In Willoughby v. Comstock, 3 Hill, 389, the Court held that a notice of two days of the time and place of sale was sufficient, and it is not pretended in this case that a notice for thirty or sixty days, or even for any longer period, would have been of any advantage to the appellant. In the absence of any positive rule of law or established custom on the subject, the reasonableness of the notice as to time must be determined from all the circumstances of the particular case; and he who alleges that a notice in this respect is not sufficient, should assign some reason for his allegation.

From an attentive examination of all the questions presented and argued by the learned counsel for the respective parties, we are of the opinion the Court below properly decided the case and that the order should be affirmed.

Order affirmed.

Statement of Facts.

BERNARD SCHROEDER v. CARL JAHNS, ADMINISTRATOR, WITH THE WILL ANNEXED, OF HERMAN SCHROEDER, DECEASED.

PLEADING STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—The general allegation in an answer, that the action is barred by the statute prescribing two or any other number of years as the limitation for bringing the action, is not the correct method of pleading the Statute of Limitations.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS IN CASES OF TRUST.—A deposit of money by one with another to be held by him in trust for the depositor until he shall demand it, constitutes an express continuing trust, and no right of action will accrue to the cestui que trust until the trustee assumes a position in hostility to the trust relation, either by refusing to pay the money on demand, or by some other act, nor will the Statute of Limitations commence running until a demand is made for the money, or the trustee has violated his contract.

SAME.—In such case if no demand be made on the trustee, and he does not violate his contract in his lifetime, but demand is made on his administrator after his death, the Statute of Limitations does not commence running against the intestate, but the cause of action accrues against the administrator.

ANSWER SETTING UP STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If the complaint in an action against an administrator avers that the intestate received plaintiff's money in his lifetime, to keep the same for plaintiff as the depository thereof until the same should be demanded of him, and that the money remained in the intestate's hands at the time of his death, subject to plaintiff's order, an answer which sets up as a defense that the cause of action did not accrue to plaintiff within two years next before the death of the intestate, and that the same is barred by the Statute of Limitations, does not raise any issue in the case.

DEFECTIVE FINDING OF FACTS.—If the answer sets up a counterclaim and the Court finds that the defendant introduced no evidence as to the counterclaim, the finding is defective; but if the evidence is all before the appellate Court, and it appears that no testimony was introduced by either party as to the counterclaim, the judgment will not be reversed on account of the defective finding.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court below found the following facts, viz:

That between the first day of January, 1853, and the death of the deceased, Herman Schroeder, there was deposited with and collected by said Herman Schroeder money to the amount of two thousand nine hundred dollars, to be held by him on deposit and in trust for the plaintiff, and was so held by him at the time of his death, with the exception of three hundred and forty-seven dollars paid by said Herman Schroeder, in his lifetime, to the said plaintiff, leaving a balance in said Herman Schroeder's hands, at the time of his death, of two thousand five hundred and fifty-three dollars; and it appearing from the pleadings that said claim was duly presented to the defendant as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of the said Herman Schroeder, that the same was rejected by the defendant, and the action brought therein within the time required by the statute.

The defendant excepted to the finding of the Court for insufficiency, and the Court then made the following amendments to its findings:

1st. After the word "Schroeder" insert the words: "And more than four years before the death of said Herman Schroeder or the commencement of this action, to wit, in the month of January, 1853."

2d. After the word "Statute" add the words: "That no evidence whatever was introduced by defendant of the defense set up in his answer, that deceased in his lifetime had paid, laid out, and expended for plaintiff, and at his request, large sums of money, amounting to one thousand dollars, or any sum paid, laid out, and expended by deceased for plaintiff except the sum of three hundred and forty-seven dollars, for which credit is given by the plaintiff in his claim against said estate, and allowed in this finding."

James B. Townsend, for Appellant.

The judgment appealed from is erroneous, because, first, the finding of the Court, as amended, did not dispose of the issues made by the second and third defenses set up in said defendant's answer. These defenses were, respectively, that the cause or causes of action sued on, if any ever existed, did not accrue to said plaintiff within the periods of two nor four years, respectively, next before the death of the said Herman Schroeder. These two different periods of time were plead because it was not then known whether the plaintiff's evidence of the receipt of money by the deceased would be in writing, or by parol merely.

The defendant contended on the trial that the cause of action accrued when the money was received by the deceased. On the other hand, the plaintiff contended that a demand was necessary before any cause of action accrued. It was necessary, therefore, that the Court should determine by its finding, not only when the money was received—because that would not necessarily decide the issue—but when the cause of action accrued, which included not only the fact of the receipt of the money, but likewise, the manner in which and the purposes for which it was received; and whether received in such manner and for such purposes as to render a demand necessary before a cause of action would exist—and if so, then the fact of the making of such demand, and when it was made.

1st—The Statute of Limitations ran against the demand proved, from the time of the receipt of the money by the deceased. (Buckner v. Patterson, Litt. Sel. Cases, 234; Hickok v. Hickok, 13 Barb. 632; Dale v. Birch, 8 Camp. 347; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. 243, 244; Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 John. Ch. 110, 111, 114; Robinson v. Hook, 4 Mason, 151, 152.)

2d—If a demand were necessary in a case of this kind, before the bringing of an action, it is well settled that such demand must be made within the statutory period, or the claim will be barred. (Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 119, 120; Staford v. Richardson, 15 Wend. 305-307; Lafarge v. Jayne, 9 Penn. 410; Chalfin v. Malone, 9 B. Mon. 498.)

P. G. Buchan, for Respondent.

The complaint avers that the money was left with Herman Schroeder in trust, to be paid when demanded; the proof establishes it, and the Court finds it. The relation of trustee and cestui que trust, as between Herman and Bernard, therefore existed—it was an express trust. The statute in such case does not commence to run from the time of making the contract in reference to the deposit, but from the breach of it; that is, from the time of a demand and refusal.

This is a plain elementary principle. The principle is fully recognized in the case of Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 174. The case of Baker v. Joseph, is much stronger for the defendant than this case. In that case the money was deposited to be invested by defendant in loans at interest, and the principal and interest to be paid to plaintiff on request. It might have been urged in the Baker case, that the defendant had a right to loan it to himself, and his so appropriating it turned it into an ordinary contract. But, in the case before us, there was no such authority. The money was deposited to be safely kept till demanded. In the case of Baker v. Joseph, the Court say, that "whether he loaned it or not, or whatever the responsibilities incurred for not loaning it, the repayment of the money received was not to be made until demanded by plaintiff;" and that in that case the statute does not commence to run until demand made.

The rule is distinctly laid down by Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Decouche v. Sabitica, 8 John. Ch. 216, that so long as a trust subsists, the right of a cestui que trust cannot be barred by the length of time during which he has been out of possession.

In Phelps v. Bostwick, 22 Barb. 314, it is expressly decided that "a bailee or depositary is not liable to an action until demand and refusal; therefore, where money has been left with another, in naked deposit, for the benefit of the owner, the latter cannot maintain an action to recover it until a demand has been made upon the depositary to return it, and he has refused so to do."

The principles in reference to trusts of this character, and the principles governing the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, so far as they have any reference to this case, will be fully illustrated by a reference to the following cases: Coster v. Murray, 5 John. Ch. 581; Murray v. Coster, 20 John. 558; Brown v. Cook, 9 John. 361; Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. 25; Day v. Roth, 18 N. Y. 452.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiff sued the defendant, as the administrator of Hermann Schroeder, deceased, to recover a balance due him for moneys before that time deposited by him with Hermann

Opinion of the Court.

Schroeder; and he charges that Hermann Schroeder received the moneys "in trust for the said plaintiff, to be kept by him, the said Hermann Schroeder, as a depositary thereof, until the same should be demanded by him the said plaintiff;" that he promised to keep the same in safe deposit for the plaintiff, subject to his order, and that the same remained in the hands of Hermann Schroeder at the time of his death subject to the order of the plaintiff; and he also charges that he presented his claim for the moneys against the estate of the deceased to the defendant, as administrator, who rejected the same. The defendant fully denies the alleged indebtedness of his testator, and that he received or held the moneys of the plaintiff in any manner, and he sets up the Statute of Limitations of two years, and of four years, in separate answers, and he alleges, by way of counterclaim, that the plaintiff is indebted to the estate of the deceased in the sum of about one thousand dollars, for moneys laid out and expended, etc., by the defendant's testator.

Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff upon the finding of the Court, and the defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first point relied upon by the defendant is that the finding of the Court did not dispose of the issues made by the second and third defenses of the Statute of Limitations, but as the statute of four years is clearly inapplicable to the facts of the case, and as the argument of counsel applies equally to both defenses, the second defense, setting up the limitation of two years, will alone be considered in this connection.

The defendant alleges in that defense that the causes of action did not accrue to the plaintiff "within two years next before the death of the said Hermann Schroeder, and that the same, if any, are barred by the statute prescribing limitations for the bringing of actions in this State."

The last clause of the defense—that the cause of action is barred by the statute—is not a statement of a fact, but of a conclusion of law. The fact averred in the defense is that the cause of action did not accrue within two years next before the death of Hermann Schroeder; and it will be observed that this fact does not constitute a defense to the action, for the complaint alleges that Hermann Schroeder, at the time of his death, still held the money as a depositary for the plaintiff, and there is no charge that he had done anything inconsistent with the contract between the parties, or was in any manner in default, and therefore no cause of action is alleged to have accrued against him; but the cause of action is alleged to have accrued against the defendant who, on demand being made, rejected the plaintiff's claim for the money deposited with his testator. The fact alleged in the defense, instead of being in denial, is consistent with the facts stated in the complaint, and does not raise an issue in the case. We do not intend, however, for those reasons to dispose of the point raised by the defendant without further consideration, for the parties have treated the answer as sufficient to form the issue of the Statute of Limitations, and in this respect they have but followed the practice prevailing to a considerable extent in this State—though we think erroneously—of setting up the Statute of Limitations by means of the general allegation that the action or the cause of action is barred by the statute prescribing two or any other number of years, as the limitation for bringing the action.

That portion of the case relating to the sum of one hundred dollars collected by Hermann Schroeder for the plaintiff may be left out of view, because the plaintiff has remitted from the judgment the amount constituting that item in his account.

The transaction stated in the complaint—the depositing of the money by the plaintiff with Hermann Schroeder, to be held by him in trust for the plaintiff, until the plaintiff should demand it, and the receipt of the money by Hermann Schroeder, with the promise on his part to hold it as such depositary, subject to the order of the plaintiff—constituted an express and direct trust. (Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 John. Ch. 111, and cases cited.) The trust was also a continuing trust, within the principles of the case of Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173. This is not one of those “technical and continuing trusts which are not cognizable at law, but are creatures of the Court of equity," for in case of a breach of the contract to safely keep, or to pay over the money on demand, the cestui que trust has his action at law. The relation of trustee and cestui que trust would continue, so long as the trust was a subsisting one, manifested as such by the acts or declarations of the parties, and no right of action against the trustee would accrue until he assumed a position in hostility to the trust relation. So long as he held the money on deposit for the cestui que trust, ready to be paid over to him on demand, the cestui que trust could not maintain an action against him to recover the trust property. If the trustee has not, by act or declaration, manifested a determination to repudiate the trust, and violate the contract under which the money came to his hands, there must be a demand by the cestui que trust for the money and a refusal, before he is liable to an action for the money. This principle necessarily grows out of the relation the parties have assumed, and is too clear to require either argument or authority in its support. The Statute of Limitations, therefore, would not commence to run in such case unless the demand was made. The only demand alleged is the one made upon the administrator.

The Court finds that the money was deposited with the testator "to be held by him on deposit and in trust for the plaintiff, and was so held by him at the time of his death," etc. The defendant objects that the finding does not specify the kind of deposit that was made and says that a deposit may be made for many different purposes; but we think the objection untenable. The very definition of a deposit is a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor, without reward, and to be returned when he shall require it. (See Bouvier's Law Dic.; Jones' Bailee, 36, 117; Story, Bailees, Sec. 41.) No other purpose would be implied than what the term itself imports, in the absence of any fact tending to show a deposit for another purpose. The finding shows that the depository held the property at the time of his death in the same capacity in which it came to his hands. No presumption could be indulged in of a demand upon and a refusal by the depository, for the presumption would be that he had at all times complied with his agreement with the cestui que trust. The fact found that at the time of his death he still bore his original relation to the property — that is, that he remained such depository — holding the property in trust for the depositor, to be returned to him on demand — negatives any presumption that the depository had assumed a position in hostility to the trust.

It is alleged in the complaint and not denied in the answer, that a demand for the money deposited was made of the defendant as administrator, and that he rejected the claim for the money. It is not doubted that the rejection amounted to a refusal to return the money deposited with his testator. The cause of action accrued at that time, and the Statute of Limitations commenced from thence to run. The facts found by the Court, together with the facts in the case, that stand as admitted by the failure to deny them, completely meet the defendant's answer of the Statute of Limitations, and show that the two years had not elapsed since the cause of action accrued. While agreeing with counsel for the defendant that the Court must find as to the truth of every issue of fact found in the case, we think the finding need not be directly and pointedly made that each of the several allegations of the complaint or the answer is or is not true, but if the Court finds such facts as will be sufficient, with the facts admitted by the parties to be true, to necessarily determine every material issue in the cause, the requirement of the law in that respect will be satisfied.

The defendant further objects to the finding on the ground that the Court failed to find the acts as to the counterclaim. The finding, as amended after it was objected to by the defendant, is in substance that no evidence was introduced by him of that defense, except of the sum of three hundred and forty-seven dollars, for which credit was given in the plaintiff's claim, and which was allowed in the finding. The finding does not respond to the issue, and technically it is incorrect, for the statement is not that there was no evidence introduced of the counterclaim, but that the defendant introduced none.

If there was any evidence in the case tending to prove the counterclaim beyond the amount allowed, the finding would be held to be defective and erroneous; but the defendant made a statement in support of his motion for a new trial, in which is contained "all the evidence given" in the cause, and upon an examination of the statement no evidence is found therein tending to prove the counterclaim, beyond the amount allowed the defendant. If the Court had passed directly upon the issue, the finding would have been against the truth of the facts set up in the defense, except as to the amount allowed the defendant. The finding is technically erroneous, but the error has not operated to the prejudice of the defendant, and will, therefore, be disregarded.

The remaining points urged by the defendant do not require separate consideration, as all of them have been answered by the views already expressed, except the one relating to the preponderance of the evidence, and we are not justified in disturbing the finding on that ground.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAM REDDING, AND EDWARD P. REED v. JOHN WHITE, AMOS WHITE, LAURA WHITE, AND P. KAMMERER.

POWER TO GRANT OR LEASE PUEBLO LANDS.—Under the Mexican law the power to grant or lease pueblo lands was vested in the municipal authorities; but this power was limited to the granting of house lots for building purposes, and lots two hundred varas square, called suertes, for cultivating or planting as gardens, vineyards, orchards, etc.

LEASE OF PUEBLO LANDS.—A lease of four hundred acres of pueblo land for ninety-nine years made by the municipal authorities of a pueblo in California in 1847, was void for want of power in the authorities to make the lease.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

On the 9th day of April, 1863, plaintiffs commenced this action to recover possession of a tract of land in San José, designated as Lot Number Forty-nine of the lots commonly called the five hundred acre lots of the Pueblo of San José.

The complaint averred possession and ownership in plaintiffs as tenants in common on the 27th day of May, 1862, and ouster by defendants on the same day. The answer denied the allegations of possession and ownership, and averred that defendants, and those whose title they had acquired, had been in possession of the land sued for for fourteen years. Plaintiffs, to maintain their action, relied on a grant made by the Alcalde of the Pueblo de San José, in accordance with the decree of the Junta and people of the Pueblo. Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

C. T. Ryland, for Appellants.

The court erred in admitting said pretended loan in evidence, because the Alcalde was not authorized or empowered in any manner to make such an instrument, and because the same conveyed no title or right. The Alcalde does not pretend to make said loan by virtue of any general power in him vested as such officer, but he makes it by authority of certain decrees of the Junta and people.

We have been unable to find in the Spanish or Mexican law any tribunal or power authorized to make grants, known or called "Junta," nor do we find any power given to the people to assemble as a Junta, for the purpose of authorizing Alcaldes or other officers to make grants. "Junta" simply means a meeting or gathering, and there is no power conferred on such to authorize Alcaldes to dispose of pueblo lands.

In the regulations for the government of the Province of California, by Governor Felipe de Neve, dated at Monterey, 1st June, 1779, and approved by the King of Spain, October 24th, 1781, the extent of suertes is fixed at two hundred varas square, (a vara is about thirty-three inches English measure.) Two suertes of irrigable land, and two of dry land, were all that were given to one person; the rest of the lands were held to be granted in the name of his majesty, by the Governor. (Sec. 5, App. 2, Rockwell, 446, 447.)

In the same law it is declared "that the corresponding titles to house lots, lands, and waters, granted to the new pobladores, or which may hereafter be granted to other residents, shall be made out by the Governor, or Commissary whom he may appoint for this purpose, records of which, etc., must be kept, etc. (Sec. 17, App. 2, Rockwell, 450.)

From this law, made at Monterey in 1779, and approved by the King, 1781, it would seem that four suertes were all that could be granted to an individual; and it further appears that the Governor and his Commissary were alone authorized or empowered to make even such grants or dispositions of the pueblo lands.

T. Bodley, also for Appellants.

W. T. Wallace, for Respondents.

The instrument being shown to be a genuine original official act of the Alcalde, upon its being read in evidence certain presumptions arose; among which was the presumption that the Alcalde had authority to make the grant, and that the land granted was inside the boundaries of the Pueblo of San José. (Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 453; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 188-202; White v. Moses, 21 Cal. 40.)

This doctrine of presumption is one that has been indulged in in support of instruments of this character whenever the question of authority to make the grant was presented, unembarrassed by any question of fraud or forgery.

In the case of United States v. Clark, 8 Peters' U. S. Rep. 448, a royal order of 1790 was recited in the grant, as being the authority upon which it was issued. Of this order, thus recited, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It most certainly does not authorize that grant * * * and it is not doubted that the quantity contained in the grant far exceeded the quantity authorized by that order." The grant in that case was sustained, notwithstanding that the authority recited in it was not sufficient to sustain it.

By the Court, SANBURN, C. J.

The conclusion which we have reached upon the controlling question involved in this case, renders a notice in detail of the several points made by counsel unnecessary. The plaintiffs' title is founded upon an Alcalde grant or lease of the land in controversy for "a term of ninety-nine years, with the right of nine renewals." The quantity of land is described in the lease as five hundred acres, more or less; but, as appears from the record, the actual quantity is a little less than four hundred acres. The grant, upon its face, purports to have been made on the 14th of November, 1847, in accordance with the decree of the Junta and the People of the Pueblo de San José Gde., in Upper California, passed and entered of record on the 29th day of June, 1847, and in accordance with a confirmatory decree of the people of said pueblo, passed in Primary Assembly, on the 30th day of the same month, and entered of record in the office of the Alcalde.

Assuming that the decrees of the 29th and 30th of June fully empowered the Alcalde to make the grant in question, we think they were void for the want of power in the Junta and people of the pueblo, and leaving those decrees out of the case and assuming that the Alcalde made the grant by virtue of the general powers vested in him as such Alcalde, we also think the grant was void for the same reason.

It has been held that the power to grant or lease pueblo lands was vested in the municipal authorities under the Mexican system. (Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 443; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530; White v. Moses, 21 Cal. 34.) But this power, as appears from the same cases, was limited to the granting of house lots for building purposes, called solares, and sowing ground for cultivating or planting as gardens, vineyards, orchards, etc., called suertes. Upon the question as to how much land a suerte embraced, we are cited to no authority, except the fifth section of Appendix No. 2, Rockwell's Spanish Law, 446, containing extracts from the regulations for the government of the Province of California, by Don Felipe De Neve, Governor of the same, dated in the Royal Presidio of San Carlos de Monterey, June 1, 1779, and approved by his majesty in a royal order of the 24th October, 1781. It is there provided that each suerte of land, whether capable of irrigation or dependent on the seasons (de riego de temporal) shall consist of two hundred varas in length, and two hundred in breadth, such being the area generally occupied in the sowing of one fanega of Indian corn; and it is further provided that not more than two suertes of irrigable land, and other two of dry land, shall be allotted to each of the pobladores. If from that time until the cession of California to the United States any change was made in the size of a suerte, counsel have failed to produce the evidence of such change, and our own researches have discovered none. But admitting that a suerte had no precise limits as to quantity, the word by definition signifies a small, or middling sized lot, suitable for a garden, vineyard, or orchard. In Seoane's Neuman and Baretti's Dictionary the word is defined in English by the word "lot," and the expression suerte de caña is defined as each patch or lot into which a large sugar cane field is divided.

Guided by such light as we have we are of the opinion that the municipal authorities under the Mexican law did not have the power which was attempted to be exercised in the present case. We know of no instances where such grants were made except in the Pueblo of San José, and even there not until after the occupation of the country by our own people. This is, of itself, strong if not conclusive evidence of the non-existence of the power. Such a power would have been in direct antagonism to the policy of the Mexican Government as indicated in its laws touching the establishment of towns and villages, and would have retarded and defeated that policy.

For the purpose of inducing colonization and encouraging the building up of towns and villages, a certain quantity of land was allotted to each to be distributed in small quantities among the inhabitants for building lots and for cultivation upon a moderate scale. In view of the quantity of the land thus allotted and the purposes for which it was allotted, it is apparent to us that leases by the municipal authorities of five hundred acre tracts for nearly a thousand years at a rent of only three dollars per annum could not have been authorized consistently with the end in view.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

THE PEOPLE v. WALTER SKIDMORE, WALTER A. SKIDMORE, EGBERT VAN ALLEN, AND LOUIS DENOS.

FORMER JUDGMENT AS A BAR.—If the defendants demur to the complaint for misjoinder of parties defendant, as well as for other reasons, and at the same time answer, and the parties stipulate to submit the issues of law and fact to the Court upon the pleadings, and a general judgment is rendered for the defendants, it is a bar to another suit for the same cause of action, although the real ground upon which the judgment was based was the misjoinder of parties defendant.

EXPRESSION OF OPINION ON A POINT NOT BEFORE THE COURT.—If a judgment is rendered generally for the defendants upon issues of both law and fact, and the Supreme Court upon appeal affirm the judgment, a statement in the opinion that the judgment was affirmed because there was a misjoinder of parties defendant, and that the effect of the judgment will not preclude the plaintiff from suing again, does not prevent the judgment from being a bar to a new suit brought for the same cause of action.

JUDGMENT RENDERED ON DEMURRER AS A BAR.—If the defendants demur and answer at the same time, and issues of law and fact are submitted to the Court, and an order is made sustaining the demurrer by reason of a misjoinder of parties defendant, and judgment is rendered for the defendants upon the order, the judgment will not bar a new action.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Marin County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John Reynolds, and S. F. Reynolds, for Appellants.

Argument for Respondent.

The cause in the former case was fully tried upon its merits, and the judgment there is a perfect bar to this action, and is completely brought within the case of Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266.

Bradley Hall, for Respondent.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, also for Respondent.

The parties are not identical. Daniel T. Taylor was a party to the first action; he is not a party to this. He was made a party for the sole purpose of obtaining equitable relief against him. Because he was made a party, his co-defendants demurred, and also because the relief sought against him was equitable, whilst that sought against the obligors was legal.

This Court say: "If the demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action had been sustained—that, and no more—and judgment had been entered for the defendants upon that order, and the plaintiff had appealed, and the judgment had been affirmed, there can be no pretense that the judgment would have barred a new action unaffected with a like misjoinder." The demurrer was not withdrawn; it was submitted to the referee for decision. The judgment as entered does not, we submit, purport to be rendered upon the facts found by the referee, for he found none; and one of the assignments of error was that judgment could not be entered by the Clerk without a finding of facts. The demurrer, then, was properly before the Court, and the Supreme Court properly considered it and passed upon it. It must be conceded that taking the opinion signed by the Judges, and not the Clerk's entry or conclusion of what the judgment was, as the law of the case and as the decision and judgment of the Court, and plaintiffs' right to bring a new action was not barred, the Judges certainly knew what they meant and intended, and they expressed the judgment of the Court to be that the demurrer was properly sustained; and the language, "We affirm the judgment upon the demurrer for this misjoinder," controls the subsequent words, "judgment is affirmed," and leaves the balance of the decision operative—that the affirmance shall not preclude an action upon the recognizance.

The sustaining of the demurrer and affirming the judgment for a misjoinder of parties is not a bar, any more than an acquittal upon a defective indictment. (4 Cow. 44; 2 Hawk. C. 55; 1 Bulstrode, 142; 2 Hale's Pleas, 248; People v. Barrett, 1 John. 66; 13 John. 351.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action upon a recognizance entered into by the defendants to secure the appearance, etc., of W. Skidmore to answer to a charge of murder.

The answer of the defendants denies many of the allegations of the complaint, and sets up a judgment in a former suit as a bar to the action.

The record of the proceedings in the former suit is made part of the transcript by stipulation, and it appears, on comparing the two records, that the actions are identical in subject matter and parties. The only question, therefore, having any connection with the special defense, is whether the judgment in the former action was based upon the merits.

In the complaint in the first suit there was a prayer for equitable relief against D. T. Taylor, trustee in an express trust created by Skidmore for the protection of his sureties against their liability upon the recognizance, and the trustee was to that intent made a party defendant.

The defendants in the first suit demurred to the complaint on the ground of ambiguity, misjoinder of causes of action and parties defendant, and for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and they also answered the complaint. Thereafter, on stipulation of parties, an order was entered referring the case to Charles Halsey "to try all the issues of law and fact therein and to report a judgment thereon."

The parties in due time appeared before the referee, and in the first place, as appears by the record, drew up and submitted to him a categorical statement of the matters charged in the complaint and admitted by the answer; which list embraced most, if not all, the substantive allegations in the complaint.

The plaintiff thereupon moved that the demurrer be overruled, which motion was denied and the plaintiff excepted.

The plaintiff then moved for judgment against the cognizors, upon the pleadings and "admissions of facts as aforesaid in the action at law;" which motion was also denied and the plaintiff excepted.

The plaintiff then "moved for the equitable relief and decree asked for in the complaint, against all the defendants, upon said facts proved and the admission in the pleadings, which motion was then and there denied by the referee, and the plaintiff duly excepted."

The record thereafter proceeds as follows: "And the issues of law and fact raised by the pleadings were submitted to the referee upon the pleadings for his decision, and to report a judgment thereon in the case.

"On the 2d day of July, 1860, the referee filed his report, which is attached to the judgment, finding no facts, but finding as conclusions of law from the facts shown by the pleadings, that defendants are entitled to judgment against the plaintiff, to which decision plaintiff duly excepted.

"On the same day of July, 1860, the Clerk of said Court of Marin, without any order of Court, entered up judgment in favor of the defendants and against plaintiff for costs, the Court then being in session; to which decision and judgment the plaintiff duly excepted."

All the foregoing passages occur in the plaintiff's statement on motion for new trial, and on appeal, in the first action. The statement closes with the following assignment of errors:

The plaintiff, on the motion for a new trial, assigns and will rely upon the following grounds of error:

1. Error of the referee in not overruling defendants' demurrer.

Opinion of the Court.

2. Error of the referee in not granting plaintiff's motion for judgment in the action at law.
3. Error of the referee in not granting plaintiff's motion for judgment in the equity case or cause of action.
4. Error of the referee in deciding as conclusions of law that defendants were entitled to judgment against plaintiff.
5. That the judgment entered in the report of the referee is against law and evidence.
6. That the Clerk of the Court erred in entering judgment without a finding of facts by the referee.

The following is the report of the referee:

The People of the State of California, plaintiff, v. Walter Skidmore, Walter A. Skidmore, Egbert Van Allen, and Louis Denos. State of California, in the District Court for the Seventh Judicial District, in and for the County of Marin.—The undersigned, to whom this action was referred to try the issues therein and report a judgment thereon, does report that the said action was submitted by the attorneys for the respective parties thereto upon the pleadings in the same. And from the facts therein stated I do find as a conclusion of law, that the said plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and I do report a judgment upon the issues in said action in favor of the said defendants against the said plaintiff.

July 2, 1860.

CHARLES HALSEY, Referee, etc.

Upon that report the following judgment was rendered:

The People of the State of California, plaintiff, v. Walter Skidmore, Walter A. Skidmore, Egbert Van Allen, Louis Denos and Daniel T. Taylor. In the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the County of Marin.—The above entitled action having been heretofore, by consent of the parties thereto, duly referred to Charles Halsey to try all the issues of law and fact therein and report a judgment thereon, and the said referee having duly made and filed his report thereon, wherein and whereby

he has found and reported a judgment in favor of the said defendants, therefore it is now ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court that the said defendants herein do have and recover a judgment against said plaintiff; that they, the said defendants, be hence dismissed without day, and the said plaintiff take nothing by this said action. And it is ordered and adjudged that the defendants do have and recover their costs and disbursements, amounting to one hundred and two dollars and twenty-five cents.

The motion for new trial having been denied, the plaintiff brought the case to the Supreme Court by appeal.

The Court in the opinion say:

We affirm the judgment upon the demurrer for this misjoinder. The effect of the judgment will not be to preclude the plaintiff from suing again when the cause of action can be more formally set out.

Judgment is affirmed.

1. The judgment below was not reversed, either in whole or in part, by the Supreme Court, nor was it modified in any particular; and it follows, if the Court dealt with the judgment at all, it must have affirmed it to the whole extent of its terms. But the nature and scope of the Court's final action is clearly indicated by the words "judgment affirmed," as they occur in the published report of the case. (17 Cal. 261.) We have examined the record, now remaining in this Court, and find an unqualified entry to the effect that the judgment was affirmed.

The Court, in examining the judgment in connection with the errors assigned, found that there was at least one ground upon which the judgment could be justified, and therefore very properly refrained from considering it in connection with the other errors. But the affirmance, still, was an affirmance to the whole extent of the legal effect of the judgment at the time when it was entered in the Court below. The Supreme Court found no error in the record, and therefore not only allowed it to stand, but affirmed it as an entirety, and by direct expression.

If the demurrer for misjoinder of causes had been sustained—that, and no more—and judgment had been entered for the defendants upon that order, and the plaintiff had appealed, and the judgment had been affirmed, there can be no pretense that the judgment would have barred a new action, unaffected with a like misjoinder; and hence if the judgment below was in fact based solely upon an ascertained misjoinder of causes of action or of parties, or upon ambiguity in the complaint, or upon all of them combined, or upon any other matter not involving the very merits of the plaintiff's claim, a new action, free from these dilatory infirmities, might have been brought to enforce it. The remark made by the Court in the opinion as to the effect of its own non-reversal, and expressed affirmance of the judgment, was not upon a point then before it in error, and therefore, though eminently entitled to consideration, cannot be considered as res judicata, nor even as authority in the exact sense.

2. Assuming, then, that the judgment rendered in the first action is now as it was in the beginning, the question is narrowed to a single point of inquiry: Was the former judgment upon the merits of the claim?

The judgment, howsoever comprehensive in its terms, must be read in the light of the whole judgment roll.

It appears that the issues of law raised by the demurrer, and the questions of fact raised by the answer, were by the stipulation of the parties sent to the referee; that the plaintiff at the hearing, having in the first place agreed with the defendants upon a statement of the facts bearing upon the merits, moved that the demurrer should be overruled. The motion was denied, and, as we presume, upon the ground that it would be irregular to pass upon the merits of a demurrer on motion to overrule it.

The subsequent motion for judgment on the facts, as shown by the pleadings and agreed statement, was also overruled; and as, in one point of view, the motion was a proper one, the ruling upon it may be considered as having been in itself a disposition of the case upon the merits. But however that may be, it would seem that the parties, after running the issues of law and fact one after another through the gauntlet of these motions, concluded to begin, and did in fact begin de novo; for immediately thereafter the issues of law and fact were submitted to the referee upon the pleadings for his decision and to report a judgment thereon in the case.

How did the referee act upon the matters of thought and judgment so committed to him? The answer to this question is to be found in the report.

The report commences with a recital, to the effect that the case was submitted by the attorneys of the respective parties upon the pleadings; and, "from the facts therein stated," it finds, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and reports a general judgment in favor of the defendants against the plaintiff.

In view of this sweeping report and the matters that immediately preceded it, we are not at liberty to hold that the general judgment entered upon "the report," in terms, was not entered upon it, and the whole of it, in legal effect. Going by the record, it appears affirmatively that the judgment was based upon the merits of the claim, and not upon the dilatory matters raised by the demurrer nor any other mere technical defect. It may be conceded that the proceedings before the referee were irregular, as they were in some particulars; and it may further be assumed that the judgment was erroneous in view of the facts agreed upon; still, the judgment has never been reversed nor modified, and therefore its efficacy as a bar to this action is impaired neither by the irregularity nor the error.

We have further considered the plaintiff's claim upon its original merits, and our convictions, upon a somewhat hurried consideration of the defendants' objections, are in favor of the claim. But this action is to be decided upon the present legal merits of the claim, and we consider that it is barred by the former judgment.

Argument for Appellant.

In the case of Phelan v. Supervisors of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 15, cited for the respondents, the judgment was distinctly upon the demurrer, and the Court, reversing and not affirming the judgment, as here, held that the plaintiff could amend his complaint on application to the Court below. The point decided in that case is not the point presented here, and the distinction is so manifest that a formal statement of it is unnecessary.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH v. JACOB P. LEESE, GEORGE W. BAKER, AND ALFRED G. JONES et al.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS BY PUBLICATION.—Where service of summons is had by publication, proof of the publication can only be made by the affidavit of the printer, his foreman, or principal clerk; and the affidavit should state that the person taking the same holds one of these positions. An affidavit commencing in this way: "A. B., principal clerk, etc., • • being sworn, deposes," etc., is insufficient, and would not give the Court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

WHAT CONSTITUTES AN APPEARANCE IN AN ACTION.—A defendant cannot appear in an action so as to give the Court jurisdiction of his person, except by answering, demurring, or giving plaintiff written notice that he appears; and the service of the notice of appearance must antedate or be contemporaneous with the service of all other notices and papers.

PLAINTIFF PRESUMED TO KNOW DEFECTS IN PROCEEDINGS.—If the plaintiff in an action of foreclosure purchases the property at Sheriff's sale, he is presumed to buy with full knowledge of all defects in the proceedings relating to service of summons.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.—If the Court, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, does not acquire jurisdiction of the person owning the land at the time of the foreclosure, a writ of assistance against the owner or his grantees will be refused.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Appellant.

There was no proof of publication of summons. The affidavit does not show that Hoffman was competent to be a witness on the trial of the action. It does not show that

Argument for Respondents.

Hoffman was the "printer," or his "foreman," or "his principal clerk." Practice Act, section thirty-three, subdivision three—the words "principal clerk in the office," etc., are mere "descriptio personæ"—he does not swear that he is such clerk, nor that there was any such newspaper. (Merritt v. Seaman, 2 Selden, 171, and the numerous authorities there cited by the Court; People v. Penin, 1 How. Pr. R. 75; Ex parte B. of Monroe, 7 Hill, 178; Cunningham v. Gorlet, 4 Denio, 71.)

It should appear affirmatively and distinctly that Hoffman was the principal clerk of the printer, because it does not appear his means of knowledge of the publication is not disclosed to the Court. (See Hill v. Hoover, 5 Wisconsin, 370; and a correct form, 2 Barbour's Ch. 706, which we deem conclusive.)

Brooks & Whitney, for Respondents.

Appellant's counsel objects that the affidavit is insufficient in reciting the fact that the deponent is the principal clerk, instead of stating that he is the principal clerk.

The cases cited from the New York Reports in support of this position are not cases of the affidavits of publication, and there is a material difference. The cases cited are in point so far as this: that in New York a description of the character of the deponent at the commencement of the answer is not considered as sworn to, but is a mere description of the person. But these were cases of the exercise of some private right by individuals. In the case of the publication of a summons there is this difference: that the Court designates the paper, and the law designates the person who shall make the affidavit, so that pro hac vice and quoad hoc, he is acting as the officer of the law, and is in no sense the private agent of the party. The form cited from Barbour's Chancery Practice is an affidavit of publication, and is in the form contended for by the counsel. The case of Hill v. Hoover, 5 Wisconsin, 370, was a case of proof of publication of a notice of sale, and is in point as far as it goes; but none of these cases were attempts to invalidate a judgment on this ground. We might concede that such affidavits were irregular, but that is a very different thing from their being void.

We think it must be confessed that the criticism is exceedingly nice. In a pleading or affidavit, it is the ordinary way to commence by describing the status of the party as "one of the defendants in this cause," or "the attorney for the plaintiff herein," etc., and "common error may make law." We are free to admit that the form given by Barbour is better, but it would be a hard thing that all the judgments which have been rendered in this State on just such affidavits are nullities. If the Court will look at its own records, it will find that the practice has been universal. In the case of Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 637, the affidavit of publication seems to have been precisely the same as this. But it never seems to have occurred to the learned counsel who contended in that hotly contested case, or to the Court, that the judgment of Gray v. Eaton was void on that ground. The affidavit was criticised and attacked by counsel, and sustained by the Court. The Court say: "When there is but one clerk, his affidavit must be sufficient, and it is unnecessary for him to improperly describe himself as principal clerk." It is evident that the Court considered a descriptio personæ sufficient.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This appeal is from an order granting a writ of assistance.

The action was brought to foreclose a mortgage executed to Salvador Vallejo by defendant Leese in 1850, which mortgage came to the plaintiff by assignment. The complaint was filed May 1, 1857, and a notice of lis pendens was filed on the 30th of the same month. At the time the action was brought, Jones, who was named as a defendant in the complaint, was the owner of a part of the mortgaged premises by title derived from Leese and Yale subsequent to the mortgage. A final decree was entered November 3, 1860, against all the defendants, and the plaintiff became the purchaser of the mortgaged premises at the Sheriff's sale, and is now the holder of the Sheriff's deed. The appellants, Brooks, Tenant, Lazarus, and Johnson, claim under their co-appellant Jones, by title derived from him since the filing of the notice of lis pendens. The only question is, whether Jones was a party to the foreclosure suit.

On the 24th of September, 1857, an order was made directing the service of summons as to Jones and three other defendants, by publication in the California Chronicle, at least once a week for a period of three months. The proof that the order was complied with was the following affidavit:

" STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
" City and County of San Francisco. }

"H. F. W. Hoffman, principal clerk in the office of the California Chronicle, a daily newspaper published in said city and county, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that the notice of which the annexed printed notice is a copy, has been published in said paper at least once a week three months, commencing on the 26th day of September, 1857, and ending on the 26th day of December, 1857. H. F. W. HOFFMAN.

"Subscribed before me this 26th day of December, 1857.

"D. B. HEMPSTEAD, Notary Public."

By subdivision third of the thirty-third section of the Practice Act, the fact that an order of publication has been complied with, is to be proved by "the affidavit of the printer, or his foreman, or principal clerk;" and as we construe the provision, they are the only persons competent to testify on the subject. That the affiant is one of the three, is itself a substantive fact, and must be proved as such before the Court in which the action is pending can proceed to render judgment against the parties to whom notice is intended to be given. In the affidavit now in question, the affiant swears to nothing except to the matter set forth after the word "deposes." He names himself as principal clerk, but he does not swear that that was his position in fact. (Ex parte Bank of Monros, 7

Opinion of the Court.

Hill, 178; Cunningham v. Goelet, 4 Denio, 71; Staples v. Fairchild, 3 N. Y. 44; Payne v. Young, 8 N. Y. 158.) The result is, that as the record in Steinbach v. Leese, ante, 295, is made up judgment was rendered against Jones without any proof that the order of publication had been complied with. There are other grounds upon which it is insisted that the proceedings under the order were fatally defective, but it is not necessary for us to consider them.

The respondent, however, contends that Jones appeared to the action by giving a notice of appeal from the decree through an attorney, who, it appears, properly represented some of the defendants, but who, without authority and inadvertently, inserted Jones' name in the notice as one of the parties for whom he acted. It is provided by the five hundred and twenty-third section of the Practice Act, that "a defendant shall be deemed to appear in an action when he answers, demurs or gives the plaintiff a written notice of appearance for him." The words "answers" and "demurs" are obviously words of enumeration, and we cannot, on received principles, interpolate into the text, notices of motion for new trials, notices of appeal, nor any other paper served incidentally in the conduct of judicial proceedings, the direct and principal purpose of which is, not to give notice of appearance, but to give notice of a step taken or about to be taken in the cause. We have no doubt that the written notice of appearance provided for in the section, is a document to be drawn up especially for that purpose, and that service of it is to antedate, or to be contemporaneous with, the service of all other notices and papers.

Steinbach was himself the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale, and must be presumed to have bought with notice of all defects in the proceedings relating to the publication. (McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 378.)

The order appealed from is reversed.

JAMES B. McMINN v. PATRICK WHELAN AND MOSES O'CONNOR.

PROOF OF EXECUTION OF INSTRUMENTS IN WRITING.—An instrument in writing, executed and attested by a subscribing witness in a foreign country, or at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, can be proved by evidence of the handwriting of the party who executed it.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS BY PUBLICATION.—When an order is made for the service of summons by publication, and a summons is issued, and a supplemental complaint is afterwards filed and a summons issued thereon, the original action becomes merged in the action as supplemented, and the Court will not acquire jurisdiction of the persons of absent defendants by publication of the original summons; but the summons issued on the supplemental complaint must be served by publication.

HOW SUMMONS SHOULD BE PUBLISHED.—If service on a defendant is attempted to be procured by publication, the summons must be published as it was when the order of publication was made.

JUDGMENT WITHOUT JURISDICTION OF PERSON.—If it appear by the record or otherwise that the Court never had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, the judgment will be pronounced a nullity, whether it comes directly or collaterally in issue, and a sale of property under it will be void also.

JURISDICTION OF PERSON.—If jurisdiction of the person of defendant is to be acquired by publication of the summons in lieu of personal service, the mode prescribed must be strictly pursued, and in such case there will be no presumption in favor of jurisdiction.

ACTION TO SET ASIDE CONVEYANCE OF LAND.—A lien on land acquired by an attachment, cannot be rendered effectual for the purpose of impeaching a conveyance of the land made by the defendant in the attachment, until judgment is obtained in the suit in which the attachment issued.

CREDITOR WITHOUT JUDGMENT.—A creditor at large, without a judgment, is not in a position to maintain an action to set aside a conveyance of property made by his debtor.

ASSIGNEE OF VOID JUDGMENT.—If the assignee of a void judgment, together with the cause of action on which it was rendered, offers the same in evidence, this does not prove that the assignee is a creditor of the defendant in the judgment.

DEED FOR LAND SOLD FOR TAXES AS EVIDENCE.—If the certificate of sale of property for taxes is made to "Michael Dundon," and the deed under the certificate is made to "Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr.," and it appears in proof that there were two persons, Michael and Patrick Michael, and there is no evidence that Patrick Michael acquired the right of Michael by assignment, the deed is not admissible in evidence without proof that the two names are for the same person.

CLAIMANT OF LAND CANNOT ACQUIRE TAX TITLE.—One who is in possession of land, claiming it as his, when it is assessed for taxes, cannot, by failing to pay the tax and allowing the land to be sold for the same, and becoming the purchaser, and obtaining a Sheriff's deed, acquire a title to it.

CONDUCT OF A JUDGE DURING A TRIAL.—If the character of a witness is called in question during a trial, and the Judge makes a remark from the bench indorsing his respectability, it is good cause for a reversal of judgment, if the testimony of the witness is material.

STATEMENTS AND EXCEPTIONS.—A statement on motion for new trial, or a bill of exceptions, should contain only so much of the evidence or a reference thereto as may be necessary to explain the grounds specifically set forth as causes for new trial. Judges or Courts, in settling statements, should see that the above rule is complied with.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Edward Tompkins, for Appellant.

The power of attorney from Maume to Dundon was not sufficiently proven, and its admission was error.

Whether secondary evidence as to the execution of the power of attorney should be received or not, was a preliminary question, to be legally and correctly decided by the Judge. Whether O'Farrell, the attesting witness, was absent from California; whether his signature could be proved in California; and whether due diligence had or had not been used by the plaintiff to ascertain these alleged facts, were matters to be decided by the Judge upon the testimony introduced upon those points. The plaintiff testified that in his search for O'Farrell, "he found nobody of the name of O'Farrell; and that he thought he looked into some of the Directories." If this was sufficient as prima facie proof, still it was not conclusive; and accordingly the defendant offered to rebut it by showing, "from the City Directory, that there were a number of persons in the city by the name of O'Farrell," which proof, if received, would have overturned the prima facies of the plaintiff's testimony, by showing that he did not consult the City Directory, the most obvious source of information, and so did not use due diligence in that regard. But the Judge treated the matter as if testimony were to be received on only one side, and no rebutting testimony to be admitted, which is insisted to be error.

Again: If it be held that the absence of the attesting witness was properly accounted for, this would not admit testimony as to the genuineness of the signature of the donor of the power, but only testimony as to the genuineness of the signature of the attesting witness. The rule is, that "the testimony of the subscribing witness, or proof of his handwriting and of his absence should be given." (Jones v. Underwood, 28 Barb. 481; Story v. Lovett, 1 E. D. Smith, 153; 2 Abbott's N. Y. Digest, p. 709, Sec. 1,816; 2 Phillips' Ev. 4th Am. Ed. 460, 500, etc.) See a curious history of the origin of the rule, Fox v. Reil, 3 Johns. *478.

But in the case at bar, the plaintiff proved only the absence of the attesting witness, and then, after suggesting that such witness resided in Limerick, without endeavoring to prove his handwriting by any method, the plaintiff proceeded at once to prove the handwriting of the maker of the power of attorney.

The Court below erred in excluding the tax deed from Hunt, the Tax Collector, to Patrick Michael Dundon, and the exception thereto was well taken.

The ground of exclusion was, that the certificate of the tax sale was to Michael Dundon, whereas the deed was to Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr., and these were two different persons, and no connection shown between them by assignment. The law only knows one Christian name. (Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. 84; Roosevelt v. Goodwin, 2 Cowen, 463.) The law also disregards the word Jr., or junior, as a part of a name. (People v. Collins, 7 Johns. 549; Foot v. Youngs, 11 Wend. 522.)

The Court below erred in its charge to the jury in regard to the tax deed to Ryan, under which the defendants claimed title, and the exception thereto was well taken.

The mere fact that a person is in possession of land as a trespasser, but claiming it as owner, will not prevent his acquiring title to it under a tax sale. There must be something more, throwing an obligation upon him, making it his duty to pay the taxes. The lands must be assessed to him; (Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38;) or, he must have agreed with the owner to pay the taxes; or, finally, he must be a trespasser in possession, excluding the rightful owner, and the annual value of the land must be equal to the tax assessed. In these cases the law throws the obligation and duty of paying the taxes upon the person in possession, and he will not be permitted to make title against the real owner under a tax sale. (Gaskins v. Blake, 27 Miss. 675.)

[In the case of McMinn v. O'Connor et al, ante, 238, reference is made to a brief of Dwinelle, Shafter & Goold, in which they discussed the ruling of the Court in excluding the judgment roll in the case of Gleason v. Maume. The brief was not published there because the Court in its opinion in that case leave the discussion of that point to the opinion in this case. The following are extracts from the brief — REPORTER]:

The record being that of a Court of general jurisdiction, having jurisdiction of the subject matter, it will be presumed that it acquired jurisdiction of the parties.

The reported cases in which Courts have avoided judgments rendered by Courts of general jurisdiction, upon a defective service of process, or without any service, have been generally cases where the judgment was attacked directly in the same Court by motion or on appeal, or by a bill in equity. If Courts upon such occasions have said that the judgment was void, that must be considered as an inaccurate mode of expressing the proposition that the judgment could not be sustained, unless the Court has expressly said that it is "absolutely void, and not merely voidable." (Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 54; Bell v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 706.)

"On appeal a judgment by default will be reversed, unless the record show service on the defendant, though possibly a judgment so obtained could not be impeached collaterally." (Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 65; Per contra, Hart v. Seixas, 21 Wend. 40.)

But, "There is a very decided distinction between the want of jurisdiction and irregularity in procuring jurisdiction. In the latter case some of the authorities speak of it as a want of jurisdiction, but when so employed it is a loose and improper use of the term. In the one case the judgment can be attacked in any form—that is, directly or collaterally; in the other, only by a direct proceeding against the judgment in the Court which rendered it, or in an appellate Court upon an appeal from the judgment.” (Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 63, 64.)

The distinction is, that the jurisdiction of a Court of general jurisdiction need not be shown affirmatively, but will be presumed. (Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 140; Borden v. The State, 6 Eng. 519; Hardy v. Gholson, 26 Miss. 70; Tallman v. Ely, 6 Wis. 244.)

But even in the case of a Court of general jurisdiction, if the record affirmatively shows that it had not in fact acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, that fact will be fatal to the judgment. (Borden v. Fitch, 15 John. 141; Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 54, 63.)

In regard to inferior Courts nothing will be presumed, and if the party in interest is to be brought in by means of publication of notice, the want of such notice will be a fatal defect. (Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 64; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 140; Mills v. Martin, 19 Johns. 7; People v. Huber, 20 Cal. 88; 3 Phillips Ev. 4th Ed. 137, note 293.)

It is provided by 2 Revised Statutes of New York, page *319, § 18, (Sec. 12,) that in cases of partition of lands unknown owners may be served by publication. Section two hundred and sixty-nine of our Practice Act is taken from this provision, and does not differ from it in substance.

Held, at first, that a judgment made in partition under this statute was not valid, and could be impeached collaterally by unknown owners, if the record did not show on its face that they had been served by such publication. (Denning v. Corwin, 11 Wend. 648.)

But this doctrine was immediately overruled, and the Court held that such a judgment by a Court of general jurisdiction was not absolutely void, so as to be impeachable collaterally, but merely irregular. The true proposition is, that a judgment of a Court of record within the State, of general jurisdiction, and proceeding according to the course of the common law, where a want of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the record, cannot be impeached by the parties to it so long as it remains unreversed. (Granger v. Clark, 9 Shep. 128; Van Dyke v. Bartedo, 8 Green, 224.)

But the want of averment of service of process, or a defective averment on that point, is not an affirmative showing of want of jurisdiction, but at the utmost suggest only error to be corrected directly on appeal. (Smith v. Bradley, 6 Smedes & Marshall, 485; McIlrath v. Butler, 7 Iredell, 398; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 130; Foot v. Stevens, 17 Wend. 483; Cole v. Hall, 2 Hill, 625.)

If it be said that the record disclosed a defective service of an imperfect summons, the obvious reply is, that these are evidently not what the Court adjudged to be a regular service of regular process, and we refer to those cases cited in this argument where the process was clearly defective in substance or in the proof of service, and there can be no difference between the cases of good process without proof of its service, and of defective process with sufficient proof of service, as both cases are defective in not showing service of process. The presumption in favor of jurisdiction is not rebutted by an irregular process appearing in the record. After a lapse of time, conveyances, powers of attorney, fulfilment of conditions precedent, and the like acts, will be presumed in order to connect possession with title. (Beall's Lessee v. Lynn, 6 Har. & Johns. 361; McConnell v. Bowdry's Heirs, 4 Monroe, 395; Buhols v. Boudousquie, 8 Mart. Lou. [New S.] 221; Clinton v. Campbell, 10 Johns. 475.)

But under the same circumstances, on an attempt to connect possession with title, a defective and void deed was offered in evidence and rejected, and yet a good deed was presumed. (Gitting's Lessee v. Holl, 1 Har. & Johns. 14, 18.)

Even if a Court of general jurisdiction does not acquire jurisdiction of the parties, the judgment is not therefore void, but only irregular, and can be attacked only directly, and not collaterally.

Argument for Respondent.

It is only when a Court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the proceeding in which an order is made, that the order is wholly void for want of jurisdiction. (Bingham v. Disbrow, 14 Abbott, 251; Cole v. Hall, 2 Hill, 625; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 141; Foot v. Stevens, 17 Wend. 483, 488; Hart v. Seixas, 21 Wend. 40; Newham v. City of Cincinnati, 18 Ohio, 323; Lamprey v. Nudd, 9 Foster, N. H. 299; Grier v. McLendon, 7 Geo. 362; Reed v. Wright, 2 Green, Iowa, 15; Barry v. Greenfield, Wright, 348.)

If the judgment is not void on its face it cannot be attacked collaterally. (Hall v. Hiffly, 6 Humph. 44; Barron v. Yart, 18 Ala. 668; Hopkins v. Howard, 12 Texas, 7; Seely v. Reed, 3 Iowa, 374.)

When it appears on the face of the record of a judgment of the Court of ordinary and proceedings, that the Court had jurisdiction over the subject matter, such judgment will be conclusive when offered in any other Court, and cannot be collaterally attacked. (Grier v. McLendon, 7 Geo. 362; Mobley v. Mobley, 9 Geo. 247; Pease v. Whitten, 31 Maine, 117.)

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

It is established law, as to the judgments of all Courts, when it appears from the record itself, that summons was not served in one of the statutory modes, jurisdiction of the defendant is not acquired. Such statute being stricti juris, the most exact compliance with all the prerequisites of the statute must be shown. No judgment can be obtained without it. In the absence of one requirement, that purporting to be a judgment is coram non judice and void.

How could a Court pass beyond the limits of the very law that confers the authority? (Practice Act, Sec. 30; Gossett v. Howard, 10 Q. B. 452; Bigelow v. Stearns, 19 John. 39; Harrington v. The People, 6 Barb. 607; Steen v. Steen, 3 Cushman, 513; Noyes v. Butler, Id. 613; Denning v. Corwin, 11 Wend. 648; The People v. Cassel, 5 Hill, 164.)

Again, in acquiring jurisdiction by publication, there are no

presumptions in favor of the record. It can be impeached or set aside collaterally. (See cases cited above.)

It is only in reference to matters within their common law jurisdiction that records of Courts of general jurisdiction cannot be attacked. As to new rights conferred by statute, they are inferior Courts.

"Whenever a new right (service of summons by publication) is created by statute, and its enforcement is committed to a Court of general jurisdiction, such Court quo ad hoc is an inferior Court, and must pursue the statute strictly." (Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 210; Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Id. 321; Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Id. 678; Denning v. Corwin, 11 Wend. 647; Sharp v. Spier, 4 Hill, 76; Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 495.)

That jurisdiction may always be inquired into in every action, by every Court, where the proceedings are relied upon by any one claiming a benefit thereunder. (Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 62; Gray v. Hawes, 8 Id. 568; Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wheat. 234; Mills v. Duryea, 7 Cranch, 481; Chemung Canal Bk. v. Judson, 8 N. Y. 254; Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156; and cases before cited.)

The respondent stands in the same if not a better position than Maume. We cannot conceive how appellants, having derived possession from Maume's tenant, could resist, by force of that record and sale, his (Maume's) claim to be restored to possession. In law they entered in subordination to but in fraud of Maume's right.

They must restore the possession before they could show, if they had such, a title adverse to Maume. They can show only that his title has expired, and has centered in them. This must be, however, a legal title; and if derived at a Sheriff's sale, it must be supported by a valid judgment. This is true of all titles derived under judicial sales. (Johnson v. Scissam, 3 John. 499; Johnson v. Bard, 4 Id. 230; Johnson v. Dennison, 4 Wend. 558; McKune v. Montgomery, 9 Cal. 576.)

Certainly Maume could attack this judgment, if invoked against him, in ejectment, to be restored to his possession. Respondent's position is superior to his, because he was not a party to the suit. Respondent could only attack it when used against him. He could neither prevent nor control the suit; hence, he cannot be affected by it. This is the first opportunity that is presented for so doing.

The charge of the Court in regard to the tax deed to Ryan was correct.

When this property was assessed and offered for sale, Ryan claimed it; hence, if valid in its preliminaries, the tax sale to him, and payment by him, would only amount to the payment of the tax, (for the tax ran against him as a claimant,) and would not result in passing the title. (Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 619.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This is an action of ejectment commenced on the twenty-third of September, 1863, for the recovery of a lot of land on the corner of Folsom and Tenth streets, in San Francisco, and for damages for withholding it from plaintiff. By the answers, the defendants denied the material averments of the complaint, and then pleaded the Statute of Limitations, and also an equitable defense on which they prayed affirmative relief. The cause was tried by a jury, without first disposing of the equitable defense, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the recovery of the possession of the premises, and one hundred and eighty dollars damages. On this verdict judgment was entered. The defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied.

Much evidence was given at the trial respecting the possession of the premises by Mathew Maume and his tenants existing in the year 1854, and thence continuing to the time of the defendants' entry thereon, which was in 1861. That Maume had the prior possession of the premises was determined by the jury in the affirmative, and as there was evidence authorizing the verdict in this respect, no just complaint can be made, because it was not more ample.

The plaintiff claimed title to the premises by a deed of conveyance produced in evidence, bearing date the tenth of May, 1861, purporting to have been executed by Mathew Maume, by his attorney in fact, Michael Dundon.

To prove that Dundon had authority as attorney for Maume to execute in his name the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff, the plaintiff offered in evidence an instrument in writing under seal, purporting to be a power of attorney executed on the thirty-first of January, 1859, by Mathew Maume, then a resident of Limerick, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to Michael Dundon, of Brookville, in the County of Clare, Ireland, appointing and constituting the said Dundon the attorney for the said Maume, and granting to him power to sell and convey, for and in the name of the constituent, the premises in controversy. This power of attorney appears upon its face to have been executed in the presence of one Thomas O'Farrell, and when it was offered in evidence it was objected to by defendants on the ground that it was not proved to have been executed by Mathew Maume. The plaintiff then introduced evidence to the Court for the purpose of laying a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of the execution of the instrument by Maume. The plaintiff himself was sworn and examined respecting the efforts he had made, preparatory for the trial, to discover the attesting witness, if within the jurisdiction of the Court. His testimony showed that he had exercised great diligence for the purpose of finding the witness, and also to discover some one by whom his handwriting could be proved. After this evidence was admitted, the plaintiff proved the handwriting of Mathew Maume by a person who knew it, and then submitted the power of attorney to the Court for inspection, and at the same time offered it in evidence as proved. The defendants objected that the absence of the subscribing witness was not sufficiently accounted for, and also that his handwriting was not proved; and accompanying this objection they proposed to prove by exhibiting the City Directory that a number of persons were residing in San Francisco by the name of O'Farrell, and insisted that they were the proper persons of whom to inquire for the witness. The Court overruled the objections and the instrument was read in evidence to the jury. To this ruling the defendants excepted.

In the case of McMinn v. O'Connor and Others, ante, 238, we have declared, on the authority of Landers and Wife against Bolton, 26 Cal. 409, and the authorities cited in that case, that an instrument in writing, executed and attested by a subscribing witness in a foreign country or at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, could be proved by producing evidence of the handwriting of the party who executed it. The presumption in the case is, that the attesting witness, who was in Ireland when he signed the document as a subscribing witness, remained there, and consequently was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court at the time of the trial. (Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 89, 90.)

The defendants, for the purpose of showing that the title of Mathew Maume had passed to one of them, offered and gave in evidence a judgment obtained by Timothy Gleason against Mathew Maume on the twenty-seventh of October, 1860, and also the judgment roll and the proceedings in the case. The plaintiff objected to the evidence offered controverting the validity of the judgment, and maintaining that it was coram non judice and void.

On the second of November, 1859, Gleason commenced an action by filing a complaint in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District against Mathew Maume, Samuel Adamson and Mary E. Maume, the object of which was to recover from Mathew Maume seven thousand dollars, alleged to be due from him on a contract set forth in the complaint, and to obtain a decree against the defendants Adamson and Mary E. Maume, setting aside as fraudulent certain mortgages on real property, executed and delivered to them by Mathew Maume, and a decree against Mathew Maume, compelling him to execute a mortgage on the same real property as security for the payment of the debt sought to be recovered, in pursuance of an alleged agreement that he would so secure the same. A summons was issued on the day the complaint was filed, and on the same day the attorney for the plaintiff therein made an affidavit that the defendants were absent from the State, two of them residing in Ireland and the other in England. Whereupon the Court made an order that the service of the summons be made by publication in a certain newspaper specified in the order, for at least once a week for three months. On the fifth of December, 1859, the plaintiff Gleason filed a supplemental complaint in the action against the same persons and also against Michael Dundon, Michael Maume and Johanna Maume as defendants. This supplemental complaint embodied, by direct averments and reference, the same matters contained in the original complaint, and further alleged and charged that Mathew Maume, with intent to cheat and defraud the plaintiff Gleason out of the debt due him, entered into an agreement with Michael Dundon, in Ireland, to come to California for the purpose of covering up, concealing and disposing of his property so as to cheat and defraud the plaintiff and other of his creditors out of their debts; and fraudulently agreed with Dundon to convey to him certain real property in the City of San Francisco, for the fraudulent purpose of cheating and defrauding his creditors.

The supplemental complaint is replete with charges of acts of the defendants by which they designed to defraud and had defrauded the creditors of Mathew Maume, and that the defendant Dundon had thus acquired title to a portion of his property, and others of the defendants had obtained from him mortgages on other portions of his property, all of which transactions were fictitious, and intended to cheat and defraud the creditors of Mathew Maume. In conclusion, the plaintiff Gleason, in addition to the relief which he sought in his original complaint, prayed that the conveyance from Mathew Maume to Dundon might be declared fraudulent and void, and that the same might be decreed to be delivered up to be cancelled.

By the supplemental complaint it was sought to obtain an accounting by Johanna Maume and Michael Maume for the income and profits of the property of Mathew Maume while in their possession and use. A summons was issued on this supplemental complaint on the day it was filed. On the tenth of the same month the Court made an order, on an affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney therein, that the service of the summons be made on the three absent defendants by publication thereof in a specified newspaper for at least once a week for three months.

The proof of the publication of summons in the Gleason case was by the affidavit of "the bookkeeper in the office of the printer and publisher of the Daily Morning Call newspaper," made on the second day of May, 1860. This affidavit states "that a notice, of which the annexed is a printed copy, has been regularly published in the said newspaper at least once a week for three months, commencing on the 8th day of November, 1859, and ending on the 24th day of April, 1860." The "notice" mentioned in the affidavit purported to be a summons, issued on the second of November, 1859, in the case of Timothy Gleason, plaintiff, against Mathew Maume et al., defendants, and directed to the defendants named in the original complaint. It differed from the summons actually issued, showing that it had been altered. Instead of its simply requiring the defendants to answer "the complaint filed," it required them to answer "the complaint (original and supplemental) filed." In the statement of the cause and general nature of the action the summons first issued set forth, among other things, that the action was brought "to set aside certain conveyances made by said Mathew Maume to the defendants, Samuel Adamson and Mary E. Maume, alleged to be fraudulent and void," while the summons as published contained the same notice, with the name of Michael Dundon interpolated after the name of Mary E. Maume as one of the defendants. At the time of the filing of the supplemental complaint making Dundon, Michael Maume and Johanna Maume parties defendants, there had been four publications of the "notice" or summons mentioned in the affidavit of the bookkeeper according to such affidavit. While we do not intend to impugn the integrity of the bookkeeper, the conviction is forced upon us that some one concerned was guilty of tampering with the record by interpolating matter in the summons that was not therein when it was issued, and when the order for its service by publication was made.

By filing the supplemental complaint and issuing a summons thereon, the original action became merged in the action as supplemented by the addition of parties and subject matter, and the summons last issued should have been served by publication in order to clothe the Court with jurisdiction of the persons of the absent defendants. The publication of the original summons, even if it had been made, would have been ineffectual to give the Court jurisdiction of the persons of the absent defendants, because the original complaint had been superseded by the supplemental complaint. Mathew Maume had the right to appear and be heard as to the additional matters charged as well as in respect to the matters contained in the original complaint which had been carried into the supplemental complaint. (Lawrence v. Bolton, 3 Paige, 295; Scudder v. Vorhis, 1 Barb. 55.)

The defendant's counsel insist that the judgment in the Gleason case cannot be questioned collaterally, for the reason that the jurisdiction of a Court of general or superior jurisdiction will be presumed in the absence of evidence on the face of the record to the contrary. The case of Peacock v. Bell, 1 Saund. 73, is generally relied on in support of this doctrine. In that case it was declared that "the rule for jurisdiction is that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior Court, but that which specially appears to be so; and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, but that which is so expressly alleged." The case here cited involved the question of jurisdiction as to the subject matter of the action, and not as to the person of the defendant, and it may be doubted if a case can be found which sanctions any indowment of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, when the same is to be acquired by a special statutory mode, without personal service of process. If jurisdiction of the person of the defendant is to be acquired by publication of the summons in lieu of personal service, the mode prescribed must be strictly pursued. (People v. Huber, 20 Cal. 81; Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149; Kendall v. Washburn, 14 How. Pr. R. 380.)

It is a cardinal principle in the administration of justice that no man can be condemned or divested of his right until he has had an opportunity to be heard. Though the rule in relation to Courts of general or superior jurisdiction is, that their jurisdiction will be presumed until the contrary appears, it may be doubted whether the rule obtains when the course prescribed for acquiring jurisdiction of the person of the defendant is contrary to the course of the common law. (Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 Coms. 521 and 525.) Be this as it may, if it appear by the record or otherwise that the Court never had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, the judgment will be pronounced a nullity, whether it comes directly or collaterally in question; and this is so whether the Court be of inferior or superior jurisdiction.

The judgment in the Gleason case contains no averment nor recital from which it can be inferred that the Court acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant Mathew Maume. If it did it would not be conclusive of the assumed jurisdiction in such a case. It is a fundamental rule that no Court can acquire jurisdiction by the mere assertion of it, or by deciding that it has it. If it could be intended in the absence of evidence to the contrary that such jurisdiction was acquired, such intendment is overcome by the evidence furnished by the defendants themselves, consisting of the affidavit of the bookkeeper of the newspaper publisher and the notice or summons annexed to that affidavit.

Neither the summons issued on the original complaint nor that issued on the supplemental complaint was published. The interpolation noticed so changed the summons pretended to have been published as to destroy it as evidence of service of process by publication, and hence we must hold that no publication of any summons issued in the case was made.

Other objections were made touching the sufficiency of the respective affidavits on which the orders of publication were made concerning which we shall express no opinion, as we deem the point of objection considered fatal to the Gleason judgment; the result of which is that such judgment, for want of jurisdiction in the Court that rendered it, over the person of Mathew Maume, must be held void, and as a consequence, the execution thereon and the sale of the property under and by virtue of it must be held void also.

But it is insisted on the part of the defendants that the attachment which was issued and levied upon the property in question and which with all rights acquired thereby, had been assigned to the defendant O'Connor, constituted a lien upon the property, which continues notwithstanding the judgment obtained by Gleason against Maume may be void, and that O'Connor, having such lien, had an interest in the premises which entitled him to impeach the conveyance to the plaintiff on the ground of fraud. If the defendant O'Connor had a lien on the premises by reason of the attachment, that lien could not be rendered effectual for the purpose of impeaching the conveyance to the plaintiff until judgment obtained in the suit of Gleason against Maume, and it is possible that no such judgment will ever be obtained. If the defendant O'Connor, as the assignee of Gleason, was at the commencement of this action, and when it was tried, the creditor of Mathew Maume, he was simply a creditor at large without a judgment, and hence was not in a position to maintain an action by answer in the nature of a cross bill in equity to set aside the conveyance made to the plaintiff. (Crippen v. Hudson, 3 Kern. 161; Reubens v. Joel, 2 Kern. 488; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abbott, 400; Wilson v. Forsyth, 24 Barb. 117.)

Even if it had been competent for the defendants, in the capacity of creditors at large of Mathew Maume, to have impeached in this action the conveyance to the plaintiff as fraudulent, they failed to establish the fact that they were creditors, or that either of them was a creditor, of plaintiff's grantor. The void judgment of Gleason, with the assignment of it, together with the alleged cause of action on which it purported to be founded, did not prove O'Connor to be a creditor of Maume, and no other evidence was offered to prove him such. The attachment and proceeding therewith connected given in evidence by the defendants, but finally excluded by the Court on the plaintiff's motion, were, as the case then stood, incompetent for the purpose for which they seem to have been produced in evidence, and were properly excluded.

The defendants gave in evidence a judgment recovered in May, 1861, by Bernard Rooney against Mathew Maume, foreclosing a mortgage on other property in San Francisco than that in controversy, and in connection with it, showed that after the sale of the mortgaged premises there remained due the sum of about ninety dollars. The object of this evidence was declared by the counsel for the defendants on the trial to be merely to show that the Rooney judgment was not satisfied.

But it was subsequently attempted to be shown that the balance due had passed by assignment to the defendant O'Connor. It was sought to be proved that Rooney had made an assignment of the balance due on his judgment through the agency of an attorney in fact, and the defendants having failed to establish this fact to the satisfaction of the Court, the document purporting to be Rooney's assignment was excluded on the plaintiff's objection. The testimony offered to prove the authority of the person who pretended to act as the attorney in fact for Rooney we regard as very unsatisfactory, and we are of opinion the document was properly excluded.

The defendants failed to show that they, or either of them, were creditors of Mathew Maume, and consequently, were not in a position to impeach the conveyance of the premises to the plaintiff as fraudulent and void as to Maume's creditors. (McElwain v. Yardley, 9 Wend. 548; Crippen v. Hudson, 3 Kern. 161; Reubens v. Joel, 3 Kern. 488; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abbott, 400; Wilson v. Forsyth, 24 Barb. 105.) As between the grantor and grantee, a conveyance executed to defraud creditors is valid. (Bolt v. Rogers, 3 Paige, 154; Gale v.

Gale, 19 Barb. 249; Chamberlin v. Barnes, 26 Barb. 160; Gardenier v. Tubbs, 21 Wend. 169; 1 Story's Eq. Jur., Sec. 371.)

In addition to the equitable defense interposed by the defendants, they offered evidence to show that the defendant O'Connor had acquired title to a portion of the property by virtue of a sale and conveyance of it for the payment of taxes. Two tax deeds were given in evidence, the one bearing date on the sixteenth of July, 1860, executed by the Tax Collector to Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr., the other bearing date the nineteenth of July, 1862, executed by the Tax Collector to R. F. Ryan.

The first tax deed was objected to by plaintiff on several grounds. The certificate of sale, which was produced in evidence by the defendants, showed that the premises described in it and in the deed, were sold to Michael Dundon, whereas the deed was made to Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr., and there was no evidence showing that the grantee named in the deed had acquired the right of Michael Dundon by assignment or otherwise. But it is insisted on the part of defendants that Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr., is presumptively the same person as Michael Dundon. This position, in view of the authorities cited to support it, might appear in some degree plausible had it not been proved on the trial that there were two persons by the name of Dundon, one of whom was called Michael, and the other Patrick Michael.

Other objections were made to this deed, which need not be noticed, as this alone was sufficient to warrant its exclusion.

The tax deed to R. F. Ryan was objected to by plaintiff on the ground that no preliminary evidence was produced laying a foundation for its introduction; and, also, that the deed was void on its face because of the uncertainty of the description of the property as assessed and advertised, and also on the ground that at the time of levying the taxes and the sale of the land Ryan was a claimant of the property, and for that reason could not acquire title to it by paying the taxes by purchase at the tax sale. The Court, notwithstanding these objections admitted this deed in evidence, and the plaintiff attempted to impeach its validity by showing that a portion of the taxes for which the property was sold were not levied by law nor by any person or body under authority of law.

The assessment of the lot appears by the deed to have been made to "P. M. Dundon and to all owners and claimants known or unknown and to all owners and claimants of any interest present or future therein, or any lien upon the same."

The third section of the Revenue Act of 1857, as amended by the Act of 1859 (Laws 1859, p. 344,) requires the Assessor to assess all real estate to the person, firm, corporation, association or company owning it, or having the possession, charge or control of it, if known to him; and it is provided further that the property shall be assessed to the owner or claimant, if he shall be known to the Assessor, "and to all owners and claimants, known or unknown, and to all owners and claimants of any interest, present or future therein, or any lien upon the same, and no error in regard to such owner or claimant shall in anywise affect the validity of such assessment."

When this assessment was made the property did not belong to P. M. Dundon, though it may be he claimed some interest in it; but it was also assessed to "all owners and claimants, known or unknown, and to all owners and claimants of any interest, present or future, therein, or any lien upon the same," and the law declares, as already seen, that no error in regard to such owner or claimant shall in anywise affect the validity of the assessment so made. At the time of the assessment Ryan was in possession of the lot, claiming it, or some interest in it, and by the terms of the assessment it was assessed to him as a claimant, known or unknown, and when he paid the taxes properly levied, he only discharged his own obligation under the law. (Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609; Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38.) On this point the learned Judge of the Court below charged the jury as follows:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the property was assessed and offered for sale Ryan claimed it and was in its possession, the tax sale to him and payment by him would only amount to the payment of the tax which it was his duty to have paid. In such case the sale thereof would not result in passing the title. In other words, he who is on land claiming it to be his is not at liberty to obtain a title by omitting to perform his duty to the State by paying the taxes as they accrue—that such claimant and possessor is not permitted under the law to be delinquent in his duty, and then seek by proof of such delinquency to obtain a title from the State to the land he so occupies.”

We are of opinion that this charge to the jury is sound in principle and should be maintained as the law of the land.

Johanna Maume was examined as a witness on behalf of plaintiff to prove Mathew Maume's prior possession of the demanded premises. On her cross examination inquiries were made of her respecting her residence and business. The plaintiff's counsel objected to this course of examination. The objection was overruled, but at the same time his honor the Judge stated that the witness was one of the most respectable women in his neighborhood. To this remark the defendants' counsel excepted, when the Judge further stated that he did not mean to say that she was one of the most respectable, but a woman of respectability. The defendants complain of the conduct of the Judge in this particular as an irregularity of sufficient magnitude to authorize the reversal of the judgment.

From the high and authoritative position of a Judge presiding at a trial before a jury, his influence with them is of vast extent, and he has it in his power by words or actions, or both, to materially prejudice the rights and interests of one or the other of the parties. By words or conduct he may on the one hand support the character or testimony of a witness, or on the other may destroy the same, in the estimation of the jury; and thus his personal and official influence is exerted to the unfair advantage of one of the parties, with a corresponding detriment to the cause of the other. We regret the necessity for an expression of our disapproval of the irregularity of which complaint is made, and though we do not impugn the expression as designed to aid the side of the plaintiff, we may say, we should not hesitate to reverse the judgment because of it, if the same depended in any material degree upon the testimony of the witness whose character and standing was thus indorsed; but as it is, the testimony of Johanna Maume may be obliterated, and then the fact sought to be proved by her is established by the testimony of several other witnesses of the plaintiff, without any attempt on the part of the defendants to disprove it; besides which, such fact was virtually conceded by the defendants, whose claim to the possession of the premises, as the successors in interest of Mathew Maume, involved them in an admission of his prior right.

There are many other assignments of error in the record, all of which we deem untenable. We cannot give our reasons in this place for our conclusions respecting them, as to do so would be to extend this opinion to a burdensome length.

The transcript of the record and the proceedings in the Court below, seems to have been made up in palpable disregard in one respect of the law on the subject. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. The statute provides that a statement on which a party intends to rely for a new trial shall contain so much of the evidence or reference thereto as may be necessary to explain the grounds specifically set forth therein as causes for a new trial, and no more. (Practice Act, Sec. 195.) A similar provision respecting bills of exception, is contained in section one hundred and ninety of the same Act; and section two hundred and thirty-eight provides that when the party who has the right to appeal wishes a statement of the case to be annexed to the record of the judgment or order, he shall prepare such statement, which shall state specifically the particular errors or grounds on which he intends to rely on the appeal, and shall contain so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the particular errors or grounds specified, and no more.

Instead of the statement in this case conforming to these provisions of the statute, or with any one of them, the Dis-strict Court Reporter's minutes of the testimony is embodied in gross, with every remark made by the Court or counsel, whether important or otherwise, during the progress of the trial; and besides this, long documents are set out in full, when a brief abstract in respect to most of them would have served as useful a purpose as the documents at length, and would have been much more convenient as well as more economical of time and money. The judgment rolls in the Gleason and Rooney cases are set forth in full, covering over sixty printed pages, when everything in them material for the purpose of the motion for a new trial, or on appeal, might have been embodied in an abstract of one sixth their length. The labor of examining and mastering the contents of a record thus made up, in order to discover what is material, is greatly enhanced beyond what it would be, were the provisions of the statute referred to observed.

We are aware that it is not unfrequently the case where statements and bills of exception are prepared according to the letter and spirit of the statute, attorneys for respondents insist, by way of amendments, that all the evidence given and all that transpired at the trial shall be set forth in the statement or bill of exceptions, and the Judge who may have tried the cause is asked, not in vain, generally to order the statement to be so amended and engrossed. This course of conduct is sometimes adopted on the part of respondents to embarrass and oppress appellants. Such conduct and such a practice should be discountenanced not only by Courts having power in the premises, but also by all honorable men engaged in the practice of the law. While it is the duty of Courts, in settling statements, to see that so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the grounds assigned as error is stated fully and fairly, we may suggest that a great reform might be effected by exacting a compliance with the law on the subject. (See also Laws 1864, p. 246.)

We have thus noticed the character of the transcript in this case, which is only one of many of the same kind, for the purpose of calling the attention of those who may have cases to prepare for this Court, to the provisions of the statute prescribing the mode of procedure in the preparation and settlement of statements and bills of exceptions, with the hope that a general reformation in practice in this particular may be effected.

CHRISTIAN J. MEGERLE v. RICHARD P. ASHE, THOMAS VAN SYCKLE, AND LUTHER FLANDERS.

LEGISLATIVE GRANT OF LAND.—A legislative grant is as effectual to pass title to lands owned by the Government as a grant evidenced by a patent.

PATENT AS EVIDENCE OF TITLE.—A patent is not conclusive, as evidence of title as against a grant made by the legislative department, prior to the patent.

GRANT OF LAND TO STATES BY ACT OF SEPTEMBER 3d, 1841.—The Act of Congress of September 3d, 1841, is a present grant to each new State, upon its admission into the Union, of five hundred thousand acres of land; but the grant does not attach to any particular parcel of land until the State, through its agents, has selected the same, and the selection has been approved by the United States.

CONFLICT BETWEEN STATE PATENT AND UNITED STATES PATENT.—When a State has selected any tract of land as a part of the five hundred thousand acres granted by the Act of Congress of September 3d, 1841, and that selection has been made of public lands subject to the grant, and the selection has been approved by the United States, then the State or its grantee holds the title to the tract selected by a title superior to that asserted by the holder of a subsequent patent issued by the United States.

CONFLICTING PATENTS AS EVIDENCE.—If a plaintiff in ejectment offers in evidence a patent of the United States and rests, the defendant is entitled to offer in evidence a State patent of prior date for the same land, accompanied with proof that the land was selected by the State as part of the five hundred thousand acres granted to the State, and that the United States approved of the selection.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The defendants, Van Syckle and Flanders, were in possession of the land as tenants of defendant Ashe, who claimed to own it and defended on behalf of his tenants.

The following is the patent from the State to Terry:

Statement of Facts.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. }
State of California. }

To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

WHEREAS, under the provisions of Act of the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant pre-emption rights," approved September fourth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, five hundred thousand acres of the public lands were granted to the State of California; and whereas, the Legislature of the State of California provided for the selection and location of said five hundred thousand acres of land, under and in pursuance of said Act of Congress, by the following Acts of the Legislature of said State, to wit: an Act entitled "An Act to provide for the disposal of the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to this State by Act of Congress, that the people of the State of California may avail themselves of the benefits of the eighth section of the Act of Congress, approved fourth April, eighteen hundred and forty-one, chapter sixteen, entitled 'An Act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant pre-emption rights,' the following provisions are hereby enacted," approved May 3d, 1852. Also an Act entitled "An Act authorizing the location and patenting of school lands," approved April 30th, 1857. Also an Act entitled "An Act to provide for the location and sale of the unsold portion of the five hundred thousand acres of land donated to this State for School purposes, and the seventy-two sections donated to this State for the use of a Seminary of Learning," approved April 23d, 1858. And whereas, the Legislature of the State of California passed an Act entitled "An Act to provide for the issuance of patents to lands located with State School land warrants, and for lands purchased under the Act of April twenty-third, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight," approved April 16th, 1859. And whereas, it appears by the certificate of the Register of the State Land Office, No. 79, issued in accordance with the provisions of said last named Act, bearing date the sixth day of January, 1862, that the tracts of land hereinafter described have been duly and properly located in accordance with the provisions of the said laws of this State, and that David S. Terry is entitled to receive a patent therefor;

Now, therefore, the State of California hereby grants to the said David S. Terry, and to his heirs and assigns forever, the said tracts of lands located as aforesaid, and which are known and described as follows, to wit: The north half and the southwest quarter of section twenty-one (21), township four (4) north, range eight (8) east of Mount Diablo Meridian, containing four hundred and eighty acres, taken in lieu of four hundred and eighty acres, together with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto appertaining and belonging.

To have and to hold the aforegranted premises to the said David S. Terry, and to his heirs and assigns, to his and their use and behoof forever.

In testimony whereof, I, John G. Downey, Governor of the State of California, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the State of California to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at the City of Sacramento, the eighth day of January, in the year of our Lord, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two.

JOHN G. DOWNEY, Governor of State.

Attest:

[L. s.] JOHNSON PRICE, Secretary of State.

Countersigned:

[L. s.] H. A. HIGLEY, Register of State Land Office.

Indorsed—Letters Patent from the State of California, issued January 8th, 1862, to David S. Terry for 480 acres of State school land lying in San Joaquin County.

Plaintiff's patent from the United States did not recite nor purport to be founded upon a pre-emption, but upon a location of a bounty land warrant issued under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1855, nor did the patent state when the land was surveyed, or at what time the warrant was located.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below and defendants appealed.

Argument for Respondent.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Appellants.

Defendants offered to prove the recitals in the State patent.

The presumption is that the State officers had complied with the law.

If the law of the State was complied with, the land was vacant and unoccupied at the time of the State location, and was surveyed, etc.; and in that condition the State had a right to select and locate it—as part of the five hundred thousand acres. (See Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 316.) And when she made such selection with the consent of the United States Register and Recorder, to perfect the State title, all that remained was a ministerial act to be performed by the officers of the United States, viz.: the issuance of a patent. The selection by the State could not be overridden by the patent issued to plaintiff at a subsequent date. A patent could not be issued by the United States until the State had made a selection and location. Having made a selection, the United States could not defeat it by issuing a patent to another whose selection and purchase were subsequent.

Tyler & Cobb, for Respondent.

We maintain two propositions:

First—That a United States patent is conclusive evidence of legal title in the patentee, in an action at law, as against everything except a prior patent from the same source of title.

Second—That a patent of the United States cannot be attacked, except for fraud or mistake, and for these only in the United States Courts.

In support of the first proposition we cite the Court to the following authorities: Bagwell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436; Finley v. Williams, 9 Cranch, 164; Hoofnagle v. Anderson, 7 Wheat. 212; Brush v. Ware et als. 15 Pet. 93. A patent of the United States carries on its face the presumption that all the previous requisites of the law have been complied with.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiff claims title to the premises in controversy through a patent issued to him by the United States, September 1, 1863; and the defendants claim title under a patent issued by the State of California, January 8, 1862, to Terry, the grantor of Ashe. The plaintiff having introduced his patent rested, and the defendants then offered in evidence the patent from the State to Terry, and in connection therewith offered to prove by independent evidence that the statement and recitals in the patent were true, which were in substance that the land had been properly selected and located by the State, as a part of the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the State, by the Act of Congress of September 3, 1841, and that Terry was entitled to receive a patent from the State for the lands described in the patent. The premises described in the two patents were identical. The Court excluded the patent and the evidence offered in connection with it, and the defendants excepted.

In support of the ruling of the Court the plaintiff advances two propositions: "First, that a United States patent is conclusive evidence of legal title in the patentee in an action at law as against everything except a prior patent from the same source of title; and second, that a patent of the United States cannot be attacked except for fraud or mistake, and for those only in the United States Courts." If the first proposition cannot be maintained the consideration of the second will be unnecessary, for if the patent is not absolutely conclusive it will be deemed to have been issued without authority of law—through fraud or mistake — as against a title that passed from the same source of title prior to the date of the patent. The first proposition assumes that, the title of the United States can pass only by a patent, for the learned counsel would not contend that the patent would be conclusive as against a prior title derived from the United States simply because the title did not issue in the form of a patent. This assumption stands opposed to a long series of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as that of several of the States. In Rutherford v. Greene's Heirs, 2 Wheat. 196, in which the title of General Greene to the twenty-five thousand acres granted to him by the Act of the Legislature of North Carolina, was in issue, it being objected that the grant was not complete, because not attested by an instrument having the seal of the State attached. Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said that "the Court would certainly have thought it unnecessary to advert to it (the objection) had not the argument been urged repeatedly, and with much earnestness, by counsel of the highest respectability." A legislative grant is as effectual to pass the title to lands, in all respects and for every purpose, as a grant evidenced by a patent. (Lessieur v. Price, 12 How. 59; Kernan v. Griffith, ante, p. 88; Summers v. Dickinson, 9 Cal. 554; Owen v. Jackson, 9 Cal. 322.) The patent, therefore, being of no higher grade, as evidence of title, than a legislative grant, is not conclusive as against a person claiming under a grant made by the legislative department prior to the adverse patent. It may be remarked, also, that the Act of Congress makes no provision for the issuing of a patent to the State or her grantees, and if one should be issued it would amount to no more than a further assurance.

For the purpose of determining the question of the admissibility of the evidence offered by the defendants, it is necessary to ascertain in what manner the title to any particular tract of land passes to the State or her grantee, under the Act of Congress of September 3, 1841, for if the evidence tended to show that the title to the tract in controversy passed to the

State or her grantee, prior to the date of the plaintiff's patent, the Court erred in excluding the evidence.

The eighth section provides that "there shall be and hereby is granted to each new State that shall be hereafter admitted into the Union, upon such admission, so much land as, including such quantity as may have been granted to such State before its admission and while under a Territorial Government, for purposes of internal improvements, as aforesaid, as shall make five hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected and located as aforesaid." The language "hereby is granted" as has uniformly been held by the Courts, imports a present grant. The title to the amount of land specified in the Act passes upon the admission of the new State, though "wanting identity to make it perfect"—to attach it to a particular parcel of land. (Lessieur v. Price, 12 How. 59; Rutherford v. Greene's Heirs, 2 Wheat. 196; Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609.) The Legislature of a State must thereafter provide by law for the performance by her officers or agents, of the acts that may be requisite to indicate a selection of the tracts of land which, in the aggregate, will constitute the amount of land granted to the State by the Act of Congress. When a particular parcel of land has been "selected and located" in accordance with the provisions of the Act of Congress—when the selection and location have been made by the proper officers or agents, acting on behalf of the State, in such manner as the Legislature has directed, and on public lands that at the time are subject to such location, and the selection and location have been approved by the proper authorities of the United States, then the identification of the land has made the title perfect and attached it to the particular tract selected. The title, thus perfected and attached to the land, vests in the State, or her grantee, and all the interest the United States had in the particular parcel is held by the State or her grantee, by a title superior to that asserted by the holder of a subsequent patent issued by the General Government.

A person claiming title under the Act of Congress, through the State, would be obliged to show, as against one claiming under the United States through a patent issued in accordance with the general regulations for the sale of public lands, the performance of the acts required by law to constitute the selection and location of the land. This the defendant was proceeding to do when objection was made by the plaintiff. We do not undertake to say that the evidence offered by him would have been sufficient to have sustained his claim of title and upheld his patent from the State; but the offer to show that the recital was true, that the land had been "duly and properly located in accordance with the provisions of the said laws of this State," though general in its terms, certainly included several of the steps necessary to be taken in making the selection and location of the land. The refusal of evidence of the character offered would subject every title to portions of the five hundred thousand acres of land derived from the State to the liability of being defeated by subsequent patents issued by the United States.

The patent from the State was also admissible in connection with proof of the due selection and location of the land. We therefore hold that the decision of the Court in excluding the evidence offered by the defendants was erroneous.

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ELIZABETH DE UPREY v. SAMUEL DE UPREY, AND MARY ANN DE UPREY.

COMPLAINT IN PARTITION.—In a complaint to obtain partition of land, a general allegation that "the premises cannot be divided by metes and bounds without prejudice," is sufficient, without an allegation of the facts upon which the plaintiff relies, to obtain a particular mode of partition.

SAME.—A complaint in partition is good which is silent upon the subject of the mode of partition.

PARTIES TO SUIT FOR PARTITION.—A married woman whose husband is sued in partition is a necessary party if she claims a homestead right to or an interest in the property in dispute.

DISCLAIMER IN PARTITION.—In an action of partition, a defendant cannot claim that the action be dismissed as to him, on the ground that his answer disclaims any interest in the land, unless he has made the disclaimer in absolute and unconditional terms.

Argument for Appellants.

DISCLAIMER SHOULD BE ABSOLUTE.—An answer which disclaims all interest in the land in dispute, except such as the defendant may have under the homestead law, by virtue of the dedication of the land to homestead uses by himself and his wife, is not a disclaimer.

WHAT MAY BE TRIED IN PARTITION.—Under our practice, any question affecting the right of the plaintiff to a partition, or the rights of each and all of the parties in the land, may be put in issue, tried, and determined in such action.

ANSWER IN PARTITION.—A defendant in partition is not entitled to have the action dismissed by reason of the force and effect of any defense which he may set up in his answer.

FACTS TO BE FOUND IN PARTITION.—In an action for partition, if the Court finds that the parties hold and are in possession of real property, as joint tenants or as tenants in common, in which one or more of them have an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years, the partition should be made, although the findings may also show that the plaintiff, in his complaint, has incorrectly set forth the title or interest of the parties, or of one or more of them, in the land.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The affidavits in support of the motion to be allowed to file a supplemental complaint, and make Mary Ann De Uprey a party defendant, stated that she claimed a homestead interest in the property. The supplemental complaint contained the same averment, and did not state that she owned any interest in the property.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Cyril V. Gray, for Appellants.

If the declaration of homestead showed anything, it showed a claim of the property by Samuel and his wife, as not being held by them, or either of them, as tenants in common with any other person, and consequently that it was a case for an action of ejectment, and not for partition. It should not, therefore, have been permitted to bring such a question into an action for partition, for it has repeatedly been held that Courts will not undertake to partition property where the title is disputed. Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

This is an action for the partition of a certain lot and improvements in the City of San Francisco. The plaintiff obtained judgment and a decree directing the premises to be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties on the ground that a partition by metes and bounds could not be made without prejudice. The defendants appeal, and assign several errors which we will notice in the order in which they have been presented.

The action was commenced against Samuel De Uprey alone, who demurred to the complaint, and for cause of demurrer alleged that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, which ruling constitutes the first error assigned.

The only ground urged in support of the demurrer is that the complaint contents itself with the general allegation that the premises cannot be divided by metes and bounds without prejudice and does not state the facts showing why such a partition could not be made. A complete answer to this is found in the fact that the manner in which the partition is to be made constitutes no part of the cause of action, but is merely a part of the relief. While it is proper and perhaps advisable to ask for a particular mode of partition—there being two provided by the statute—and to that end allege the facts upon which the plaintiff relies for the particular mode which he seeks; yet this is not indispensable, and a complaint which is silent upon the subject is good. No facts need be stated in the complaint except such as are found enumerated in the two hundred and sixty-fourth section, which provides for the cause of action in question and defines the facts upon which it rests; and a specification of the interest of each party interested in the land, so far as known to the plaintiff, as provided in section two hundred and sixty-five. If these sections left the question in doubt, such doubt is entirely removed by the two hundred and seventy-fifth section, which provides that: "If it be alleged in the complaint, and be established by evidence, or if it appear by the evidence without such allegation in the complaint, to the satisfaction of the Court, that the property, or any part of it, is so situated that partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners, the Court may order a sale thereof." But were it otherwise, and were the theory of the appellant the correct one, we should still be of the opinion that his theory is fully satisfied by the complaint in this case. Whether a partition can or cannot be made by metes and bounds is purely a question of fact, and is the ultimate fact to be found, and therefore the only fact necessary to be averred under any system of pleading with which we are acquainted. The constituent facts, or those which lie behind, are merely probative, and need not be averred. But independent of all that has been said, it may be safely affirmed that the bare description of the premises contained in the complaint sufficiently shows that a partition by metes and bounds could not be made without prejudice. It is a city lot fronting on an alley, measuring only twenty-three feet front and extending back sixty. We think it would be difficult to divide such a lot by metes and bounds without great prejudice to the owners.

After the demurrer to the complaint was overruled the plaintiff, upon affidavit and notice, moved the Court for leave to bring in the wife of the defendant by a supplemental complaint. The motion was allowed by the Court against the exception of the defendant, and it is next contended that this order of the Court was erroneous.

We cannot but regard this point as frivolous. Mary Ann De Uprey, as appears by her own answer, not only claimed a homestead right to the premises, but claimed that the entire legal estate was in her, and the Court found that the legal title to an undivided half was in her. She was, therefore, not only a proper party, but a necessary party to the complete determination of the case. All persons having or claiming any interest in the land are not only proper but necessary parties to a suit for partition; and it was not only proper for the Court to allow the motion in question, but it would have been error not to have done so. (Practice Act, Secs. 17 and 68.) Admitting, for the sake of the argument, that the showing in support of the motion was insufficient, subsequent events clearly demonstrated the fact that she was a necessary party, and that the ends of justice had been subserved by allowing the amendment. Such being the case, this Court will not disturb an order resting very much in the discretion of the Court below and exercised under a statute containing very liberal provisions upon the subject of amendments.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed the defendants separately demurred upon the grounds following: First—Misjoinder of parties defendant, because Mary Ann De Uprey was improperly joined. Second—Because several causes of action had been improperly united. Third—Because the complaint did not state facts sufficient.

The demurrers were overruled, which ruling constitutes the third error assigned.

These demurrers were not only frivolous but, under the circumstances of the case, impertinent. The Court had already decided that Mary Ann was a proper party and therefore making her such could not result in a misjoinder. The Court had also decided that the original complaint stated a cause of action and it is clear that it, together with the amended and supplemental, does not state less facts than at first. And so far as the second ground alleged is concerned we cannot perceive that the demurrer has even a respectable pretext to stand upon. It is obvious upon inspection that there is but one cause of action stated in the complaint, and but one kind of relief sought.

This case was certainly contested with a pertinacity worthy of a better cause. After all the demurrers, five in number, had been overruled and the defendants had both answered separately, denying all the allegations of the complaint, their counsel next moved to dismiss the case upon the pleadings without any trial of the issues of fact thus joined between the parties. In view of the fact that the sufficiency of the complaint made by the plaintiff had undergone the test of five demurrers, and the further fact that answers, in the absence of all evidence either way, are entitled to no more faith and credit at the hands of the Court than complaints, this motion has at least the merit of novelty.

But it is argued in support of the motion that the pleadings show no cause of action as against Samuel De Uprey, because he disclaimed any interest in the land. Such, however, does not appear to be the fact. His answer does not contain an absolute and unqualified disclaimer. Less than that the plaintiff was not bound to accept. He only disclaims all interest except such as he may have under the Homestead Law by virtue of the dedication of the land to homestead uses by himself and his wife. It may be that such interest did not amount to anything in law, but that was one of the questions which he had helped to make and which the plaintiff had a right to have determined and put to rest by the judgment of the Court. But be that as it may, he could not claim a dismissal of the action upon the ground of a disclaimer unless he made that disclaimer in absolute and unconditional terms. Instead of doing that he denied all the allegations of the complaint as to the plaintiff's title, pleaded two statutes of limitations and averred title in his wife and claimed for himself a right of homestead in the premises, but disclaimed any further interest. It is a misnomer to call such an answer a disclaimer.

The issues made by the answer of Mary Ann De Uprey are:

First—Has the plaintiff any interest?

Second—Has Samuel De Uprey any interest?

Third—Is Mary Ann sole owner of the premises?

Fourth—Has the plaintiff possession?

Fifth—Has the plaintiff been in possession within five years?

Sixth—Has she been in possession within four years?

We are asked if the foregoing questions are such as are cognizable in an action for partition and it is argued that they are not, but are such questions as must be tried in an action of ejectment or to quiet title, if at all, and therefore this case ought to be dismissed on the pleadings without first ascertaining by a trial whether there is a word of truth in the answer which raises those questions — a conclusion both lame and impotent. The action being confessedly for a partition, so far as the complaint is concerned, we are certainly unable to perceive how the defendants can defeat the action by the mere force and effect of their answers, no matter what they contain. Nor, admitting such to be the fact, are we able to perceive by what rule of law or logic the plaintiff is to be held responsible for what appears in the answer and sent out of Court because the defendants have seen proper to raise questions not cognizable, as they alleged, in an action for partition. On the contrary, if the questions made by the answer are not cognizable in this action it is not the fault of the plaintiff, but of the defendants, and they ought not to have been allowed to make them. But there is nothing in the idea that these questions are of "strange countenance" in an action for partition. Any question affecting the right of the plaintiff to a partition, or the rights of each and all of the parties in the land may be put in issue, tried and determined in such action. (Prac. Act, Sec. 271.) Such is one of the fruits of the new system of practice which we have adopted, and when contrasted with the practice in such cases at common law, serves to illustrate its superiority.

It is next insisted that the findings negative the averments of the complaint, and the doctrine that the allegata and the probata must correspond is invoked for the purpose of establishing an error in that respect. The complaint averred that Samuel De Uprey was the co-tenant of the plaintiff, and owned an undivided half of the premises, but upon the trial the Court found that this undivided half did not belong to Samuel but to Mary Ann, and for that reason we are asked to reverse the judgment. This is substantially the same question which we have already twice considered in a different form, and which seems to play the part of Banquo's ghost in this judicial drama. We know of no rule of law which requires the Court, in an action of this kind, to find the facts as alleged or the contrary and not otherwise, nor any rule which cuts off the plaintiff's right to a partition because it turns out on the trial that he was mistaken as to the condition of the title of his co-tenants. The plaintiff is required to set forth the interests of all parties known or unknown as far as they are known to him (Sec. 265), and each defendant is required to set forth in his answer, fully and particularly, the nature and extent of his interest. But suppose that either, or both, through mistake or otherwise, set forth their interests incorrectly, it does not follow that no partition can be had. The partition follows all the same, and is to be made according to the finding regardless of the fact whether such finding corresponds with the allegations of the complaint in that respect. The doctrine invoked is applicable to this kind of an action only so far as the facts upon which the right to a partition is founded are concerned, and which are set forth in the two hundred and sixty-fourth section of the statute. The finding must correspond with the allegations of the complaint so far as to show that the parties — plaintiff and defendant — hold and are in possession of the land in question as joint tenants or as tenants in common, and that one or more of them has an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years. Such are, so to speak, all the issues which are directly and in chief involved in this action, and upon them, if found in favor of the plaintiff, the judgment of the Court is that partition be made. But in order that this judgment may be executed, it is necessary to ascertain what the interests of the respective parties are, if there is any controversy touching them. These latter issues are collateral to the former merely, and do not enter into and become a part of the action within the scope of the rule which counsel have invoked. Whether the finding upon them corresponds with the issues made by the parties or not, is void of legal consequence. The object is not to ascertain whether the allegations of either party in respect to their interests are true or false, but to ascertain what their interests are according to the evidence, in order that the decree of the Court directing a partition may be carried into effect.

The record contains no error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

ORDER GIVING TIME TO FILE STATEMENT.—An order of Court allowing a party twenty days within which to file a statement on motion for a new trial must be construed as giving twenty days from the date of the order, and not twenty days beyond the time of giving notice, or twenty days beyond the time allowed by statute.

FILING STATEMENT FOR NEW TRIAL.—If a statement on application for a new trial is not filed within the time required by law, the right to move for a new trial is waived, and if a motion to that effect is made, the statement should be stricken out.

PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN A NEW TRIAL.—There are three distinct steps recognised by the Practice Act, in a proceeding to obtain a new trial, for the taking of each of which, except the last, a particular period of time is allowed: Firstly—a notice of intention to move for a new trial; Secondly—Filing and serving statement or affidavits; Thirdly—The motion for a new trial. An order extending the time for taking either of these steps should express with precision the object to be attained.

Query?—Should an order allowing time within which to file a motion for a new trial be construed as allowing time to file a statement?

This case was tried by the Court without a jury, and the findings were filed on the 12th of May, 1864. On the same day notice of the filing of the findings was served on defendants' attorney. On the 13th of May, on motion of defendants' counsel, it was "ordered by the Court that said defendants have twenty days within which to file a motion for a new trial herein." On the 16th of the same month the defendants Braley and Gallimore filed a notice of motion for a new trial, and served the same on plaintiff's counsel. On the 3d of June following, the same defendants filed and served their statement on motion for new trial. On motion of plaintiff's counsel this statement on motion for new trial was struck out, upon the ground that it was filed too late, and for that reason the motion for new trial was waived under section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act. The appeal is from the order striking out the statement, and the only question is, Was the statement filed in time? We think it was not. Conceding that the order gave the defendants twenty days within which to file a statement, there can be no doubt that the time commenced to run from the date of the order. It does not say twenty days from the date of giving notice of intention to move, or twenty days beyond the time allowed by statute, but simply that "said defendants have twenty days within which to file a motion for a new trial herein." The obvious construction is, that defendants were to have twenty days in all from that time, and so the Judge below construed his own order. This construction was given to a similar order in Esterby v. Larco, 24 Cal. 179. The twenty days expired June 2d, and the statement was, therefore, not filed in time.

But the order does not in terms extend the time to file a statement, and it is at least doubtful whether it can be so construed. The statute recognizes three distinct steps in a proceeding to obtain a new trial. Firstly—A notice of intention to move for a new trial, which must be given within five days after the rendition of the verdict, when the case is tried by a jury, and within ten days after receiving written notice of the rendering of the decision of the Judge, or of the filing of the report of the Commissioner or referee, when tried by such officers, unless the time for giving notice is extended by the Court for a period not exceeding thirty days, when the parties do not consent to a longer period, as provided in section five hundred and thirty. Secondly—Filing and serving statement or affidavit; which must be done within five days after giving notice of intention to move, unless the time is extended by the Court for a period not exceeding twenty days, or by consent of parties (Practice Act, Section 195); and Thirdly — The motion, or in the language of the statute, "the application for new trial;" which "shall be made at the earliest period practicable after filing the affidavits or statement." (Section 196.) "An application for an order is a motion." (Section 515.) The motion, then, is a distinct and separate step in the proceedings, and subsequent to the notice of intention to move, and to the filing of the statement. The order does not in terms purport to give time to serve a notice of intention to move for a new trial, or to file and serve a statement, but only time "within which to file a motion for a new trial." This language is strictly applicable to the last step in the proceeding only. Doubtless the defendants intended to procure time to file statement. But as the statement was not filed within the twenty days given, it is unnecessary to decide this question. We refer to the form of the order for the purpose, only, of again calling attention to the necessity of seeing that orders procured are entered in such terms as to express with precision the object to be attained. (See Bear River and Auburn Water and Mining Company v. Boles, 24 Cal. 355, on this point.)

The order appealed from must be affirmed. The first fifty printed pages in the transcript might have been omitted. All that was necessary to constitute the transcript on appeal was the order appealed from, affidavit of Wallace, the notice of motion to strike out, statement on appeal and notice of appeal, which are all comprised in about eleven pages of the transcript.

THE PEOPLE v. PRESTON HODGES.

PLACE OF TRIAL OF ACCESSORY.—An accessory before or after the fact in the commission of a public offense must be indicted and tried in that county where the offense of the accessory was committed, notwithstanding the principal offense was committed in another county.

WANT OF JURISDICTION APPEARING ON TRIAL.—When it becomes manifest in the course of the trial of a person indicted as an accessory, that the offense of the accessory was committed in another county than that where the indictment was found, the Court should, on its own motion, discharge the jury and commit the accused to await a warrant from the proper county.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT IN CASE OF ACCESSORY.—If the evidence shows that the offense of the accessory was not committed in the county where the indictment was found, the Court should arrest the judgment without a motion to that effect being made.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN ACCESSORY AND PRINCIPAL.—A person who incites, counsels, hires, or commands another to commit a crime, but is not within such convenient distance as to be able to come to the immediate assistance of his associates, if required, or to watch to prevent surprise, is an accessory, and not a principal in the second degree.

Thomas B. Pool was indicted, jointly with three others, by the Grand Jury of the County of El Dorado, for the murder of Joseph M. Staples, which murder was alleged to have been committed in said county, July 1, 1864; and it was further charged in the indictment that Hodges, the appellant, within said county, "incited, counselled, hired and commanded" the said Pool and others to commit the said murder.

The appellant, on a separate trial, was found guilty by the jury of murder in the second degree, and he was thereupon sentenced by the Court to confinement in the State Prison for the period of twenty years.

There is only one question in the case necessary to be considered.

It appeared from all the testimony introduced at the trial, that the acts wherewith Hodges stood charged, were performed by him in the County of Santa Clara, over two hundred miles distant from the scene of the murder; and on that ground, it is now insisted for the appellant that the District Court for the Eleventh Judicial District, in which the trial and conviction were had, had no jurisdiction of the offense charged against him.

We consider the objection to be well taken. Section ninety-three of the Criminal Practice Act is as follows: "In the case of an accessory before or after the fact in the commission of a public offense, the jurisdiction shall be in that county where the offense of the accessory was committed, notwithstanding the principal offense was committed in another county." By section two hundred and fifty-five, all persons connected in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and assist in its commission, though not present, are to be indicted, tried, and punished, as principals. To that extent "all distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree," is expressly abolished by the section.

There is no conflict between these sections. The latter (Section 255) requires that an accessory should be indicted, tried and punished in the same manner as principals; and section ninety-three fixes the place at or in which those events are to transpire.

Though the common law distinction between principal and accessory is in the main obliterated, yet it is retained for the purposes of venue. Sections eleven and twelve of the Act entitled "Crimes and punishments," define the term "accessory." Section two hundred and fifty-five of the Criminal Practice Act relates to the frame of the indictment against an accessory, the method of trial, and the measure of punishment; and section ninety-three determines the forum having jurisdiction of the offense. It is suggested, however, on behalf of the People, that the evidence establishes that Hodges was a principal in the second degree and not an accessory. This position is not tenable, for there was no evidence tending to prove that Hodges, at the time when the murder was committed, was "at such convenient distance as to be able to come to the immediate assistance of his associates if required, or to watch to prevent surprise, or the like." (Arch. Crim. Prac. 11.) It is further insisted that the objection to the jurisdiction on the part of the appellant comes too late, no motion in arrest on that ground having been made in the Court below. When it became manifest, in the progress of the trial, that the Court had no jurisdiction of the offense, the jury should have been discharged, (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 382,) and the Court, on its own motion, should have committed the accused to await a warrant from the proper county for his arrest. (Ib. Sec. 383.) Again, by section four hundred and forty-three the Court was authorized, "on its own view of the jurisdictional defect, to arrest the judgment without motion." As it is apparent on the face of the record that the whole of the proceedings were coram non iudice, the judgment cannot be permitted to stand, even though the motion in arrest was not, in terms, based upon that objection.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

G. F. & Wm. H. Sharp, and Sharp & Lloyd, for Appellants.

T. J. & M. Bergen, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was brought to enjoin proceedings under an Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to allow James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow and their associates or assigns to construct a toll road in the County of San Mateo," passed in March, 1863. (Laws 1863, p. 99.) Upon filing the complaint a preliminary injunction was granted, and by final decree the same was made perpetual.

The portion of the Act on which the appellants allege the right to appropriate the county road for their use as a toll road reads as follows: "The right to construct and maintain a toll road in San Mateo County is hereby granted to James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow and their associates or assigns, for the period of twenty-five years from the passage of this Act; said road to begin at the point of intersection where the present road crosses the northern boundary line between San Mateo and San Francisco Counties, and thence with said county road to the point where the same intersects with the southern boundary line of San Mateo County." The parties were required, within a year after the passage of the Act, to open, grade and construct the road, to the width of at least thirty feet, and at all times to keep and maintain the same in thorough repair, taking and receiving for the use of said road from the public the tolls therein specified. Further, by the third section of the Act they were empowered to take, condemn and appropriate such lands as might be necessary for the construction of the road, or the right of way thereof, upon payment to the owners or claimants of such lands the ascertained value thereof, according to the provisions of the Act of May 20, 1861. (Laws 1861, p. 607.) Subsequently, in April, 1863, at the same session, another Act was passed, entitled "An Act supplemental to and explanatory of an Act entitled 'An Act to allow James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow and their assigns, to construct and maintain a toll road in the County of San Mateo, passed March twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three,' which reads: 'That portion of section one of the above entitled Act, which reads as follows, to wit: Said road to begin at the point of intersection where the present county road crosses the northern boundary line between San Mateo and San Francisco Counties, and thence with said county road to the point where the same intersects with the southern boundary line of San Mateo County,' shall not be so construed as to grant or confer any rights or privileges to the said James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow or their assigns, to construct, build or maintain a toll road over or upon the whole or any portion of the county road running through the County of San Mateo, from the northern to the southern line of said county, and known as the San José and San Francisco County Road; nor shall any part or parts of said Act be so construed as to authorize or empower the said James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow or their assigns, to charge and collect any toll upon the whole or any portion of said county road; nor shall the said James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow or their assigns, acquire any rights or privileges under and by virtue of the above entitled Act to obstruct, in any manner or way whatsoever, the full enjoyment and free use of said county road, or any portion of the same, to the public." (Laws 1863, p. 361.)

The appellants claim that, under the first Act referred to they have the right to appropriate the county road named in these Acts, and acting upon this construction of their rights under the grant of the franchise, were appropriating the same until enjoined in this action; and further, that the supplemental and explanatory Act cannot vary, alter or impair the rights acquired, as they allege, under the first Act.

What was granted by the Act of March, 1863, is the subject first to be considered, and the determination of this question against the appellants' pretensions will make an end of the case.

The grantees named in the Act were authorized to construct a road—not to appropriate to their own use the county road which was already constructed. And in the construction of this road the right was granted to Nuttman, Harlow and their associates or assigns to take, condemn and appropriate such lands as might be necessary for its construction, or the right of way thereof, upon paying to the owners or claimants of said lands its value to be ascertained as provided by law. The county road was recognized by the Legislature as existing when the Act was passed; and hence it cannot be fairly presumed that it was intended the lands over which it passed and which were already condemned, to every practical intent, and appropriated by the public as a highway, were the lands to be condemned and appropriated for the construction of the new road. The subject matter granted is distinctly expressed by the Act of the Legislature, and is set forth therein as the aggregate thing of paramount prominence and importance. The effect of the Act cannot be controlled by the fact that it is therein provided that the road to be constructed was to begin at the point of intersection, "where the present county road crosses the northern boundary line between San Mateo and San Francisco Counties," and was to run "thence with said county road to the point where the same intersects with the southern boundary line of San Mateo County." Primarily, the word "at" expresses the relations of presence, nearness in place or time, or direction toward, and it is less definite than "in" or "on." (Webster's Dic.) The precise sense in which the word may be used, must be ascertained from its connection with the other and more substantive words of the sentence of which it is a part. Here the words "at the point of intersection" should be read in connection with the words of the grant in the statute, to wit: the grant of the right to construct a road which was to run with the county road and not upon it, and which was to pass over lands which it was contemplated by the Act should be condemned and appropriated upon paying to the owners or claimants thereof the just value of the same.

We are of the opinion that a fair construction of the Act of March, 1863, gave to the grantees or donees named therein, no right to appropriate the county road to their use and purposes, and that the Act of April, 1863, was not necessary to explain its object and meaning, and therefore we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the effect of the last Act.

EDWARD P. REED v. JAMES ELDREDGE.

SPECIFIC CONTRACT ACT.—The Act of April 27th, 1863, commonly called the "Specific Contract Act," does not authorize the rendition of a judgment to be paid and collected in a specific kind of money, except in an action on a contract or obligation in writing made payable in a "specific kind of money or currency," or in an action for the recovery of money received in a fiduciary capacity or to the use of another.

ACTION ON JUDGMENT RENDERED PRIOR TO APRIL 27th, 1863.—In an action upon a judgment rendered prior to the passage of the Act of April 27th, 1863, commonly called the "Specific Contract Act," the Court has no power to annex to the judgment rendered an order or direction specifying the kind of money in which payment must be made in satisfaction of the judgment.

JUDGMENT AT COMMON LAW.—At common law, the judgment of the Court was, that the plaintiff recover his debt or damages, or debt and damages, as the case might be, without any order or direction specifying how the money should be paid by the debtor or made by the officer. After judgment, the law, and not the Court, directed what proceedings should be had for the purpose of satisfying the amount adjudged to be due.

COMMON LAW.—Upon the adoption of the common law in this State, the Courts became subject to all its provisions, except in so far as the statutes worked a change in the common law rules.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Gould & Dwinelle, for Appellant.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiff alleges in his complaint that in 1861 he recovered a judgment in the District Court against the defendant for the sum of one thousand and fifty-nine dollars and costs of suit, which judgment remains in full force, and that he has not obtained any execution or satisfaction of the judgment, whereby an action accrued to him to demand and have of the defendant the several sums of money mentioned in the judgment, wherefore he prays for judgment for the amount of principal, interest, and costs of the judgment of 1861, "to be paid in the current United States gold and silver coin only," and for costs of suit, payable in the like current gold and silver coin only. The action was commenced December 5, 1863, and, the defendant having made default, judgment was rendered by the Court at the January term, 1864, for the amount of the former judgment and interest, together with costs of suit, the whole amount "to be paid by said defendant in current gold and silver coin only," and the Sheriff was directed to receive, in satisfaction of the execution to be issued, nothing but current gold and silver coin.

The defendant appeals from the judgment alone, and the question is, do the facts stated in the complaint authorize the Court to annex to the judgment for the recovery of the amount due, the direction that it be paid in a particular kind of money?

The counsel for the plaintiff have directed their efforts mainly to prove that the judgment of 1861 was payable in the gold and silver coin of the United States only, because it was contracted before the passage of the Legal Tender Act of Congress of July 11, 1862, and because, as they hold, a debt existing at the passage of the Act is not included within the words of the Act, "all debts," according to their true meaning, when interpreted by the recognized rules of legal construction. But that question is not necessarily involved in the case.

The first point to be determined is: had the Court the power to annex to the judgment rendered upon the facts stated in the complaint, an order or direction specifying the kind of money in which payment must be made in satisfaction of the judgment? If the Court did not possess the power the judgment is erroneous.

The judgment upon which the action was brought, was a contract for the payment of a sum of money evidenced by the record of a Court. The debt secured by it differs in no manner from a simple contract debt, though the evidence of the existence of the debt is of a higher and more solemn character than that by which a simple contract debt is proven. Upon proof being made in either case of the existence of the debt it becomes the duty of the Court to render judgment for the amount found due. In either case an action at law is brought to recover a sum of money alleged to be due the plaintiff in the action. The cause of action is simply a demand for the payment of a sum of money. At common law, when an action was brought on a judgment or any contract for the payment of money, the judgment of the Court was that the plaintiff recover his debt or damages or debt and damages, as the case might be, without any order or direction specifying how the money should be paid by the debtor or made by the officer. The Court adjudged that the plaintiff do have and recover of the defendant the specified sum of money, and from that point the law—not the Court—directed what proceedings should be had for the purpose of satisfying the amount adjudged to be due. Upon the adoption of the common law in this State the Courts became subject to all its provisions, both as to their powers and the mode of procedure, except in so far as the statutes worked a change in the common law rules. We doubt if an instance can be found where a Court possessing common law jurisdiction has assumed, in rendering judgment in an action for the recovery of a debt, to add to the judgment a direction similar or even analogous to that found in this case. No facts are stated in the complaint that would require a different judgment to be entered than was required at common law in any case on a contract for the payment of money only; and if the necessary facts had been stated in the complaint, no Court but one possessing and exercising equity powers could, in the absence of authority conferred by statute, grant the relief prayed for. The plaintiff has not cited any rule of the common law or provision of the statute conferring upon the Court authority to make the order in this case. The statute did not confer the power to make an order in an action at law, requiring the money recovered to be paid or collected in a specific kind of money, until the passage of the Act of April 27, 1863, commonly called the "Specific Contract Act." The statute engrafted upon the remedies of a general nature, that Courts of common law jurisdiction could afford, in an action at law, one of the remedies peculiar to Courts of equity, which in its nature is analogous to a decree for a specific performance; and it restricted the additional relief to a specified class of cases. That Act is not applicable to this case, for it provides, that a judgment of the character of the one before us may be entered in an action on a contract or obligation in writing made payable in a "specific kind of money or currency," or in an action for the recovery of money received in a fiduciary capacity, or to the use of another, and no authority is given to the Court, in any other case, to render a judgment in an action at law, to be paid in a specific kind of money.

That portion of the judgment that requires the amount of the judgment and costs to be paid and collected in current gold and silver, is erroneous.

It is ordered that the cause be remanded to the Court below with directions to modify the judgment, by striking out those portions of it requiring the defendant to pay the sums therein specified in gold and silver coin only, and ordering an execution to be issued, and requiring the Sheriff to receive in its satisfaction nothing but current gold and silver coin.

MOSES ELLIS v. CHARLES B. POLHEMUS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF H. P. JAMES, DECEASED.

RATE OF INTEREST ON CLAIMS AGAINST INSOLVENT ESTATE.—If the estate of the deceased is insolvent, the administrator cannot pay more than ten per cent interest per annum, from and after the time of issuing letters, on any claim against the estate contracted after May 20th, 1861, even if the rate of interest specified in the contract is more than ten per cent per annum, and the claim is secured by a mortgage.

CLAIM AGAINST AN ESTATE.—Per Sanderson, C. J.—The word "claim" as used in the Act concerning the estates of deceased persons, when it speaks of claims against an estate, is broad enough to include a mortgage.

Per Rhodes, J.—A note secured by mortgage is a claim against the estate, but the mortgage given to secure the note is not such claim.

APPEAL from the Probate Court, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Mastick & Gray, and John T. Doyle, for Appellant.

The question presented is simply whether the Act of May 20, 1861, section forty, (Laws, p. 637,) applies to such a case as this or not. The words of the statute are broad enough to cover it, if such was clearly the intent; and, on the other hand, no violence will be done to the words of the Act by excluding it, if such was not the intent. The meaning and intent, then, of that amendment to the Probate Act are what we have to ascertain. To arrive at the true intent of the amendment here in question, we must read it in connection with the rest of the Act, and the decisions of this Court expounding and interpreting its other parts. The question naturally resolves itself into a consideration of the import of the words "claim against the estate," and the term "insolvent," as used in this Act. Is a mortgage or lien on specific property a "claim against the estate" within the meaning of this Act? Is the estate of the deceased "insolvent" quoad this claim within the meaning of the Act? These are the questions.

A mortgage is not a claim against the estate, because it may be and frequently is less than a claim. For example: A mere dry mortgage, not founded on or collateral to a debt to be paid, but simply a mortgage of the land conditioned for the payment of so much money, for which there is no personal promise. Suppose the appellant's mortgage had been of this character—he would not have had a claim against the estate, for he would not have had a right to receive from the administrator anything save out of the proceeds of the land mortgaged. Suppose a note secured by mortgage, and the mortgagee afterwards releases the personal liability of the mortgagor, agreeing to look to the land alone for his payment; in such case, if the mortgagor dies insolvent, the mortgagee's right to his interest cannot be affected; because, by express contract, he has renounced and released all claims against the deceased, his heirs, executors, and administrators. If the learned Judge below was right in his decision, it would appear to follow as a corollary from it, that an administrator would have no right to accept a release of the personal liability of the deceased on a debt secured by a mortgage, or that in doing so he took the risk of the solvency of the estate. If this be so, it is about the only imaginable case wherein a release would, in effect, become a cause of action in favor of the releasor against the releasee.

The decision of the Supreme Court in Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24, is, in our judgment, conclusive of the question here involved. The meaning of the words, "claim against the estate," as used in the Probate Act, are there examined, and it is held that they are to be deemed synonymous with "debts and demands against the decedent, which might have been enforced against him in his lifetime by personal action for the recovery of money, and upon which only a money judgment could have been rendered."

W. H. L. Barnes, for Respondent.

It is urged that this claim is not subject to the provisions of section one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act, because it is a claim which was secured by mortgage, and did not run against the body of the estate in the first instance; that, therefore, it is not a claim against the estate within the meaning of the Probate Act.

Nothing can be found in the Probate Act itself to justify this view. In providing the mode in which claims against estates shall be presented and allowed, it makes no distinction between secured and unsecured claims, except that it requires, in the case of a claim secured by mortgage of real estate, a description of the security, and a reference to the date, volume, and page of its record in the office of the County Recorder of the county where the land mortgaged lies. (Probate Act, § 133.) This being done, and the claim having been allowed, approved, and filed, it is ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in the due course of administration. (Ib.) The claim, thus filed, may be paid as a claim against the body of the estate in the due course of administration, and the lien discharged or released, as would of course be the proceeding in a solvent estate; or, if a sale is made of land subject to mortgage, or other lien, which is a valid claim against the estate of the deceased, the purchase money shall be applied, after paying the necessary expenses of the sale, first, to the payment and satisfaction of the mortgage or lien, and the residue in the course of administration. (Ib. § 136.) So that, so far as the Probate Act is concerned, there is no discrimination between unsecured and secured debts; both are claims against the estate and the whole of it, save that the secured debt shall have the proceeds of the security applied to its payment, if the security is sold. The secured debt is still a claim against the estate, having rights as to a specific portion of it in certain contingencies, but which, it is presumed, will be paid in the due course of administration. The presentation, allowance, and filing of such a claim are not steps to foreclose a specific lien on a part of an estate in the control of the Probate Court, with no reference to anything but the lien and its foreclosure. These acts simply place such claim before the Court, precisely as any other. The language of the section in question (§ 181) is very broad, "broad enough to cover the present case, if such was clearly the intent," say the learned counsel on the other side. We may add to this that while the statute is broad enough to cover this case, there is no provision to be found which takes the case out of the operation of the rule so broadly laid down.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

On the first day of April, 1862, Horace P. Janes gave to Moses Ellis his promissory note for twenty-five thousand dollars, payable one year from date, with interest at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month, payable monthly; and to secure its payment gave a mortgage on certain real estate in the City of San Francisco. Janes died before the note matured. It was duly presented to the administrator of the estate of Janes, was allowed by him, and approved by the Probate Judge, and thereupon filed in the Probate Court, on the 12th of August, 1863, as a valid claim against the estate.

The administrator paid the interest on the claim, at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month, to December 28, 1863. Subsequent to the last payment of interest, the administrator sold the mortgaged premises, and the proceeds of the sale were more than sufficient to pay the debt and interest at the rate specified in the note. Whereupon Moses Ellis filed his petition in the Probate Court, and sought to compel the administrator to account for his proceedings in the matter of the sale, and to pay to the petitioner twenty-five thousand dollars, with interest at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month from the 28th day of December, 1863.

The foregoing facts were admitted by the administrator; but it further appeared that the estate of the deceased was insolvent; and that the fact of such insolvency was not discovered by the administrator until the 6th day of January, 1864. The Court ordered the administrator to pay the petitioner twenty-five thousand dollars, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum only, from the date of the letters of administration, to wit: November 9, 1862, less all sums of money which had been paid as interest since that day. The petitioner appealed, and now claims that the Court below erred in holding that he was entitled to ten per cent per annum only instead of one and one quarter per cent per month according to the terms of the note.

The one hundred and thirty-first section of the Probate Act provides, among other things, that "In case the estate is insolvent, no claim contracted after the passage of this Act shall bear greater interest than ten per cent per annum from and after the time of issuing letters." The foregoing became a part of the law of the land on the 20th of May, 1861 — nearly a year before the note and mortgage in question were made.

But it is insisted that this note is not a claim within the meaning of the foregoing provision, and is not subject to it, because it is secured by mortgage, and therefore does not run against the body of the estate in the first instance; and in support of this view the case of Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24, is cited. Whether that case states the law as correctly as Ellison v. Halleck, and Faulkner v. Folsom's Executors, 6 Cal. 386 and 412, which it overrules, admits of serious doubt. The meaning of the word "claim" is broad enough to embrace a mortgage or any other lien, and in the one hundred and eighty-sixth section of the Act, mortgages and other liens are expressly mentioned as valid claims against the estate. This section received no special notice, though it was cited in the brief of counsel, at the hands of the Court in Fallon v. Butler, yet it seems to have a very significant bearing upon the question there discussed and determined. But be that as it may, it is clear that Fallon v. Butler does not decide that a note when secured by a mortgage is not a claim against the estate. On the contrary, it goes no further than the naked lien of the mortgage, which, for the purposes of the question then before the Court, was regarded as something "distinct" from the note, and I am not disposed to extend the doctrine of that case beyond its exact limits. The word "claim" is not only broad enough to include a mortgage, but if there was any doubt upon that point it would seem to be removed by the language of the one hundred and thirty-third section, which provides that "if the claim be founded on a bond, bill, note or other instrument, the original shall be presented," etc. This language was added to the section in 1861. When the case of Fallon v. Butler was tried in the Court below does not appear from the report, and it is possible that it was tried before section one hundred and thirty-three was so amended.

The note in question was presented for allowance to the administrator and the Probate Judge, and thereupon filed in the Probate Court. It was a valid claim against the estate, and having been allowed and filed, took rank, in the language of section one hundred and thirty-three, "among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration," under the direction of the Probate Court. The estate being insolvent, this claim, as well as all others, became subject to the provisions of section one hundred and thirty-one, and the petitioner only entitled to interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum, from and after the date of the letters of administration, and there was no error on the part of the Court in so holding.

Per RHODES, J., concurring specially.

I concur in the judgment affirming the order of the Probate Court; and I agree with the Chief Justice in the opinion that a promissory note, executed by the deceased in his lifetime, whether it is secured by a mortgage or not, is a claim against the estate; but, in my opinion, the mortgage, which is but a security for the payment of the note—a mere incident to the debt—is not, in any just sense, a claim against the estate to be presented for payment.

The mortgage debt is required to be presented for payment, and when paid either by the administrator or on proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, it operates as a satisfaction—not payment—of the mortgage. The mortgage or an abstract thereof may be required to be filed in the Probate Court with the debt, for the purpose of enabling the Court to make the proper order for the payment of the claims, and give the requisite preference to liens upon any of the assets of the estate. The statute as amended in 1861 (Probate Act, Sec. 133) seems to recognize the distinction between a claim and its security, for it says: "If the claim or any part thereof be secured by a mortgage or other lien, such mortgage or other evidence of lien shall be attached to the claim and filed therewith, unless the same be recorded," etc.

The provisions of this section may at first view seem to conflict with section one hundred and eighty-six, where provision is made for the appropriation of the proceeds of the sale of "land subject to any mortgage or other lien, which is a valid claim against the estate of the deceased," but the apparent conflict vanishes when it is remembered that a mortgage is not, in fact, a debt against the estate. The meaning and evident intent of the Legislature was to provide for the appropriation of the purchase money arising from the sale of "lands subject to any mortgage or other lien [given to secure the payment of a debt] which is a valid claim against the estate of the deceased," etc. It is further provided in the section that the money arising from the sale of the land, after the payment of the expenses, shall be first applied to the payment of the mortgage or lien, meaning, of course, the debt, the claim secured by the mortgage or other lien.

The judgment affirming the order of the Probate Court, directing that the note should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the date of the letters of administration, does not conflict with the opinion of the Court in Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24, which holds that a mortgage is not a claim in the sense in which that term is employed in the Probate Act. The note was filed as a claim against the estate, and payment was sought from the administrator out of the general assets of the estate, and as the note was made after the passage of the amendments of 1861, and the estate was insolvent, the note must be subject to the same rule, in respect to the interest to be paid, as other notes filed as claims, which are to be paid by the administrator in due course of administration. Although such is the law in respect to the note and the interest to be paid, in case the estate is insolvent, I see no inconsistency in holding at the same time that the mortgage is not a claim against the estate, and that an action may be brought in the District Court for the enforcement of the mortgage lien by a foreclosure and a sale of the premises for the payment of the debt and interest, but what rate of interest, I do not undertake to determine.

Per SHAFTEE J., SAWYER J., concurring.

There is, in my judgment, no ambiguity affecting the word "claim" as used in the one hundred and thirty-first section of the Probate Act. However it may be in other sections, still in that section it is not limited to claims against the estate at large, as distinguished from claims secured by mortgage upon a part or upon the whole of it. The substance of the provision is that all claims having their origin in contract shall draw only ten per cent per annum, after letters of administration have been issued, if the estate of the decedent shall have been insolvent. The appellant in this case had two distinct claims—the note and the mortgage—and as each of them had its origin in contract, both of them are within the scope of the word "claim" as limited in the section; and whether considered severally, or in their relations to each other, they are directly within the ten per cent provision of the section; and as no other question than that has been raised by counsel for our consideration I concur in the affirmance of the order, on the ground stated in this opinion.

R. H. VANCE v. GEO. OLINGER AND JOS. LAYCOCK.

FORMER SUIT PENDING AS A DEFENSE IN EJECTMENT.—A defendant in an action to recover the possession of land is not entitled to a judgment of dismissal on the ground that a former suit between the same parties, brought for the recovery of the same land, is still pending, unless it is averred in the answer that the second action is for the same injury as the first, and that the same matters are in issue that were in issue and might have been tried in the first action.

SUITS IN EJECTMENT.—A party may have two suits against the same defendant for the recovery of the same land pending at the same time, if the second is brought on a title acquired after the commencement of the first.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Wheaton, and Hartley, for Appellants.

John Reynolds, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action for the recovery of land.

The complaint was filed December 29, 1859. The defendant, Olinger, in his answer, alleges that, "on or about the 2d of March, 1857, the said Robert H. Vance brought an action of ejectment in this Court against this defendant and one John McComb for the same tract or parcel of land now sued for in this action, and to which the said defendants appeared, and this defendant says the former suit so brought by the said plaintiff is still pending in this Court, and has never been determined," and he prays to be hence dismissed.

The jury found a general verdict for plaintiff, and in addition thereto found specially as follows, to wit: "We, the jury, find that the plaintiff commenced a former action in this Court, on the 7th day of March, 1857, to recover possession of the same land described and sued for in this cause, against the defendant, George Olinger, and one McComb; that said action is still pending and undetermined in this Court. That both defendants in that action appeared in that action, and filed the answers which appear on file in that action."

Both parties moved for judgment on the verdict. Plaintiff prevailed, and defendants appealed. It is claimed, that, on the special finding, defendants were entitled to judgment of dismissal, on the ground that there was another action pending for the same cause of action. The case of Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 479, is relied on as settling the law in this State, that in an action to recover lands, as well as in other actions, a former recovery is a bar. But the difficulty is, neither the answer, nor the special verdict, states facts sufficient to show that the cause of action in the second suit, is the same as that involved in the first. It is a suit to recover the same land, it is true, but it nowhere appears that the same title is in question, or that the same injury is complained of. There is no averment to that effect in the answer, and nothing of the kind appears in the special verdict. For aught that appears, the plaintiff may have acquired the title since the commencement of his former action. Suppose the first action had been tried and determined in favor of the defendants, and the answer had averred that fact, instead of averring that the suit was still pending, but averred nothing more. It certainly would not be pretended that such an answer would be sufficient to show, that the matters in controversy in this action had been adjudicated. The second action was commenced nearly three years after the first. The plaintiff might not have had the title at the time of the commencement of the first action, and for that reason he might have failed to recover; yet he may have acquired the title since, and, upon such newly acquired title he may be entitled to recover in his present suit. It is not sufficient that the second action is brought to recover the same land. It must be for the same injury, and the same matters must be in issue that were in issue and might have been tried in the first action, otherwise the causes of action are not identical. If a judgment in the first suit would not be conclusive in the second, the pendency of the former action cannot defeat the second. Neither the answer, nor the special

THE AMERICAN COMPANY v. G. F. BRADFORD, A. J. McGUIRE, JAMES MOYLE, A. McCORMICK, D. McKINNE, FRED. W. PARKER, SAMUEL HARRIS, WILLIAM STEGEMAN, AND THOMAS WHITE.

SPECIAL VERDICT OF A JURY.—It is the province of the Court to determine as to what particular facts the jury shall find specially, and neither party has the right to dictate the terms of any particular question to be submitted to the jury.

ACQUISITION OF RIGHT TO USE WATER BY PRESCRIPTION.—The use of water in any particular way for a period corresponding to the time limited by statute within which an action must be commenced to determine the right to it, raises a presumption of title to the same in the person enjoying the same as against a right in any other person, which might have been but was not asserted; but in order that this presumption of title may be conclusive, the right to the use of the water must have been asserted under a claim of title with the knowledge and acquiescence of the person having a prior right, and must have been uninterrupted.

BURDEN OF PROVING RIGHT TO WATER BY ADVERSE USE.—The burden of proving an adverse uninterrupted use of water for five years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the person having a prior right, is cast on the party claiming it; and if he leaves it doubtful whether the use was adverse, known to the owner, and uninterrupted, it is not conclusive in his favor.

FAILURE TO PLEAD FIVE YEARS ADVERSE USE OF WATER.—The party claiming a right to the use of water by five years adverse possession, must set up the same as a defense in his answer; and if he does not, he loses the right to introduce evidence in support of it, and to have the Court instruct the jury in relation to it.

the creek that rise above the dam, does not prevent the owners of the mining claim from using the waters of the creek which may flow down the same after the ditch is supplied.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Sierra County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Williams & Johnson, for Appellants.

We admit that in the case of lands adverse possession only affects the remedy; and that a party could never, by adverse possession, acquire the legal title, though he could acquire the legal right to possession, and that therefore the Statute of Limitations would have to be pleaded.

But we contend the rule is very different in case of the use of the waters of a running stream. In case of such use, the right thereto is by lapse of time ripened into an absolute title; and as we need not plead the kind of title, or the number of titles we have and rely on, it is not necessary to set up the Statute of Limitations. It is only where the remedy is affected by adverse enjoyment that we must plead the Statute of Limitations; we need do no such thing where an absolute right is conferred.

We contend, also, that under the doctrine "that the jury may presume a grant," we may set up title in ourselves, or right by purchase; and if our deed is lost, or if we never had one, we may show by the evidence that we have enjoyed the use of the waters for a time corresponding to the local Statutes of Limitation, and that is of itself evidence that such deed was given, and is just as good evidence as the deed itself would be. And again, if we show a deed was given, as in this case, and then show that we, under that deed, used the water for five years, plaintiffs acquiescing in our right under that deed, that will be conclusive that the party making the deed had the power to sell and convey all the rights we enjoyed under that deed.

Mr. Washburne, in his able work on Easements and Servitudes, (p. 20,) says: "It may therefore be stated as a general proposition of law, that if there had been an uninterrupted user and enjoyment of an easement—a stream of water for instance—in a particular way, for more than twenty-one or twenty, or such other period of years as answers to the local period of limitations, it affords conclusive presumption of right in the party who shall have enjoyed it; provided such use and enjoyment be not by authority of law, or by or under some agreement between the owner of the inheritance and the party who shall have enjoyed it.”

Then it would seem from the law that if we have a deed, and that we have used the waters in question for a time corresponding to our Statute of Limitations, that our right to continue the use of the waters is perfect, unless we had first ignored our deed, or unless we had began the use of the waters by an agreement with the plaintiffs. (Crary v. Union Water Company, 25 Cal. 504.)

Vanclief & Gear, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The plaintiff, composing a joint stock company, under the name and style of the “American Company,” brought its action in June, 1863, against the defendants, alleging in its complaint that for more than ten years then last past it had been the owner and in possession of a certain ditch called the “Deadwood Ditch,” leading and extending and conducting the waters from Deadwood Creek, in Sierra County, to Craig’s Flat and Morristown, in the same county, for mining purposes. The plaintiff alleged that by means of the ditch and a dam at the head of it across the creek, it had, during the period named, except when wrongfully prevented by the defendants, diverted, as it lawfully might, from the creek, at the dam, sufficient of its waters to fill the ditch, which quantity of water had been, during all such period, appropriated and used by the plaintiff for mining purposes; and further alleged that plaintiff was still entitled to the rights which the company had so acquired.

Opinion of the Court.

The rights and property thus acquired, the plaintiff alleged, had been obstructed by the defendants, who had from time to time, without right, entered upon the ditch and dam, and upon the creek above the dam, and by ditches, sluices and dams of their construction, diverted large quantities of the waters of the creek from the ditch, by reason of which a sufficient quantity of water to fill the plaintiff's ditch could not and did not flow through it, whereby the plaintiff had sustained damage in a sum specified. The plaintiff also alleged a threatened continuance by the defendants of the wrongs of which they complain, and they show by allegations that remedies at law were inadequate for the redress of the injuries threatened, and then pray for judgment for damages and for an injunction restraining the defendants pending the suit, and that such injunction might, on the final determination of the case, be made perpetual.

All the defendants but one appeared and answered. They first admitted that plaintiff owned the ditch described, and then denied that plaintiff was at any time entitled to so much of the water of the creek as would fill its ditch, except when there was sufficient in the creek for that purpose after supplying the defendants' mining claims below the dam. The defendants also denied that during "the whole" of the period of ten years the plaintiff had diverted as much of the waters of the creek as would fill its ditch, or ever was entitled to divert therefrom that quantity, except when a surplus sufficient therefor remained after the defendants were supplied. The defendants further denied that they or either of them at any time "wrongfully, injuriously or unlawfully," diverted or turned any water of the creek out of or from the ditch, and in the same connection they denied that any water by them at any time diverted from the creek of right ought to have flowed into or through plaintiff's ditch, and in conclusion they denied that the plaintiff had sustained any damage by the acts of the defendants.

For an affirmative defense, the defendants answered that long prior to the location of the plaintiff's ditch and dam, certain mining claims were located and worked in the bed and banks of Deadwood Creek, by persons from whom the defendants have derived their right and title whereby the defendants' grantors became and were entitled to the use and possession of all the waters of the creek, or so much thereof as might become necessary to the working of these mining claims, as the prior appropriators of the waters of the creek. And they also averred that the waters diverted by them from Deadwood Creek naturally flowed down its bed upon defendants' mining claims until wrongfully obstructed and diverted by the plaintiff, and that the same were necessary to the working of such mining claims.

A preliminary injunction was granted in the case, and when the cause was tried a judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the injunction was made perpetual. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order of the Court overruling a motion made by the defendants for a new trial.

The questions of fact in issue between the parties were tried by a jury. At the trial the defendants requested the Court to instruct the jury to find specially in respect to certain facts. This the Court refused to do, but submitted to them the following questions, with directions to respond to them in writing:

First—Is plaintiff entitled to all the waters of Deadwood Creek at the point where the same is diverted by its ditch?

Second—Are defendants entitled to any portion of the waters of Deadwood Creek which rise above the dam of plaintiff, and if they are so entitled, to how much and at what times?

The Court also directed the jury to return a general verdict, and to fix the amount of damages if their verdict should be for the plaintiff.

The defendants excepted to the Court's refusal to submit to the jury the questions of fact propounded on their behalf, and also to the submission of the two propositions set forth and to the direction to the jury to fix the amount of damages in case their verdict should be for the plaintiff.

The jury rendered a general verdict for the plaintiff and assessed the damages at three hundred dollars, and to the first question they answered: "That plaintiff is entitled to all the waters of Deadwood Creek at the point where the same is diverted by its ditch," and to the second question they answered: "That defendants are not entitled to any portion of the waters of Deadwood Creek which rise above the dam of plaintiff."

The one hundred and seventy-fourth section of the Practice Act defines the nature and character of a general verdict, and also of a special verdict; and the next section provides that in an action for the recovery of money only, or specific real property, the jury, in their discretion, may render a general or special verdict. But in all other cases, the Court may direct the jury to find a special verdict upon all or any of the issues, and in all cases may instruct them, if they render a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact to be stated in writing, and may direct a written finding thereon.

It is the Court's province to determine as to what particular facts the jury shall find specially, and neither party has the right to dictate the terms of any particular question to the jury, and for refusing to comply with such a request no error can properly be assigned.

At the request of the plaintiff, the Court gave to the jury certain instructions, which it is not necessary to notice in detail. The instructions so given are, in our judgment, a just exposition of the law on the subjects to which they relate.

The defendants on their part requested the Court to instruct the jury to the effect that if they believed from the evidence that the ditch was located before the defendants' mining claims, and that plaintiff had a good title to the waters of the creek above the dam, and had never entered into any agreement as to the quantity of water to be used by each of the parties, but also still believed from the evidence that the defendants had used a portion of the waters adversely to the plaintiff for more than five years before the commencement of the action, that then, to the extent of the water so used by the defendants, the jury should find in their favor. The Court refused to so instruct the jury, and the defendants excepted.

The instruction requested proceeds upon the theory that the plaintiff acquired by prior appropriation of the waters of the creek a property therein of which it could not be divested otherwise than by a grant or by operation of law; and assuming this, the defendants claimed that by their adverse use and enjoyment of a portion of the waters of the stream for the period stated, the presumption had arisen that they had derived from the plaintiff by grant the right to the use of the water to the extent which they had during such period used the stream.

The general and established doctrine is that an exclusive and uninterrupted enjoyment of water, in any particular way, for a period corresponding to the time limited by statute within which an action must be commenced for the recovery of the property or of the assumed right held and enjoyed adversely, becomes an adverse enjoyment sufficient to raise a presumption of title as against a right in any other person which might have been, but was not asserted. (8 Kent's Com. 441 to 446; Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 214; Shaw v. Crawford, 10 John. 236; Johns v. Stevens, 3 Vermont, 316; Union Water Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 504.)

The right which the defendants claim under the grant, which they assumed to exist, as evidenced by their adverse use and enjoyment of the water for five years, they denominate an easement. An easement or servitude may be created by grant or prescription, and when created it will pass by conveyance with the dominant estate (that is, with the estate to which it is appurtenant, as an incorporeal hereditament) attached to the servient estate, subjecting the latter to the benefit of the former. But the owner of the easement or servitude has no general property in nor seizin of the servient estate, though he may, by holding a fee in the dominant estate, have an estate of inheritance in the easement or servitude. (Wash. on Easements and Servitudes, Ch. 1, Sec. 1; Ersk. Inst. 352; Wolf v. Frost, 4 Sand. Ch. R. 89.)

A grant of an estate in lands, whether corporeal or incorporeal, may be presumed from an adverse enjoyment for the period corresponding to the Statute of Limitations within which an action might have been maintained against the person holding and enjoying adversely. But what must be the circumstances under which such presumption may arise? In order that the enjoyment of an easement in another's land may be conclusive of the right claimed, it must have been adverse in the legal sense of the term; that is, the right must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land, and uninterrupted. The burden of proving this is on the party claiming the easement. If he leaves it doubtful whether the enjoyment was adverse, known to the owner and uninterrupted, it is not conclusive in his favor. (2 Greenleaf's Ev. Sec. 539; Greenleaf's Cruise, Tit. 31, Ch. 1, note 1 to Sec. 21, and cases therein cited.)

According to the common law system of pleading a defendant could not give in evidence under the general issue, in excuse or justification of an alleged trespass, a right of common, or a public or private right of way or a right to an easement, nor any interest in land short of property or right of possession. (Saunders v. Wilson, 15 Wend. 338; Babcock v. Lamb, 1 Cow. 239; Rouse v. Bardin, 1 Hen. Black. 352; 2 Saund. Pl. and Ev. 856; 1 Chitty Pl. 505.) A defense of the kind mentioned had to be pleaded specially. The reason of the rule was to prevent surprise. (Demick v. Chapman, 11 John. 182.)

The rule of the common law here referred to has not been changed so as to obviate the necessity of pleading specially such defense. By the law of this State the defendants were bound to interpose their alleged right by answer as well as by evidence, provided it be conceded that plaintiff had the prior right and title to the waters of the creek, as the requested instructions assumed as the predicate for the presumption that a grant of a portion of the waters had been made to the defendants. This defense was, within the language of the forty-sixth section of the Practice Act, new matter, which it was necessary to plead in order to become available for the defendants. (McKyring v. Bull, 16 N. Y. 307.) The defendants having failed to tender by answer an issue as to their right to a portion of the water as an easement or servitude derived from the plaintiff by grant to be presumed from an adverse user and enjoyment of it for five years, the Court properly refused to instruct the jury as requested.

But the requested instruction was properly refused on another ground. All the conditions on which a grant may be presumed were not stated. The defendants may have used a portion of the waters to which the plaintiff was of right entitled, adversely to the company for five years before the action was commenced, but still without the knowledge or acquiescence of the plaintiff, and not without interruption. If the jury had been instructed as requested it would have been erroneous, aside from the objection that the defense was not pleaded, because an adverse use and enjoyment may have been interrupted or may have been without the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, in either of which events no presumption of a grant could have arisen. (Wash. on Easements and Servitudes, 86.)

The remaining alleged error is, that the decree in the case goes beyond the relief sought by the complaint. By the complaint the plaintiff makes no claim of right to the waters of the creek beyond an amount sufficient to fill its ditch; and the wrongful acts of the defendants, of which the plaintiff complains, are limited to an invasion of its right to the water to the extent stated. The creek may furnish an amount of water in excess of the quantity necessary to fill the ditch, to which the plaintiff has no right but to which the defendants may be entitled as the owners of mining claims on the stream below the dam. The decree of the Court forever enjoins and restrains the defendants from diverting any water from or in any manner interfering with the waters of the creek that rise above the plaintiff's dam, and from diverting any of the waters of the creek that would otherwise flow into and through the ditch, and from in any manner interfering with the plaintiff's ditch and dam.

The decree enjoining the defendants against interference with the waters of the creek which rise above the dam, we understand to mean, as the language fairly imports, not to prohibit the use and enjoyment by the defendants of the waters of the creek which may remain and flow down the creek after the plaintiff's ditch is supplied with the quantity necessary to fill it, but to prevent them from interfering with the water above the dam or disturbing the plaintiff's right to a quantity sufficient to fill and supply the ditch; as to the surplus, it does not appear the plaintiff has the right to detain or divert it from the defendants.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This is an action of ejectment to recover the undivided half of a lot in San Francisco. The complaint is in the usual form, and the answer denies most of the material allegations of the complaint, and sets up title in the lessor of one of the defendants, but the parties have narrowed the issues by their stipulation made August 30, 1860, by which it was agreed "that on the 5th of November, 1855, Sanders and Brenham owned and possessed one equal undivided half of hundred vara lot Number Two Hundred and Fifty-Three. That plaintiff claims to have Sanders' and Brenham's title to said undivided half of said lot under attachments and judgment sales against Sanders and Brenham, and not otherwise; and said defendant claims to have Sanders' and Brenham's title to said undivided half of said lot under attachments and judgment sales against said Sanders and Brenham, and not otherwise; and that the sole issue to be tried herein is—which party to this suit has succeeded to the title of Sanders and Brenham?"

The plaintiff introduced in evidence two judgments against Sanders and Brenham, rendered January 14, 1856, by a Justice of the Peace, under each of which the premises were sold January 20, 1858; also a judgment in the case of Center v. Sanders and Brenham, rendered by the District Court, January 25, 1856, under which the plaintiff redeemed the premises from the sales made under the Justice's judgments. A Sheriff's deed was executed to the plaintiff as such redemptioner, October 19, 1858.

The plaintiff, in order to show that the Center judgment was a lien on the premises, subsequent to that of the two judgments rendered by the Justice of the Peace, introduced in evidence copies of the record in the County Recorder's office, which were copies of original papers filed and recorded therein as transcripts of the judgment docket of the Justice of the Peace, of the two judgments rendered by him, the transcripts being in form quite similar to the docket entries required to be made in the judgment dockets kept by County Clerks of judgments rendered in the District Court, but they were not copies of the judgments of the Justice of the Peace. The defendants objected to the admission of the Recorder's copies of the Justice's docket entries on several grounds, and among others that they were not transcripts of the judgments which were required by law to be filed in the Recorder's office, to constitute liens upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, but the Court overruled the objections. We consider the objection well taken. The law does not recognize a Justice's judgment docket for any purpose, and in order to create a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, a transcript of the judgment — which is a copy of the judgment — certified by the Justice, must be filed and recorded in the County Recorder's office. (Practice Act, Sec. 599.) The filing and recording in the Recorder's office of the copies of the Justice's judgment docket entries did not constitute the judgment a lien on the real estate of Sanders and Brenham. It follows, therefore, that the Center judgment was not a lien upon the premises, subsequent to that of the judgments rendered by the Justice of the Peace, and that the holder of the Center judgment was not a redemptioner from the sales made under the Justice's judgments. (Practice Act, Sec. 230.) The deed executed by the Sheriff to the plaintiff as such redemptioner was without authority of law and is void.

It appears from the statement that the Court found for the plaintiff on the ground that the filing in the Recorder's office of the copies of the Justice's judgment docket created a lien upon the premises, and it is therefore improper for us to attempt to ascertain whether the remaining evidence introduced by the plaintiff was sufficient to have authorized the

 "Attorneys for Defendant."

The suit was brought on a promissory note given by defendant Hill to one William Hudson or order, at Napa Valley, on the first day of April, 1859, payable on the 15th day of April, 1859.

The complaint averred the endorsement of the note by Hudson, and that plaintiff Elgin was the owner and holder. The action was commenced September 8th, 1862.

The answer averred that the note was paid by the defendant after it became due, and before plaintiff received it.

The deposition of James tended to show, that after Hudson had received Hill's note, the two firms of W. H. James & Co. and L. H. Murray & Co., who were doing business as merchants in Napa County, purchased the same from Hudson, and gave him their note in exchange therefor, and that afterwards, and about April, 1860, and while the firms still owned the note, Hill paid W. H. James & Co. the full amount due on the note, and that Hill asked to have his note delivered up, but James told him it was at the store of L. H. Murray & Co., and he would get it. Elgin, the plaintiff, afterwards received the note from Murray.

Defendant recovered judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

no consequence. At the end of the deposition there is a certificate signed by the Commissioner, in the ordinary form to the effect that the deposition was sworn to and subscribed by the witness on the 5th day of March, 1863. Then follows immediately thereafter, without further date, a further certificate as to a compliance with the provisions of the four hundred and thirtieth section of the Practice Act, which directs the Commissioner to read the deposition to the witness, in order that he may have an opportunity to correct it if any mistake has been made. The two are to be read together, and if it was important to have the date at which the deposition was taken appear, it is clearly and sufficiently shown by the first certificate, and a repetition of the date in the last was wholly unnecessary. But, independent of the foregoing, the date was a matter of no consequence. The deposition, as appears upon its face, was taken pursuant to settled interrogatories direct and cross, and a stipulation between the parties annexed thereto, in which there is no mention of any date at which the same should be taken. The date, doubtless, was designedly omitted, in order that the deposition might be taken at such time as might suit the convenience of the witness and the Commissioner. Such being the case, we are unable to perceive how the date could have been of any consequence to either party, or how its absence from the certificate, had such been the fact, could affect any question as to the admissibility of the deposition.

Nor was the witness James incompetent on the ground of interest. As we understand the evidence the plaintiff received the note in suit in payment of a debt due to him from the firms of W. H. James & Co. and L. H. Murray & Co., of both of which the witness was a member. His interest, therefore, if he had any, was equally balanced between the plaintiff and defendant. If his testimony tended to discharge him from liability to the defendant, it also tended to charge him with liability to the plaintiff, and vice versa.

The deposition of James being in, the correctness of the verdict does not admit of debate. The jury could not have found otherwise without a total disregard of the evidence. The note was paid long before it came into the hands of the plaintiff, and there can be but little doubt but that he knew it had been paid when he received it. But, be that as it may, the note was long past due when he became the holder, and he therefore took it subject to all existing defenses.

The exceptions to some of the instructions upon the ground that they were irrelevant and calculated to mislead the jury, are not well taken.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The complaint in this case does not state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover in an action under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act. If plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action on the evidence introduced, it is on the ground, that, there was a forcible entry, or a forcible detainer after an unlawful entry, or both. entry, or detainer, is alleged. After stating possession of the land, the complaint proceeds as follows: "Plaintiff further alleges, that, being so in quiet and peaceable possession of said described premises, and entitled to the possession of the same, the said defendant, on or about the 25th day of February, 1863, unlawfully entered upon the said described premises, and took possession of the same, and the said defendant has ever since illegally and unlawfully detained possession of the same from the plaintiff against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, to her great damage, to wit, the sum of fifty dollars." This is the entire averment with respect to the character of the entry and detainer. The facts alleged are sufficient to authorize a recovery in the action formerly denominated ejectment—nothing more. It is unnecessary to add, that neither a Justice of the Peace, nor the County Court on appeal, has jurisdiction in such an action.

ESTOPPEL IN RELATION TO DEPOSITION.— If a commission to take the deposition of a witness out of this State is issued, on the application of one party without the consent of the other, to a person who is not a Judge, or Justice of the Peace, or a Commissioner appointed by the Governor of this State, and the party who does not consent, after the appointment, files cross interrogatories, and stipulates as to the manner in which the deposition shall be returned, he is estopped from saying that the Commissioner was improperly appointed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The complaint in this case sets forth substantially that the plaintiff, after a residence of some years in the City of San Francisco, was, on the 15th of April, 1856, possessed of real and personal property to the amount of about forty thousand dollars. That the defendant, Eliza J. D. Rowlandson, is the sister of the plaintiff, and the defendant, Thomas Rowlandson, her husband. That the defendants emigrated from England to California, and arrived in San Francisco about the first of March, 1856; that they were poor when they left England, and when they arrived in San Francisco were destitute of means; that when they arrived the plaintiff was in ill health, which affected his mind, and that he, soon after their arrival, became insane; that while in this condition the defendants instigated him to embark in the steamship for New York, on the 21st of April, 1856; that he reached the East in that situation, and did not recover so as to be fit for business for a period of two and a half to three years from that time; that he returned to San Francisco in November, 1860; that at the time he left, his property consisted: First—Of the stock in a store carried on by him in San Francisco, with a lease of the same, amounting in all to about ten thousand dollars in value, and bills receivable amounting to about fifteen thousand dollars. Second—A piece of land at San Francisco, near Mission

Statement of Facts.

Dolores. Third — A house and improvements on Sutter street. Fourth — Some articles of household furniture.

The plaintiff avers that a bill of sale of the stock, or first item mentioned, was executed by him, while he was insane, to Thomas Rowlandson a few days before he left, or on the day he left; that on the same day he executed a deed of the land near Mission Dolores, the second piece of property above mentioned, to the other defendant, Eliza J. D. Rowlandson, and also the bill of sale of the house and improvements on Sutter street, and of the articles of household furniture, being the third and fourth pieces of property above mentioned.

He further states that no consideration was paid for those instruments; that he was insane when they were executed; that the defendant knew him to be then insane, and fraudulently procured him to execute those instruments, and when he left took possession of the property.

The consideration expressed on the face of those instruments is as follows, viz:

In the bill of sale to the defendant, Thomas Rowlandson, of the stock in trade, five thousand dollars. In the bill of sale to Mrs. Rowlandson of house and improvements on Sutter street, and the furniture, one thousand dollars, and in the deed of the real estate near Mission Dolores, to Mrs. Rowlandson, one dollar.

The complaint prays that those instruments be declared null and void; that the defendants be adjudged to reconvey the property thereby granted or transferred, and that they account for all moneys received by them for the rents, and from the personal property.

The answer of the defendants denies their pecuniary inability in England, or their want of means on their arrival in San Francisco. They deny the alleged insanity of the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the several instruments; they aver that the bill of sale of the house and improvements was executed on the 15th August, 1855, instead of the 15th April, 1856, and was delivered to defendant, Mrs. Rowlandson, immediately on her arrival. The consideration for the sale of the stock is particularly set out, and they deny that the several instruments were executed without any consideration; they deny that the plaintiff became insane before he left San Francisco, and that instead of inducing him to leave, he went away against their urgent request and remonstrance. It is also alleged that the plaintiff recovered the entire use of his reason in 1857, and they plead the Statute of Limitations, the action not having been commenced till the 2d October, 1861, more than three years from the time of his recovery.

A replication was filed in which plaintiff admits that he made a mistake in the complaint as to the date of the bill of sale of the house and furniture to Mrs. Rowlandson, but he denies on his information and belief that it was delivered to her immediately on her arrival at San Francisco.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

P. G. Buchan, for Appellants.

The law on the question of insanity or mental imbecility affecting civil contracts, is well settled.

No degree of physical or mental imbecility which does not deprive one of legal competency to act is of itself sufficient to avoid a contract. (Farnham v. Brooks, 9 Pick. 212.)

A contract with a man of weak mind is binding, if no fraud or undue advantage is taken of his situation. (Somes v. Skinner, 16 Mass. 358.)

In order to avoid a deed, an entire loss of the understanding must be shown. Proof of a weak or impaired mind, or a want of understanding on some occasion only, is not enough. (Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. N. Y. 458; Jackson v. King, 21 Cowen, 207; Petrie v. Shoemaker, 24 Wend. 45.)

Mere imbecility is not sufficient. (Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Denio, 37; see also the celebrated Parrish case in the 25th New York Reports, recently published, where the whole doctrine is fully discussed.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The plaintiff executed to his sister, Mrs. Rowlandson, a deed of a lot situate near the Mission Dolores, in the City and County of San Francisco, and a bill of sale of a house, and other improvements, on a lot on Sutter street, including also certain household furniture. The conveyance bears date April 15, 1856, and the bill of sale, August 15, 1855, but both were acknowledged on the same day, viz: April 15, 1856. The plaintiff also sold to Thomas Rowlandson, at or about the same date, a warehouse situate on Leidesdorff street, together with the plaintiff's stock in trade therein, and assigned to Rowlandson the lease of the lot on which the warehouse stood, and the good will of the plaintiff's business as a wholesale and retail liquor merchant, and certain book debts and bills receivable—all of the aggregate value of twenty-five thousand dollars. The plaintiff left for the East by the steamer of April 21, 1856, and Rowlandson on that day took possession of all and singular the property before named, and proceeded in the conduct of the liquor business, and in the management of all the property, in his own name. The plaintiff returned to this State November 24, 1860, and on the 2d of October, 1861, commenced this action for the purpose of setting aside the conveyance, bills of sale and assignments aforesaid, on the ground that he was incapacitated by insanity from transacting business at the time the papers were executed. The answer denies the allegation of insanity, and sets up the Statute of Limitations in bar. The trial was by the Court, who found for the plaintiff on both issues. The defendants moved for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence did not justify the decision, and also on the ground of certain alleged errors of law occurring at the trial. A new trial was denied, and the defendants' appeal is from the order.

First—As to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding that the plaintiff was insane at the time the conveyance and the other instruments were executed.

The appellants insist that there is no evidence in the case tending to prove that the plaintiff was insane at the time the execution of the papers was perfected by delivery; or if there was, still that the evidence on the other side was so overwhelming, as to justify the interposition of this Court under the rules by which its practice in such cases is governed.

The only point which we are here called upon to consider, is, whether there was a sensible conflict in the evidence bearing upon the question of insanity.

The counsel of the appellants is mistaken in supposing that the plaintiff's alleged insanity could be established only by proof that he was "entirely destitute of understanding." Loss of understanding would be proof of an imbecile rather than of an insane or disordered mind. Fatuity is one thing, and madness is another; and an answer to the larger part of the argument submitted for the appellants, is found in the fact, that the distinction between the two has been overlooked. To establish the insanity alleged, it was sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that at the time he delivered the instruments referred to, he was incapacitated from a rational care of his property by reason of mental delusion. (Bond v. Bond, 7 Allen, 1.)

It appears that sometime before the instruments in question were executed, the plaintiff became involved in lawsuits, which were pending on the 21st of April, 1856, the day on which he left for the East; and the purpose and drift of the plaintiff's evidence, was, to show that the merely natural concern awakened in his mind by the litigation, in the first instance, had, in the progress of events, taken on the form and impress of an insane fear that he was in danger of losing, or of being "robbed" of his property through the lawsuits so pending against him; and that under the influence of that delusion he transferred all of his property without consideration to his sister and her husband.

It may be true that Crowther, when he first conceived the purpose of transferring his property, was perfectly sane, and that he was also sane when he opened a sham account with Mrs. Rowlandson before her arrival here from England; still, if, as matter of fact, he finally executed the papers in question under the influence and ascendancy of the delusion named, it is enough. Though one of the instruments bears date August 15, 1855, and the others April 15, 1856, yet there was evidence introduced tending to prove that they were not in fact delivered until the 21st of that month—the day when they were all acknowledged. On that day, the plaintiff embarked for New York on board the steamer Sonora. A fellow passenger, who had known Crowther for some years, testified, that on the evening of the 21st, his conversation was rambling and incoherent, and was still more so the next day; that he talked about his troubles—asked the witness if “he thought they would rob him,” and said he “did not know but that they would ruin him.” He said he came away all of a sudden—talked about his lawsuits, was confused, and the witness thought he was drunk “because he talked so foolish.” There was no evidence that plaintiff drank anything on board, and none even that he ever indulged in the use of liquor. It further appeared, that on the third or fourth day out, the plaintiff “became a perfect maniac,” stripped himself of his clothing and attempted to jump overboard. After this he was kept in a close room until the arrival of the steamer at Panama. At Panama, Crowther was put in the custody of a man hired for the purpose by the Captain of the steamer, and was accompanied by him to New York and thence to his friends in the State of Maine. On his arrival there, he was placed by his friends in the Insane Asylum at Augusta.

We need not remark upon the tendency of this testimony, nor upon the question of its force. The particular facts which it discloses are recognized indications of insanity—the apparent inebriation being one of the most significant. (Shelford on Lunacy, pp. 49, 67.) And it is to be borne in mind that these indications were developed, and in a remarkable degree, on the very day when the instruments in question were executed, and but two or three days before the plaintiff became lunatic beyond question. Were there no other testimony than that which we have referred to, the motion for new trial would have to be denied. But there is other testimony tending to prove that Crowther was under the influence of the particular delusion referred to, at the time when the papers were delivered, and at least for some days before. It was in proof that Crowther was of a highly nervous temperament; that he had been in the charge of his physician for some twelve months before he left for the East; that "his disease was more mental than bodily;" that this mental disease increased gradually; that the disease threatened to terminate in lunacy, and might have been brought on by excitement at any moment; that a judgment for five thousand dollars in a slander suit had been recovered against him, and that he had been confined to his room for some ten days before he left for the East; that he was irritable, wakeful, and given to nightwalking; that "prior to his leaving he was in the most excited state of nervous irritability," and so much so that the defendant Rowlandson "dreaded the effect of the voyage, and opposed it, only ceasing to do so when he found that his staying might probably be productive of more injury than taking the voyage." Rowlandson, in a letter addressed to the superintendent of the Maine Asylum, says: "He (Crowther) was rapidly recovering before he left San Francisco, a relapse being occasioned by the excitement of a forthcoming trial." Crowther's physician testified that he "called on Crowther the day the boat was about to leave. Was sent for by Rowlandson, but came away without seeing him (Crowther). Was told by Rowlandson that Crowther was up stairs, very excitable, and it perhaps would be better not to see him. Heard him walking to and fro overhead." The testimony on the part of the plaintiff further tended to prove that Crowther was worth some forty thousand dollars, and was in good standing and credit as a merchant, and there was little or no proof that his apprehensions of ruin, as the result of his lawsuits, had any rational basis. The evidence of the plaintiff runs largely into detail, but the substance of it is contained in the foregoing summary. This testimony of the plaintiff, had, in our judgment, a manifest tendency to prove the insanity alleged. The evidence introduced by the defendants in support of their denial of the allegation of insanity, was very far from being destitute of weight, and if the Court had found the point against the plaintiff instead of for him, we could not have disturbed the judgment on the ground of a false finding.

Second — As to the defense of the Statute of Limitations.

The complaint not only alleges insanity on the part of the plaintiff, but contains allegations of fraud on the part of the defendants, and the replication meets the bar of the statute on the ground that the action was brought before the expiration of three years from the time when the fraud was discovered. We have examined the testimony bearing upon the question raised by the replication, and have considered the arguments of counsel. The evidence tends to prove that the plaintiff recovered his reason in February, 1857, and it is admitted that he returned to the State, November 24, 1860. Assuming that the plaintiff was insane at the time when the conveyance and bills of sale were executed, there can be no doubt that the point in controversy might well have been found in the plaintiff's favor on the ground of that fact alone. All, or some at least, of the instruments were recorded, but it cannot be inferred from that that the plaintiff was advised, before his return to the country, of what he had done while insane. Nor does it appear that either of the defendants, in the frequent letters written by them to Crowther, or his friends during his absence, made any disclosures on that subject. A power of attorney, executed by the plaintiff to Rowlandson at or about the 21st of April, 1856, is referred to in the correspondence, and the prominent idea, presented in all the letters, is, that Rowlandson was managing the property and business, as the agent of the plaintiff, to whom it still belonged, and to whom he held himself accountable. There was also evidence tending to prove that the defendants had availed themselves of the plaintiff's insanity to procure the execution of the instruments in question. The weight of this evidence was with the Court that tried the cause, and, under the settled practice of this Court, we cannot review its finding.

Third — The findings were filed March 19, 1863, and the case was referred to a Master to take and state an account. On the 30th of the same month, the defendants filed and served a notice of motion for a new trial. On the 27th of April following, the defendants moved for a stay of proceedings then pending before the referee, on the ground of the pendency of the motion for new trial. The motion was denied, and the denial is assigned for error.

By the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Act of 1863, it is provided that when "an action has been tried by the Court, or by a Commissioner or a referee," the party intending to move for a new trial shall give a written notice thereof within ten days after receiving written notice of the findings of the Judge, or the report of the Commissioner or referee. The issues in this case were tried in part by the Court and were in part committed for trial to a referee; and therefore, the case does not fall within either of the express allotments of the section. But it is apparent that the intention of the Legislature, was, that proceedings in new trials should be postponed until cases had been "tried." The trial of this case was not complete until the final report of the referee was filed. As the defendants renewed their notice of motion for new trial after the report was filed, and on a new statement, a decision of the point upon which we have just passed, is of no practical consequence, except, as it bears upon the regularity and effect of the referee's report as a proceeding in the case.

Fourth — It is objected that, on the evidence in the case, the plaintiff was entitled to an allowance of five hundred dollars only as advance to the defendants by Brown Brothers & Co., in New York. This objection cannot be entertained, however well founded it may be, for the reason that it is not specified as an error of fact in the statement on motion for new trial.

Fifth — As to the seven hundred dollars advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant Rowlandson before he left England for this country, it was improperly allowed. The only account that could be taken, in the theory of the action, was of the property which passed into the hands of the defendants under the transfer, or by virtue of the power of attorney, made by the plaintiff while insane.

Sixth—It is urged that the Court erred in overruling the objection taken to the deposition of J. W. Crowther.

We are satisfied that the transactions connected with the taking of the deposition preclude the defendants from saying that the Commissioner was not a person competent to take it. Cross interrogatories were filed after the order designating the Commissioner was made, and were, together with the interrogatories in chief, annexed to the commission. Subsequently the defendants stipulated that the commission "authorizing the Hon. George Evans to take the deposition of John W. Crowther, at the City of Portland, in the State of Maine, to be read in evidence on the trial of said action," should be returned by Wells & Fargo's Express. The defendants also obtained a stipulation from plaintiff's attorneys granting further time within which to file cross interrogatories, and themselves stipulated that the deposition might be opened by the plaintiff without prejudice to his right to read it in evidence at the trial of the action. The filing of the cross interrogatories after the Commissioner had been appointed, coupled with the first stipulation, in our judgment estopped the defendants from saying that the Commissioner was improperly appointed.

In the event that the plaintiff shall, within fifteen days, file with the Clerk of this Court a release of the personal judgment against the defendants of sixteen thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine dollars and forty-two cents, to the extent of seven hundred dollars parcel thereof, the judgment will stand as affirmed, otherwise the judgment is reversed and new trial granted.

And it is so ordered.

By the Court, SHAFER, J., on petition for rehearing.

Motion for rehearing.

In the opinion filed in this action at the last term, we held there was evidence in the case tending to prove that the bill of sale of the house and improvements on Sutter street, though dated August 15, 1855, was not in fact delivered until the 21st of April, 1856. We so held under the impression that it appeared by the record that the instrument was in the hands of Crowther on the day named, and that he then personally appeared before a notary and acknowledged its execution. We were mistaken, in that particular, however. The bill of sale, instead of being acknowledged by Crowther, was proved before the notary by the attesting witness. A rehearing is granted, in so far as the question of the validity of said bill of sale is concerned, unless the plaintiff within fifteen days shall file with the Clerk of this Court a release fully discharging the property embraced in said bill of sale from the operation of the decree; whereupon the decree will be and stand as reversed in so far as it avoids and annuls said bill of sale, and will be and stand as affirmed as to the residue thereof, except in the particular wherein it has already been modified—the appellants to recover the costs of appeal.

And it is so ordered.

SANDERSON, C. J., dissenting.

In order to entitle a party to the relief sought in this case, upon the ground alleged, it must be made to appear, by satisfactory evidence, that he was, at the time of the execution and delivery of the several instruments sought to be cancelled, non compos mentis, within the legal meaning of those words. It is not sufficient to show a partial want of reason or understanding, for an entire and total absence must be shown in order to authorize the avoidance of a deed where there is no fraud apparent on the part of the grantee. In Osterhout v. Shoemaker, (reported in Note a to Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Denio, 37,) Mr. Chief Justice Bronson said: "Our law does not distinguish between different degrees of intelligence. It does not deny to a man of a very feeble mind the right to make contracts and manage his own affairs. In the absence of fraud, proof of mere imbecility of mind in the grantor, however great it may be, will not avoid his deed. There must be a total want of understanding."

The legal presumption is that every man is compos mentis, and the burden of proof that he is non compos mentis rests on the party who alleges it. Unless, therefore, it appears from the testimony in the case that the plaintiff was a lunatic, or entirely deprived of his reason and understanding at the time the several instruments mentioned in the complaint were executed and delivered by him to the defendants, he has failed to sustain his action, for the charge of fraud is, in my judgment, without foundation in the evidence. It is agreed that all the evidence bearing upon the question is contained in the transcript.

The plaintiff alleges that his insanity commenced soon after the first of March, 1856, which was the date of the defendants' arrival in San Francisco. The bill of sale of the house and improvements on Sutter street to the defendant Mrs. Rowlandson was made on the 15th of August, 1855, more than six months prior to the alleged date of the plaintiff's insanity. The only testimony as to the delivery of this bill of sale is that of the defendant Thomas Rowlandson, who stated that the plaintiff delivered it to his wife at breakfast on the morning after their arrival in San Francisco, which was the second of March, 1856, and according to the plaintiff's own statement, prior to the date of his insanity. The other instruments were executed on the 15th of April, 1856, and acknowledged on the 21st of the same month, the latter being the same day on which the plaintiff sailed for New York.

The only witness examined by the plaintiff for the purpose of establishing his insanity at or prior to the 15th of April, was Dr. Mackintosh, who had known the plaintiff for about twelve years, and for several years prior to his departure for the Atlantic States in 1856 had been his attending physician. Dr. Mackintosh stated that he last saw the plaintiff in 1856, about fifteen days before his departure; that plaintiff had been confined to his bed about ten days some short time prior to his departure East; that his disease was more mental than bodily; that his symptoms were alarming, showing a tendency to insanity. Upon cross examination Dr. Mackintosh stated that he could not say that the plaintiff was non compos mentis during any portion of the time he saw or attended him; but on re-examination he testified that his condition was such that he might have become insane at any moment from any exciting cause; that any prostration in his business or change in his property might have brought on mental alienation. Dr. Mackintosh was examined not only as the plaintiff's attending physician, but as a medical expert. The most that can be claimed for his testimony is that it establishes a condition of health on the part of the plaintiff, at or about the time of his departure for the East, threatening future insanity upon any exciting cause affecting his business; but his testimony utterly fails to show that at any time prior to his departure the plaintiff had passed from sanity to insanity. If there is any other testimony than that of Dr. Mackintosh tending to establish insanity prior to the plaintiff's departure for the East, it has escaped my notice.

On the part of the defense, several witnesses were examined for the purpose of showing that up to that time the plaintiff was perfectly sane. Among them was Mr. Richards, the confidential clerk, bookkeeper and business man of the plaintiff, who drew the instruments in question, and Thibault, the notary who took the acknowledgments. Also, Clement Nixon, who was the plaintiff's barkeeper, and William McDonald, who was his drayman, and several others, who, as is shown, were on terms of intimacy with the plaintiff up to or within a short time of his departure, all of whom testified that they never saw anything in the plaintiff's manner or conduct indicative of insanity. It is true that the testimony of these witnesses is of a negative character, but in view of their long acquaintance with the plaintiff, and their means of observation and knowledge, it is entitled to great weight, especially when sustained by the evidence of a medical attendant who negatives the idea of present insanity. In this connection, it is well to call attention to the following note, written by the plaintiff four days after leaving San Francisco, and addressed to the steward of the steamship Sonora, on board of which the plaintiff sailed:

"MR. THOMAS HARRIS — Dear Sir: Should anything happen to me on this passage, you will please take charge of all my things and deliver them to my brother-in-law, Mr. Thomas Rowlandson, of San Francisco, on your return. He will pay you any charge you have on them. I send my best love to my dear sister and all the folks.

"I am, dear sir, yours truly,

"GEORGE T. CROWTHER.

"Friday morning, steamer Sonora, on her passage to Panama."

The plaintiff was certainly sane when he wrote this note, but seems to have had at that time a presentiment of the calamity which soon after befell him.

For the purpose of showing that the plaintiff was insane when he sailed from San Francisco, or became so soon after, Joseph H. Lyon, a fellow passenger, was examined on the part of the plaintiff, who testified to what are shown to have been symptoms of insanity, commencing with the day of his departure and continuing until the third or fourth day, at which time he became, in the language of the witness, "a perfect maniac." On the part of the defendants the purser of the ship, Mr. Goddard, was examined, who testified that he had been previously acquainted with the plaintiff. That he saw him on the second day out and two or three times a day thereafter until he became insane, and did not observe for the first five days of the voyage anything in the manner and appearance of the plaintiff different from what he had observed in his previous acquaintance with him. It was his impression that the ship was approaching the tropics, about five days after starting, before anything was discovered or appeared to be the matter with the plaintiff. According to the testimony of both these witnesses there was a cabin passenger by the name of Lazard on board who, according to Lyon, occupied a room adjoining that of the plaintiff, and according to Goddard a room in the same part of the ship. Lazard had a keeper and was very violent and noisy. As to the effect of going into a warm climate and a close proximity with a raving maniac upon a person having a tendency to insanity, Dr. Mackintosh was examined as an expert, and testified that these circumstances would have a tendency to produce an exaltation of the disease, and also to confirm it. Such is, in substance, all the testimony bearing upon the question of insanity except the fact that the instruments were executed without consideration.

The Court below found that the plaintiff conveyed the property in question to the defendants without any consideration, and I think that the finding in this respect is sustained by the evidence. The fact that a man has conveyed away, without consideration, all or nearly all of his property, unexplained, might afford ground to suspect his sanity, and if the other testimony in this case failed to explain the plaintiff's conduct in this respect, I should be strongly inclined to hold that the finding of the Court below was correct. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to show by testimony the precise point of time at which sanity ends and insanity begins; and where it is clearly shown, as in the present case, that insanity actually existed within a short time after the events alleged to have been produced by it occurred, we should be justified in holding that the actor was at the time insane, when his acts are contrary to human experience and can be explained upon no rational theory. But I think that the conveyance of nearly all of his property by the plaintiff to his sister and her husband can be explained upon a rational theory deducible from the evidence in the case, and that it can be shown that such theory is consistent with a sane, though not with an honest purpose, and that such conveyance, instead of being one of the effects of insanity, was a link in the chain of circumstances by which it was induced.

It appears from the evidence that at the time these conveyances were made there were several suits at law pending against the plaintiff for large amounts of money, one of which had already ripened into judgment for the sum of five thousand dollars and was standing on appeal. These suits were a source of constant annoyance and apprehension to the plaintiff and the staple of his thoughts and conversation. Suffering more or less from illness and the depression of spirits thereby induced it is not surprising that he should have regarded them, as he seems to have done, as threatening financial ruin. Nor is it altogether contrary to human experience to find him, under such circumstances, preparing to avoid the consequences of the coming storm in a manner in which neither law nor good morals can justify. It further appears, as we have already seen, that he commenced the work of transferring his property as early as August, 1855, by executing to his sister a bill of sale of the house and improvements on Sutter street, at a time when there is no pretense that he was insane, and without any consideration, as he himself alleges. And in January, 1856, he caused his bookkeeper to open an account with his sister, who had not yet arrived in the country, and from whom, according to his own account, he had never received a dollar, commencing with a credit of one thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars, cash loaned. He also bought a buggy for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars in his sister's name; also, some property at the sale of the Folsom estate; all of which was done at a time long prior to the date at which he alleges he became insane. When his sister arrived, he delivered the bill of sale, and afterwards proceeded and fully executed the design which he seems to have formed six months previous, by conveying his real estate to his sister, and transferring his mercantile business, including stock in trade, to her husband, and soon after departed from the State. Bodily illness, care and anxiety on account of his business affairs, apprehension of ruinous results following from the pending lawsuits, in connection with the fear that he had placed himself too much in the power of his sister and her husband, soon thereafter resulted in temporary insanity.

This theory, that the plaintiff transferred his property to his sister and brother-in-law for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, is moreover fully sustained by letters written by Rowlandson to the brother of the plaintiff, residing in Maine, and introduced in evidence by the plaintiff. In those letters Rowlandson represents himself as carrying on the business for the plaintiff, and desires that the plaintiff may be assured that his affairs are not suffering in consequence of his absence. This language, used at a time when the pending controversies could not have been anticipated, is in perfect harmony with the view which I have taken of this transaction, but it is widely at variance with the theory upon which this action is sought to be maintained. Had Rowlandson fraudulently taken advantage of the plaintiff's alleged insanity for the purpose of robbing him of his estate, under the pretense of a purchase, he would not afterwards have spoken in letters to the brother of the plaintiff of the business and estate as being conducted and managed by him as the agent of the plaintiff and for his use and benefit.

Thus, the fact that the conveyances were made without consideration is explained by the testimony in the case, and shown to be consistent with the idea of sanity. Leaving this fact, therefore, out of view, the question of insanity is made to depend for its solution solely upon the testimony of Dr. Mackintosh, and Lyon, on the part of the plaintiff, and Goddard, Richards, Thibault, Nixon, McDonald and others, whose testimony was of a like character with that of the last four named, and the plaintiff's note to the ship's steward, on the part of the defendants. This testimony shows that the plaintiff became insane four or five days after he left San Francisco, but in my judgment utterly fails to show that he was insane on the 15th of August, 1855, when he executed the bill of sale of the house on Sutter street, or on the 2d of March, 1856, when he delivered it to his sister, or on the 15th of April, 1856, when he executed the other papers, or on the 21st of the same month, when he acknowledged their execution. On the contrary, there is in this testimony no conflict, and it all tends to prove, if it proves anything, that the plaintiff at these several dates was sane, or at least that he was not non compos mentis within the legal meaning of those words.

Such being my views upon the controlling question involved in this case, I am compelled to dissent from the judgment pronounced by a majority of the Court.

I think the judgment should be reversed and a new trial ordered.

THE PEOPLE v. JAMES A. SHOTWELL.

DISCHARGE OF JURY IN CRIMINAL CASE.—If, after the jury in a criminal case have retired, to deliberate on their verdict, the Court directs the Sheriff to discharge them if they do not agree on their verdict by a certain hour, and then adjourns, and at the hour named the Sheriff discharges the jury, this will not operate as an acquittal of the defendant, but another trial may be had.

CHARGE OF TWO OFFENSES IN INDICTMENT.—If an indictment for forgery contains two counts, in each of which a copy of the instrument alleged to have been forged is set out, and the copies are alike, it will not be presumed that each is a copy of only one and the same original instrument, without an allegation to that effect in the second count.

WHEN SEVERAL DISTINCT OFFENSES MAY CONSTITUTE A SINGLE CRIME.—A person guilty of forging a check, and also of an attempt to pass it, or of passing it as true and genuine with intent to damage and defraud another person, may be indicted, tried, and convicted for all these connected and consecutive acts as constituting one transaction and one crime; or if guilty of but one of such acts, he may be indicted, tried, and convicted for its commission as constituting a distinct crime.

HOW OBJECTION TO INDICTMENT TO BE TAKEN.—If there is more than one offense charged in the indictment, the defect should be taken advantage of by demurrer. If the objection be not taken by demurrer, it cannot be considered on motion in arrest of judgment.

ELECTION AS TO COUNT ON WHICH ACCUSED SHALL BE TRIED.—If the indictment contains more than one count, each charging a distinct offense, the Court is not required to compel the prosecutor to elect upon which count of the indictment he will try the accused.

Argument for Appellant.

SENTENCE WHEN INDICTMENT CHARGES TWO OFFENSES.—If the indictment contains more than one count, each charging a distinct offense, and the verdict is general, finding the defendant guilty, the presumption will be that the Judge who tried the case pronounced judgment for the offense to which the evidence was directed and was properly applicable.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. Vanarman, for Appellant.

The practice in criminal cases in California is very minutely regulated by statute, leaving very little scope for the operation of the common law in mere matters of practice.

A jury once charged with a criminal case shall not be discharged before verdict except for reasons specified in the statute, (Wood's Digest, Sec. 410, p. 302,) "unless by consent of both parties, entered in the minutes, or unless after such a time as the Court shall deem proper, it satisfactorily appear that there is no reasonable prospect of an agreement."

The reasons specified in said section are, in brief, inability from sickness or other inevitable accident. No such accident is here pretended, and the only question is whether the jury were discharged regularly on account of inability to agree.

"After such time as the Court shall deem proper, it must appear (to the Court) that there is no reasonable probability of an agreement."

The discretion here vested is given to the Court to decide whether there is a probability of agreement, not to the Sheriff or any other officer. It is a judicial discretion as much as any other required to be exercised in the course of the trial, and according to elementary principles, cannot be delegated or executed by proxy.

Suppose the Judge should leave the whole question of how long the jury should be kept together, and when it had become apparent that the jury could not agree, and should direct the Sheriff to keep the jury together until he was satisfied that they could not agree, and then discharge them. Would this constitute a compliance with the law? The duties of the Sheriff and of the Judge cannot be thus confounded consistently with either law or the safety of the citizen.

The question of discharging or retaining the jury is a judicial question, and cannot be delegated or decided by proxy.

Hoge & Wilson, for the People.

It was originally doubted whether at common law, a jury, when once given in charge of a case, could be discharged by the Court without a verdict. But the dictum of Coke to the effect that the Court had no such power, has been long since overruled and held not to be law. And it is now settled, both in England and the United States, that the Courts may, in their discretion, discharge a jury without verdict, when satisfied that the proper administration of justice requires it. The whole doctrine rested upon the principle of the common law, that no man should be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense. This principle of the common law has been made the subject of constitutional provision in our organic law as well as in that of the United States. It is at this day well settled, that the discharge of a jury in a criminal case, and putting the prisoner upon a second trial, is not a violation of the constitutional provision, is not a putting in jeopardy a second time, and does not entitle him to a discharge. It was at one time thought that a distinction existed between capital cases and other felonies, but that distinction has not been maintained, and the better authority sustains the power of the Court to discharge the jury for want of agreement, or other proper cause, without regard to the character or magnitude of the offense. As has been well said, to admit it in any case, or for any cause, is to yield the whole principle, and, of necessity, leave it discretionary with the Court when and under what circumstances the power should be exercised.

The Court will find the whole doctrine thoroughly discussed and settled in the following cases: People v. Goodwin, 18 John. 199, and fol.; People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cases, 301; People v. Green, 13 Wendell, 55; United States v. Haskell,

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted for forgery, to which he pleaded not guilty. He was twice tried. At the first trial the jury disagreed and were discharged; on the second trial he was found guilty and sentenced to be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of six years. The indictment consists of two counts. By the first count the defendant is accused with having on the 26th of January, 1864, at the City and County of San Francisco, in the State of California, feloniously and falsely forged and counterfeited a certain check—a copy of which is set forth in such count—with intent to prejudice and defraud the drawees therein named. The second count of the indictment charges that the defendant, on the same day and year, and at the same place, did feloniously and falsely attempt to pass, and did alter and pass, as true and genuine, a certain forged and counterfeit check—a copy of which is set forth in said second count, and is in the identical words and figures of that described in the first count—with intent, well knowing the same to be forged and counterfeit, then and thereby to prejudice, damage and defraud the drawees therein named.

The defendant relies on three grounds for a reversal of the judgment, as follows:

First—That the jury first impanelled to try the defendant were irregularly and illegally discharged.

Second—That the indictment charges against the defendant the commission of several distinct offenses, and that the Court refused to require the prosecution to elect on which charge to try him, though requested to make such order.

Third—That the verdict of the jury is general, convicting the defendant of several distinct offenses, while the evidence is confined to one of the charges.

We will examine these points in the order in which they are stated.

I. Upon the first trial the cause was finally submitted to the jury at four o'clock in the afternoon of the day when they retired, and, not having agreed upon a verdict at eleven o'clock in the night of the same day, the Court, in the absence of the defendant, but in the presence of one of his counsel, directed the Sheriff that in case the jury failed to agree by two o'clock of the following morning, then to discharge them. The jury not having agreed at that hour, they were discharged as directed. The defendant's counsel claims that this operated as an acquittal of the defendant. The course pursued in this particular is not to be commended. It was an irregularity, but it does not therefore follow that the effect of it was to acquit the defendant. The four hundred and eleventh section of the Criminal Practice Act reads as follows: "In all cases where a jury are discharged, or prevented from giving a verdict by reason of any accident or other cause, except when the defendant is discharged from the indictment during the progress of the trial, or after the cause is submitted to them, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term."

By subjecting the defendant to the trial at the time he was found guilty, it cannot be said he has been twice put in jeopardy for the same offense in violation of a constitutional right. On this point Courts have been often called upon to interfere for the protection of persons accused of crimes, where upon the first trial the jury has been discharged without having rendered a verdict. In the case of The People against Goodwin, 18 John. 187, the subject was ably and elaborately considered by Mr. Chief Justice Spencer, and the conclusion to which he arrived was that, where a jury in a criminal case is discharged without having found a verdict, the accused may be tried again by another jury, and that he is not thereby put in jeopardy the second time for the same offense. To the same effect are many other judgments of high authority.

(United States v. Shoemaker, 2 McLean, 114; United States v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 517; United States v. Haskell, 4 Wash. C. C. R. 402; People v. Olcott, 2 John. Cas. 301; Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 521; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. 496.)

In the case of Com. v. Townsend, 5 Allen, 216, the jury after having been out seven hours, were discharged in the absence of the Judge, as in this case, by the officer having them in charge, who acted by order of the Court; but the jury did not accept the discharge, but continued together and afterward found a verdict of guilty, sealed it up, and the next morning brought it into Court. The defendant moved to set it aside because it was made after the jury were discharged. The Court, in which the trial was, denied the motion, but on writ of error the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that the verdict ought to have been set aside for the reason that before the jury agreed upon it they had been lawfully discharged from the consideration of the case. The Court in the case here cited say: "We do not doubt the authority of the Court in its discretion to make the order for the discharge of a jury after seven hours disagreement, yet a much preferable course would be to direct the officer, who had charge of them, that if they would not agree by a certain hour he should inquire of them whether they were likely to agree, and if told by them that they were not, then to discharge them." The authorities cited and the reasons on which they are founded, is a full answer to the defendant's objection and application for a discharge.

II. The seventy-third section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments (Laws 1850, p. 237) declares the forging or counterfeiting of a check for the payment of money by any person with intent to damage or defraud any person or persons, to constitute the crime of forgery. The same section also declares the uttering, publishing, passing, or attempting to pass as true and genuine a forged or counterfeit check by any person, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, with intent to prejudice, damage or defraud any person or persons, to constitute the crime of forgery also, and that the offender, upon conviction of the crime, shall be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison for a term not less than one nor more than fourteen years.

The defendant is accused by the indictment of having committed each of these distinct criminal acts, without showing that the check described in the first was the same as that described in the second count. But it would seem upon reading the second count of the indictment that the check which it is alleged that the defendant attempted to pass and did pass was a different check from the one described in the first count, for it is distinguished as the "last mentioned" check. It is not possible, from the face of the indictment, to say that the same check was intended to be described in both counts; and though the copies are alike verbatim et literatim, it is not to be presumed that each is a copy of only one and the same original instrument.

If it appeared from the indictment that the check described in the second count was the same as that described in the first, the objection that several offenses were charged in the indictment could not be maintained; for if the same person be guilty of making a forged or counterfeit check, and also of attempting to pass it, or of passing it (which involves the attempt), as true or genuine, with the intent to damage or defraud another, he might be indicted and tried for all these connected and consecutive acts as constituting one transaction, or he might be indicted and convicted for each distinct crime of which he might be proved to be guilty. The doctrine on this subject is laid down in Wharton's Criminal Law (141), as follows: "Where a statute makes two or more distinct acts, connected with the same transaction, indictable, each one of which may be considered as representing a stage in the same offense, it has in many cases been ruled, they may be coupled in one count. Thus setting up a gaming table, it has been said, may be an entire offense; keeping a gaming table and inducing others to bet upon it, may also constitute a distinct offense; for either, unconnected with the other, an indictment will lie. Yet, when both are perpetrated by the same person, at the same time, they constitute but one offense, for which one count is sufficient, and for which but one penalty can be inflicted." (Com. v. Eaton, 15 Pick. 273; Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 360; Com. v. Hope, 22 Pick. 1; State v. Johnson, 3 Hill's S. Car. R. 1; Buck v. State, 2 Harr. & John. 426; State v. Coleman, 5 Porter, 40; Hinckley v. Com., 4 Dana, 518.)

The two hundred and forty-first section of our Criminal Practice Act provides that an indictment shall charge but one offense, but it may set forth that offense in different forms under different counts.

According to the common law the defendant could not properly be charged in the same count with two or more distinct offenses. (Wharton's Cr. Law, 139; Com. v. Eaton, 15 Pick. 274.) Such a defect would be fatal on motion to quash or on demurrer, but it is said the better opinion is that it would not be ground for arresting the judgment. (Wharton's Cr. Law, 141 and 683; Commonwealth v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 360-362.)

By the two hundred and eighty-ninth section of our criminal code of procedure it is provided that the defendant may demur to the indictment on various grounds appearing on the face of it, among which is "that more than one offense has been charged in the indictment." The two hundred and ninety-seventh section provides: "When the objections mentioned in section two hundred and eighty-nine appear upon the face of the indictment they can only be taken advantage of by demurrer, except that the objection to the jurisdiction of the Court over the subject of the indictment, or that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense, may be taken at the trial under the plea of not guilty, and in arrest of judgment." If this section is to have full force and effect, then the objection that the indictment charged the defendant with having committed several distinct offenses cannot be supported. He failed to demur and the statute says this objection so appearing on the face of the indictment can only be taken advantage of by demurrer.

But after verdict of guilty, the defendant may move in arrest of judgment; and the four hundred and forty-second section of the same Act provides in terms that such motion "may be founded on any of the defects in the indictment mentioned in section two hundred and eighty-nine." If to the language here employed the fullest effect be given, it necessarily works a complete abrogation of section two hundred and ninety-seven—a consequence which should be avoided, if consistent with legal rules of construction and interpretation. It is a familiar doctrine that an Act of the Legislature should be so construed and expounded as to give some effect, if possible, to every portion of it; and it is the duty of Courts, as far as practicable, so to reconcile the different provisions as to make the whole Act consistent and harmonious. (Com. v. Duane, 1 Binney, 601; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53 and 89; Attorney-General v. Road Company, 2 Mich. 138.) Every interpretation that leads to an absurdity ought to be rejected; or, in other words, a construction should not be put upon a statute from which an absurd consequence would follow. (Vattel B. 2, Ch. 17, Sec. 282; Smith's Com. Sec. 486.) It is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended that the two hundred and ninety-seventh section before quoted should prove of no effect, or practically a nullity. We repeat that where a particular interpretation would be attended with such a consequence, it should be rejected, and that construction adopted which, in consonance with the true office of interpretation, will avoid the entire sacrifice of one portion of the statute for the purpose of giving the broadest effect to another. (Smith's Com. Sections 487, 488.)

If the four hundred and forty-second section which provides that a motion in arrest of judgment may be founded on any of the defects of the indictment mentioned in section two hundred and eighty-nine, be read without any reference to section two hundred and ninety-seven, its language, it may be conceded, is comprehensive enough to embrace the objection made. But we are not at liberty to disregard the two hundred and ninety-seventh section of the Act, inasmuch as the four hundred and forty-second section may be interpreted as referring only to the causes for arresting the judgment, which stand unaffected by section two hundred and ninety-seven.

The defendant having omitted to demur to the indictment for the defect objected to, it cannot properly be considered on motion in arrest of judgment.

The defendant also complains that the Court erred in refusing to compel the public prosecutor to elect upon which count of the indictment he would try the accused. If the Court has the right to require the election to be made, the exercise of the authority is a matter of discretion, (2 Russ. on Crimes, 774; People v. Baker, 3 Hill, 159,) and where it does not appear that the defendant sustained any injury by the ruling of the Court in this respect, it cannot be held erroneous. But under our statute it may be doubted whether the Court has the right to compel the prosecution to elect in such cases, because the statute is positive that the objection suggested can only be taken advantage of by demurrer.

III. The point is made that the verdict of the jury is general, convicting the defendant of several distinct offenses, while the evidence is confined to only one of the offenses charged.

In Crowley v. Commonwealth and Kite v. Commonwealth, 11 Metcalf, 575 and 581, Mr. Chief Justice Shaw holds that where an indictment charges in one count a breaking and entering a building with intent to steal, and in another count a stealing in the same building, on the same day, and the defendant is found guilty generally, the sentence, whether that which is proper for burglary only, or for burglary and larceny also, cannot be reversed on error, because the record does not show whether one offense only, or two, were proved on the trial; and as this must be known by the Judge who tried the case, the sentence will be presumed to have been according to the law that was applicable to the facts proved.

If the defendant was proved to be guilty of both offenses charged, he cannot justly complain of the judgment. If he was proved to be guilty of only one of them, it must be presumed the Judge who tried the case pronounced judgment against him as upon a verdict for the offense to which the evidence was directed and was properly applicable.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. JUAN ANTONIO.

ACT CONCERNING INDIANS.—The Act of April 22d, 1850, for the protection and punishment of Indians, was intended to be applied to Indians in tribes, or when living in separate communities or companies, and not to a case where an Indian has been living among white men.

REPEAL OF ACT PRESCRIBING WHIPPING FOR LARCENY.—The Act of April 22d, 1850, conferring on Justices of the Peace the power to punish Indians convicted of larceny by whipping, is repealed by the Act of 1856, which prescribes the punishment for both grand and petit larceny.

JUJYCE'S JURISDICTION TO TRY INDIAN FOR GRAND LARCENY.—The Act of April 20th, 1868, concerning Courts of justice in this State, takes away from Justices of the Peace the power to try and punish Indians for grand larceny conferred upon them by the Act of April 22d, 1850, for the protection and punishment of Indians.

BURDEN OF PROVING HOW STOLEN PROPERTY WAS OBTAINED.—The burden of proving that stolen property found in his possession came honestly into his hands is not cast upon a defendant in a criminal case, unless the prosecution has introduced evidence, either direct or presumptive, sufficient to prove that he came dishonestly by it.

GENERAL OR SPECIAL VERDICT IN CRIMINAL CASES.—The Court cannot direct a jury, in a trial for larceny, to render a special verdict, but, upon the request of either party, it should instruct them that they have the discretion to render either a general or special verdict.

APPEAL from the County Court, Santa Cruz County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

D. E. Allison, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The defendant was indicted and convicted of grand larceny. It was admitted by the District Attorney and was proven that the defendant was an Indian.

The most important question in the case arises upon the refusal of the Court to give the jury the following instruction: "That the defendant cannot be convicted of larceny under the law as it is applied to Indians." The counsel for the defendant claims that the defendant, being an Indian, is liable to be prosecuted and punished for the offense charged against him, according to the provisions of an Act for the protection and punishment of Indians, passed April 22, 1850, and not under the general statutes concerning crimes and punishments. The Act of 1850 for the protection and punishment of Indians was, in our opinion, obviously intended to be applied to Indians in tribes, or when living in separate communities or companies, and not to a case where an Indian has been living, as in this case, for years among white men.

But if this view is incorrect, there are other reasons militating against the defendant's proposition.

The first section provides that "Justices of the Peace shall have jurisdiction in all cases of complaints by, for or against Indians, in their respective townships in this State," and the sixteenth section provides that "an Indian convicted of stealing horses, mules, cattle or any valuable thing, shall be subject to receive any number of lashes not exceeding twenty-five, or shall be subject to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, at the discretion of the Court or jury," and section seventeen gives the Justice the discretion to appoint a white man or an Indian to do the whipping in his presence.

The Attorney-General asks if the punishment prescribed is not "cruel and unusual," and therefore unconstitutional? We think it is liable to that objection, notwithstanding it is directed by the Act that the Justice "shall not permit unnecessary cruelty in the execution of the sentence."

Besides this, the Act of 1856, (Wood's Digest, 337,) defines both grand and petit larceny and prescribes the punishment to be inflicted upon conviction; and as the Act by its terms is applicable to all cases of larceny, it repeals by necessary implication previous Acts providing a different mode of punishment. The Act of April 20, 1863, concerning Courts of justice of this State organized under the amended Constitution, confers upon the County Courts jurisdiction to try and determine indictments for grand larceny, and does not confer upon Justices of the Peace jurisdiction in such cases, and thus in effect it takes from Justices of the Peace, whose powers it is provided in the Constitution "shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several Courts of record," the jurisdiction of grand larceny attempted to be conferred upon them by the sixteenth section of the Act of 1850, for the protection and punishment of Indians.

The defendant also assigns as error the refusal of the Court to instruct the jury "that proof of possession of property recently stolen is not of itself sufficient evidence upon which to convict the prisoner of larceny." This instruction is marked "given," and the record shows that the Court instructed the jury that "if the horse was stolen and immediately after being stolen, was found in the possession of the prisoner, and the prisoner failed to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, it is a circumstance tending to show his guilt." If the instruction upon that point had there closed, the prisoner would have had no cause of complaint, but the Court immediately added, "in fact, in such a case, the burden of proof is on the prisoner to show the possession to be lawful." The burden of proof, in respect to any point in the case, is cast upon the prisoner only in consequence of a prima facie case having been made against him. The people must make out their case by evidence that will amount to proof of the facts alleged in the indictment, and the defendant is not required to produce evidence to rebut such evidence on the part of the prosecution, as merely tends to prove the fact in question; but when evidence has been introduced, either direct or presumptive, sufficient to prove the fact in issue, then the defendant is called upon to rebut the prima facie case made against him.

The learned Judge of the Court below was not without authority to sustain that portion of his charge, for it is said in 2 Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, Sec. 1,777, that "the possession of property recently stolen is prima facie evidence of guilt in the possessor of the property." But that doctrine has been modified in this State. In People v. Chambers, 18 Cal. 382, it is held that the possession by the defendant of property recently stolen, is not of itself sufficient to authorize his conviction, but is a circumstance to be considered in determining his guilt. (See 3 Greenl. Ev. Sec. 31.) In People v. Ah Ki, 20 Cal. 177, the instruction of the Court below, stating that the burden of proof was thrown upon the defendant, of explaining his possession of goods recently stolen, was under consideration, and the Court held the instruction to be erroneous. Mr. Justice Norton, in delivering the opinion of the Court, after holding that the instruction was erroneous, says: "If this charge could be understood as only stating that the accused was bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, it would not be erroneous." The proof of possession, together with proof of other circumstances indicative of guilt, would make a prima facie case against the defendant, and thereupon the burden of proof would be shifted to the defendant. It will be readily seen that under the rule laid down by the Court below, a person who had honestly come into possession of property recently stolen, might be convicted of larceny from the accidental circumstance that no one was present when he found the property dropped by the thief in his flight, or bought it from the thief.

It is to be regretted that this inaccuracy is found in the instructions, which, in other respects, are expressed in terms of commendable clearness and precision.

Section four hundred and seventeen of the Criminal Practice Act provides that the jury may render a general or special verdict, except on an indictment for libel, in which case it shall be general. It would have been improper for the Court to have directed them to render a special verdict, as asked for the defendant; but the Court, upon the request of either party, should direct them that they have the discretion

This action was brought against the State Treasurer to recover possession of ten State bonds.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The complaint states that the plaintiff, in the year 1858, was the owner of ten State bonds of the State of California, issued under the Act of April 28, 1857; that in the year 1858, he deposited the bonds with one John H. Gass, of Sacramento, for the sole purpose of collecting and receiving the coupons, or interest, as the same should from time to time fall due; that thereafter, in September, 1860, Gass, without plaintiff's knowledge or consent, and against the statute in such case made and provided, and with intent to steal said bonds and the coupons attached thereto, converted the same to his own use; that such conversion first became known to the plaintiff in February, 1863; that in January, 1862, the bonds came wrongfully and unlawfully into the possession of D. R. Ashley, who, on demand made, refused to deliver them to the plaintiff. It is further averred that said Ashley, at the time when he became possessed of the bonds had full notice of the plaintiff's title, and that all other persons through whose hands said bonds passed, had like notice.

The answer denies all the allegations in the complaint, and avers that the bonds and coupons are the property of the State, and have been since the 7th of September, 1860; that the instruments were negotiable, and that the property in them passed by delivery; that the bonds had been redeemed and purchased by the State, after due proceedings, for eight thousand four hundred and seventy-eight dollars and seventy-five cents, which was their full value, and that immediately thereafter, and on said 7th of September, 1860, they were cancelled and deposited in the office of the Treasurer of the State, as a part and portion of the archives and records. At said date Thomas Findley was State Treasurer, from whom defendant Ashley, as his successor, received and has ever since held the papers.

Ashley having gone out of office, Pacheco, his successor, was made party defendant by stipulation.

The trial was by the Court. The decision was in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered thereon December 18, 1863. Notice of motion for new trial was given in due season, based on the following grounds set forth in the notice:

First—Error in law occurring at the trial and duly excepted to by the plaintiff.

Second—Because the judgment is against law.

Third—Because the evidence in the case is insufficient to justify the judgment of the Court, and that said judgment is contrary to the evidence.

A statement of the case on motion for a new trial and on appeal, was prepared and filed. The statement contained a full report of the proceedings at the trial, including a report of the evidence; but the statement did not "specify the particulars in which the evidence was alleged to be insufficient;" nor the "particular errors of law occurring at the trial" upon which the plaintiff would rely in support of his motion, as required by the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act, as amended in 1863. The motion for new trial was denied, and the appeal is taken from the order of denial and from the judgment.

1. The motion for new trial was properly overruled. Under a positive provision of the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act, as amended in 1863, the Court was bound "to disregard the statement," for the reason that it was no statement under the rule established by that section. The statute is peremptory; the rule is one of great practical consequence, and the respondent insists upon its non-observance in this case as a point against the appeal. (Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

2. The remaining questions arise under the appeal from the judgment.

The statement on new trial stands as a statement on appeal from the judgment, but the specification of grounds therein contained is as imperfect, when considered as a specification of errors on appeal from the judgment, as when considered as a specification of grounds on motion for new trial. ther, on an examination of the record, we do not find that there were in fact any "errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiff;" and as to whether the findings of fact were justified by the evidence, it is a question which cannot be reached, under any circumstances, through an appeal from the judgment. (Gagliardo v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 394.) The notice of appeal contains what it calls an "assignment of errors." The place for the specification of errors, in an appeal from a judgment, is in the statement, if there be one, (Prac. Act, Sec. 338,) and not in the notice of appeal; and if there be no statement, then as the questions must necessarily arise upon the judgment roll, no specification of errors is required. The second assignment contained in the notice of appeal is as follows: "Because said District Court erred in holding and deciding that the indorsement 'This bond not for sale; Peter H. Burnett,' on the back of each of the bonds in dispute, was not sufficient notice to subsequent purchasers and others to put them upon inquiry." The defendant's counsel has stipulated that the assignment of errors, contained in the notice of appeal, is a true copy of the original document, but refuses to admit the proposition of fact contained in the foregoing specification. As the parties do not agree that the Court made the decision recited in the specification, and as we cannot discover from any portion of the record that any such decision was made, nor even that the Court had occasion to consider the question, it would be aside from our office in error to pass upon a point lying thus in hypothesis.

Aside from the testimony of witnesses, there was an agreed statement of facts used on the trial, and it was stipulated that the statement might be used by either party "in any and all proceedings in the action." We consider this agreed statement of facts as annexed to the judgment roll by the effect of the stipulation, and the question is, whether the judgment in favor of the defendant is to be considered as erroneous in view of the facts set forth in the statement. The statement gives the number, date and amount of each of the ten bonds, the title and date of the Act under which they were issued; states that the bonds and coupons attached were payable to bearer; that on the 7th of September, 1860, after due notice, the bonds and coupons were redeemed from D. O. Mills & Co. at eight thousand four hundred and seventy-eight dollars and seventy-five cents, paid in coin; that the bonds and coupons were thereupon cancelled, and have since that time remained in the office of the State Treasurer, and in his possession; that at the time of the redemption there was on the back of each and every of the bonds the following indorsement in the handwriting of the plaintiff, to wit: "This bond not for sale. Peter H. Burnett."

The statement further contains an admission of demand and refusal, and then closes as follows: "The legality of the aforesaid redemption is reserved for the determination of the Court; and the admissibility of the fact in evidence, as to whom said bonds were originally issued by the State, is reserved for the Court."

We find from the record that the plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that the bonds when first issued, were the property of the plaintiff, and that they were delivered to Gass as his agent. This evidence was admitted by the Court, and if admitted improperly, the error was to the advantage and not to the prejudice of the plaintiff. As to the question of the "legality of redemption:" when tried by the facts of the statement, we can see no reason to doubt its legality. The statement of facts does not disclose, nor does the Court find, nor do the parties stipulate, nor does it appear in any manner as a fact, that the plaintiff was ever at any time the owner of the bonds; nor that he ever had any interest in them; nor that Gass was ever his agent, nor even that such a man as Gass ever existed. If it appeared as a fact that the plaintiff was originally the owner of the bonds; that while holding them in possession he put the indorsement mentioned in the statement upon the back of each of them, and that the bonds came to the hands of D. O. Mills & Co. without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, then the question might be presented as to what effect the indorsement would have to protect his title to the bonds as against the redemption; but as the case stands, that question is not presented, and therefore it cannot be considered.

DILIGENCE IN MOVING FOR NEW TRIAL.—If a motion for a new trial is not prosecuted with due diligence it should be dismissed on the application of the opposite party.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

Defendant Calderwood moved for a new trial and appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

P. G. Buchan, for Appellant.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

In August, 1862, the plaintiff commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer in a Justice's Court against the appellant and two other persons for the recovery of a lot of land described in the complaint. The defendants appeared and answered. From the judgment rendered in the Justice's Court an appeal was taken to the County Court, in which the action was tried and a verdict and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants on the seventeenth of January, 1863. The appellant Calderwood in due time gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial, and prepared a statement to be used on such application, to which the plaintiff proposed amendments. The statement was settled by the Court on the eleventh of May, 1863, by allowing certain of the amendments proposed, and then the appellant's attorneys obtained leave to take the statement proposed, and the amendments allowed for the purpose of engrossing the same. On the twenty-ninth of July thereafter the appellant served on plaintiff's attorneys a notice challenging the loyalty of the plaintiff to the Government. The plaintiff was at that time absent from the State, and time was granted to procure his affidavit of loyalty. This was obtained and filed on the twelfth of November, and on the twentieth of that month the plaintiff's attorneys gave notice to the appellant's attorneys that they would move the Court on the thirtieth day of said November to dismiss the motion for a new trial on the ground that appellant had failed to prosecute the same with diligence. On the twenty-seventh of November the appellant obtained from the County Judge an order that the plaintiff show cause before him on the first of December, 1863, why a resettlement of the statement on motion for new trial should not be made to conform to the facts stated in the affidavits and the minutes of the trial on which the order was made. This order was served on the plaintiff's attorneys on the same day. On the second of December both motions came on to be heard, the motion of the plaintiff being first taken up. The motions were argued by the respective parties, and afterwards, on the twenty-eighth of December, the Court made an order, first reciting that it appeared from the minutes and files of the Court that on the eleventh of May, 1863, the appellant's statement on motion for a new trial was settled, and that his attorney on the same day took from the files of the Court the proposed and amended statement for engrossment, and had retained them in his possession without engrossing them up to the time when the motion to dismiss was made, and therefore decided that the application for a new trial had not been diligently prosecuted, and granted the order dismissing the application for a new trial. The appeal is from this order and from the judgment in the case.

If the order was correct, then the judgment must be allowed to stand, because by the judgment roll, without a statement of the evidence, there appears to be no objection to it.

Opinion of the Court.

After the statement was settled by the Judge, until the plaintiff's loyalty was questioned, over two months and a half elapsed in which the appellant might have engrossed the statement as settled and placed it on file with the Clerk of the Court. During the time the plaintiff's loyalty stood challenged the cause was suspended (Laws 1863, page 566); but after his affidavit was filed the appellant still remained inactive, with the statement and amendments which were allowed in his hands, and there they remained until the motion to dismiss his application for a new trial was made, and it appears that even then the ordered engrossment had not been made. The appellant's excuse for this omission and delay is that at the time of the allowance of the amendments the Judge made a memorandum upon the margin of the proposed amendments, declaring that they were "subject to any revision which may seem proper, on hearing of counsel, if a hearing shall be desired." The effect of this declaration was not to suspend the proceedings to an indefinite extent, nor to give to either of the parties an unlimited period within which to express his desire to be heard. If the appellant desired a revision of the amendments, and wished to be heard in reference thereto, he should have moved in the matter with due diligence. This, in our judgment, he did not do, and therefore we cannot overrule the discretion of the Court in the premises.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PETER G. PARTRIDGE v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

STATEMENT ON APPLICATION FOR NEW TRIAL.—If a new trial on the ground of errors occurring at the trial is asked for, the statement should specify the particular errors relied on, and if it does not it should be disregarded by the Court.

ACT GOVERNING STATEMENTS FOR NEW TRIAL.—The Act of 1863, amending the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act, is the law governing the preparation of statements on motion for new trial made after its passage.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Brooks & Whitney, for Appellant.

Delos Lake, and John W. Dwinelle, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This is one of the class of cases usually called the City Slip Cases. The complaint contains two counts: the first being for money had and received by the defendant to and for the use of the plaintiff; and the second, for money paid, laid out and expended by the plaintiff for the defendant. Suit was commenced in April, 1855, and was brought on to trial in 1863; and on the 23d of June, 1863, the finding of the Court for the defendant was filed, and on the 2d of February, 1864, judgment was entered nunc pro tunc as of the 27th of February, 1863. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the grounds of the motion were, first, "Errors of law occurring on the trial of said cause and excepted to by the said plaintiff;" and second, "That the said decision was against law." The motion and statement were filed August 22d, 1863, and the motion being denied, the plaintiff, on the first day of October, 1863, appealed from the order denying the new trial and from the judgment.

The plaintiff now assigns for error the decision of the Court refusing to permit him to amend his complaint. It appears from the papers copied into the transcript that the plaintiff, upon his affidavit filed April 12, 1862, moved the Court for leave to amend his complaint, and that the motion was denied May 31, 1862. It appears also from the statement on the motion for a new trial, that William H. Taylor purchased the lot, that the deed was executed to him, and that he paid the purchase money which is sought to be recovered back by the plaintiff; that "on the 10th day of March, 1855,

William H. Taylor assigned his right of action to plaintiff;" and that, on the testimony being closed, the defendant's counsel insisted that there was a material variance between the case presented by the pleadings and the evidence, the complaint alleging that the defendant received the money to the use of the plaintiff, and the evidence tending to prove that it was received to the use of Taylor. The statement proceeds: "The plaintiff's counsel contended that the variance should be disregarded, or that he should be allowed to amend. The Court ruled that it could not entertain a motion to amend, it appearing that the plaintiff had moved for leave to amend in the particular named, in the Twelfth District Court, while said action was pending regularly therein, and before said action was transferred to this Court, and that said motion had been denied by said Twelfth District Court. The Court then took the case under advisement, and afterwards rendered the decision that the said variance was fatal, and therefore directed a finding for the defendant, to which decision the plaintiff excepted." This is all that is contained in the statement respecting the proposed amendment.

The counsel for the defendant, in answer to the error assigned, contends that the plaintiff's affidavit and notice of motion to amend, and the amended complaint proposed to be filed, if the amendment should be permitted, must be disregarded, because they are not included in the statement on motion for a new trial, and because no statement on appeal was made or settled; that the error complained of was not excepted to; and that the statement does not specify the particular errors upon which the plaintiff intended to rely. These objections are fatal to the plaintiff's position. The first and second objections are apparent upon an inspection of the record in this Court. The third objection depends upon section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act as amended in 1863, and which took effect July 1, 1863. That section provides, among other things, that "when the notice designates as the ground of the motion, errors in law accruing [occurring] at the trial and excepted to by the moving party, the statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If no such specification shall be made, the statement shall be disregarded." The amended section of 1863 repealed by necessary implication the same section as amended in 1861, and was the law governing the preparation of the statement on motion for a new trial in this cause; and accordingly it became the duty of the Court below to disregard the statement on account of its failure to comply with the requirements of the section.

Points Decided.

JACOB ELIAS v. JULIO VERDUGO, MARIA JESUS VERDUGO, HIS WIFE, FRANCISCO P. RAMIREZ, AND FERNANDO SEPULVEDA, et als.

EVIDENCE CONTRADICTING ADMISSIONS IN PLEADINGS.—If the complaint in an action against husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage executed by the husband alone, avers that the mortgagor, at the time of its execution, owned the land described in the mortgage as a tenant in common with another person, each owning an undivided one half, and the defendants in their answers admit this allegation, but set up as an affirmative defense a claim to a homestead, evidence to show a parol partition prior to the execution of the mortgage is irrelevant.

PAROL PARTITION OF LAND.—A parol partition of land owned by tenants in common, could be made in California before the adoption of the common law; but the agreement for such partition should be satisfactorily proved, and each tenant in common should have assigned to him and enter upon and possess a specific part of the land in severalty.

HOMESTEAD.—A homestead cannot be carved out of land held in joint tenancy or by tenancy in common.

DECREE IN FORECLOSURE SUIT.—If any of the parties defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage claim title to the mortgaged premises, or any portion thereof, adversely to the title mortgaged, their rights under such adverse title should be saved in the decree.

APPEAL from the District Court, First Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

Ramirez and Sepulveda, two of the defendants, answered, setting up title to several portions of the land claimed to be included in the mortgage, adversely to the mortgagor.

The Court decreed the sale of any portion of the southern half of the Rancho San Rafael which might remain after the assignment of a homestead of the value of five thousand dollars.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

A parol partition of land not carried into effect by possession of each party of his respective share according to the partition, is not valid and binding on the parties. (Jackson v. Hardee, 4 Johns. 202; Jackson v. Duncan, 14 Johns. 224, and cases cited in note a.)

Exclusive possession of one tenant in common of a particular part, accompanied by a denial of his co-tenant's right of possession in the part thus occupied, may grow into a legal presumption of partition having been made. (Lloyd v. Gordon, 2 Har. & McH. 254.)

No parol partition is effectual unless accompanied by deeds from one co-tenant to the other, inasmuch as the Statute of Frauds applies to such cases. (Porter v. Hill, 9 Mass. 34; Porter v. Perkins, 5 Mass. 232; Snively v. Luce, 1 Watts, 69; Gratz v. Gratz, 4 Rawl. 411.)

Volney E. Howard, for Respondents.

There is a sufficient part performance shown in this case to take the division out of the Statute of Frauds in equity. Julio settled, built on and improved his part. His sister settled and occupied her part of the land. Neither party, and especially Catarina, could refuse to execute the agreement without a fraud upon the other. The principle applies to a parol purchase under the Spanish law. (Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 207.)

Taking possession is such part performance. (Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 158.)

Opinion of the Court.

The fact that the cattle ran from one part to the other, does not affect the question of possession, especially when it is shown that Julio built houses and planted vineyards according to the division, and has resided on his part for about twenty years.

The position that there can be no homestead in land held in a tenancy in common, or joint tenancy, is an unfounded assumption, and all our decisions on that subject go on that ground. (Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244.)

It is perfectly easy to ascertain the respective parts of each tenant. It is capable of mathematical ascertainment and certainty. It is a direct and palpable violation of the statute, which declares "the homestead, consisting of a quantity of land, together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances, not exceeding in value the sum of five thousand dollars, to be selected by the owner thereof," etc. There can be no doubt as to what tract is intended. And if two or more tenants in common had built different dwelling houses on the same tract, a Court, on division, would assign to each his improvements, with an equitable division of the quality and quantity. If the land had to be sold to effect a division, the proceeds could be divided with equal facility. (Brookfield v. Williams, 1 Green's Ch. R. 341; Thompson v. Hardman, 6 J. Ch. R. 436; Wood's Digest, 202.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by Julio Verdugo on the second day of January, 1861, upon the land described in the complaint. A portion of the lands were known as the "Rancho of San Rafael." The principal question in the case is, as to whether the defendants, Verdugo and wife, are entitled to have a homestead reserved from the operation of the mortgage and decree. The case was tried by the Court without a jury, and the fourth and fifth findings are as follows:

"4. The Court also finds that, at the time of the execution of said mortgage, the southern portion of the Rancho of San Rafael was the residence and homestead of said Julio Verdugo and wife and family; that said Rancho of San Rafael was acquired by Julio Verdugo and his sister Catarina by inheritance from their father, and that there was a parol division of said Rancho of San Rafael between said Julio and Catarina before the acquisition of California by the Government of the United States, followed by immediate possession of their respective portions, and continued for a long series of years anterior to the execution of the mortgage, and for more than ten years previous to the change of Governments. That by said division Catarina received and possessed the upper or northern half of the rancho, and Julio the southern or lower half. That said Catarina resided on and held the northern half containing the old family residence. That Julio moved to, and built on and resided, with his wife and family, on the southern half, where he resided with his family at the time of the execution of the mortgage, and which was the homestead of himself and wife at the time, under the Act of the Legislature of 1851; and that the same was duly recorded as their homestead on the 13th day of April, 1861, in compliance with the Act of April 28, 1860."

"5. That there was a division of the whole mortgaged property between Julio and Catarina in 1861; but that, as to that portion of the property, to wit, the Rancho of San Rafael, acquired by inheritance, it was merely a confirmation of the ancient verbal division."

Upon these findings the Court decreed, that a homestead of the value of five thousand dollars should be selected and set apart. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and the appeal is from the order denying the motion.

After setting out the note and mortgage, the plaintiff, in his complaint, avers, "that at the time of the execution, delivery and record, as aforesaid, of the said mortgage, the said mortgagor, Julio Verdugo, was the owner, in the tract described in said mortgage, as tenant in common with Catarina Verdugo — the said Julio and said Catarina each owning one undivided

one half; that after the execution, delivery and recording, as aforesaid, of the said mortgage, the said Julio Verdugo and Catarina Verdugo, on the 13th day of April, 1861, by deed of that date partitioned and divided said tract of land in the mortgage described between them." These allegations are not in any manner denied, or put in issue in any of the answers in the case. On the contrary they are in express terms substantially admitted. Defendant Julio Verdugo, in his answer avers, "that said defendant and his wife, being the owners of one half of premises in complaint described, recorded their declaration setting apart a certain portion including the dwelling house as their homestead," and the wife, Maria Jesus Verdugo, in her answer, alleges "that her husband, Julio Verdugo, being seized in fee of one half of premises as set out in said pretended mortgage, the said Julio Verdugo and this defendant, his wife, made their declaration according to law, setting apart certain portions, including their dwelling house, of said premises as their homestead," etc. They do not here aver a seizin in severalty of any particular portion of the land, but a seizin of one half of the whole, a very remarkable allegation in view of the averment of a tenancy in common in the complaint and a failure to deny that allegation, if the defendants intended at that time to rely upon a seizin of the entirety of a specific portion in severalty. There is no attempt in either answer to deny, or take issue upon any allegation of the complaint. The defendants set up, as an affirmative defense, a claim to a homestead, and rely upon the invalidity of the mortgage to the extent of the homestead value, on the ground that it was not executed by the wife. Upon the pleadings, the tenancy in common of the lands covered by the mortgage was not in issue, and the evidence to show a parol partition was irrelevant to the issues, and contrary to the facts as they stood admitted by the pleadings. But independent of this, the testimony to show a parol partition between Julio and Catarina Verdugo is extremely meagre, vague and unsatisfactory. There are two witnesses, Julian Chavis and Fernando Sepulveda, who testify, that, "for two years before the change of Government in California, in the family of the Verdugos the northern part of the Rancho of San Rafael had been recognized and regarded as belonging to Catarina Verdugo, and the southern part as belonging to Julio Verdugo, and that the houses and gardens and other private property and peculiar improvements of each were on such respective parts." Sepulveda also testifies, that since 1843, "there has been a recognized parol division between Catarina Verdugo and Julio Verdugo, by which Catarina retained the old homestead of the family, and the upper, or northern half of the rancho, on which she has resided since 1833. That Julio took possession of the lower, or southern half of the rancho, and has, to the knowledge of the witness, resided on the same since 1843, when he had houses built by himself, a vineyard and cultivated fields. That he has heard both Catarina and Julio state that the ranch was divided and occupied as above stated since 1843; and that the division was always so recognized in the family." And on cross examination it was stated "that Julio Verdugo, the defendant, had always exercised care and control for his sister Catarina, over the northern part of the rancho as well as the southern—they both having cattle, which ranged on the whole rancho, and were all cared for by Julio Verdugo in the same manner, and no difference was made in the rodeo limits."

This is all the testimony to show a valid parol partition, and it may all be true in the general sense stated by the witnesses, and yet there be no parol partition known to the law with an intent to accomplish a division of the land, by which each should hold title to a specific part in severalty. The witnesses gave their general conclusions, without attempting to state any specific agreement or contract between the parties. If there was any definite agreement between Julio and Catarina, it does not appear in the record, and we know nothing of its terms. Whether it was for the purpose of temporary occupation, or with a view to severing their tenancy in common and vesting the title in severalty to a portion in each, does not appear. They lived, it is true, in separate houses, on different portions of the land, and cultivated separate fields, but the other portions of the rancho appear to have been occupied in common by their cattle, all of which were under the control of Julio. Such occupation is very general among tenants in common in this State, in which a very large portion of the valuable lands are held as tenancies in common.

The testimony of the defendants as to the parol partition is of the most unreliable character. On the other hand, all the documentary evidence in the record shows that the parties themselves did not suppose they held specific portions of the rancho in question in severalty. The defendant, Julio, describes the entire rancho in his mortgage—not the southern half merely. So, also, the petition in the record to the Land Commissioners for confirmation of the grant is presented in the names of Julio and Catarina jointly, and the title is confirmed to them according to their petition as coparceners. So also in the deed of partition executed between them since the execution of the mortgage in question, there is no recital of, or reference to any prior partition, but on the contrary the deed recites: "That whereas, the said Catarina Verdugo, and Julio Verdugo do have and hold, and are seized in common and as tenants in common in equal parts of those certain tracts or parcels of land," etc., describing two tracts, one being the "Rancho of San Rafael." * * * * "And, whereas, both of said tracts of land adjoin and are connected one with the other; now, therefore, it is covenanted, granted, concluded and agreed by and between the said Catarina Verdugo and Julio Verdugo * * * * that a partition of said lands seized by them in common be made in the manner and form following," etc. In view of these facts, and the facts that stand admitted by the pleadings, it is manifest that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings.

At the time the pleadings were filed, it is evident, that the defendants did not rely upon a parol partition, for their answers are not framed upon any such theory.

That a valid parol partition might have been made under the law which prevailed in California before the adoption of the common law, we have already held in Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 222. But agreements in relation to land resting in parol ought to be very satisfactorily proved.

Respondents insist, that the decisions to the effect that a homestead cannot be carved out of land held in joint tenancy, or by tenancy in common, are erroneous and ought to be overruled. It is now too late to re-investigate the reasons upon which those decisions are based. The first of the series, Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244, was made nine years ago. The decision was affirmed in Reynolds v. Pixley, 6 Cal. 167; Giblin v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 417; and Kelleisberger v. Kopp, 6 Cal. 565; and since that time the construction of the statute upon the point involved has been regarded as settled. The parties in this case may have relied upon those decisions in dispensing with the signature of the wife to the mortgage.

The rights of Ramirez and Sepulveda, held adversely to the title mortgage, should have been saved in the decree. (San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 478.)

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

JOHN AGNEW v. STEAMER CONTRA COSTA.

LIABILITY OF STEAMBOAT AS A COMMON CARRIER.—In an action against a steamboat, as a common carrier, for the loss of a horse by the explosion of the boiler, alleged by the plaintiff to have been caused by racing with a rival steamer, evidence on the part of the defense to show the good condition of the boiler is irrelevant, both on the question of liability and of damages.

SAME.—In such case, evidence on the part of the defense that the engine and boilers were strong, and that extraordinary care was used by the officers and crew of the steamer in their management while racing, is also irrelevant.

LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIER.—The presumption of the law is against a common carrier, except it be made to appear that the injury complained of could not have happened by the intervention of human means.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Argument for Respondent.

Plaintiff offered no evidence upon the condition of the boilers.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below for the value of the horse and interest on the amount, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. W. F. Sloan, for Appellant.

It is a general rule of law that interest is not recoverable on unliquidated demands. (Sedgw. 377; Holmes v. Rankin, 17 Barb. S. C. 454.) It was said by Mr. Justice Washington, in Gilpin v. Consequa, Peters' C. C. R. 95, that "as to interest this is a question generally in the discretion of the jury. But it is not agreeable to legal principles to allow interest on unliquidated and contested claims, sounding in damages."

An exception to that rule has been allowed in a case where there was proof of negligence and improper conduct.

It was said by the Supreme Court of New York, in Watkinson v. Lawton, 8 J. R. 217: "The question of interest depends upon circumstances. The jury may give interest, by way of damages, in cases in which the conduct of the master was improper. But here no bad conduct is to be attributed to him, and interest is not, in every case, and of course, recoverable, because the amount of the loss is unliquidated, and sounds in damages to be assessed by the jury."

That being the rule, it would seem to follow that the Court below erred in excluding the proof offered by the defendant for the purpose of showing that the case did not fall within the exception.

Wm. H. L. Barnes, for Respondent.

The deposition of Coffee was incompetent and irrelevant.

In actions against a common carrier to recover damages for the non-delivery of goods intrusted to him, the measure of damages is the value of the goods at the place of destination, with interest from the day when they should have been delivered. (Sedg. on Meas. of Dam., 354, and cases cited.)

In such an action, the defendant might prove a part performance of his contract, a late delivery, or a delivery in a damaged condition, of the goods, so as to reduce the amount of damages to which the rule would otherwise subject him; because the action has only one object, viz: to place the parties in the same situation in which they would have been if the contract had been fulfilled, and so limit the recovery to the actual loss sustained. (Story on Bailments, § 582, a, and cases cited.)

In the present case there was a total destruction of the property intrusted to the carrier, and no matter what the condition of the boiler of the defendant was, the indemnity to which the plaintiff was entitled for the loss of his property could not thereby be reduced or changed. The deposition was, therefore, incompetent as evidence in mitigation of damages.

The defendant's counsel seemed to be laboring under an impression that the responsibilities of carriers of goods for hire and of carriers of passengers for hire were identical, and that what would excuse the carrier of passengers would also exonerate the carrier of goods. The distinction between them in this respect is manifest. In the case of the passenger carrier, it might be proper to permit him to show, affirmatively, facts which would authorize the conclusion that the utmost care, diligence, and prudence were exercised; because the common carrier of passengers is not in any sense an insurer, but is answerable only for injuries to passengers against which the utmost skill and prudence could not guard. But even the exercise of the utmost skill and prudence has been held immaterial in an action against a common carrier to recover damages for injuries to passengers, and he has been held responsible for latent defects in machinery, or the structure of the road, whether discoverable by the exercise of the utmost skill and care on the part of the defendants or not. (Hegeman v. Western R. R. Co., 3 Kernan, 9.)

But the liability of a common carrier of goods, by water, in a vessel propelled by steam, does not end when he has placed on board good and sufficient engines and boilers, capable of sustaining twice the amount of steam sufficient to explode them. Nor when he has secured a good captain and skilful officers and agents to manage his machinery. Except as against the two classes of accidents of which we have spoken, he is the absolute insurer of the goods intrusted to him—he must deliver them or pay for them. If the offer in question could be considered an offer to prove any fact, or present any fact upon which the Court could pass as admissible or otherwise—which is denied—such facts would have been utterly unavailing to show that the damage in question occurred by act of God, or was one towards which no human agency had contributed. It is the most ordinary duty of a common carrier by water, in steam vessels, to supply good boilers and competent engineers. Happily for life and limb they are generally found in such vessels. But their presence cannot prove the absence of human agency in producing a disaster of this description, nor make the liability of the carrier greater, nor diminish it a hair.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This action was brought to recover damages for the loss of a stallion, by means of the negligence of the defendant as a common carrier between the cities of San Francisco and Oakland.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove that on the 3d day of April, 1859, he embarked the stallion on the "Contra Costa," at San Francisco, to be carried for him to the City of Oakland. That the horse was put by the captain of the boat opposite the boiler in the place where horses were usually stationed. That the boiler of the steamer exploded on the passage, and that the horse was so far injured by the explosion that he died on the same day. That the Contra Costa was at the time racing with a rival steamer running between the same termini; that there was betting among the passengers of the Contra Costa, which betting was encouraged by the assurances and conduct of the engineer.

The defendant offered in evidence the deposition of George W. Coffee, "for the purpose solely of showing the condition of the boilers of the steamer." The plaintiff objected to the evidence as incompetent and irrelevant, and the Court sustained the objection. The appellant claims that this ruling was erroneous.

Where the cause of the damage for which recompense is sought is unconnected, as was the case here, with the conduct or propensities of the animal undertaken to be carried, the carrier is subjected to the ordinary responsibilities connected with his vocation. (Palmer v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 4 Mees. and Wels. 749; Clarke v. The Rochester and Syracuse Railroad Company, 14 N. Y. 574.) In the case at bar, the boilers were either sufficient or insufficient. If they were insufficient, proof of the fact could have been of no service to the defendant, of course; and if sufficient, the proper deduction from the fact would be, not that the explosion resulted from the act of God, but from some fault in the management—the very cause to which it was attributed in the theory of the plaintiff's case. The defendant was an insurer against all injury not resulting from the act of God or the public enemies, or from the conduct of the animal; and it follows that the good condition of the boilers had as little to do with the question of liability and with the question of damages also, as the condition of the rudder or the general staunchness of the ship, the misconduct charged being assumed or given.

Upon the exclusion of Coffee's deposition, the defendant offered to prove "that all skill and care and prudence were used, as far as human foresight would go, and that defendant did in fact provide and have on board a good and sufficient engine and boilers, capable of sustaining a pressure of steam twice the amount that was in the boiler at the time of the explosion, and that the master, engineer, crew and defendant so conducted themselves that the explosion occurred by inevitable accident or unknown causes, and against which precaution and skill could not guard." On objection taken by the plaintiff this evidence was also excluded.

As between Court and counsel, the offer lacks the simplicity and directness called for by the occasion.

It is complicated and somewhat confused. The plaintiff's case imputed the explosion to the racing and its incidents, and proof was introduced of that misconduct by him, as we must intend, not so much for the purpose of proving the liability (Boyce v. The California Stage Company, 25 Cal. 460,) as for the purpose of enhancing the damages by interest on the value of the animal. (Watkinson v. Laughton, 8 Johns. R. 217.) If the defendant proposed to meet the case in this aspect of it, the offer should have been to disprove the particular misconduct imputed. But the offer, as made, does not necessarily impart anything more than an offer to prove that a reckless act was carefully performed.

But there is another aspect under which the question may be presented. Let it be assumed that the purpose was to prove as a proposition of defense that explosion resulted from the vis major, and that the proof of the strength of the boilers and of extraordinary care, on the part of officers and crew, was offered for the purpose of supplying grounds of presumption. The answer is that there is no logical connection between the strength of the boilers and extraordinary care in the management on the one hand, and vis major propounded on the other—as little indeed as there is between the same facts and the conclusion that the explosion was caused, or that the horse was killed by public enemies. (Boyce v. California Stage Co.) Proof that the boilers were sufficiently strong would establish merely that the horse was not killed by reason of their weakness. Proof that extraordinary care was used, would prove simply that the explosion occurred in spite of it, but it would throw no light upon the question of whether it did or did not result acto Dei. Between the point at which extraordinary care on the point of a bailee may be said to terminate, and the point at which "superior force" may be said to begin, there is a wide space for the interposition of other agencies, and the law presumes against a carrier in every case, except it be made to appear that the injury complained of could not have happened by the intervention of human means. (Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27.)

Other errors are assigned, but none that require particular notice.

Petition for rehearing. The rehearing is asked for on the ground that "the attention of the Court has been by some means diverted from the only point presented for consideration in appellant's brief" to wit: the charge of the Court "that interest can be allowed against a common carrier only when it shall appear that there was fraud or gross misconduct in carrying the property or in the transaction." The brief referred to "invites the attention of the Court to the errors numbered four, five, six, and twelve," in the transcript. Number four is as follows: "Error of the Court in refusing to allow the defendant to read in evidence the deposition of George W. Coffee, and refusing to allow defendant to show the good condition of their boilers and steam engine in mitigation of damages." Both of these questions are considered in the opinion, and both, on reasons given, were decided against the appellant, on the ground that the evidence offered was not admissible to mitigate the damages, nor for any purpose. Number five, to which our attention was also specially solicited, is as follows: "Error in the Court in refusing to allow the defendant to prove by competent witnesses that all possible skill, care and prudence was used on the part of the agents and servants of the defendants." That question is also discussed in the opinion and determined against the appellant. It will be observed that the assignment does not bring the error alleged into relation with the point of damages; but we, nevertheless, after disposing of the error as related to the point of the defendant's liability, passed upon it as it stood connected with the question of damages, as is apparent on the face of the opinion.

Number six is as follows: "Error of the Court in refusing to allow defendant to prove that the boilers of defendant were capable of sustaining twice the amount of steam contained therein at the time of the alleged explosion, and that the engineer, master and crew of defendant were entirely without fault or negligence." This point, also, is not brought expressly into relations with the question of damages, but the "means" by which we were induced idly to discuss and idly to pass upon it, though forgotten by counsel, have now become apparent.

As to the charge of the Court upon the subject of allowing interest by way of damages, we did not discuss it, for two reasons, one of which was that its correctness was indisputable, and the other was that its correctness was not disputed by counsel; and, as already stated, we held, on discussion, that the general evidence which the defendant offered of "care," and "extraordinary care," and "of all possible care," and to the effect that the "boilers were in good condition," etc., was inadmissible, for the reason that the defendant did not undertake to controvert the specific fact of racing with a rival boat for the purpose of winning bets encouraged by the engineer — holding that the theory of mitigation upon which the rejected evidence was offered amounted to this — that if it could be shown that the luxury and recklessness of racing was indulged in with "good boilers," strained to bursting with "extraordinary care," that then, and in that event, the defendant should be let off from paying interest on the value of the stud, by way of damages. On these grounds we consider that, as matter of fact, no question was discussed in the opinion except such as our attention was specially called to by counsel, and that the question which counsel conceives was entirely overlooked, was, on the contrary, entirely exhausted.

T. L. BUCKOUT v. FRANCIS P. SWIFT, MARGARET SWIFT, AND JOHN LOWELL.

ISSUES OF FACT RAISED BY ANSWER.—Where there are no findings of fact in an action tried by the Court, all the issues of fact raised by the answer are deemed to have been found in favor of the party who recovers judgment.

REMOVAL OF A HOUSE FROM THE FREEHOLD.—The severance and removal of a house from the freehold changes the character of the house from real to personal property, whether the severance is by the act of God or of man.

MORTGAGEE'S RIGHT TO AN INJUNCTION.—The mortgagee of a lot on which a house is standing, cannot enjoin the mortgagor or his assigns from removing the house from the lot, except upon proof that the lot without the house will be an inadequate security for the mortgage debt.

SAME.—The severance and removal of a house from land covered by a mortgage withdraws the house from the operation of the mortgage lien; and after the removal the mortgagor or his assignee has a right to sell the house, and the purchaser may convert it to his own use.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, City and County of Sacramento.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

The Court erred in dismissing plaintiff's bill as to respondent, Lowell. The refusal of the injunction, however, made it impossible for the Court, in accordance with its ruling on the motion for an injunction, to do otherwise than dismiss the bill as to the respondent Lowell.

We, however, contend that it was a gross act of spoliation on the part of Swift and Lowell, the one to sell and the other to buy the house as it stood in the street.

We cite generally the following authorities to show that in no event could the Court below have been right: "Things personal in their nature, but fitted and prepared to be used with real estate, and essential to its beneficial enjoyment, pass with the realty." (1 Hilliard on Real Property, p. 26.) And pass by mortgage without being specially named. (Ib. 28.) A grant of land carries houses with it. (2 Washburne on Real Property, p. 625.)

Opinion of the Court.

E. B. Crocker, for Respondent.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

On the 4th of October, 1861, Francis P. Swift and his wife, for the purpose of securing the payment of a promissory note made and delivered by him to the plaintiff, mortgaged a lot in the City of Sacramento, on which stood a dwelling house occupied by Swift and his family, and in which they continued to live until the great flood of 1862, when the house was carried, by the rush of water, into the street a short distance from the mortgaged lot, where it stood when this action was brought. A short time before the commencement of the action, Swift made a contract with the defendant, Lowell, to sell him the house, and Lowell was about to remove it, when the plaintiff brought this action to foreclose the mortgage and to restrain the removal. It was alleged in the complaint that the house, at the date of the mortgage, was affixed to and formed a part of the realty, and that it was chiefly valuable to be used in connection therewith; and that Lowell bought with full notice of all the facts, and that he was destitute of property. The plaintiff obtained upon his complaint, from the County Judge, an order restraining the defendants from selling, taking away, or injuring the house. The order was thereafter dissolved, and an injunction refused by the District Court, upon the complaint alone.

Thereupon, Lowell answered, and, at the trial of the cause, the Court rendered a judgment against the defendant Swift for the amount due on the note, and a decree for the foreclosure of the mortgage and for the sale of the mortgaged property, excepting the house, and as to that, it was ordered and adjudged that the decree should not affect nor authorize its sale; and the Court dismissed the complaint as to Lowell and gave judgment in his favor. The appeal is from the order dissolving the restraining order and refusing to grant an injunction, and from that part of the decree which dismissed the bill as to the defendant Lowell.

There is a document in the record headed "Statement on Appeal." Amongst other things, it contains the pleadings in the action, an agreement that certain facts detailed were "proved," and a medley of evidence given by the witnesses of the respective parties. On this appeal we can make no reference to the evidence, for the purpose of determining whether the judgment is right or wrong. There was no motion for new trial, nor are there any questions arising upon the admissibility of evidence. There are no findings in the case, and we must therefore intend that all the issues of fact raised by Lowell's answer were found in his favor; that is to say, we must intend that the Court found that the lot, without the house "was sufficient security for the debt;" that the defendant "purchased the house of Swift and fully paid him therefor," and that "the defendant is possessed of sufficient means to respond in damages at law." There are other issues raised by special denials in the answer, but the denials are either of immaterial averments or involve mere conclusions of law. It is charged in the complaint that the house was standing upon the lot when the mortgage was made and recorded in October, 1861. That the house was thereafter, in 1862, floated by the flood from off the land into an adjacent street. That the house was the one which Lowell bought, and that the fact of their identity was known to Lowell at the time he purchased. All these averments must be taken as true, for none of them are denied. The facts, which by the statement were "proved," may be laid out of account for they do not bear upon any question which we shall have occasion to discuss.

In view of the facts admitted by the pleadings, it cannot be doubted that the house was originally real estate, and was affected, as such, by the mortgage lien. (2 Wash. R. P. 625.) That point we consider to be so fully established by authority as not to admit of discussion. We shall consider the case under two distinct aspects.

First — Upon the hypothesis that the lien of the mortgage remained upon the house after it took on the character of personal property by severance and removed from the freehold.

So far as legal effect is concerned, it matters not whether the severance was by the act of God or the act of man. The severance, proprio vigore, changed the character of the property from real to personal, irrespective of the means by which it was accomplished. If, while the house was yet upon the land, the mortgagor, or any one claiming under him, had threatened to remove it, and the mortgagee had filed a bill to restrain the removal on the ground of waste, the removal would not have been enjoined, except upon proof, that, as matter of fact, the lot without the house would be an inadequate security. The general rule in equity is, that a mortgagor, in possession, has the right to cut timber on the lands mortgaged, and to do other parallel acts, and a Court of equity will not interfere to restrain him or his assigns in the exercise of that right, until it is made to appear that the cutting, or other like act, is being carried to an extent calculated to render the land an insufficient security for the amount due upon the mortgage. (King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239; Brady v. Waldrons, 2 J. Ch. 147; Hampton v. Hodges, 8 Ves. 105; Wright v. Atkyns, 1 Ves. and Beav. 314; Van Wyck v. Alliger, 6 Barb. S. Ct. R. 511; 2 Story's Eq. Sec. 915.) Now, if in the absence of the fact named, a mortgagor would have the right to withdraw timber, growing upon the mortgaged lands, from the lien of the mortgage, by severing and converting it to his own use, why should he or his vendee, in the absence of the same fact, be restrained from converting the property after severance, assuming it to be then subject to the lien? The questions are identical. Both bear upon a common point, which is as follows: If the mortgagor is allowed to exercise his equitable right of withdrawing timber, etc., from the operation of an admitted lien, will or will not the security be endangered? No authorities have been cited by counsel bearing directly upon this question, and we have not been able to find any that directly control it; but on the ground of strong and manifest analogy, we consider that both of the cases stated should be taken as subject to the same rule. This conclusion disposes of the appeal upon the hypothesis of the appellant that the house was under the lien of the mortgage after its removal from the land.

Second— But we consider that by removal from the land the house was effectually removed from the operation of the mortgage lien.

The mortgage was, by its terms, limited to land as its sole subject matter; and so long as its terms remained unchanged it could not be made to comprehend anything else.

Again: A building, severed and removed from mortgaged lands, of which lands it formed a part when the mortgage was given, is disencumbered of the lien, substantially on the same principle that a building erected upon the lands after the giving of the mortgage is subjected to the lien. In the first case, the building is withdrawn from the operation of the mortgage, for the reason that it has ceased to be a thing real; in the other, mere materials are brought under the lien, for the reason that they have become a structure by combination, and the structure has become a thing real by position. In both cases position is the pivot of judgment.

Again: A mortgagee, as we have already seen, may, under certain circumstances, restrain the mortgagor from cutting and removing timber from the lands covered by the mortgage; but that doctrine goes upon the very ground that if the timber should be cut, or at least cut and carried away, it would, in its new character of personalty, be withdrawn from the operation of the lien by the sheer force of the change.

Again: If the lien of a mortgage should be held to follow things severed and removed from the freehold, the doctrine would involve a series of notable consequences and investigations. Minerals removed from mines under mortgage— crops, timber, buildings, and the materials, even, of which the buildings were constructed, when severed and removed from lands under mortgage, could be pursued under proceedings in foreclosure into the hands of all parties, or, at least, into the hands of all parties taking with notice. And of what avail would all this be to mortgagees in the large and in the long run? And under what rule should the lien of the mortgage be enforced? Under that applicable to things real, or the one applicable to things personal? Most probably after the method applicable to things real. But in that event, should the property be sold on view, or without view by the bidders, and in whatsoever hands it might chance to be? If on view, then under what known process could the Sheriff seize, hold, and produce the property at the sale? And if not on view, then could the purchaser call for a writ of assistance if the holder of the property refused to deliver it? And how would it be as to the ordering of redemptions or as to the possibility of any redemption? Would a bill of sale, executed by the Sheriff, pass the title, or would a deed be necessary? and if the latter, then would the things personal be included by indentment in a deed of the terra firma, or should they be specially mentioned therein?

But we consider it unnecessary to push the general reasoning further, for the question presented was met and determined in Codrington v. Johnstone, 1 Beavan, 520. It was held in that case that a mortgagee taking possession, or a receiver appointed on his behalf, is not entitled to crops of the estate, previously severed and consigned by the mortgagor, though not actually received by the assignee.

We hold, then, on principle and on authority, that when the house in question was removed from the land, it was withdrawn from the operation of the mortgage lien, and that the mortgagor had the right to sell it, and that Lowell had the right to buy and to convert it to his own use.

WILLIAM NORRIS v. SAMUEL J. HENSLEY.

CONSTRUCTION OF A WILL.—If by the terms of a will the estate is devised to "A," to have and to hold during his lifetime, and then to go to his heirs; if the word "heirs" is used in a general sense to indicate those to whom by law the property would pass by descent, and not in a special or restrictive sense to designate certain particular individuals, the whole estate vests in "A" in fee simple, notwithstanding the language of the will limits him to a life estate.

ISSUE.—The following was the language of the bequest in the will: "I bequeath to Dr. Van Canaghen, one third of my property on California street, and one third to my son, and one third to my brother, each and all of them to have and to hold their lifetime, and then to go to their heirs and assigns. But never to sell." Held, that by the terms of the will, the three devisees named took a fee simple estate in the property devised.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

B. F. Morrison, for Appellant.

The question thus arising for adjudication by this Court is, perhaps, a new one, so far as the judicial history of the State is concerned, and its novelty is fully equalled by its importance. There is no doubt that the learned counsel for the defense will invoke an arbitrary rule of construction known as the "Rule in Shelley's Case," and will urge that in England, as well as in several States of this Union, the meaning of the language used in this will has received a judicial construction adverse to the plaintiff's right to recover in this action. But however far the Courts may have gone in establishing the rule in Shelley's Case, we insist that where the intention of the testator is so perfectly clear as it is in the will of Elizabeth Townsend, the Courts cannot apply an arbitrary rule of law, and thereby entirely defeat the wishes and intention of the testator as they manifestly appear upon the face of the will. It has been so held in numerous cases, and we doubt not such is the principle now well settled by the authorities. (Tanner v. Livingston, 12 Wend. 92.)

The fundamental rule is that the intention of the testator is to be collected and allowed, though not expressed in legal language. Where the intention is clear to give only a life estate, it should govern. (Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Wend. 509.)

The reasons upon which the rule in Shelley's Case is founded, never had any application to the entirely different condition of things in this country.

The laws of primogeniture and the doctrines of feudal tenures prevailing in England are unknown to us, and there is no good reason in law or logic for applying to the changed state of affairs here an old, arbitrary rule, such as that laid down in Shelley's Case. The foundation of the rule and the reasons why it should not be allowed to interfere with the intention of a testator in this country, are clearly set forth in the opinion of Mr. Justice Barlow. (See case of Schoonmaker v. Shirley, 3 Denio, 492.)

Again, the rule in Shelley's Case was laid down with reference to a common law conveyance, and although it has been extended in its application to wills, yet there is more latitude of construction allowed in case of wills in furtherance of the testator's intention. (4 Kent's Commentaries, 226.)

These authorities, and the numerous cases to which they refer, clearly show that the arbitrary rule of law laid down in Shelley's Case, is by no means of controlling force and effect, regardless of the clear and manifest intention of the testator, but on the contrary, where it is perfectly obvious from the language of the testator that a life estate was intended to be created, only such an estate will pass remainder in fee to others. Indeed, it is a favorite doctrine with the Courts, that in the construction of wills, the intention of the testator shall be the pole star, and the cases in which such intention is rejected constitute the exception and not the rule.

Delos Lake, for Respondent.

The case is directly within the rule in Shelley's Case, (1 Coke, 104,) which is stated by Preston thus: "When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing; and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." (4 Kent's Com. 215.)

This rule has been the common law of England for near five hundred years, and is stated by Chancellor Kent to be "received and adopted in the United States as part of the system of the common law." (4 Kent's Com. 229.)

In this State the common law of England is, by statute, made the rule of decision. The case of Tanner v. Livingston, 12 Wend. 83, is plainly distinguishable from this. In that case the devise was to Le Roy and Anna Livingston for their natural lives. Then, in a separate item, and as a separate devise, the remainder is devised to the heirs male of Le Roy and Anna.

Under the law in Shelley's Case, Le Roy and Anna Livingston would have taken, under the will, an estate tail, except for a provision in the will that the heirs male should take an estate in fee simple as tenants in common. But as entails had been abolished by statute, the rule in Shelley's Case, of course, could not be applied, because it would create an estate forbidden by law.

There are other facts in the case distinguishing it from the present, but it is not necessary to pursue them. It is sufficient that the Court held, not that Shelley's Case was not law, but that the case was not within it.

The very gist of the rule is, that if by the terms of the will, or other conveyance, it is provided that the estate should pass in the line of hereditary succession, or according to the laws of descent, the ancestor will take the whole estate. And, therefore, wherever the word "heirs" is used in a general sense, and not in a special or restrictive sense, to designate certain particular individuals, the whole estate vests in the ancestor, notwithstanding the language of the conveyance limits him to a life estate. (4 Kent's Com. 226.)

Opinion of the Court.

In Horne v. Lyeth, 4 Harris & John., Maryland, 431, it was held that a devise of a term for ninety-nine years to A. during her natural life, and after her death to her heirs, vested the entire interest in the term in A.

The Court say that the word "heirs," when used alone, without explanation, is always a word of limitation, and not of purchase, and no presumed intention will control its legal operation. (Stewart v. Kenower, 7 W. & S. 288; McFeely v. Moore, 5 Hammond, 465; King's Heirs, 12 Ohio, 390; 5 Conn. 100; 3 Edw. Ch. 1.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was brought to recover damages in the sum of twelve thousand dollars for the breach of a covenant of seizin contained in a deed of conveyance of a parcel of land in the City of San Francisco, executed by the defendant to the plaintiff.

Elizabeth L. Townsend was the owner in fee of the land described in the deed, and made her will, devising it to Dr. Van Canaghen and to her son, John Henry Townsend, and to her brother, Moses Schallenberger. She died in December, 1850. The devise was in the following words:

"I bequeath to Dr. Van Canaghen one third of my property on California street, and one third to my son, and one third to my brother, each and all of them to have and to hold their lifetime, and then to go to their heirs and assigns. But never to sell it."

The devisees conveyed the premises to the defendant by deed purporting to grant the same in fee, and the defendant in November, 1861, conveyed the same premises to the plaintiff for the consideration of twelve thousand dollars, by deed, in which was contained a covenant of seizin. The question submitted to the Court below was, whether the devisees named took under the will only a life estate in the premises or an estate in fee simple absolute. The Court held that they took an estate in fee simple, and gave judgment for the defendant. Whether the Court was correct or not in its construction of the devise set forth is the only question involved in the case.

The doctrine declared in Shelley's Case, 1 Coke R. 93, is that where an estate of freehold is limited by gift or conveyance to a person for life, and in the same gift or conveyance there is a limitation, mediate or immediate, to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, the word heirs is a word of limitation of the estate, and not of purchase; by which, says Mr. Preston, it must be understood that it is not a designation of persons to take originally in their own right. (1 Preston on Estates, 264.) The rule in Shelley's Case, as it is called, Chancellor Kent says, has been established as an axiom in the English law for near five hundred years. (4 Kent's Com. 218.) "The principle of this rule," says Mr. Jickling, "is of much greater antiquity than the name, the former being virtually recognized in the Year Book of 18, Ed. II (1325), the latter not adopted till after the determination in Shelley's Case, 32 Eliz. (1590), in which the subject was incidentally discussed." (Jickling on Legal and Equitable Estates, 281.) It has generally been considered as of feudal origin, and introduced to prevent frauds upon tenure (1 Fearn on Contingent Remainders, 113); but Mr. Hargrave, in his observations concerning the rule, considered it as one of the barriers provided by law to guard descent from being confounded with purchase. (Hargrave's Law Tracts, 574, 575.)

In Perrin v. Blake in the Court of Exchequer, Mr. Justice Blackstone held it by no means clear that the rule took its rise merely from feudal principles; he was rather inclined to believe it was first established to prevent the inheritance from being in abeyance, and that one principle foundation of it was to obviate the mischief of too frequently putting the inheritance in suspense or abeyance. Further he said "another foundation might be and was probably laid in a principle diametrically opposed to the genius of the feudal institutions; namely, a desire to facilitate the alienation of land and to throw it into the track of commerce one generation sooner, by vesting the inheritance in the ancestor, than if he continued tenant for life; and the heir was declared a purchaser." That the decisions of Courts were influenced by this additional consideration suggested by Mr. Justice Blackstone, has been doubted by high authority, because in the early years of the common law it was the fruits of the tenure rather than the power of alienation, that engaged the attention of the Courts. (1 Preston on Est. 307.) But in modern times the principle suggested has gained ground, and it may be said the tendency of modern decisions has been to discourage and discountenance every contrivance having the effect to operate in restraint of the free alienation of property, or to divert it from the regular course of descent. What may have been the origin of the rule, it is not particularly important to inquire for the determination of the question before us. It is enough that we are satisfied that it has been a settled rule of property in all countries where the common law has been and is in force as the law of the land; and being thus satisfied, our duty is to ascertain if the case in hand comes within or falls without the rule, and to decide accordingly.

In the application of this rule to deeds of conveyance, it has been generally held of more absolute control than when applied to wills. (4 Kent Com. 216; 1 Preston on Estates, 271; 2 Fonb. Eq. 70.) It is certain, says Mr. Butler (Coke Litt. Sec. 719, note 1), that no rule of law has a more ancient origin, or is more generally established, than that if a testator expresses his intention defectively, either by not using technical and artificial terms, or by using them improperly, yet if his intention can be collected from his will, the law, however defective his language may be, will construe his words according to his intentions; and if the object of it is warranted by the established rules of law and equity, will admit of its full operation and effect. It is equally certain, on the other hand, that if the testator's intention appears to be to effect that which the rules of law and equity do not admit, neither the Courts of law nor the Courts of equity can allow its operation. The first thing, therefore, to be ascertained is, what the object of the testator is; the next, whether it is such as the rules of law and equity admit. In Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr, 2,579, Lord Mansfield said, the rule is not a general proposition subject to no control, where the intention is on the other side, and where the objections may be answered. And he agreed with Justices Wilmot and Aston, that the intention is to govern, and that Shelley's Case does not constitute a decisive uncontrollable rule. Mr. Preston says the most strenuous advocates for a proper and legal application of the rule must admit, that the intention is to be collected, and if clearly expressed, to be observed. After the intention is fixed, the law decides on the gift; allowing the intention to govern as often as it is clear that the word heirs is not used as descriptive of the class of legal successors, but in designation of an individual or of particular persons. The intention to be observed in exclusion of the rule must be expressed in terms manifestly exhibiting to the mind clear evidence that the heirs are not to take merely in that right, and as answering that description. The inquiry must be directed to discover the intention, and to see whether the gift is clear of the reasons on which the rule depends for effect; for as Lord Hale very pertinently observed, in King v. Melling, (2 Lev., 58), in reference to wills, the intention is to be law to expound the testament. "The true ground of decision is the intent, and the true question is, what is the intent? and the interpretation is to show the intent." (1 Preston on Estates, 275.)

The intention, it is to be remembered, is to be sought for not only by consulting the words of the will, but also by the rules of interpretation, which have been from time to time adopted by Courts of law for its ascertainment. (1 Sum. 239.) In Hodgson v. Ambrose, 1 Doug. 337, Mr. Justice Buller observed, in a case involving the construction of a will: "There is no rule better established than that the intention of a testator, expressed in his will, if consistent with the rules of law, shall prevail." Mr. Preston, in commenting upon the words "if consistent with the rules of law," says these words are applicable only to the nature and operation of the estate or interest devised, and not to the construction of the words. The question whether the intent be consistent with the rules of law or not, can never arise until it is settled what that intention was. This can only be discovered by taking the whole together. (1 Preston on Estates, 276.) It is not sufficient that the intention should depend on inference or presumable reasons; it must be manifested by words which are explicit; by words which, without any infringement of the rule in Shelley's Case—at least the reason and spirit of that rule, if not its literal terms—may be construed to be a designation of particular persons. (1 Preston on Estates, 279.) At common law, a devise of an estate to heirs which they would have taken by descent, was void, and the heirs took as heirs and not as purchasers. (2 Wash. on Real Property, 136, 268.)

In Jones v. Morgan, 1 Brown's Ch. Cases, 219, Lord Chancellor Thurlow described the outlines of distinction applicable to all the cases in which the rule in Shelley's Case had been subjected to judicial and forensic scrutiny. He drew an inference from all the cases, that where the estate is so given, that after the limitation to the first taker, it is to go to every person who can claim as heirs to the first taker, the word heirs must be a word of limitation—that all heirs taken as heirs must take by descent. His lordship said he thought the argument immaterial that the testator meant the first estate to be an estate for life. He took it, that in all cases the testator did mean so. He rested it on what the testator meant afterwards; if he meant that every other person who should be heir should take, he then meant what the law would not suffer him to give, or the heir to take as a purchaser; and further he said, all possible heirs must take as heirs, and not as purchasers; that in all cases where the limitation of an estate of freehold to a man and afterward to the heirs of his body, whether general or special, so as to give it to the heirs as a denomination or class, the heirs shall be in by descent and not by purchase.

Mr. Fearne, after having given to the subject a thorough and masterly examination, in which he noticed especially the decision of Lord Thurlow in Jones against Morgan, denominating it "very high authority," said: "Now, if the inference I have drawn from the very operative tendency of the law to hereditary descent, in its mode of approaching it, where the requisite ground for its accomplishment is wanting, be just; if from such premises, unopposed by any single repugnant decision or judicial opinion, the conclusion that the capacity of an heir to take the inheritance by purchase, so as to transmit it through the same line as by descent, is confined to those cases only where the ancestor takes no estate of freehold, be sufficiently founded, Lord Thurlow's doctrine embraces the subject to the full extent of his expression. For then, whenever the ancestor takes the freehold the inheritance will not go to all the heirs, etc., in the course of inheritable succession, unless by an actual descent; and consequently, if after the first taker it is to go to every person who can claim as heir to him, the intended succession can only be effectuated by taking the word heirs, etc., as words of limitation. If after him all heirs, etc., are to take as such—that is, as answering that description, they can take only by descent. If the law will not admit of all possible heirs, etc., taking the inheritance after its inception by a freehold in the ancestor otherwise than by descent, it follows that wherever the limitation to the heirs, etc., after a freehold to the ancestor is admitted to reach the whole denomination or class of heirs described, they must take by descent and not by purchase." (1 Fearn's Cont. Rem. 308.)

The principle upon which the rule in Shelley's Case is founded being understood, it is next necessary to ascertain if the devise under consideration comes within the rule. The devise was to the three persons named in the will, with the habendum "each and all of them to have and to hold their lifetime, and then to go to their heirs and assigns," with the superadded words "but never to sell it." The words "their heirs" do not designate particular persons, but is a nomen collectivum, comprehending the whole succession of heirs, lineal and collateral, of the three devisees. Here there is not even a limitation to the heirs of the body of each of the devisees, and if it were possible to construe the words "their heirs" as meaning the heirs of their bodies, even then they could not be held a designatio personarum without superadded words of enumeration showing clearly and unequivocally that the testatrix intended they should take in remainder an estate in fee in the premises in the character of purchasers and not in the character of heirs of her immediate devisees, and that they should constitute the root of a new inheritance—the stock of a new descent. In the cases wherein it has been held that a devise to one for his life with remainder to the heirs of his body, did not fall within the rule in Shelley's Case, there were superadded words of unquestionable intent controlling the direction of the property devised. For example, where the devise was to A., and the issue of her body lawfully to be begotten, as tenants in common, if more than one, but in default of such issue, etc., devise over, it was held that A. took a life estate only, and the limitation to her children was a contingent remainder to them in fee as purchasers. (Davy v. Burnsall, 6 Term R. 30.) There are many cases to be found in the books proceeding upon the principle that where there are superadded words, clearly and unequivocally expressing the intention of the testator to invest the first taker or immediate devisee with an estate for life only, with remainder in fee to the children or issue, or heirs of the body of the tenant for life, the intention shall be carried into effect, provided it be not inconsistent with the rules of law so to do.

In Doe v. Jesson, 5 Maule and Selwyn, 95, the devise was to W. for life, and after his decease to the heirs of his body lawfully issuing, in such proportions as he should appoint, and for want of such appointment then to the heirs of his body lawfully issuing, share and share alike as tenants in common, and if but one child the whole to such only child, and for want of such issue, then to the testator's right heirs forever. The testator died and W. entered, and afterwards married and had issue. It was held by the Court of King's Bench that W.

took only an estate for life, and that his children also took only an estate for life; but on writ of error to the House of Lords, where Lord Eldon and Lord Redesdale both delivered opinions, the judgment of the King's Bench was reversed. Lord Eldon placed his judgment on the ground in part at least, that the words of devise to W., for and during his natural life, followed by the words of the devise to the heirs of the body of the said W. lawfully issuing, constituted W. tenant in tail of the freehold, notwithstanding the testator had before given an estate expressly to W. for his natural life only; and his lordship said "in order to cut down this estate tail, it is absolutely necessary that a particular intent should be found to control and alter it, as clear as the general intent here expressed," and he then proceeds, "the words 'heirs of the body' will indeed yield to a clear particular intent, that the estate should be only for life, and that may be from the effect of superadded words, or any expressions showing the particular intent of the testator; but that must be clearly intelligible and unequivocal"—and further on he says, "the heirs of the body" comprehend all the posterity of the donee in succession. The conclusion to which he came was that no such intent was clearly and unequivocally shown in the superadded words, but on the contrary that the words "for want of such issue" showed that the issue were to take in succession as heirs of the body and not as a mere description of persons. Lord Redesdale in the same case said, "It is dangerous, where words have a fixed legal effect, to suffer them to be controlled without some clear expression or necessary implication;" and the result of his opinion was that by "heirs of the body" the testator did not mean children alone. In conclusion he said, "if the testator had considered the effect of the words he used, and the rule of law operating upon them, he would have used none of the words in the will." (Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bligh, 50, 59.)

The words of the will under consideration do not manifest a clear and unequivocal intention on the part of the testatrix to give to the devisees named therein merely a life estate in the premises; nor does it appear that the words "their heirs" were intended as a designation of particular persons who should take an estate in the lands mentioned otherwise than by descent as heirs of their respective ancestors—the first takers under the will. If the words "each and all of them to have and to hold their lifetime and then to go to their heirs and assigns," could be interpreted as a clear and unequivocal expression of the intention of the testatrix to create in the first takers under her will a mere life estate in the premises, and a remainder in fee to their heirs, whoever they might be when the life estate should expire, then before such intention could be carried into effect, it would be necessary to determine the words, "their heirs," to be a descriptio personarum. But to do so would be in violation, as we have seen, of settled principles of law, as well as in disregard of the definition of the term "heirs" in its general and accurate legal sense. That the testatrix intended the estate devised to go to the devisees, whom she named as the immediate recipients of her bounty, in fee, seems to us more than probable from the entire language which she employed as an expression of her will. She did not stop with the word "heirs," but added the words "and assigns." We are not at liberty to disregard these added words while seeking for the testatrix's intent. The devise to the persons designated, to have and to hold their lifetime, and then to go to their heirs and assigns, is in substance the same as if the words "to go" had been omitted, because in either case, the estate could not go to the heirs of the immediate donees until there could be heirs to them, to take. No person can become an heir to his ancestor while his ancestor lives. Nemo est hæres viventis.

If it is to be presumed the testatrix had in mind any particular object in the use of the word "heirs," it is legitimate to suppose she meant it should have its settled legal effect, as associated with the essential words of devise which she used, which was to transmit to her devisees an estate in fee in the premises. To pass an estate of inheritance or an estate in fee simple absolute to the devisees named, it was necessary to use the word "heirs" or its equivalent; for if at the time of her death land was given to a man forever or to him and his assigns forever, without the use of the word "heirs" it vested in him only a life estate (2 Black. Com. 107,) and because this was then the law of the land a reason is apparent for the use of the term "heirs" in the devise.

On the part of the appellant some reliance is placed on the habendum "to have and to hold their lifetime," as evidence of the design of the testatrix to invest them with a life estate merely. This, to one ignorant of the law, might produce the impression at least that she so intended. But if she herself had any idea of the force and effect of the language of the devise as a whole, she must have known that the devisees named would take the estate in fee as soon as she should cease to live, and that the words "but never to sell it," coupled with the previous words, would not avoid such consequence. It is not improbable that she desired her devisees to retain the property she was providing to give them, so long as they might live, but that she wished to invest them with a life estate only is not supported by the words of the will, nor is there any evidence which is sufficient to satisfy the law that she intended to create an estate in remainder contingent upon the existence of heirs of her immediate devisees when death might put an end to their tenure.

CHARLES McLAUGHLIN v. CESAR PIATTI, LIBERATA PIATTI, AND DANIEL MURPHY.

SALE OF CHATTELS.—If goods are sold (while mingled with others) by number, weight, or measure, the sale is incomplete, and the title remains in the seller until the bargained property is separated and identified.

IDEM.—A sale of a chattel cannot apply to any article until it is clearly designated, and its identity ascertained.

SALE OF A GIVEN NUMBER OF CATTLE RUNNING IN A LARGER HERD.—A sale of a given number of cattle, then running in a herd of a larger number, is an executory contract, and does not apply to any particular cattle until the number sold have been separated from the herd.

Argument for Appellants.

BILL IN EQUITY TO ENFORCE SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—As a general rule Courts of equity do not enforce the specific performance of contracts for the sale of personal property. When such contracts are enforced by Courts of equity, it is not upon the ground of the insolvency of the defendant, but because the character of the property is so peculiar in itself, or its connection with the complainant's business is such that no adequate damages could be given at law.

IDEM.—A bill in equity will not lie to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of cattle not possessing any especial value, except as merchandise.

ACTION FOR CLAIM AND DELIVERY OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—The action for the "claim and delivery of personal property" under our practice, is at least commensurate with the action of detinue at common law.

BILL OF SALE OF PART OF A HERD OF CATTLE.—A bill of sale of a given number of cattle—part of a herd running on the seller's ranch—giving the purchaser the right to select the number sold and take the same immediately, gives to the purchaser the right, after demand and refusal, to recover possession of the entire herd in an action at law, and then select the number purchased, and return the residue to the seller.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Hoge & Wilson, and William T. Wallace, for Appellant Murphy, and S. O. Houghton, for Appellants Cesar and Liberata Piatti.

This bill is brought to enforce the specific performance of an executory contract, for the sale and purchase of personal property, to wit: five hundred head of cattle, to be selected by the purchaser out of a much larger herd.

It appears upon the face of the bill, and is so found by the referee, that the five hundred head were not, at the time of the alleged contract, and have never been selected or segregated from the main herd of which they were a part. No property or interest whatever in any specific cattle passed, therefore, to Baker, under whom the complainant claims.

The contract is executory. The complaint is based entirely on the complainant's right to a specific performance of that contract as alleged. If this were not so, we should be at a loss to know for what purpose he has sought the aid of a Court of equity. The ordinary remedies at law would afford him, otherwise, all the relief desirable, inasmuch as upon his own showing upon the face of his bill, the property was in the possession of the Piattis at the time of the execution of the contract, and so remained at the commencement of the suit and the rendition of the decree. The whole form and theory of the bill and its prayer, manifest its character and purpose.

That this contract is merely executory, and that no property in any specific cattle passed under it to Baker, (if such a proposition needs authority,) we cite the cases of Crowfoot v. Bennett, 2 Coma. 258; Hutchinson et al. v. Hunter, 7 Barr's Penn. R. 140, and cases there collected; Wood v. McGee, 7 Ohio, 467 (side paging 127); Simmons v. Swift, 5 Barn. & Cress. 857 (11 E. C. L. 712); Story on Sales, pp. 197, 198, and following—271 and following.

We think we may safely assert that no Court of equity has ever decreed the specific performance of an executory contract for the sale of mere personalty, of the nature and description of the one set up in the complaint in this case.

The cases in which Courts of equity decree specific performance of contracts in relation to personal property are very rare and exceptional—and in all of them there were peculiar reasons for the interposition of equity; there was either no mode of getting at the damages in an ordinary action of law, or else the damages when recovered would not afford a complete and adequate remedy. (2 Story's Eq. Jur., Section 717, and following.)

Story, in the section above cited, lays it down that the true foundation of the rule for decreeing specific performance of any contract is, that "damages at law may not in a particular case afford a complete remedy."

The rule is not founded upon the idea that the party may not from the insolvency of the vendor be enabled to collect his judgment for damages, upon the breach of the contract, but that damages themselves when ascertained and collected would not afford a complete remedy; or in other words, because the damages, if ascertainable in a suit at law in the particular case, would from some peculiar quality or character in the thing itself, afford an inadequate remedy.

The general rule undoubtedly is not to entertain jurisdiction in equity for a specific performance of agreements respecting goods, chattels, stock, choses in action, and other things of a merely personal nature.

The exceptions to the rule, according to all authority, are rare and peculiar. The case made in this complaint falls within none of the exceptions. The property in question is stock—live stock—five hundred head of cattle—the value easily and certainly ascertained. Compensation in damages for the breach of such a contract, or for a failure in either party to carry it out, would furnish a complete and satisfactory remedy. To hold such a case as this not to be within the rule would be to obliterate the rule itself with its exceptions.

The only ground for appealing to equity for relief is an alleged inability on the part of the defendant, Cesar Piatti, to respond in damages, and that denied by the defendant Murphy, not proved, and not so found by the referee. This is sometimes a ground for injunction to restrain a trespass, but even then a very doubtful one. The opinion of Chancellor Kent in Watson v. Hunter, 5 John. Ch. R. 172, etc., being the other way.

A Court of equity may very well restrain an irresponsible person, in a case of tort, from committing irreparable injury—from the very destruction of the estate involved. (McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 419.) The doctrine has no application to a case of this character. If a want of pecuniary responsibility in a Court of law were a ground of equity jurisdiction in cases of bills for the specific performance of agreements, it is strange that the text books and adjudged cases are not full of it. The books do not attempt to place the equity jurisdiction in such cases upon any such ground. Indeed, such a doctrine would draw to equity the jurisdiction of all matters of contract, always supposed to belong to the exclusive cognizance of the ordinary Courts of law. The jurisdiction would be measured by and depend upon the solvency or insolvency of the parties, and equitable relief administered or refused accordingly. Even if the law was not clearly otherwise, the allegation in this case is altogether insufficient.

Cook & Hittell, for Respondent.

In regard to whether the contract was executed or not, we cite the case of Clark v. Rush, 19 Cal. 393, which, we think, fully decides the question. McLaughlin's assignor, having been placed in the actual possession of the property, was in a position to select his number from the whole herd; his having left temporarily before making such selection, and being refused permission to re-enter the premises, cannot put him in a worse condition than if he were in the joint possession with the Piattis. The moment he took such possession, it was possession of the entire herd. The Piattis had nothing further to do in the premises; the contract was fully executed on their part. (Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.) The doctrine that no property passes so long as anything remains to be done, does not apply, nor can a case be found making it applicable in a case like the present. The reason for the rule does not exist in this case, and the contract having been thus executed, could not, by the wrongful acts of the Piattis, be exchanged to an executory contract. The facts stated in the complaint in this action are the usual facts stated to procure a partition of personal property, as contradistinguished from a specific performance.

What difference can it make to the appellants' rights that Baker did not segregate the cattle? It is true that his agent was let into joint possession of the main herd; but it does not anywhere appear in the case, as the late opinion would seem to imply, that an offer or opportunity was given him to select the five hundred head, and certainly no offer was ever made to McLaughlin. The truth of the matter is exactly what it would be in any other case where a person is owner of the undivided portion of a chattel, or rather owner of an undivided certain number of a larger number of chattels, and wants a partition. He is entitled to a partition, and the common law is not pliant enough to afford him an adequate remedy. The adverse party in possession is, in a sense, a trustee for him, and he can enforce his equitable rights. (See 3 Parsons on Contracts, Boston, 1864, 364, note t; Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 44; 7 Eng. L. & Eq. 229.)

Campbell, Fox & Campbell, also for Respondent.

The first question to be considered, is — was the contract which is the basis of this action an executory contract? To a limited extent, and perhaps we may say, in a purely technical sense, it was executory. But it seems to us, that in all these points wherein the defendants would have any just or legal right to intervene, it was an executed and not executory contract. It was certainly executed in so far as that the defendants had actually received the entire consideration of the sale made by them to our vendors. All the service which Baker was to render in consideration of the purchase of these cattle, had been rendered. It was executed in so far as that the defendants had deliberately, and in the most solemn manner, complied with all the forms of law in making, executing, and delivering the written evidence of the sale and of the transfer of the title to the property. It was executed in so far as that the defendants had actually delivered to their vendee the possession of the property sold — not the possession in severalty of the five hundred head of cattle, but the joint possession with them of the entire herd from which the five hundred head was to be taken. It was executed in so far as that the defendants, vendors of the property, had nothing further either to receive or to do in the premises. The only act undone, the only thing unexecuted, was the selection and severance of the five hundred head from the balance of the herd, and this was to be done, not by the vendors, nor by the joint action of vendors and vendee, but at the convenience of and by the vendee alone, who had been let into possession for that purpose, and to whom the right had been given to make that selection without let, hindrance, molestation, interruption, assistance, or choice of or from the vendors. Certainly this contract has been so far executed as that it was a perfect and binding sale and transfer of the title to the property.

But even if this contract is in any sense an executory contract, we insist that it is such an one as that its specific performance may properly be enforced by decree in equity, and that the circumstances are such as to give Courts of equity jurisdiction in the premises, and to entitle us to equitable relief. The fundamental principle which underlies the whole doctrine of specific performance is, that where a fair, bona fide contract has been so far executed, that by reason of its partial execution alone, or in conjunction with other changes which have subsequently taken place, the parties cannot be restored to their original condition or circumstances, or that the failure of one party to comply with its condition would operate as a fraud upon the other who was not in default, Courts of equity will interfere and decree a specific performance of the contract. The question as to whether or not the failure would operate as a fraud, enters quite as much into the consideration of the Court in determining the jurisdictional point as does the question whether or not the breach of contract can be compensated in damages. (See Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150, where this subject is discussed at some length.)

By the Court, SHAFTER, J.

This case comes into this Court by an appeal taken by the defendants from a decree of the Fourth District Court, rendered against them and in favor of the complainant.

The complaint sets out that on the 18th day of December, A. D. 1858, the defendants, Cesar Piatti and Liberata Piatti, were and ever since have been, husband and wife; that on that day they, for the consideration of fifteen thousand dollars, duly signed, acknowledged and delivered their bill of sale to E. D. Baker, as follows, viz:

eration of the sum of $15,000 to us in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have granted, bargained and sold to E. D. Baker, to whom we make said acknowledgment of the receipt of said money, five hundred head of cattle, part and parcel of our stock of cattle now running on the Laguna Ranch, in Santa Clara County, to be selected and chosen by him or his agents out of said stock or herd, at his choice, hereby guaranteeing to him the right and possession thereof, and authorizing him to select and take the same immediately, fully and absolutely as of his own right and property.

"On this 18th day of December, A. D. 1858, before me, Thomas Bradley, a Notary Public in and for said county, personally appeared Cesar Piatti and Liberata Piatti, his wife, personally known to me to be the individuals described in and who executed the annexed instrument, as parties thereto, and acknowledged to me that they executed the same freely and voluntarily, and for the uses and purposes therein mentioned; and the said Liberata Piatti, wife of the said Cesar Piatti, having been by me first made acquainted with the contents of said instrument, acknowledged to me, on an examination apart from and without the hearing of her husband, that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, without fear or compulsion, or undue influence of her husband, and that she did not wish to retract the execution of the same.

That by the terms of the bill of sale and as a matter of fact, they then and there sold said cattle to Baker, and he became the owner thereof.

Opinion of the Court.

That on the 20th of August, A. D. 1859, by instrument in writing on the back of the bill of sale, transferred the five hundred head of cattle over to McLaughlin, the complainant, for five thousand dollars, of which instrument the following is a copy:

"For five thousand dollars value received I hereby assign and transfer and sell, and set over to Charles McLaughlin the cattle sold to me in and by the within bill of sale, and authorize him for himself to have, claim and keep the same in full ownership, having all the right of the same vested in me by the above bill of sale, without any recourse on me, on account of said sale or otherwise, which the said McLaughlin hereby accepts.

"August 24, 1859.

That at the time of the bill of sale, the five thousand head were and are now (to wit: at the commencement of this suit) part and parcel of a large herd of cattle of the same kind on Laguna Ranch, and were at the time of sale in possession of defendant, Cesar Piatti, as the separate property of said Liberata, and are now on said ranch occupied by said Liberata and Cesar, and in their possession.

That at the time of the execution of the bill of sale, the said defendants placed Baker in joint possession with them of the main herd, until a division of said main herd could be made, and said Baker could select and segregate said five hundred head; that Baker, by his agent, continued in such joint possession for about five months, when, after a temporary absence at San Francisco, said agent on returning was refused possession by the said defendants; that there has never been a segregation of said five hundred head from said main herd.

That at the time of the bill of sale, and since, the main herd was, and has been the separate property of the said Liberata, derived by her as a portion of the estate of a former husband, one Fisher, now deceased; that said defendant, Murphy, claims to be the owner of said five hundred head, by some pretended sale from said Liberata, but that the same is fraudulent and void; that said Murphy never paid anything for such pretended interest, but that it was a sham sale, made to hinder, delay and defraud creditors.

That the common property of Cesar and Liberata, and the separate property of Cesar, without the property in question, is insufficient to satisfy complainant's demands for damages, in case he cannot obtain a division of said main herd, and the delivery of said five hundred head, under the terms of the bill of sale and assignment; and that if complainant cannot obtain such division and delivery as aforesaid, he will suffer irreparable injury by reason of inability of defendant, Cesar, to respond in damages for breach of warranty in said bill of sale, and the non-liability of the said Liberata on the warranty, she being a married woman.

That, on refusing Baker's agent to re-enter into the joint possession as aforesaid, the said defendants have conspired and confederated to cheat and defraud the complainant, under pretense of said fraudulent sale to Murphy, out of said five hundred head of cattle and the equivalent thereof in damages; and that since the execution of the bill of sale, as complainant is informed, said defendants have sold about three hundred head of said herd, without the knowledge or consent of Baker or of complainant, and are endeavoring to and will sell the balance of the herd to innocent purchasers, etc.; that said ranch being in an isolated location and sparsely settled district, the said main herd may be easily driven off and sold to innocent purchasers during the pendency of this action, unless a receiver be appointed by the Court to take charge of such five hundred head, as may be selected and chosen by the complainant, and the defendants be restrained in the meantime from selling or otherwise disposing of said main herd of cattle; that at the time of bill of sale, and now, said five hundred head were and are worth fifteen thousand dollars; that on the 3d day of September, 1859, complainant demanded of Cesar and Liberata said five hundred head of cattle, as per terms of the bill of sale, they knowing of his ownership, and they refused and still refuse to deliver the same, and deny complainant's right to any portion of the same, although there were then and now are over one thousand head of stock on hand, out of which Baker had a right to select, and the same now remain on said ranch in the possession of said Cesar and Liberata; that Baker and the complainant have fully kept and performed the agreement on their part, and the said defendants Cesar and Liberata have wholly disregarded their covenants and agreements, etc.

That complainant is remediless, and can only be protected by the equitable interposition of the Court, etc. The complainant therefore prays that the main herd may be divided by the decree of the Court, and that he be adjudged to be the owner and entitled to the possession of five hundred head of cattle of said large herd on said ranch, to be selected and chosen by the complainant out of said main herd, and that said Liberata and Cesar be adjudged and decreed to specifically perform all and singular their covenants and stipulations as specified in said bill of sale, and for a receiver to take charge of five hundred head to be selected and chosen by the complainant, and in the meantime for an injunction, etc.; and that the Court decree the complainant to be entitled to and that the receiver deliver over to him such five hundred head of cattle, and that the injunction be made perpetual, and for such other relief, etc.; and also that the Court decree that the pretended sale to the defendant Murphy was fraudulent and void, and was intended to hinder and delay the creditors of the other defendants and to defraud this plaintiff, and that said Murphy has no interest in or to said stock.

Upon this bill and in pursuance of the prayer, a receiver was appointed, etc., and injunction issued, etc. The defendant Murphy demurred to the bill on the following grounds, viz:

"1. That this Court, as a Court of equity, has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action.

"2. That there is a defect of parties defendant; that is, in uniting the defendant with the defendants Piattis in an action for a specific performance of an agreement between the plaintiff and said Piattis, to which the defendant (Murphy) was not a party.

"8. That the plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue this defendant to set aside the alleged fraudulent sale and conveyance to this defendant referred to in the complaint, because said plaintiff is a subsequent purchaser with notice, and because he is not a judgment creditor of said Piattis, or of either of them.

"4. That several causes of action have been improperly united, viz: a specific performance upon an executory agreement between said plaintiff and said Piattis, and to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance to this defendant.

"5. Because said complaint is multifarious, and unites separate and distinct grievances against separate and distinct persons.

"6. That the said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against any of said defendants.

"7. That said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant, either separately or jointly with said Piattis, or either of them."

The demurrer having been overruled, the defendants answered separately. The case went to a referee and on his special report of the facts judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

There is a diversity of questions raised by the record, all of which have been fully and learnedly discussed by the counsel of the respective parties, but the only points which we find it necessary to determine in order to dispose of the appeal upon its merits, are the following:

First—In our judgment the contract set up in the complaint was executory at the commencement of the action; that is to say, the plaintiff at that time had not, as the assignee of Baker, become the owner in severalty of any part of the herd of cattle mentioned in the bill of sale. It is a fundamental principle pervading everywhere the doctrine of the sales of chattels, that if goods be sold (while mingled with others) by number, weight, or measure, the sale is incomplete, and the title continues with the seller until the bargained property is separated and identified. The reason is that the sale cannot apply to any article until it is clearly designated and its identity ascertained. In the case under consideration, it could not be said with certainty that any particular five hundred head of cattle belonged to Baker or the plaintiff as his assignee, until a severance of that number from the herd from which they were to be taken. If a part of that herd had died, five hundred head surviving, the loss would neither in whole nor in part have fallen upon Baker. (Hutchinson v. Hunter, 7 Barr, 140; Woods v. McGee, 1 Ohio, 466; Crowfoot v. Burnett, 2 Comst. 258; Story on Sales, Sec. 296; Horr v. Baker, 6 Cal. 489—8 Cal. 603; Adams v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 68.) These principles are so well settled that no beneficial purpose would be subserved were we to pursue the discussion further.

Second—As a general rule, a bill in equity does not lie to enforce the specific performance of a sale of personal property. There are exceptions to the rule, but the case made by the plaintiff is not within them. The equitable jurisdiction to enforce specific performance in this class of contracts is not based either in whole or in part upon the accident of insolvency, but upon the general principle or truth that in the excepted cases there can be no adequate compensation in damages at law, the solvency of the defendant being given. This consequence sometimes results from the fact that the thing bargained for is of unusual distinction or curiosity, or from the fact that the commodities sold or contracted for are so related to the situation or to the business arrangements of the purchaser that non-fulfilment would greatly embarrass and impede him in his plans and prospects—threatening or involving a loss of profits which a jury could not correctly estimate; or to cases where the contract is not to be presently executed, and the like. (Taylor v. Neville, cited in 3 Atk. 384; Adderly v. Dixon, 1 Sim. and Stu. 610; 1 Sto. Eq. Juris., Sec. 718.)

In this case the contract was to be, or at least might have been, executed by Baker immediately after it was concluded upon; and he furthermore had an opportunity to exercise his right of selection and segregation at the time when he was let into joint possession of the herd with the vendor. The cattle were without special value, in themselves considered, nor does it appear that if they had been segregated by Baker and taken into possession that they would or could have been put to any other than the most common uses. On the face of the complaint, as well as on the face of the referee's report, the cattle bargained for were in no manner distinguishable from merchandise at large. (Buxton v. Lister, 3 Atk: 382.) To uphold the judgment appealed from would therefore not only be in contravention of all the cases, but in subversion of the principles upon which the equity jurisdiction is founded.

Third — But while it is insisted on behalf of the respondent that, if the contract be as yet unexecuted, its full execution can be compelled in this proceeding, yet the chosen position of counsel is that the complaint discloses a contract fully executed — nothing remaining to be done either by vendors or vendee in order to vest a title in the latter to a band of five hundred head, distinguished and separate from the larger herd to which they originally belonged. As has been stated already, we do not consider that the complaint carries the contract which it sets forth, to that pitch in the matter of execution; and it results that in our opinion the complaint can be made to take on no other aspect than that of a bill brought to compel the specific performance of a contract for the sale of personal property, all the terms of which contract have not as yet been fulfilled — and here the jurisdictional obstacle, previously named, is encountered. But on the facts of this case, the plaintiff had a speedy and perfect remedy at law. The plaintiff, as the assignee of Baker, had the right to the immediate possession of the whole herd for the purpose of making a selection of his five hundred head. In pursuance of that right the defendants were requested to deliver the whole herd to the plaintiff, but refused so to do. We have here all the grounds upon which the action of detinue has been familiarly planted for ages. In that form of remedy the plaintiff could have recovered possession of the whole herd—selected his five hundred head from it and returned the residue of the cattle to the Piattis. Our action for the “claim and delivery of personal property,” considered as a remedy, is at least, commensurate with the action of detinue at common law. But if the plaintiff could not have availed himself of this remedy, and whether he could or not we have no occasion to decide, yet it is beyond controversy, that he could have maintained an action upon the contract for the recovery of damages, which relief would have been “adequate and complete” in the fulness of the meaning borne by those terms in equity law.

The view we have taken of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the other questions discussed by counsel.

The judgment is reversed and the Court below is directed to enter judgment in favor of the defendants.

Mr. Justice SAWYER expressed no opinion.

SOLANO COUNTY v. JOHN M. NEVILLE.

ACTION IN NAME OF COUNTY.—An action may be brought in the name of a county to recover money belonging to the General Fund of the county.

COMPENSATION OF TAX COLLECTORS.—The Legislature has the power to enact a law directing the Collector of Taxes for a county to pay one half of the compensation allowed him by law for the collection of the same into the County Treasury for the benefit of the General Fund.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The following is the complaint to which defendant demurred:

“Solano County, plaintiff, by J. C. Hinckley, District Attorney, complains of John M. Neville, defendant, and for cause of action alleges that the said defendant, being Sheriff, and ex officio Tax Collector of Solano County, between the 17th day of August and the 16th day of November, A. D. 1863, collected a large amount of public revenue and taxes on property, to wit: the sum of $86,578 87, and during the time aforesaid collected and received a percentage thereon, allowed by law as compensation for the collection of property tax, such percentage amounting to the sum of $2,631 57.

"Plaintiff further shows that, by an Act of the Legislature of this State, entitled 'An Act to regulate the fees of certain officers in Solano County,' approved April 6, 1863, it was made the duty of said defendant, Sheriff and ex officio Tax Collector as aforesaid, to pay into the County Treasury of said county, for the benefit of the General Fund thereof, fifty per cent of the aforesaid compensation allowed by law for the collection of property tax, to wit, the sum of $1,315 78½, and that no portion of said sum has been paid into said County Treasury, but that the whole thereof, by virtue of the Act aforesaid, is due and payable from the defendant to the plaintiff.

"Nevertheless, the said defendant, although often requested, has hitherto wholly neglected and refused to pay the same, or any portion thereof.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant for said sum of $1,315 78½, with the costs, fees and charges allowed by law.

"J. O. HINCKLEY,

"District Attorney Solano County."

Judgment was rendered for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed from the order sustaining the demurrer.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Swan & Hays, also for Appellant.

We beg leave to submit that the complaint contains "a statement of facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language," as required by the second subdivision of the thirty-ninth section of the Practice Act. That there is nothing uncertain, ambiguous, or unintelligible in the complaint.

"It is only necessary that the cause of indebtedness should be stated in such a manner as to apprise the defendant of the object of the suit." (Milliken v. Murray, 5 Cal. 245.)

We do not think it can be contended with any degree of earnestness that this complaint is deficient in any of the grounds named in the fourth ground of demurrer.

A writ of mandate would be a novel proceeding to recover money due, and we think there can be nothing in the point that no demand had been made of the defendant to pay the money over, because the law under which the suit is brought makes it the duty of the defendant to pay the money into the County Treasury.

As to the third ground of demurrer, "That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action;" assuming that the other grounds of demurrer are not well taken, we rely upon the law under which this suit is brought, and the facts as stated in the complaint, as showing a good cause of action.

The seventh section of the "Act to regulate the fees of certain officers in Solano County," reads as follows, to wit: "The Tax Collector shall receive the fees and compensation now allowed by law; but fifty per cent of the compensation allowed for the collection of property tax shall be paid by him into the County Treasury, for the benefit of the General Fund." Approved March 6, 1863. (Statutes of 1863, page 193.)

It will be observed that whilst the law does state that the Tax Collector shall receive the fees and compensation now allowed by law, it does not state that he shall be allowed that compensation; and it will also be observed that the law does not say that fifty per cent of his compensation for collection, etc., shall be paid into the Treasury, etc., but says the compensation allowed, etc., shall be paid into the Treasury, etc.

Whitman & Wells, for Respondent.

We demur to the complaint, alleging: First — That the plaintiff, Solano County, hath not the legal capacity to sue, because the amount is given to a particular fund, to wit, the General Fund of the county. The Treasurer of the county is the legal custodian of that fund, and he alone can sue for moneys due it; or if the Board of Supervisors might maintain the action, the County of Solano, in its corporate capacity, is not empowered to bring the suit. (Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290.)

Nor is the County of Solano the real party in interest. The General Fund of the county is in the charge of the Treasurer, and is pledged in his hands for the debts that have been audited and allowed thereon. The holders of these debts, then, are the real parties in interest, and the Treasurer, as the trustee of an express statutory trust, is the person who should bring the suit.

But the more formidable objection is based upon the express provisions of the Act. Distinctly affirming, as it does, that the Tax Collector shall receive the fees allowed by law, it proceeds to enact that he shall pay them over to the General Fund, precisely as if it had stated that A. shall be entitled to recover all debts due him by the means now allowed by law, but that he shall pay fifty per cent of all debts received by him into a certain bank for the use of B.

It is objectionable, as taking the property of the Tax Collector and giving it to another. It directs his statutory rights, not on behalf of or for the benefit of the State, but of a stranger.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover the one half of the fees allowed by law, as the percentage for the collection of the property tax in Solano County, which was received by him as Tax Collector, between the 17th of August and the 16th of November, 1863. The defendant demurred to the complaint and his demurrer was sustained.

The first ground of demurrer now urged by the defendant is, that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. This is answered by the Act of May 11, 1854 (Wood's Dig. 249), which provides that "suits brought for or against a county, shall be by or in the name of such county." The General Fund belongs to the county, and neither the Treasurer nor the Board of Commissioners can sue to recover moneys that are required by law to be paid into that fund, for neither they nor the creditors of the county have a direct interest in the fund.

The ground mainly relied on is that the Act of 1863 "is objectionable as taking the property of the Tax Collector and giving it to another." It is provided by section seven of the Act to regulate the fees of certain officers in Solano County (Stats. 1863, p. 193), that "the Tax Collector shall receive the fees and compensation now allowed by law; but fifty per cent of the compensation allowed for the collection of property tax shall be paid by him into the County Treasury for the benefit of the General Fund."

It is not surprising that the appellant finds it difficult to construct an argument in answer to the respondent's proposition, for when it is said that the whole matter of fees and compensation for the collection of taxes is subject to the control of the Legislature, and that by the section of the Act cited, the Tax Collector is entitled to retain for his services only one half of the compensation allowed by the general Revenue Act, and is required to pay into the General Fund of the county the remaining half, the argument is exhausted.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendant to answer the complaint according to the rules of said Court.

Statement of Facts.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. J. W. DICKENSON v. E. M. BANVARD.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL FROM A JUDGMENT.—A party who appeals from a judgment or an order, with a statement annexed to the judgment roll, must specify particularly in his statement the grounds upon which he intends to rely on the appeal.

MOTION FOR NONSUIT.—A party moving for a nonsuit should state in his motion precisely the grounds upon which he relies, so that the attention of the Court and the opposite counsel may be particularly directed to the supposed defects in the plaintiff's case.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE OVER OFFICES.—The incumbent of an administrative office, created by the Legislature, may be legislated out of office pending the term for which he was elected.

JUDGMENT IN QUO WARRANTO.—In an action of quo warranto to determine the right to an office, where the relator claims the office as against the incumbent, the Court may not only determine the right of the defendant, but of the relator also; and if it determines in favor of the relator, may render judgment that the defendant forthwith deliver up to the relator the office.

APPEAL FROM A JUDGMENT.—On an appeal from a judgment, the appellate Court cannot consider the question whether the findings of fact are justified by the evidence.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The defendant was elected Treasurer of the County of Placer, at the general election in 1862, and afterwards qualified and entered upon the discharge of its duties.

By the law, as it then stood, his term commenced on the first Monday in December, 1862, and extended to the first Monday in March, 1865. By the Act of 1863, (see Laws of 1863, p. 387, Sec. 11,) it was provided that all county officers in every county of this State shall be elected at the general election in 1863, and of every second year thereafter, and shall hold their offices for the term of two years from and after the first Monday of March subsequent to their election.

At the general election held in September, 1863, defendant and relator were candidates for the office of Treasurer of Placer County, and relator received a majority of the votes and the certificate of election. The defendant refused to surrender up the office on the first Monday in March, 1864, and this action was commenced to try the right to the office.

Statement of Facts.

The Court found the following facts:

"At the general election in 1862, defendant was duly elected to the office of County Treasurer of said county for the ensuing term, which, as the law then stood, was for two years and three months from the first Monday in December, 1862.

"He duly qualified and entered upon the office at the commencement of the said term, and has held it ever since.

"The term under the law of 1862, if the same were now in force, would of course not expire until March, 1865.

"In 1863, under the recent amendments of the State Constitution, the Legislature passed an Act providing that all county officers throughout the State, including Treasurer, should be elected at the general election in said year, (1863,) that their terms should commence on the first Monday in March, 1864, and continue for two years; and repealing all former statutes conflicting with said Act. Under this latter Act, the relator, Dickenson, at the general election in 1863, was duly elected County Treasurer of said county. He received his certificate of election, took the oath, filed his official bond, and did all the acts necessary and required by law, in order to entitle him to enter upon the office. At the commencement of his term, on the first Monday of March, 1864, he demanded the office of the defendant, who refused to deliver it to him, but continues to hold it himself."

Upon these facts the Court rendered the following judgment:

"Wherefore, it is considered and adjudged that the said relator, J. W. Dickenson, is the lawfully elected and duly qualified Treasurer of said Placer County, and is entitled to use, hold, and exercise the said office, and perform the duties thereof, and to receive the emoluments thereof for two years, commencing with the 1st day of March, A. D. 1864, and that the defendant, E. M. Banvard, is guilty of usurping, holding, using, and executing the same, performing the duties and receiving the emoluments thereof unlawfully.

"And it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the said defendant, E. M. Banvard, be and he is hereby excluded from the said office of Treasurer of said Placer County, and from exercising any of the duties pertaining thereto; and that he, the said defendant, do forthwith yield and deliver up to the said relator, J. W. Dickenson, the said office of Treasurer of said Placer County, and all of the books, papers, keys, furniture, property, rooms, documents, moneys, records, belonging or pertaining to the said office or the business thereof, and all and everything or things of whatsoever name or nature which may belong to the said office or the business thereof; and that the said relator have and recover of the said defendant, E. M. Banvard, his costs and expenses herein, taxed, at twenty-seven dollars and sixty cents, and that execution issue therefor."

The defendant appealed from the judgment, and annexed a statement of the evidence, exceptions, etc., to the judgment roll.

After the relator had closed his evidence and rested, defendant moved the Court for a nonsuit, without assigning in his motion the grounds on which he claimed it.

Defendant claimed as one reason for holding over, that relator's bond was insufficient, and on the defense offered two witnesses to prove that before relator filed his bond they told him it was insufficient, and did not comply with the statute.

Jo Hamilton, for Appellant.

The Act of 1863, eleventh section, meant nothing more than this: In the counties of the State a general election should be held in 1863, for State and county officers. The county officers elected to take office on the first Monday of March subsequent to their election. But in Placer County, which had elected its county officers under a special Act, and who had elected until the 1st of March, 1865, the law, while it gave to the officers elect the right to take office on the first Monday of March, 1864, did not oust the old officers, and if the election of county officers in Placer was valid at all under the Act of 1863, it gave to those officers elected no present right of office, because there was no vacancy in office; and at most, as two incumbents could not exercise the right of office at the same time, the persons elected in 1863 could not enter until the expiration of the term of those elected in 1862.

This is a reasonable construction of the Act of 1863, in its true meaning and intent. If it meant anything else, it was easy to have said the terms of officers elected in 1862 should close on the first Monday of March, 1864. But instead of so saying, it is wholly silent, leaving them undisturbed in the offices. Before any other construction could be put upon the law of 1863, we are forced to the conclusion that the Legislature intended to do and did do an unjust thing; for by no rule of fairness or justice could a whole year be taken from the term. By putting this construction upon the Act of 1863, it leaves the whole of the Act fairly and clearly intelligible.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Respondent.

The findings of the Court stand in the place of the verdict of a jury. (Wheeler v. Hays, 3 Cal. 285.)

In Gagliardo v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 395, the defendant brought up all the testimony, but made no motion for a new trial. The Court say: "In this case, no motion having been made for a new trial, the findings of the Court are conclusive as to the facts. * * * In the absence of such an application, the conclusions of fact must be deemed to have been properly drawn, and the matter cannot be regarded as open to investigation on appeal."

In Deputy v. Stapleford et al., 19 Cal. 302, the same doctrine is affirmed.

In Nelson & Nobell v. Highland, 13 Cal. 73, the Court say: "No motion for a new trial having been made in this case, the finding of facts by the Court below is conclusive, and as this finding fully sustains the judgment, it is affirmed." (See Leining v. Gould, 13 Cal. 598.)

This rule has been applied to both legal and equitable actions. Mr. Justice Field, in Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 380, says: "In this State the statute provides the manner in which the verdict of a jury, upon an issue submitted to its decision, may be reviewed—it is only by motion for a new trial."

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an information filed by the Attorney-General on the relation of Dickenson, alleging that the defendant has usurped the office of Treasurer of Placer County, and that the office of right belongs to the relator. The appeal is from the judgment. We shall consider the errors alleged, in the order in which they are set down in the statement.

First—"The Court erred in refusing respondent's motion for a nonsuit." By the three hundred and thirty-eighth section of the Practice Act, a party who appeals from a judgment or order, with a statement annexed, is required "to state specifically the particulars or grounds upon which he intends to rely on appeal." This rule has not been complied with by the appellant, nor did he in his motions for a nonsuit disclose the grounds of it in the Court below. Most, if not all, the considerations upon which it has been held that a party, objecting to the introduction of testimony, should state precisely the grounds of his objection, are equally applicable to show, when a nonsuit is moved for at the trial, that the attention of the Court and of opposite counsel, should be particularly directed to the supposed defects in the plaintiff's case. We not only understand such to be the rule, but consider its observance a matter of much practical consequence. (Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221; Kiler v. Kimball, 10 Cal. 268; McGarity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 429.)

Second—"The Court erred in refusing the testimony of Fellows and Spear." The respondent "offered to prove by each of these that each informed the relator, before the filing of his official bond, that the same was insufficient and did not comply with the statute and order of the Board of Supervisors." The testimony was objected to, and was excluded by the Court on the ground of irrelevancy. There was no error in this ruling. Assuming that the relator's bond was insufficient, the fact itself might be material; but any representations by third persons upon that subject, though made to the relator, would be immaterial.

Third — "The judgment of the Court was against law." There is but one question which, under the findings of the Court, we are at liberty to consider as within the purview of this objection; and that is, whether the Legislature has power to shorten the term for which a County Treasurer is elected — or more largely stated, whether an incumbent of an administrative office created by the Legislature, can be legislated out of office pending the term for which he was elected? The question is not an open one. It was met and decided in People ex rel. Attorney-General v. Squires, 14 Cal. 12.

Fourth — "The Court erred in ordering respondent to immediately vacate said office." By the three hundred and twelfth section of the Practice Act, the Court was authorized, not only to determine the right of the defendant, but to determine the right of the relator also; and, on the facts found, there can be no doubt that the judgment was correct on the point covered by the objection.

Fifth — "The testimony does not warrant either the findings or the judgment of the Court." It is inexact to say that a judgment is not warranted by the evidence. It may not be warranted by the pleadings, or the verdict, or the findings; and on demurrer to the evidence, or on motion for nonsuit properly made, it may be said that a judgment, entered for the plaintiff, is not warranted by the facts which the evidence tended to prove. The only point raised, then, by the objection now under consideration, is, whether the findings are justified by the evidence, and that question cannot be gone into under an appeal from the judgment. The testimony can only be reviewed on motion for new trial. (Gagliardo v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 395; Deputy v. Stapleford, 19 Cal. 302; Allen v. Fennon, ante 68.)

Judgment affirmed.

Statement of Facts.

ADELIA HILL v. J. M. SMITH.

FORM OF DENIAL IN ANSWER.—If an answer, in response to an allegation of the complaint, instead of denying it, in express terms, contains the averment that the defendant did not commit the act charged, or that the fact alleged to exist does not exist, these averments of the answer traverse the matters alleged, and are good denials of the same.

PROOF OF MINING FOR GOLD.—Evidence that a party is at work on a claim, and is mining, and is at work with tools commonly used by miners, is sufficient to justify a jury in finding that he is mining for gold, without any proof that he has found any gold in the claim.

MINING ABOVE THE HEAD OF A DITCH.—Where a ditch has been excavated from the bed of a stream, and its water has been diverted through the same for mining purposes, a miner has no right to work a claim located above its head after the ditch is dug, in such manner as to mingle mud and sediment with the water, and injure its value to the ditch owner for mining purposes, or to fill up the ditch and reservoirs with the same so as to lessen their capacity and increase the expense of cleaning them out.

SAME.—The fact that a miner, working a claim above the head of a ditch, conducts his mining operations in such a manner as to cause the least possible injury to the ditch and water flowing in the same, does not excuse his responsibility for injuries caused by working the same. It matters not how cautiously or carefully the miner works, for if the ditch owner is in fact injured, the miner is none the less liable.

USE OF WATER FOR MINING.—As between ditch owners and miners using the waters of a stream in the mineral region for mining purposes, the law does not tolerate any injury by one to the prior rights of the other.

COMMON LAW.—The reasons which constitute the groundwork of the rules of the common law touching water rights have not lost their governing force in the mineral regions of this State. The conditions to which we are called upon to apply those rules are changed rather than the rules themselves.

PRIOR AND SUBSEQUENT APPROPRIATORS OF WATER.—In controversies in the mining regions between the prior and subsequent appropriators of water, the question to be determined is, has the use and enjoyment of the water, for the purposes for which the first appropriator claims it, been impaired by the acts of the subsequent claimant?

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

This action was commenced May 26th, 1863. The complaint averred the excavation of a ditch for the conveyance of water for mining purposes from Indian Cañon to Iowa Hill, by plaintiff's grantor, in 1852, and the continuous use of the water of the cañon in the ditch from that time up to the commencement of the suit; and that at the time the ditch was dug the water flowed down in a clear state, without any mixture of mud or sediment, and so remained until the acts of defendant complained of; and that the water, when in a clear condition, was more valuable and profitable to plaintiff for sale for mining purposes than when mixed with mud and sediment. That the defendant had been engaged for four weeks in digging up the bed of the cañon at points from six hundred to one thousand feet above the head of the ditch, and washing down the earth with the water into the ditch, thereby mixing the earth, mud, and sediment with the water, so that the same settled in the bottom of the ditch and reservoirs, and lessened their capacity and increased the expense of cleaning the same. That the miners who purchased the water from plaintiff, used the same through hose, and that when it was loaded with mud it destroyed their hose, etc., and that plaintiff's sales of water had been injured thereby.

The complaint prayed for judgment for damages, and for an injunction.

The answer did not deny in express language the allegations of the complaint, but in answer thereto stated that the waters of Indian Cañon had not flowed down in a clear state, and that defendant had not washed any earth into plaintiff's ditch, etc.

The defendant, on the trial, proved that he had located a claim above the head of the ditch a short time before the suit was commenced, and was engaged in working the same, but introduced no evidence to show that he had found any gold there. The evidence showed that the bed of the cañon above the head of the ditch was about one hundred feet in width, and that the earth was from three to four feet in depth, and that the defendant used the water of the cañon to work his claim, and that after the water left the claim it flowed into the ditch.

The Court gave the following instructions to the jury, to which plaintiff excepted.

"It is very difficult to state with exactness the rights of a ditch owner as against miners who subsequently locate claims on the same stream above the head of the ditch.

Statement of Facts.

Our Courts have endeavored to adopt those rules in relation to the subject which will allow, as far as possible, both these classes of location upon the public domain to enjoy their property. Of course, if the first locator of a water ditch upon a clear stream was held to be entitled to the continuous use of the water in a pure state, then large regions of rich mining country would be kept from settlement and development. On the other hand, if miners were allowed to locate claims immediately above the heads of ditches, and to mine there to the same extent and with the same rights as elsewhere, then large ditches, costing thousands of dollars, would be unjustly at the mercy of every adventurer.

"The rule in such cases, so far as any can be definitely stated, is this: The subsequent locators of mining claims on a stream above a ditch, which diverts water for sale to miners, have no right to work their claims, or run their tailings in such a manner as either to entirely obstruct the flow of water into the ditch, or to obstruct it to any considerable extent, or to diminish the quantity of water belonging to the ditch, or to so deteriorate the quality of the water as to render it unfit for mining purposes, or to so fill up the ditch with sediment as to materially lessen its value; but the mere fact that their mining operations muddy the water, rendering it less valuable, though not unfit for mining purposes, or deposit sediment in the ditch to only such an extent as may be easily removed, without great cost, does not render them liable in an action like the one at bar.

"If, therefore, in this case you believe from the evidence that defendant is the bona fide owner of mining claims on the stream above the head of plaintiff's ditch, that he worked his claims in a reasonable manner, using all due precaution to prevent injury to the ditch; that the effect of his mining was only to muddy the water, but not to diminish its quantity, or to materially injure the ditch or the water, then defendant is not liable. But if you believe defendant's mining operations seriously obstructed the flow of water into plaintiff's ditch, or diminished the quantity of water flowing into it, or in any manner materially injured the ditch or the water, then you should find for plaintiff, giving her nominal damages, of course, and such actual damages not exceeding three hundred dollars, as you believe from the evidence she sustained."

The defendant recovered judgment, and the plaintiff appealed from an order denying a new trial and from the judgment.

The objection to the form in which many of the allegations contained in the complaint are denied is not a substantial one, in our judgment. Any form of denial which fairly meets and traverses the allegation is admissible. Suppose it is alleged in a complaint that the defendant at a certain time made and delivered to the plaintiff his certain promissory note, etc. Is not this allegation as directly and fairly traversed by saying: "I did not at the time specified, or at any other time, make or deliver to the plaintiff the note described in the complaint," as by saying: "I deny that on the day specified, or at any other time, I made or delivered to the plaintiff the note described in the complaint?" We think both serve equally well to form the issue. The former mode (which is the one adopted in this case) is less usual than the latter, but we are unable to perceive why it is not equally as good. It matters but little which form is adopted. If the denial is not evasive, but directly traverses the matter alleged, it is good, without regard to the mere form in which it is expressed. The denials in this case do not appear to be evasive, but on the contrary, we think they fairly meet the issues tendered by the complaint.

We are also of the opinion that there is nothing in the point made by counsel for appellant to the effect that the matter set out in the answer by way of excuse or justification is unsupported by the evidence. Assuming that the jury must have determined at the threshold of their investigations that the digging by the defendant of which the plaintiff complained was done by him in good faith, in pursuit of gold, we think the evidence upon that point, in the absence of any counter testimony, was sufficient to sustain their finding. All the witnesses, including the plaintiff's, speak of the defendant's "claim," and of his labor as "mining." They also speak of his "sluice-boxes," "wing-dam," mode of "working claim" and "depositing tailings," all of which are familiar terms in the vocabulary of the miner, and would hardly have been employed by the witnesses had not the defendant been engaged in mining. From these circumstances, and in the absence of all counter testimony, the jury were justified in finding that the defendant was engaged in mining for gold. If they erred at all, it was not in so finding the fact, but in attaching to it, when found, too much importance, and regarding it as a justification on the part of the defendant, as they seem to have done, for whatever injuries he may have caused the plaintiff by his mining operations. And this brings us to the principal and most difficult question involved in this case.

After a careful examination of the evidence, we are impressed with the conviction that the plaintiff ought to have recovered. And we can only account for the verdict upon the hypothesis that the jury misapprehended the law of the case. The plaintiff's prior right is unquestioned. That the defendant's work caused large quantities of rubbish and sediment to be deposited in plaintiff's reservoir and ditches, thereby lessening their capacity and entailing upon her additional expense in cleaning them out and maintaining their original capacity, hardly admits of debate. And it is very clear from the evidence that the value of the water for mining purposes, by reason of the mud and sediment mixed with it by the defendant's mining operations was diminished by from one fourth to one half. It appears that the plaintiff's ditch supplied water to hydraulic claims which require water, as was clearly shown, in a purer state than claims worked by the sluicing process or method, in order to work them successfully. Where she had previously sold only sixty inches of water she was compelled to sell a hundred and a hundred and twenty at the same price in consequence of the deterioration of its solvent capacity by reason of the sediment and mud from defendant's claim. It further appears that on one or two occasions the miners, or some of them, who purchased water from the plaintiff, quit work entirely, because the water was so thick with sediment that it could not be used with any reasonable success in hydraulic mining. To say that such injuries are immaterial and therefore constitute no cause of action is to trifle with the prior rights of the plaintiff and misrepresent the law. There seems to have been a successful effort made on the part of the defense to prove that the defendant had studiously conducted his mining operations in such a manner as to cause the least possible injury to the water rights of the plaintiff. It is probable that the jury supposed that, having thus worked, the defendant was not responsible for injuries unavoidably resulting from his work upon the vague notion that everybody has a right to mine at such points as he may choose, provided he causes as little injury to others as is possible under all the circumstances. Such is the only theory upon which we can account for the verdict. Some stress was placed upon this testimony by the Judge, and while we think it was not intentional, the general and abstract terms in which the instructions of the Court were couched were, to a certain extent, as it appears to us, calculated to convey to the jury the idea that such was the law of the case. How cautiously or carefully the defendant worked was a matter of no consequence, for if his work in fact injured the plaintiff, he was none the less liable to an action. Moreover, the entire charge impliedly if not expressly proceeds upon and sanctions the idea that as between ditch owners and miners using the water of a stream in the mineral regions of the State for mining purposes, the law tolerates and winks at some uncertain and indeterminate amount of injury by the one to the prior rights of the other. This is due in a great measure doubtless to the notion, which has become quite prevalent, that the rules of the common law touching water rights have been materially modified in this State upon the theory that they were inapplicable to the conditions found to exist here, and therefore inadequate to a just and fair determination of controversies touching such rights. This notion is without any substantial foundation. The reasons which constitute the groundwork of the common law upon this subject remain undisturbed. The conditions to which we are called upon to apply them are changed, and not the rules themselves. The maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, upon which they are grounded, has lost none of its governing force; on the contrary it remains now, and in the mining regions of this State, as operative a test of the lawful use of water as at any time in the past, or in any other country. When the law declares that a riparian proprietor is entitled to have the water of a stream flow in its natural channel — ubi currere solebat — without diminution or alteration, it does so because its flow imparts fertility to his land, and because water in its pure state is indispensable for domestic uses. But this rule is not applicable to miners and ditch owners, simply because the conditions upon which it is founded do not exist in their case. They seek the water for a particular purpose, which is not only compatible with its diversion from its natural channel, but more frequently necessitates such diversion, and moreover does not require the water in a pure state in order to insure its reasonable and beneficial use. Yet the maxim above mentioned upon which the rule is founded is equally as applicable to the ditch owner, and to the miner as to the riparian proprietor, and neither can so use the water as to injure or prejudice the prior rights to a like use by the other. This maxim is one which every riparian proprietor is bound to respect, and it is no less obligatory upon those who use and divert water for mining purposes. So that in all controversies like the present the question to be determined after all is the same as that presented by a like controversy between riparian proprietors, to wit: has the plaintiff's use and enjoyment of the water for the purposes for which he claims its use been impaired by the acts of the defendant? This is purely a question of fact for the jury, and all the law applicable to it is found, as stated by the learned counsel for appellants in the case of the Phoenix Water Company v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 483, embraced in the three following maxims: Qui prior est in tempore, potior est in jure; Ubi jus, ibi remedium; Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, and beyond these principles they do not require to be instructed. What diminution in quantity or what deterioration in quality will injuriously affect the use of the water by the plaintiff may be safely left to the determination of the jury, guided only by the foregoing maxims. It may be that a slight diminution or deterioration will impair his use of the water, and it may be that such use would not be impaired by a very considerable reduction in quantity or quality. The question must be determined in view of the use to which the water is applied and the other circumstances developed by the testimony.

ENTRY ON INCLOSED PUBLIC LAND TO PRE-EMPT.—If the defendant in an action to recover the possession of land, justifies his entry upon the prior possession of the plaintiff on the ground that the land was public land, subject to the pre-emption laws of the United States, and that he entered in pursuance of said laws, with intent to pre-empt, occupy, and enter the land in accordance with the provisions of the same, it devolves on him to show that he is one of the persons entitled to the benefit of said laws.

time between March 3d, 1863, and October 15th, 1864, was of no effect. The Act of March 3d, 1863, withdrew said land from the operation of the pre-emption laws until October 15th, 1864.

WHAT PRE-EMPTIONER MUST PROVE.—One claiming to hold public lands as a pre-emptor, as against a prior possessor, must show that he is one of the class of persons entitled to pre-empt, and that he has performed the acts prescribed by the pre-emption laws, or the prior possession will prevail.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

Vallejo claimed the Suscol Rancho under a grant from the Mexican Nation. The Supreme Court of the United States rejected the grant in 1862. The plaintiff had purchased from Vallejo the land in dispute, which was a portion of the so-called Suscol Rancho, a long time prior to the rejection of the grant, and had entered into possession and inclosed the same.

In 1862, after the rejection of the grant, defendants entered, claiming the right each to pre-empt one hundred and sixty acres as public land. Plaintiff commenced this action on the 26th of November, 1862. March 3d, 1863, Congress passed an Act granting to bona fide purchasers from Vallejo the exclusive right to purchase at any time within one year after the plats of survey were filed in the Land Office. These plats were filed October 15th, 1863. Defendants' declaratory statements as pre-emptioners were filed in the Register's office on the 23d day of October, 1863. The trial was had February 3d, 1864.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This action was commenced on the 26th day of November, 1862, to recover a portion of the tract of land known as the "Suscol Rancho." The plaintiff was one of the purchasers under the grant to Vallejo. He had occupied for a series of years, claiming title under said grant. Soon after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rejecting the Vallejo grant in 1862, numerous parties, regardless of the inclosures or possession of those who had for years occupied under conveyances from Vallejo, entered upon various tracts of the land covered by the rejected grant. Among the parties so entering were the defendants, each of whom laid claim to one hundred and sixty acres. These entries were made sometime during the summer and fall of 1862, and prior to the institution of this suit.

The defendants answered separately, and in their answers severally alleged, that, at the time of their respective entries upon the lands in question, said lands were public lands of the United States, subject to the pre-emption laws of 1841 as subsequently modified and extended over the State of California; that they respectively entered upon tracts of one hundred and sixty acres each, and no more, under and in pursuance of said pre-emption laws, with the intent to occupy and enter the same in accordance with the terms of said Act, so soon as said lands should come into market.

The testimony, by consent of the parties, was taken by a referee and reported to the Court, and the Court tried the case without a jury upon the testimony thus taken.

The Court found:

Firstly — The plaintiff, on and for several years before the twenty-fifth day of October, had by himself and tenants, held the actual possession of the land described in the complaint, cultivating and using the same for the ordinary purposes of agriculture, farming and pasturage.

Secondly — That on or about said twenty-fifth day of October, A. D. 1862, the defendants entered upon said premises, and ousted and excluded plaintiff therefrom, and have from that time to the present withheld the same from him.

Also the value of the rents and profits, and the specific parts of which each was in possession, and rendered judgment accordingly. A motion for new trial having been made and denied, defendants appeal from the order denying new trial, and from the judgment.

Upon the facts found, the judgment is clearly correct, and the only questions are, as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and as to the propriety of the rejection of certain evidence offered by defendants. Upon the first point, the testimony was clearly sufficient to establish the prior possession during several years of the plaintiff, and the entry and ouster by defendants. The testimony utterly failed to connect the defendants with the title of the United States, through the medium of the pre-emption laws. The pre-emption laws in force at the time, if any, were the Act of 1841, and subsequent modifications. The only qualification of the law of 1841 bearing upon the question is, that in California, unsurveyed lands were subject to pre-emption settlements; and the fact that a party had once before availed himself of the provisions of the Act in other States, did not preclude him from availing himself of its provisions again in this State. In other respects, the provisions of the law of 1841 were in force.

Under that Act, no person is entitled to settle upon the public land, with a view to pre-emption, unless such person is the head of a family, a widow, or one over the age of twenty-one years, the party being a citizen of the United States, or a person who has filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and he must "make a settlement in person," and must "inhabit and improve the same," and "erect a dwelling thereon." And, "No person who is a proprietor of three hundred and twenty acres of land in any State or Territory of the United States, and no person who shall quit or abandon his residence on his own land to reside on the public land in the same State or Territory, shall acquire any right of pre-emption under this Act." (Wood's Digest, 746, Sec. 10.)

In order to connect themselves with the United States under the pre-emption laws, it was necessary for the defendants to show that they were persons entitled under this Act to the benefit of its provisions. But there is not a shadow of testimony in the record tending to show that they, or either of them, were heads of families, single men over the age of twenty-one, or citizens, or persons who had filed their declarations of intention to become citizens, and no satisfactory evidence that they made "a settlement in person," and "inhabited the same." There is testimony that most of them built a shanty, or moved one on the land; but the testimony is that a portion of them lived in them, and a portion did not, and the testimony does not show which defendants lived on the land, or inhabited it, and which did not, except that it appears that U. F. Wood "never lived on the land." But as before stated, there is a total absence of testimony tending to show, that any one of these parties is within the provisions of the Act. It is not enough to show that they entered with an intent to claim under the pre-emption laws, without also showing that they were entitled to make a claim under such laws. The defendants having failed to connect themselves with the title of the United States through the medium of these acts, or otherwise, the evidence justifies the finding, and the prior possession of plaintiff must prevail.

The testimony of the defendants which was rejected, if all admitted, would not obviate this defect of proof, and could not therefore change the result.

But the certificate of the Register of the Land Office, that, on the 23d of October, 1863, the said several defendants filed their declaratory statements under the pre-emption laws, giving notice of their intention to claim the respective portions of the lands upon which they had entered, was inadmissible. These transactions took place nearly a year after the commencement of this suit, and at the time the said declarations were filed, the lands covered by them had been withdrawn from the operation of the law of 1841 (as we held in Hastings v. McGoogin et al., ante 84,) by the Act of March 3, 1863. At this time, and for a year after the 15th of October, 1863 — the day on which the plats of survey were filed — the plaintiff was the only person authorized by the Act of March 3, 1863, to purchase these lands. There was no error in rejecting the certificate of the Register of the Land Office.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Under the views taken it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to the right of a person, for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right, to enter upon the actual possession of another.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice CURREY, having been consulted as counsel, did not sit in the case.

By the Court, SAWYER, J., on petition for rehearing.

Plaintiff recovered in this action on his prior possession, and not upon a claim under the Act of Congress authorizing those who had purchased under Vallejo to enter the lands reduced to possession under such purchases. The record, however, shows that plaintiff is one of the parties contemplated by the Act, he having reduced the lands to possession, and having been, for several years prior to the entry of defendants, in possession under conveyances from Vallejo. The question is not whether the defendants are under a disability, which must be shown by the party alleging it. They allege a right acquired under the United States, and the burden of showing the right is on them. The Government has not extended its bounty to mankind generally, but it has conferred a right upon a particular class of persons upon the performance of certain prescribed acts, and a party claiming the right must show that he is one of those persons, and that he has performed the acts required.

At the time the declaratory statement was filed by defendants, the lands were not subject to pre-emption by them, for it appears that the lands in question had been reduced to possession by plaintiff under conveyances from Vallejo, and that the time had not expired within which plaintiff had the exclusive right of purchase. It was not a matter of any consequence whether he had yet taken the steps to secure the land or not.

Statement of Facts.

The declaratory statement, made while the lands were not subject to pre-emption, was of no validity, and there is no sufficient evidence, independent of, or in connection with this declaratory statement, to connect the defendants with the United States Government prior to the commencement of this suit. The plaintiff's prior possession must, therefore, prevail.

As to the question of damages, it appears by the admissions of the parties in evidence, that plaintiff had taken possession of the crops in an action to recover them, but the suit was still pending and undetermined. We cannot know that he will recover. But there is nothing in the pleadings, that will enable us to take cognizance of the fact that plaintiff has brought an action to recover the crops, or that he has received the rents and profits. Besides, it appears in the record that the plaintiff has "remitted a portion of the damages." We presume this was to obviate the objection made by appellant.

Rehearing denied.

THE PEOPLE v. AH PING.

ENTERING HOUSE WITH INTENT TO STEAL.—The mere fact that one person is with another who enters a dwelling house and steals therefrom, and sees him steal without interference on his part to prevent it, does not render him guilty of the crime of maliciously entering a dwelling house in the day-time with intent to steal property therein, nor will the proof of such facts cast on him the burden of proving himself innocent.

APPEAL from the County Court, Sierra County.

The facts upon which the charge recited in the opinion of the Court was based were as follows:

Fellows and O'Farrell, two miners, who occupied a cabin, hired a Chinaman on a Sunday during their absence to watch their cabin, and placed him in the bushes about fifty feet from the same. The watchman saw Ah You and Ah Ping enter the cabin, and came up and found them inside putting flour and other articles of food into two sacks. Ah You took the sacks and carried them off. Ah Ping did not carry anything away, but went with Ah You. Ah You plead guilty, and was used as a witness by Ah Ping on his trial. He testified that he alone committed the offense, and that Ah Ping was innocent and was a stranger to him, whom he had accidentally met.

Defendant was convicted, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People, referred to Wood's Digest, p. 290, § 255; Id. p. 329, § 11.

By the Court, SHAFTER, J.

Ah Ping, the appellant, was indicted jointly with Ah You under the Act of 1864 (Acts 1864, p. 104) for maliciously entering a certain dwelling house with intent to steal certain personal property therein. The question for the jury was the alleged breaking into the house with the intent charged. The Court charged, amongst other things, that "it is not necessary, to hold the defendant guilty of the offense charged against him in the indictment, that he be proved positively to have stolen something. If it be proved that he was with the one who did steal as charged in the indictment, and saw him steal without interference on defendant's part to prevent it, upon the defendant will then devolve the labor of proving himself innocent; otherwise he would be held guilty as an accessory. An accessory is an aider and abettor, and our statutes treat him as a principal, and subject to the same rules of law. An accessory is one who stands by and aids and abets and assists, or who counsels and advises the perpetration of a crime." This instruction is erroneous. The definition of the term "accessory" is correctly given, (Wood's Dig. 329, Sec. 11,) but it cannot be said that the facts, enumerated in the charge, would establish the guilt of the accused by legal conclusion. The appellant may have been in the house with one who was, himself, there, with felonious intent; he may have seen the latter in the act of committing a felony and have made no attempt to interfere, and still be entirely innocent. These facts, if found, would not necessarily have established the defendant's guilt, nor, what amounts to the same thing, would they have "devolved upon him the labor of proving himself innocent." If the facts, put hypothetically, were found, their effect would not be a question of law, to be passed upon by the Court, but of fact, to be determined by the jury. The charge was erroneous in other particulars, but the error already remarked upon requires that the judgment should be set aside.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

Judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor on the 16th of February, 1864, and thereupon the defendant gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial. The statement to be used on the motion was filed on the 5th of March following. On the 4th of June the defendant applied to the Judge of the Court at Chambers for an order directing the Clerk to enter in his minutes of the proceedings of the Court, as of the day when the judgment was rendered, an order staying proceedings in the cause and granting to the defendant fifteen days in addition to the time allowed by statute, within which to prepare and file a statement on motion for a new trial. This application was founded on the affidavit of the defendant's attorney, as well as upon the pleadings, proceedings and papers in the action. The defendant's attorney deposed that when judgment was rendered he asked and obtained of the Court fifteen days in addition to the time prescribed by statute, within which to prepare and file a statement on which to move for a new trial and a stay of proceedings in the meantime. That he drew up the order and procured the signature of the Judge thereto, and placed the same in the hands of the person then acting as the Deputy of the Clerk of the Court. That the Clerk and his Deputy, either through design, accident or mistake, had neglected entering the order made. One of the attorneys for the plaintiff made a counter affidavit, in which he stated positively that the additional time granted by the Court was made orally in open Court, and that it was ten and not fifteen days; that he knew nothing of any written order signed by the Judge, and that if such an order was so signed it was different from the one announced from the bench when the application for additional time was made. He also deposed that after the statement was filed, the defendant's attorney applied to the plaintiff's attorney, by letter, requesting them to stipulate to waive the consequences of his having failed to file in time his statement on motion for a new trial, and that they refused to comply with such request. The Clerk of the Court deposed that the written order, which the defendant's attorney mentioned in his affidavit, was never in his possession as Clerk or otherwise, and that after searching for it he had been unable to find it in the Clerk's office. It was in proof by affidavits that the Deputy Clerk referred to had removed from the county.

The motion, with the objections thereto, was heard by the Judge at Chambers. Upon the argument, the Judge informed the counsel of the parties that he did not recollect the order referred to in the affidavit of defendant's attorney, but would find the facts to be as therein alleged. At the same time the defendant moved, upon the statement filed, for a new trial, when the plaintiff objected, upon the ground, among others, that the defendant had waived his right to move for a new trial, because he had not filed his statement within the time prescribed by law, or the order of the Court, or the Judge thereof at Chambers. The case was then taken under advisement, and at the next term of the Court an order vacating the judgment and granting a new trial was made. From this order the plaintiff has appealed. The grounds of objection assigned are in substance as follows:

First—That the defendant waived his right to a motion for a new trial by not filing his statement within the time prescribed by section one hundred and ninety-five of the Civil Practice Act.

Second—That there was nothing in the affidavit of the defendant's attorney which took the case out of the provisions of said section.

Third—That the Court could not regard anything in that affidavit as evidence of the existence of the supposed order therein mentioned.

Fourth—That the Court was not authorized to amend the record after the expiration of the term of the Court without something to amend by.

Fifth—That the Court erred in granting the motion for a new trial.

It is not necessary to consider these objections seriatim. If the statement prepared by the defendant was not filed within some time for which the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act makes provision, then by the terms of that section the right to move for a new trial was waived, and when such right was waived the Court was powerless to rescue the case from the consequences of the defendant's default.

The order which the defendant's attorney deposes was made and signed, was not made a part of the record of the proceedings in the case at the term of the Court when the judgment was rendered, and the appellant maintains that the omission cannot be remedied by the Court after the term has elapsed. It is the duty of the Clerk to enter all orders made by the Court in the minutes of its proceedings, and the parties concerned should see to it that such orders are entered. Clerical errors and misprisions may occur in respect to enteries of judgments, orders, and other matters connected with judicial proceedings, which it is competent for the Court to order amended or supplied; and this may be done even though the term when the error or mistake happened may have passed, provided the party moving proceeds with due diligence. (Swain v. Naglee, 19 Cal. 127.) In this case it was not sought to amend an entry made, but to obtain an order empowering and directing the Clerk to enter in the minutes, nunc pro tunc, an order alleged to have been made in open Court. Such an order could not properly be made by the Judge at Chambers; and we cannot discover from the record that such order was made either at Chambers by the Judge or at any time by the Court; and therefore the case stands upon the naked question whether the Court committed an error in vacating the judgment and granting a new trial. The notice of application for a new trial was duly given, but the statement required was not filed in time to save and secure the right to move for a new trial. At the time the motion was made and when it was granted, the right to move for a new trial was gone, and the Court had no power to vacate and set aside the judgment.

Therefore the order vacating and setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial must be and is hereby reversed.

WILLIAM T. WALLACE v. JAMES ELDREDGE. (No. 1.)

JUDGMENT AFTER DEFAULT.—The Clerk of a Court, in entering a judgment after default, acts in a mere ministerial capacity, and cannot render a judgment granting any relief beyond that warranted by the facts stated in the complaint.

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT BY CLERK AFTER DEFAULT.—If the note sued on is payable in money generally, and the complaint contains a copy of the same, the Clerk cannot, after default, enter a judgment payable in gold coin, although the complaint prays for such judgment.

Opinion of the Court.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Gould & Dwinelle, for Appellant.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action June 15, 1863, against Eldredge and others upon two promissory notes made by them to the plaintiff, the first of which is in the following form: "$1,500.—San Francisco, September 26, 1860.—One year after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of William T. Wallace one thousand five hundred dollars, jointly and severally. John A. Collier, M. D. Ross, David Crawford, Jr., James Eldredge, by their attorney in fact, Hobart Eldredge;" and the second note is in the same form, except that it is made payable eighteen months after date. The plaintiff in his complaint prayed for judgment for the amount of the promissory notes, "in current gold and silver coin of the United States of America," with interest and costs of suit. Service of the summons was made upon James Eldredge alone, on the 20th of July, 1863, and his default was entered by the Clerk, August 3, 1863, and on the same day the Clerk entered up judgment by default for the amount of the notes, "in current gold and silver coin of the United States of America," together with interest and costs of suit.

The defendant appeals from the judgment, and the ground of his objection is that it is ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff recover the amount therein specified, in the current gold and silver coin of the United States.

It is provided in section one hundred and fifty of the Practice Act that in an action arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only, the Clerk shall, immediately after the entry of the default of the defendant, on application of the plaintiff, "enter judgment for the amount specified in the summons, including the costs, against the defendant, or against one or more of several defendants, in the cases provided for in section thirty-two."

The plaintiff was entitled to have a judgment entered against Eldridge for the amount due on the notes. The statute pronounces the judgment of the law, arising upon the facts stated in the complaint, in an action upon a contract for the recovery of money, in case the defendant makes default; and that judgment is that the plaintiff recover of the defendant the amount specified in the summons and costs. The Clerk adjudges nothing — can grant no relief — he is merely the hand that enters the judgment of the law. In the language of Mr. Chief Justice Field: "The Clerk in entering judgments upon default, acts in a mere ministerial capacity; he exercises no judicial functions. The statute authorizes the judgment, and the Clerk is only an agent by whom it is written out and placed among the records of the Court. He must, therefore, conform strictly to the provisions of the statutes, or his proceedings will be without any binding force." (Kelly v. Van Austin, 17 Cal. 564.) The facts stated in the complaint do not show that the money mentioned in the contracts sued on, was made payable in a specified kind of money or currency, and, therefore, it was not the judgment of the law that the plaintiff recover the amount in any specified kinds of money, and for that reason that portion of the entry of the Clerk, specifying the kind of money in which the judgment was to be paid, is void. But that entry did not affect, or in any manner impair the validity of the judgment for the recovery of the money, and is as powerless as would be any unauthorized entry in respect to the obligation or lien of the judgment. Utile per inutile non vitiatur.

It is ordered that the cause be remanded with directions to the Court below, to amend the judgment, by striking out that portion of it which specifies the kind of money in which the recovery is had.

Opinion of the Court.

WILLIAM T. WALLACE v. JAMES ELDREDGE. (No. 2.)

MATERIAL FACT IN PLEADING.—A statement in a complaint that the contract sued on was made payable in a specific kind of money is an allegation of a material fact.

JUDGMENT A CONTRACT.—A judgment is a contract in the highest sense of the term, and the word "contract" as used in the amendment to the Civil Practice Act providing for the rendition of judgment payable in the kind of money specified in the contract, includes judgments.

JUDGMENT ON GOLD COIN JUDGMENT.—If the complaint in an action on a judgment avers that the judgment sued on was rendered payable in gold coin, and defendant makes default, the Clerk should enter judgment payable in the same kind of money.

CONSOLIDATION OF SUITS.—The Supreme Court will not consolidate suits brought upon distinct causes of action.

JUDGMENTS.—If the decision of the Court below was correct when it was made, the appellate Court will not reverse the judgment by reason of any matter of fact which was not shown or offered in the Court below.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Gould & Dwinelle, for Appellant.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

In December, 1863, the plaintiff sued Eldredge upon a judgment, and in his complaint he alleged that by the consideration and judgment of the Court he "recovered against the defendant the sum of three thousand four hundred and seventy-five dollars and seventy-one cents, payable in the current gold and silver coin of the United States of America only, and the further sum of nineteen dollars and twenty-five cents, payable only in the like gold and silver coin;" and he prayed for judgment for those sums, and that they be "adjudged to be payable by said defendant in United States gold and silver coin only." The defendant was duly served with process, and on his failure to answer, the Court, on the 11th of January, 1864, rendered judgment by default against him for the amount of the alleged judgment and costs of suit, "to be paid by said defendant in current gold and silver coin only;" and the Court also, in said judgment, directed the Sheriff to receive nothing but gold and silver coin in satisfaction of the execution to be issued upon the judgment. The defendant appeals from this judgment, and the cause comes before us on the judgment roll alone. No proceedings appear to have been had in the Court below by the defendant to set aside the default, and the record contains neither a statement nor a bill of exceptions.

The defendant, by his default, admitted every material fact alleged in the complaint. This is not controverted, nor is it, nor can it be denied that in view of the "Special Contract Act" of April 27, 1863, permitting a judgment to be rendered payable in a specified kind of money, upon a contract or obligation in writing for the direct payment of money, made payable in a specified kind of money, the statement in the complaint, that the contract sued on was payable in a specified kind of money, is an allegation of a material fact. That Act, which has been upheld by this Court in Carpentier v. Atherton, 25 Cal. 564, would be nugatory and idle, if the facts which authorize the Court to exercise the peculiar jurisdiction specified in this Act, are not material facts in the cause.

A judgment is a contract, in the highest sense of the term, and as an obligation it possesses a force superior to that of a specialty or simple contract (Chit. Cont. 1; 2 Black. Com. 328; 1 Pars. on Cont. 7); and is included in the meaning of the term "contract," or obligation, as employed in the Special Contract Act. If, in this case, the judgment described in the complaint had never been rendered, and the allegations of the complaint in that respect had been pure fictions, it would have been the plain duty of the defendant to have denied the rendition of the alleged judgment; but his default would have been followed by its usual consequences—the admission that it was true, that the judgment had been rendered as alleged, and the admission would bind him in every Court, and in every stage of the case—while the default remained in force against him.

The appellant moves that we may consolidate this cause with his appeal from another judgment, and consider the two causes as one, and thus in effect incorporate into the second case a fact, that not only did not appear in the record, as it came to this Court, but which was not in issue or established in the case while in the Court below. We know of no rule empowering us to consolidate suits brought upon distinct causes of actions. If the consolidation should be made, the desired result would not ensue; for in the trial of the second case, the reversal of the first judgment would be merely matter of evidence, to be offered in proof of an issue of fact, if one had been made in the case.

If the decision of the Court below was correct when it was made, the appellate Court will not reverse it, and certainly it will not do so by reason of any matter of fact that was not shown or offered in the Court below. All the facts in the case, upon which this judgment was rendered, are stated in the complaint, and they are admitted to be true. They are found in no other part of the case, and the Court passed upon them as they were therein set forth, and upon those facts the judgment is correct.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. ALEXANDER BROWN.

INDICTMENT FOR LARCENY.—An indictment for larceny which charges that the defendant “did feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully, and with force and arms, steal, take, and carry, lead, and drive away,” etc., contains a sufficient statement of the intent with which the taking was done, without an averment that the property was taken with a felonious intent.

NEW TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASE.—The appellate Court will not, in a criminal case, grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, if the testimony is conflicting.

APPEAL from the County Court, Placer County.

The indictment charged “that the said Alexander Brown, on or about the 13th day of May, 1864, and before the finding and presentation of this indictment, at the County of Placer, to wit: at a place known as Chandler & Saunders' Ranch, in the County of Placer, did feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully, and with force and arms, steal, take, and carry, lead, and drive away from the ranch aforesaid, the personal goods and property of another, to wit: the property of W. H. Chandler and J. Saunders, of the value of more than fifty dollars; said property consisting of * * *," etc.

The defendant was convicted, and appealed

A. S. Higgins, for Appellant.

The indictment does not charge that the defendant took the horse, alleged to have been stolen, with a felonious intent. The offense consists in the intent. Is the intent to be presumed from the mere taking, or must it be distinctly charged?

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The indictment is sufficient. "Feloniously" implies the intent. (Wharton's Precedents of Indictments, 190; Wood's Dig. 337, Sec. 60; People v. Garcia, 25 Cal. 531.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The demurrer to the indictment was properly overruled. The charging part is in the following words: "Did feloniously, wilfully and unlawfully, and with force and arms, steal, take, carry, lead and drive away," etc., which is not only a sufficient statement of the intent with which the taking was done, under our statute, but also at common law. (People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 403; Wharton's Precedents, 190.)

We cannot reverse the judgment on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Disregarding the testimony offered by the defendant for the purpose of proving an alibi (which the jury manifestly did not believe), we are not prepared to say that the evidence does not sustain the verdict. In The People v. Ah Loy, 10 Cal. 301, the Court said: "It requires a clear case—one in which there is an absence of evidence against the prisoner, or a decided preponderance of evidence in his favor—to justify an interference with the verdict of the jury.” We think this is one of those cases in which the verdict, whether guilty or not guilty, ought not to be disturbed by this Court. The Court below refused a new trial, and that Court could better judge of the weight of the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

EBEN OWEN v. SETH D. DOTY.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—The proceedings provided for in the Act of 1850, concerning “forcible entry and unlawful detainer,” are not a substitute for the action of ejectment. The object of the Act, (excluding the thirteenth section,) is to redress wrongs, occasioned by force used or threatened by the defendant, by restoring possession to the plaintiff, and punishing the defendant with fine and treble damages.

NOTE.—The plaintiff must have had the actual possession when the wrongful or forcible entry was made, and if a forcible detainer alone is complained of, the entry of the defendant must have been unlawful.

NOTE.—If the entry of the defendant was lawful, the plaintiff cannot, when his right to the possession has expired, expel him therefrom, or by using or threatening force make his entry unlawful.

COMPLAINT AGAINST TENANT HOLDING OVER.—A complaint in an action brought under section thirteen of the Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer Act of 1850, which avers that “when the plaintiff was peaceably in the actual possession of the premises, the defendant, by permission of the plaintiff, entered upon the same,” avers a license to enter, and fails to state that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, and therefore contains no cause of action.

APPEAL from the County Court, Solano County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the County Court, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Whitman & Wells, for Appellant.

This action can only be maintained, if at all, under the provisions of the thirteenth section of the Act known as the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, and our first point is, that it is not within the provisions of that Act, inasmuch as the Act relates and is made to apply only to a person holding over, under and contrary to the terms of a lease or agreement, or failing to pay rent. The uniform construction has been that this section applies only to cases where the conventional arrangement of landlord and tenant subsisted, and not to cases where the tenancy exists by operation of law.

It was intimated in Henderson v. Grewell, by the late Supreme Court, that this section only applies to cases where a contract of tenancy exists upon a lease rendering rent. And this is probably correct when the proceeding is based on the default in the payment of rent, or in that which constitutes its substitute. In this case no lease had expired, and there was no covenant or agreement alleged which imposed upon the defendant the obligation of giving up the premises. The complaint is insufficient for this reason: no lease or agreement is averred, and no breach of suit.

But we submit that the thirteenth section of the Act cited cannot be extended to any such case at the one at bar; otherwise we have a substitute for the action of ejectment introduced into our practice. It applies solely to cases where the conventional relation of landlord and tenant subsists. It is a summary proceeding, to be kept strictly within the statute, proceeding upon the idea that the tenant wrought a forfeiture of his estate or right. (Chipman v. Emeric, 3 Cal. 273; Gaskell v. Treanor, 9 Cal. 339.)

For these purposes there must exist an express or implied contract to pay rent. (Sampson v. Schaeffer, 3 Cal. 201; O'Connor v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 273; Ramirez v. Murray, 5 Cal. 223; Treat v. Liddell et al., 10 Cal. 303.)

The Act concerning forcible entry, etc., is strictissima juris, and that the action will not be allowed to be used as a substitute for ejectment or trespass. (Merrill v. Forbes, 23 Cal. 379.)

J. Dougherty, and M. A. Wheaton, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court.

Can a tenant at will be put out of possession under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act? This question seems to be settled by the Act of 1861. (Laws of 1861, p. 514.) The language is, that "at the expiration of the month, the landlord may reenter, or maintain ejectment, or proceed in the manner prescribed by law to remove the tenant." If we have the right to proceed in the manner prescribed by law, we presume we have our choice to proceed in any manner prescribed by law, one of such remedies being under the Forcible Entry Act. Nor is such a proceeding a substitute for the action of ejectment. It is a right of action given by the statute, in addition to the right of action by ejectment. So, at least, reads the statute referred to.

Under section second of the Forcible Entry Act, this action can be maintained "against those who, having lawful and peaceable entry into lands, tenements, or other possessions, unlawfully detain the same;" and restitution may be had for lands, tenements, etc., which, after a lawful entry, are held unlawfully. Even were it true, therefore, that this action would not be maintained under the thirteenth section, still, under the second and ninth sections, all that the complainant would be required to show in addition to the forcible or unlawful detainer complained of, would be that he was entitled to the possession of the premises, at the time of the forcible or unlawful holding over.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This action was brought under the Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer Act of 1850. The plaintiff alleges in his complaint that in April, 1863, he was peaceably in the actual possession of the premises in controversy; that while so in possession "the defendant, by permission of the plaintiff, entered upon a portion of the same;" that on the 20th day of October, 1863, the plaintiff notified the defendant to remove from the premises and deliver the same to the plaintiff; and that the defendant refused to deliver up the possession, and has since that time "unlawfully, wrongfully and forcibly withheld said premises from the plaintiff's possession," etc.

It is not agreed by the parties whether the action was brought under the thirteenth section or one of the preceding sections of the Act. As the Act and the several Acts amendatory thereof, under which the action was brought were repealed by the Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer Act of 1863, we shall not enter into an extended discussion of its provisions in this case.

It was not intended that the summary proceedings provided for in the Act, should be a substitute for the action of ejectment, although the second section, literally read, is broad enough to include every unlawful withholding of the possession from the person entitled to it, whether the defendant's entry was lawful or unlawful. The purpose manifested by the Act, when all the sections, except the thirteenth, are considered together, was to redress the wrongs occasioned by the acts of the defendant, committed with force employed, or threatened, or manifested, by restoring the possession to the plaintiff and punishing the defendant by fine and treble damages. The plaintiff must have had the actual possession when the unlawful or forcible entry was made by the defendant. If a forcible detainer is complained of, the entry of the defendant must have been unlawful, for the defendant who, having a right of entry, peaceably takes possession, cannot by any possibility be guilty of a wrong by defending his possession while he is entitled to it; and if his right to the possession has expired while he is in possession, the person thereupon entitled to succeed to the possession cannot by his own act, and without the aid of the proper Court, put the defendant out of possession; and if he attempts to do so, and force is used or threatened by the defendant, the plaintiff cannot call on the Courts to punish the defendant for the acts of force which he (the plaintiff) has provoked.

This case does not fall within those provisions of the Act we have been considering, for although it is alleged that the defendant forcibly withheld the possession, it is also alleged that his entry was peaceable and lawful. The entry having been lawful and peaceable, the proper remedy is an action of ejectment, unless the case falls within the thirteenth section. That section, has for its object the removal of the tenant by the landlord by means of the summary proceedings provided for in the Act, in case the tenant fails to pay the rent, or holds over after the expiration of his term. The parties authorized to institute the proceedings are the lessor and his successors in interest, they occupying the relation of landlord, and the defendants are those to whom the premises are "demised or let," and those holding under them. The parties to the action must bear the relation of landlord and tenant, and the tenant must have held over after the expiration of his term, or contrary to the covenants of the lease, or failed to pay the rent.

The complaint fails not only to state directly that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, but no facts are stated from which that relation could be inferred. The allegation is that "the defendant by permission of plaintiff entered upon a portion of the same," (the premises)—that is, that the defendant entered by the license of the plaintiff, not that he either took or held any right in the land under the plaintiff. A license to enter confers upon the licensee no interest in the premises, not even the right of temporary possession, but the possession is left in the person holding it when the license to enter was given. The entry by the defendant under the alleged permission of the plaintiff did not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, and for that reason the case is not brought within the thirteenth section of the Act.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Statement of Facts.

THE PEOPLE v. THOMAS KING.

PLEADING IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS.—The criminal code of California has worked the same change in pleading in criminal actions which has been wrought by the civil code in civil cases.

INDICTMENT FOR MURDER.—In an indictment for murder it is not necessary to aver the means by which the homicide was committed, or the nature and extent of the wound, or the part of the body upon which it was inflicted.

STATEMENT OF DEGREE OF MURDER IN INDICTMENT.—An indictment for murder should not designate the degree of the murder. If the indictment does state the degree of the murder, it does not vitiate it, but the statement of the degree may be treated as surplusage.

IMPLIED BIAS OF JUROR.—In order to render a juror called in a criminal case incompetent on the ground of implied bias, it must appear that he entertains a fixed and settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or that he has expressed such conviction.

CHARGE OF JUDGE ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.—Under our Constitution the Judge, in his charge to the jury, cannot express his opinion upon the weight of evidence. He may, however, state the evidence to the jury, and declare the law resulting from the facts proven, and when there is no evidence as to a particular fact or issue, he may so state to the jury.

CHARGE OF JUDGE ON EVIDENCE.—If on a trial for murder there is no evidence of facts and circumstances such as would, under the law, reduce the crime charged to manslaughter, the Judge may so inform the jury, and may charge them that they cannot consider the question of manslaughter.

CHARGE OF COURT PRESUMED CORRECT UNLESS ERROR SHOWN.—If there is no statement or bill of exceptions embodying the evidence, or declaring its purport and tendency, the appellate Court will presume in favor of the correctness of the charge of the Judge to the jury, unless the charge is manifestly erroneous under any and every conceivable state of facts.

INTOXICATION WHEN HOMICIDE IS COMMITTED.—If on a trial for murder there is evidence to show that the defendant was intoxicated when the homicide was committed, the jury may consider the evidence of intoxication, not in extenuation or excuse of the crime, but for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime.

REFUSAL OF AN INSTRUCTION.—It is not error to refuse an instruction asked when the same has already been given in substance.

APPEAL from the District Court, Ninth Judicial District, Siskiyou County.

The following is a copy of the indictment in this case:

"The People of the State of California against Thomas King.

"In the Court of Sessions of the County of Siskiyou and State of California, October Term, A. D. 1863.

"Thomas King is accused by the Grand Jury of the County of Siskiyou aforesaid by this indictment of the crime of murder of the first degree, committed as follows: The said Thomas King, on the second day of July, A. D. 1863, at the County of Siskiyou and State of California, in and upon one James Duffy, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an assault and did then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, cut, stab, and wound him the said James Duffy, and did then and there give him the said James Duffy one mortal wound, of which said mortal wound the said James Duffy afterwards, on the second day of July, A. D. 1863, did die. So the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths, do say, that the said Thomas King, on the said second day of July, A. D. 1863, at the said County of Siskiyou and State of California, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did kill and murder the said James Duffy, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the People of the State of California."

In the trial, Jesse Davis was called as a juror. On examination as to his qualifications as a juror, he made the following answers to the following questions:

1st Question—"Have you heard what purported to be a statement of facts of this case?"

Answer—"I have heard what purported to be a statement of the facts from different persons."

2d Question—"Do you believe the statements true you heard?"

Answer—"I believed the statements heard, judging from the character of the men who told those statements to me."

3d Question—"From the statements you heard, have you formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant?"

Answer—"I have formed an opinion."

4th Question—"Do you still entertain the same opinion?"

Answer—"I do still entertain the same opinion."

5th Question—"Would it require evidence to remove or change the opinion you entertain?"

Opinion of the Court.

Answer—"It would require evidence to change my opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner."

8th Question—"Do you believe these reports sufficiently strong to act on them in your common business transactions?"

Answer—"I believe them as much as I believe any reports that I hear, or as much as I could believe any reports."

The defendant then challenged the juror for implied bias.

The juror also stated, in answer to the District Attorney, that he would not be willing to act on his opinion, and that he could not decide on the guilt or innocence of the defendant without hearing the evidence on the trial, and that he could and would decide the case impartially without reference to what he had heard or the opinion he had formed, and that the only credit he had given to the reports was that of hearsay reports not made under oath, which would not weigh in his mind against testimony of witnesses given in under oath.

The Court disallowed the challenge, and the counsel for defendant excepted.

The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. Berry, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The objections to the indictment are not well taken. There is some conflict in the decisions in this State as to what must be alleged in an indictment for murder. Some of the cases go so far as to hold that the essential averments of an indictment under our criminal code are the same as at common law, and that therefore a statement of the manner of the death and the means by which it was effected is indispensable. (People v. Wallace, 9 Cal. 80; People v. Cox, 9 Cal. 33; People v. Lloyd, 9 Cal. 54.) In other cases it has been held that our criminal code changes in many respects the rule of the common law, and dispenses with the statement of many facts and circumstances connected with the killing which were usual and perhaps indispensable at common law. (People v. Stevenson, 9 Cal. 273; People v. Dolan, 9 Cal. 576.) In the former case it was held that a description of the weapon used was not necessary, and it was not material to describe the wound further than by the use of the word mortal, nor the part of the body upon which it was inflicted. And it seems that it is not necessary to aver in terms that the wound was mortal, for if the facts stated show that such was the fact (as that the party died of the wound) the indictment in that respect is sufficient. (People v. Judd, 10 Cal. 313.)

Our criminal code was designed to work the same change in pleading and practice in criminal actions which is wrought by the civil code in civil actions. Both are fruits of the same progressive spirit which, in modern times, has endeavored at least to do away with the mere forms and technicalities of the common law which were productive of no good, and frequently brought the administration of justice into contempt by defeating its ends. Under the pretense of informing the defendant of the nature of the charge against which he was called upon to defend, it was necessary, at the ancient common law, to describe the means by which the homicide was committed, and the nature and extent of the wound and its precise locality; from which it necessarily followed that a trifling variance between the proof and the allegation frequently defeated a conviction, no matter how manifest the guilt of the defendant. It was a long time before legislators and Judges discovered that this rule had nothing but the most flimsy pretext to support it. If the defendant is guilty, he stands in need of no information to be derived from a perusal of the indictment, as to the means used by him in committing the act or the manner in which it was done, for as to both his own knowledge is quite as reliable as any statements contained in the indictment. If he is not guilty, the information could not aid in the preparation of his defense. A disposition to relax much of this ancient strictness in criminal proceedings has manifested itself in modern practice, and in harmony therewith the Legislature of this State has substituted, in the place of the old, a new system of practice and pleading, which retains all the elements of the former so far as they are made necessary by a due regard for the substantial rights of a defendant, but discards all such elements as serve no good purpose, and only tend to embarrass and defeat the administration of justice. That system provides a few plain and simple rules by which to determine the sufficiency of pleadings, and declares that such rules shall be the test. (Section 235.) Those rules are found in section two hundred and forty-six, and in order to ascertain whether an indictment is sufficient or not, it is only necessary to interrogate it by the light of that section. The present indictment stands this test in every particular: 1. It is entitled in a Court having authority to receive it. 2. It was found by a Grand Jury of the county in which that Court was held. 3. It gives the name of the defendant. 4. It shows that the crime alleged was committed within the jurisdiction of the Court. 5. It declares that the offense was committed at a time prior to that at which the indictment was found. 6. It sets forth the act charged as the offense clearly and distinctly in ordinary and concise language, without repetition and in such a manner that any person can know and understand therefrom what is intended; for it alleges that the defendant—stating his name—at a place named, and at a time mentioned which was prior to the finding of the indictment, with malice aforethought assaulted one James Duffy, and did cut and stab the said James Duffy, giving him a mortal wound, of which he afterwards died on the same day, and therefore within a year and a day from the time when the mortal thrust was received, which is all that is necessary to constitute the offense of murder, and sufficiently identifies the act to guard the defendant against a second prosecution, and, as provided in the seventh and last subdivision of the section in question, states the same with sufficient certainty to enable the Court to pronounce a judgment. The indictment is not bad because it does not allege that James Duffy was a human being, nor that he had a body, nor the part of his body upon which the wound was inflicted. The first two never were necessary, and the last is not now, whatever it may have been formerly. If there is any objection to the indictment, it is found in the fact that it designates the degree of the murder. While this does not make the indictment bad, and may be treated as surplusage, still the indictment ought not, because it need not, state the degree of the murder. The trial jury, and not the Grand Jury, determine the degree of the crime, and the former should not be embarrassed by the opinion of the latter.

The Court did not err in disallowing the challenge interposed by the defendant to the juror Jesse Davis upon the ground of implied bias. In order to render a juror incompetent on the ground of implied bias, it must appear that he entertains a fixed and settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or that he has expressed such a conviction. Whatever falls short of this does not amount to an unqualified opinion within the meaning of the statute. Admitting that Davis had formed an opinion — which in view of all his answers taken together is extremely doubtful — it certainly was not an unqualified, but on the contrary, a conditional or qualified opinion. The law upon this branch of the case will be found very fully discussed by Mr. Justice Baldwin, in The People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 130. (See also, People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; and People v. Mahoney, 18 Cal. 180.)

It is next claimed that the Court erred in giving the following instruction:

“In the case that is now being submitted to you there is no evidence on any points or matters given in proof which reduce the crime charged in the indictment to manslaughter; if the defendant be found guilty, therefore, you cannot consider the question of manslaughter upon the evidence in this case.”

This instruction is not a little obscure, and if it was given as represented in the transcript, it is quite possible that the jury may have found some difficulty in determining its exact meaning. The record does not contain the evidence, or any part thereof, and we cannot, therefore, read the instruction in the light of the testimony, in view of which it was given, but are forced to determine its meaning by its own terms. If there was any evidence before the jury tending, however slightly, to reduce the homicide to the grade of manslaughter, this instruction was erroneous. If the expression "there is no evidence on any points or matters given in proof," is to be understood as admitting that there were "points and matters given in proof" which, if true, would reduce the offense to manslaughter, but declaring the evidence as to such points or matters to be insufficient to warrant the jury in finding them to be true, it was erroneous, because it assumed to pass upon the weight of evidence, which, under our Constitution, is left entirely to the jury, and in regard to which the Judge, contrary to the rule of common law, is not allowed to express an opinion. On the other hand, if there was a total absence of all testimony as to such facts and circumstances as would, under the law, reduce the offense from murder to manslaughter, and the instruction is to be understood as declaring such to be the case, then it was not erroneous, because Judges, although not allowed to charge juries with respect to matters of fact may state the testimony and declare the law. (Sec. 17, Art. VI, of the Constitution.) At common law a Judge is allowed to express his opinion as to the weight of evidence. (Commonwealth v. Child, 10 Pick. 252.) In this respect the constitutional provision referred to was intended to change the rule so as to leave the weight of the evidence entirely to the jury; but Judges may still, as formerly, state what facts are in evidence and what are not; or in other words they may state the evidence pro and con, in view of which the existence of certain facts is affirmed or denied, which includes the right to state to the jury that there is no evidence as to particular facts or issues, when such is the case. Counsel for defendant seem to have understood the Judge as instructing the jury that there was no evidence as to facts which, under the law, would reduce the offense charged to manslaughter, and to have excepted to the instruction upon that ground, so understood — there being no evidence of the character in question — the instruction was not erroneous.

It is proper, however, to add, in this connection, that in the absence of any statement or bill of exceptions embodying the evidence, or declaring its purport or tendency, so far as may be necessary to point the exception, we must presume in favor of the action of the Court below, upon the principle that the party who alleges error must show it. This, however, must be taken with the qualification that where the action of the Court below is manifestly erroneous under any and every conceivable state of facts, this Court will review it, notwithstanding the evidence may not have been brought up. (The People v. Levisen, 16 Cal. 98.)

It appears, from the instructions given by the Judge of his own motion, that there was evidence before the jury tending to prove that the defendant was intoxicated at the time the homicide was committed. In view of this evidence certain instructions were asked on the part of the defense to the effect that so far as the degree of murder is concerned no presumption arises from the mere fact of the killing considered apart from the means used and the circumstances under which it occurred; and that in determining the question of premeditation it was proper for the jury to take into account the defendant's condition, as drunk or sober. These instructions were evidently taken from the case of The People v. Belencia, 21 Cal. 544, and ought therefore to have been given, unless already given in substance, for as to the law of that case there can be no question. Where the homicide is not committed by means of poison, lying in wait, or torture, or in the perpetration or the attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, the degree of the offense depends entirely upon the question whether the killing was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated, and upon that question it is proper for the jury to consider evidence of intoxication, if such there be, not upon the ground that drunkenness renders a criminal act less criminal, or can be received in extenuation or excuse, but upon the ground that the condition of the defendant's mind, at the time the act was committed, must be inquired after in order to justly determine the question as to whether his mind was capable of that deliberation or premeditation which, according as they are absent or present, determine the degree of the crime.

The Court below does not seem to have questioned the law of the defendant's instructions, but refused to give them upon the ground that they had been already given in substance. Upon inspection of the instruction given by the Court, we are satisfied that the law, as declared in the instructions under consideration had already been given in language, perhaps, better adapted to the comprehension of the jury, and hence the ruling of the Court was not erroneous. We add, however, that in such cases it is better to give the instructions asked, than to refuse, for by such refusal a pretext is afforded for an appeal which otherwise, perhaps, would not be taken.

The judgment is affirmed and the Court below directed to appoint a day for the execution.

ALEX. B. GROGAN v. HENRY KNIGHT, ESTHER ANN PACKWOOD, JOEL RUMSEY, ELLSWORTH TILTON, JOSEPH SAVAGE, JOHN DUGAN, JOHN J. REED, AND PETER COGGSWELL.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.—The survey of the public lands of the United States into sections and subdivisions of sections can only be made under the authority of Congress, and is beyond the control of the States.

SELECTION OF SCHOOL LANDS BY A STATE.—A selection of public lands made by the authorities of a State in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections granted to the State for school purposes, before the lands selected have been surveyed by the United States, and the survey approved, is invalid, and confers no title upon the State.

SALE OF UNSURVEYED LANDS BY A STATE.—A sale and certificate of purchase made by a State of lands selected by the State in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, before the lands thus selected and sold have been surveyed and the survey approved by the United States, confers upon the grantee of the State no title or right of possession.

Argument for Respondent.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellants.

This is an action of ejectment, and the only evidence of title the plaintiff attempted to show was a location of school land warrants on unsurveyed public lands of the United States.

These locations being upon unsurveyed lands, were no evidence of title. (Pre-emption Law of Congress of September 4th, 1841, Sec. 8; Instructions of U. S. Land Commissioner, 3d subdivision, p. 502, Lester's Land Laws; also Decisions, No. 507, p. 457, Ib.; Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609; Statutes of California of 1863-4, p. 301.)

The defendants had the possession sued for at the time the locations were made on which the plaintiff's certificates issued. (Act concerning certificates of purchase, Statutes of 1859, 332; Id., Sec. 5, 302.)

Whitman & Wells, for Respondent.

The plaintiff in this case has based his claim upon certificates of purchase issued by the State Land Office for land selected as school land, taken in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and duly assigned to him, and certificates of school warrants.

This selection and sale is authorized by Acts of Congress providing for the survey of public lands in the State of California, the sixth section of which specifically grants the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to the State for the support of schools. (Wyman v. Banvard, 23 Cal. 524; Higgins v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 252.)

The seventh section provides that the proper authorities of the State may select other lands in lieu thereof when such sections may be reserved for public uses or taken by private claims, which lands shall be selected agreeably to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved May 20th, 1826, and which shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

The right of the State to enact such a law has been sustained by the Federal Courts. (Acts of 1861, 218, etc.; Jackson v. Wilcox, 13 Peters, 498.) And until the United States complains of it, or the question arises upon a patent issued from the United States, it is competent for this Court to uphold the selection made by the State, for we do not see here any adjudication as against the claim or title of the United States.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This is an action of ejectment to recover the possession of a portion of the lands formerly known as the Suscol Rancho. The premises are public lands of the United States, and have never been surveyed under the authority of Congress. The plaintiff relies for his title upon certificates of purchase issued October 17, 1862, by the Register of the State Land Office, upon the location and sale of school lands, selected in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of the public lands of the United States. The United States Register of the proper land district refused to approve the selection, because the lands were unsurveyed. The defendants were in possession, they having entered upon the land in May, 1862, and each of them claimed a right of pre-emption under the Acts of Congress, to the respective quarter sections upon which he had entered.

It appears in the statement on the defendants' motion for a new trial, that "the plaintiff testified that one Dr. Page had caused the lands to be inclosed in 1861; that said Dr. Page was the real party in interest in this suit; that the plaintiff only held the lands in his name in trust for Dr. Page, and to secure him for the advances he had made; that said Dr. Page had replanted the crops raised on the land, and received the same for the year 1862, and had pastured the pasture part of the land; also had received the profits of the land in 1862." The Court found as facts: "First—On the 28th day of October, A. D. 1862, the plaintiff held the certificates of the State of California, duly issued, for the land in controversy; Second—The ineptive steps for the obtaining such certificates were taken before any one of the defendants entered upon the land." The prior possession of the plaintiff, or his grantor, is neither admitted by the pleadings nor found by the Court; and the only finding of fact respecting the plaintiff's title, possession or right of possession, is as above mentioned. The Court from those facts found the following conclusions of law: "First—The plaintiff was at the time alleged in his complaint seized and possessed of the land in controversy, and had title thereto; Second—The title thus held, and the right of possession flowing therefrom, relate to the first steps taken for acquiring the same." It thus clearly appears that the Court found for the plaintiff on the sole ground that the certificates of purchase were sufficient to convey, and did convey to the plaintiff, the right to the possession of the lands described in the certificates, and not on the ground of the prior possession of the plaintiff or Dr. Page. We are, therefore, not required to determine whether the evidence was sufficient to have enabled the Court to find for the plaintiff on the ground of the prior possession of Dr. Page, if it had clearly appeared that his right depending upon his possession had been transferred to the plaintiff. The first finding of fact, which is unnecessarily indefinite, and merely states a portion of the evidence tending to prove a fact, would seem to indicate that the certificates of purchase were issued to the plaintiff or had been assigned to him, rather than that Dr. Page had conveyed the land to him.

The point upon which the appeal must turn has relation to the value and effect of the certificates of purchase issued by the State.

The defendants resist the claim of title set up by the plaintiff, on the ground that the certificates of purchase, having been issued before the lands selected had been surveyed according to the laws of the United States, were not evidence of title in the person to whom they were issued. It will not be contended that the title to the lands selected passed to the plaintiff, unless the title would have passed to the State upon the performance, in her behalf, of acts similar in their character to those under which the plaintiff claims, for although the certificates issued to the purchaser, the selection and location of the lands was made for the State. Could the State in October, 1862, by her own act, have acquired title to those lands as portions of the lands to be selected in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, granted for the purposes of public schools, prior to the survey of the lands by the United States?

The seventh section of the Act of March 3, 1853, provides that such land shall be selected by the authorities of the State agreeably to the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved the 20th of May, 1826; and that Act provides that the lands shall be selected in sections and subdivisions of sections. It requires no argument to prove that the survey of public lands of the United States into sections and subdivisions of sections can be made only under the authority of Congress. The survey is a part of the system devised by Congress for the disposal of the public lands; and the survey is as completely beyond the control of the State authorities as any portion of the system. The selection of a particular tract, as a subdivision of public land, in anticipation of the survey by the United States, would be no less wanting in authority than would the selection of a designated subdivision in anticipation of the grant by Congress. In Bernard's Heirs v. Ashley's Heirs, 18 How. 43, a selection of land had been made by the Governor of the Territory of Arkansas, under the Acts of Congress, authorizing him to select lands equal to ten sections, in tracts not less than a quarter section each, and to sell the same for the purpose of raising a fund to erect public buildings in the territory; and it was held that the selection that he had made of a quarter section within a township, the survey of which was incorrect and had not then been approved by the Surveyor-General, was invalid, and that the selection could take effect only from the time when the survey was sanctioned and became a record in the district land office.

A question quite similar in its character, in all its essential particulars, was before the Court in Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609, the plaintiff claiming title to the lands by virtue of the location upon unsurveyed lands, of "school land warrants," issued by the State, under the Act to dispose of the five hundred thousand acres granted to the State, for the purposes of internal improvements. Mr. Chief Justice Sanderson, in commenting upon the provisions of the Act of Congress, says: "There is no ambiguity in the language used; on the contrary, the meaning is too plain and obvious to admit of doubt. The language is, 'located as aforesaid,' that is to say, in parcels of not less than three hundred and twenty acres, conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions and after the survey has been made. * * * The grant imposes conditions as to quantity, manner of selection and location, and time of location, and under it no title to any specific land can vest in the State until all of these conditions have been complied with. The State has no more right to select and locate lands before the survey has been made, than she has to locate it in tracts of one hundred and sixty acres each, or without regard to sectional divisions and subdivisions of the United States survey." We are entirely satisfied with the construction announced in that case, of those provisions of the Act in question, and it is difficult to understand how it could be contended that the grantee of the State, of land selected under her sole authority, prior to the United States survey, thereby acquired the legal title, when it is capable of mathematical demonstration that his asserted title to any given acre of the three hundred and twenty acres selected and located for him by the authorities of the State, is liable to be defeated by the survey subsequently made by the United States.

In the case of Barry v. Gamble, 3 How. 32, one of the questions was the sufficiency of the location of a New Madrid land certificate, which had been located on public lands prior to the United States survey; and Mr. Justice Catron in delivering the opinion of the majority of the Court, said: "The location was in irregular form, and altogether disregarded the section lines and the ordinary modes of entry under the laws of the United States. This circumstance lies at the foundation of the controversy. The General Land Office, at Washington, refused to issue a patent on locations thus surveyed. The Secretary of the Treasury, on the 11th of May, 1820, and again on the 19th of June, 1820, called on the Attorney-General for his opinion on the validity of such locations. (2 Land Laws and Opinions, 9, 10.) This officer replied 'that the authority given is to make these locations on any of the lands of the Territory, the sale of which is authorized by law; but the sale is not authorized by law until the sectional lines are run, and consequently all locations previously made by these sufferers are unauthorized.' To cure this defect the Act of 1822 was passed," etc. And the Court held that the location was rendered valid by that Act.

It may be admitted that, by virtue of the Act of Congress of 1853, the State became entitled to an amount of land equal to two sections in each congressional township, yet as the State did not, by virtue of that Act, acquire the title to any specified tract of land, and could not acquire it, until the survey had been made under the authority of Congress, it necessarily follows that, prior to such survey, she had no power or authority to confer upon a purchaser from her any right, title or interest in any specific parcel of such lands.

If the selection had been made after the survey, and it remained only subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the person claiming under the State might with more propriety say, in the language of the respondent, "until the United States complain of it, or a question arises upon a patent issued by the United States, it is competent for this Court to uphold the selection made by the State," but if the selection is prior to the survey, and the defendant goes into possession, without a trespass upon the actual possession of the purchaser from the State, if the latter claims protection on the ground that the United States may not complain of his selection and location, the defendant may well reply that the United States may not complain of his possession. The question is not whether the General Government will or will not complain of his selection of unsurveyed public land, but it relates to the title on which he seeks to recover the possession; the question is, did the acts and proceedings of the officers, acting on behalf of the State, confer upon the purchaser from her the right to the possession of a tract of unsurveyed land? And this must be answered in the negative. We would not be justified in temporizing with this question, on the consideration that there are very many similar claims to title in this State, the value of which might be impaired by our decision in this case; but, feeling as we do, that the question admits of but one solution, it is our plain duty to declare the law.

The error assigned by the defendants, in ordering their testimony relating to their pre-emption claims to be stricken out, becomes immaterial, in the view we have taken of the case, and in the absence of a finding of the fact of the prior possession of the plaintiff or his grantor.

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded.

THE PEOPLE v. EUGENE CAZALIS.

SUPPLYING THE PLACE OF A LOST PLEADING.—If a pleading in a pending action is lost, its place can only be supplied by motion based upon affidavits showing what the lost pleading contained, and the service of personal notice upon the opposite party of the intention to move, which notice must be sufficiently explicit to advise him of what is intended, as well as to enable him to controvert the affidavits submitted.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

John B. Felton, and J. W. Stephenson, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for Respondent.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The defendant was sued for taxes upon personal property. The complaint was demurred to. When the case was reached on the calendar, the District Attorney discovered that the complaint was lost or mislaid; and the Court, on bare suggestion by him, made an order substituting for the original a paper, presented and filed by the attorney, purporting to be a true copy of the original. This proceeding was had in the absence of the defendant and his attorney, and without notice. The demurrer was thereupon submitted, and in three days thereafter was overruled, and the Court immediately rendered a final judgment, without notice to the defendant or his counsel, and without giving time to answer. The appeal is from the judgment.

It is insisted that the judgment should be reversed upon either one of two grounds: First—That no proof was submitted to the Court showing the loss of the original complaint or that the copy filed was a true copy. Second—That no notice was given that the order would be applied for.

It was held in McLeadon v. Jones, 8 Ala. 298, that "the manner of correcting the loss of the pleadings, is, to show by affidavits what the record contained, the loss of which is to be supplied. The substitution can only be made after a personal notice of the intention to move the Court, and the notice must be sufficiently explicit to advise the opposite party of what is intended, as well as to enable him to controvert the affidavits submitted." The case at bar may be distinguished from that of Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381. In that case the defendant answered the substituted complaint before the objection, that it was allowed to be filed without notice, was taken. But if the decision in that case should be considered as conflicting with the rule laid down in the case cited from the Eighth of Alabama, it is in our judgment erroneous.

HORACE W. CARPENTIER v. GREENE W. WEBSTER.

OCCUPANCY OF COMMON LANDS BY TENANTS IN COMMON.—Tenants in common hold their lands by unity of possession, and each and every of them has the right to enter upon and occupy the whole of the common lands and every part thereof.

POSSESSION OF ONE TENANT IN COMMON.—One tenant in common has no share except that which is undivided, and has no right to exclude his co-tenant from any portion of the common lands.

OUSTER OF A TENANT IN COMMON BY HIS CO-TENANT.—If one tenant in common incloses and enters into the exclusive possession of a portion of the common lands, not exceeding in quantity the number of acres which he would be entitled to have allotted to him on partition of the whole, and refuses to allow a co-tenant to occupy this portion with him, it is an ouster of the co-tenant, and he may maintain ejectment and be let into the possession of the part from which he is thus excluded.

OUSTER BY TENANT IN COMMON.—One tenant in common may be guilty of an ouster of a co-tenant by excluding him from a portion less than the whole of the property held in common.

A REFUSAL TO LET A CO-TENANT INTO POSSESSION AN OUSTER.—If one tenant in common is in the exclusive possession of a portion less than the whole of the common lands, and his co-tenant demands of him to be let into possession of the same on the ground of his joint ownership, and the other, while admitting the several title of the co-tenant, refuses to let him into possession, this refusal is an ouster.

OUSTER MAY RESULT WHEN TITLE IS ADMITTED.—If a tenant in common denies the several title of a co-tenant, but lets him into possession, it is not an ouster; but if he admits the several title of a co-tenant and refuses to let him into possession, it is an ouster.

DEMAND OF POSSESSION BY CO-TENANT.—A demand made by a tenant in common of a co-tenant in possession to be let into possession of every part of the common lands, is not a notice to the co-tenant in possession to quit.

OUSTER BY ONE TENANT IN COMMON IN CASE OF MEXICAN GRANT NOT SURVEYED.—If several are tenants in common in a grant of land made by Mexico of a given quantity, to be located within the exterior boundary lines of a much larger quantity, and no survey or location of the quantity granted has been made, the exclusive possession by one of the tenants in common of a portion less than the whole of the land within the exterior boundary lines of the larger quantity, and his refusal to let a co-tenant into possession of the same, is an ouster.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

Argument for Appellant.

The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. R. Carpentier, for Appellant.

The defendant's acts amount to an ouster of the plaintiff, and the Court erred in instructing the jury that the plaintiff had failed to show an ouster.

Tenants in common possess the whole in unity. Their estate may be several—their possession must be in common. The possession of one is in support of the title of both; but the refusal of one to permit his co-tenant to enter upon and occupy the land, or any part of it, divests the possession so as to entitle the companion to his action of ejectment. (1 Greenleaf Cruise, title 20, §§ 2, 14, 17, 18, 19.)

"No real force, as a turning out by the shoulders, is necessary. If upon demand by the co-tenant, the other denies his right and continues in possession, such possession is adverse, and ouster enough." (Doe v. Prosser, 1 Cowp. 217.)

"If a tenant in common drive out of the land any cattle of the other tenant in common, or will not suffer him to enter or occupy the land, this is an ejectment or expulsion." (Coke Litt. 199 b.)

A claim of exclusive right of possession, or denial of the co-tenant's right, or any act which amounts to a denial of right, is an ouster. (Brackett v. Norcross, 1 Greenleaf, 82; Allyn v. Mather, 9 Conn. 128, per Hosmer, C. J.; Sigler v. Van Ripor, 10 Wend. 419; Jackson v. Tibbits, 9 Cowen, 253; Edwards v. Bishop, 4 Conn. 63; Hargrove v. Powell, 2 Dev. & Bat. 97; Gordon v. Pearson, 1 Mass. 328, etc.)

The last case (Gordon v. Pearson) is a parallel case and perfectly in point. There, as here, there was a demand of possession, and a refusal by the defendant, who says, you must get it by law if you can. And this was held a sufficient ouster.

"An ouster must be proved by acts of an adverse character, such as claiming the whole for himself; denying the title of his companion; or refusing to permit him to enter." (2 Green. Ev. 359, § 318.)

Exclusive possession, for long periods, has been held both in England and the United States, sufficient to warrant the presumption of ouster, though no other proof was given. (Dos v. Prosser, and other cases cited.)

The denial of right which is held to be an ouster, is not necessarily a denial of the co-tenant's title. A denial of the right of possession or enjoyment is all that is meant by the authorities, for though the defendant admit the title of his co-tenant, yet if he refuse to allow him to possess, or deny his right to such possession, this would be none the less an ouster.

Moreover, the defendant's answer in this case, is, of itself, an ouster. The complaint avers title, and is verified. The answer admits the plaintiff's ownership of the undivided one half of the rancho, but denies his title to any other or greater share or interest, and unqualifiedly denies his right of possession.

The evidence shows that the plaintiff is the owner of an interest in said rancho, equal to three hundred and twenty acres in addition to the one half thereof; and the right of possession is the very question which was put in issue by the defendant, which was actually tried, and upon which judgment was rendered.

Instead of confessing the right of the plaintiff, the defendant presents an issue upon it; and as the answer has reference by relation to the commencement of the suit, the denial of the plaintiff's right is not only evidence, but conclusive proof of ouster.

As to the point so strongly pressed by counsel for the respondent, that there can be no ouster by a tenant in common, except by the exclusive, adverse possession of the entire tract constituting the subject of the tenancy in common, we submit, with all due respect for the learned counsel, that the proposition is wholly unsustained by any of the numerous authorities cited by him, or by any case that can be found in the books, and scarcely merits serious argument in reply.

Argument for Respondent.

The "claiming of the whole," which, according to Lord Mansfield, constitutes an ouster, refers to the right, and not to the boundaries — the quantity of interest and not of acres. (See Vol. 6, Allen's Massachusetts Reports; Bennett v. Clemence et al., abstracted, quoted Vol. 3, American Law Journal, December number, 1863.)

The case from 16th Mass. approvingly cited by the counsel for the respondent, is in point for the appellant, and entirely consistent with the whole current of authority upon the subject. It decides that a tenant in common shall not do, substantially, what was done by the plaintiff in this case — that is, shall not exclude his co-tenant or disturb his possession.

I shall not criticise the language of the instruction that "an actual ouster of the plaintiff from the joint possession" must be shown, further than to invite to it the attention of this Court.

The language of the plaintiff's demand was carefully chosen and is not liable to criticism. He had a right to be let into the possession of the whole, and that was the extent of his demand. He did not demand or claim the entire possession. The rights of the defendant were fully recognized. He was informed that the plaintiff was the chief owner, and he was required not to yield up the possession, but to let the plaintiff into the possession and enjoyment of the premises along with himself. If the plaintiff has any right in the premises, it is the right of common and immediate enjoyment. And this right is denied him by the defendant — denied both as a matter of law, and in fact.

Campbell & Brummagim, for Respondent.

1st. Tenants in common are severally and solely seized each of his own share. They are seized per my, but not per tout; for this reason they must sue separately, in actions savoring of the realty. 2d. The possession of one tenant in common is, in contemplation of law, the possession of his companions. But one may actually oust the others, and claim to hold in his own right. 3d. One tenant in common has a right to the enjoyment of the common property, and for that purpose he may enter upon it, and his co-tenants have no right to disturb such enjoyment. 4th. One tenant in common can compel the others to make partition of the common property.

The Court charged the jury in effect, that before one tenant in common can maintain ejectment against his co-tenant, he must show an actual ouster from the joint possession of the entire common property. In other words, that while the defendant occupied no more than his proportionate share, such possession was consistent with the common title, and in contemplation of law was the possession of the plaintiff—and therefore no ouster had been shown.

In support of the doctrine here laid down, we beg leave to refer the Court to the following well established rule of the common law. In Coke upon Littleton, (Vol. I, p. 906,) Littleton lays down the rule in these words: "Also, in the case aforesaid, as if two have an estate in common for term of years, (for one year, half a year, etc.,) the one occupy all, and put the other out of possession and occupation, he which is put out of occupation shall have against the other a writ of ejectione firmæ of the moiety, etc." Upon which Lord Coke comments as follows: "The one occupy all, and put the other out of possession. These are words materially added; for albeit one tenant in common take the whole profits, the other hath no remedy by law against him, for the taking of the whole profits is no ejectment. But if he drive out of the land any of the cattle of the other tenant in common, or not suffer him to enter or occupy the land, this is an ejectment or expulsion, whereupon he may have ejectione firmæ for the one moiety, and recover damages for the entry, but not for the meane profits." How materially added? Before the rule laid down in the text, albeit one tenant should take the whole profits, the other had no remedy by law against him, for the reason that it was no ejectment; wherefore, it was added, that although there was no remedy for taking the whole profits—that is to say, the profits of the whole estate—yet if he should occupy all—that is to say, the entire estate—the co-tenant should have his remedy by "ejectione firmæ" for his moiety: namely, for his undivided interest. The acts from which an ejectment or expulsion might be inferred are stated thus: "But if he drove out of the land any of the cattle of the other tenant in common, or do not suffer him to enter or occupy the land, this is an expulsion." The words "out of the land" means out of the land owned in common; because, if one tenant occupied a portion with a garden, and the cattle of the other entered it, and they were driven out of the garden but not out of or from the common estate, it could not be contended that the owner of the estate would have his action of ejectment against his co-tenant, the effect of which would be that the cattle should be again let into the garden from which they had been driven. So with the other words, "or not suffer him to enter or occupy the land." What land? Why, clearly, the common land; because, if one tenant occupied — say as in case of the cattle — a mere garden spot, and refused to allow his co-tenant to disturb him in its occupancy, but leaving him all the residue of the common property upon which to enter, could such act be construed into a refusal on the part of one to allow the other to enter and occupy the land? Most clearly it could not. And we shall hereafter demonstrate, as we think beyond question, the consistency of our construction of this rule of the common law, with another maxim, namely: that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of all, and that the latter was intended to enable tenants in common to occupy and enjoy their common estate in severalty, and before partition could be made, without losing any of their rights, and without incurring any of the consequences that result from an adverse possession.

And again, (see page 907,) the same author goes on to say. "In the same manner it is where two hold the wardship of the lands or tenements during the nonage of an infant, if the one oust the other of his possession, he which is ousted shall have a writ of ejectment de gard of the moiety, because that these things are chattels real, and may be apportioned and severed." Ousted of what possession? Why, manifestly, of the entire possession of such lands and tenements part, but of the whole; that is, of "all" the land in common. And the reason of the rule assigned for it is, that such things, he says, are chattels real, apportioned and severed. This has reference to a writ of partition which, although it is a writ of right, a tenant out of possession is not entitled to it. (In this statute the common law rule is adopted; it will, however, be shown that even an adverse holding of a fraction of the common property by one tenant will not prevent partition.) If one tenant is in possession of any part of the common property, the other is not entitled to a writ of partition. In order, therefore, that this right of apportionment by writ of partition shall not be defeated by the ouster of one tenant by the other from the possession of the entire property, it is provided that in all such cases the ousted tenant shall have his ejectment, for the purpose to him not only the possession, but the right to compel partition of the common property. A tenant out of possession could still compel partition, by action of ejectment for his undivided moiety, without an object and useless. It may be stated as a general rule, ejectment will not lie by one tenant against his co-tenant, in any case where the reversion exists; because, as long as there is no disseizin, the land is still in common, but when a disseizin takes place, it ceases to be in common. The action of ejectment is for the purpose of bringing the estate back into common, thereby preparing it for partition, which ought to be the process. But when there is no disseizin, a co-tenant is not entitled to a writ of partition.

Since the enactment of the statute 3 and 4 Wm. IV. c. 136, (on Ejectment, 136,) the rule of the common law, that no proof of actual ouster in actions of ejectment, by one tenant in common against their co-tenants, has been established; or, in other words, a different rule has been established. This statute enacts that when any person entitled to a share of the rent as tenant in common shall have been in receipt of the entirety, or more than his undivided share of the land or rent, for his own benefit or the benefit of any person other than the person entitled thereto, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of the person so as aforesaid entitled.

"It follows," the learned author says, "as a corollary from this enactment, that one joint tenant, co-partner, or tenant in common, may always maintain ejectment against his companion, who is in possession of more than his share of the land, or receipt of more than his share of the rent; because such possession is no longer the possession of his co-tenant." (See Adams, 137.)

Now, while the English statute is not in force in this State, the common law, as it stood when that statute was enacted, is in force.

That statute changed the rule of the common law to this extent: 1st—It provided that one co-tenant might maintain ejectment against his companion who was in possession of less than the entirety; 2d—It changed the common law rule of evidence on the question of ouster, making the possession of one co-tenant, when it was for more than his share, evidence of ouster to that extent. The remedy applied by the statute indicates clearly the extent and reason of the change, because, before its enactment under the common law, one co-tenant could not maintain ejectment against his companion unless he was in possession of the entirety, on the ground that a possession of less than the entirety could not be deemed or treated as an adverse possession, which, under the common law, is an essential ingredient in the proof of ouster. And again, as to what constituted ouster under the common law, it is said that many subtle distinctions had been taken, and the statute was intended to provide a remedy in this particular, rendering the proof more simple and certain. The statute, however, left the common law as it stood before its enactment, so far as it relates to a co-tenant occupying no more than his share, which, under no circumstance, neither by the statute nor by the common law, can be tortured into an adverse possession. No stronger evidence could be adduced of the correctness of our position than is afforded by this English statute; because, if a co-tenant could have maintained ejectment against his companion when he was in possession of less than the entirety, and if such possession would have been adverse, then there would have been no necessity for the remedy provided by the statute, for the simple reason that there was no inconvenience in the rule as it stood at common law. Besides, we look in vain for any case, either in England or America, and the counsel for the appellant have failed in their researches to find or to point us to a single case where one tenant in common maintained ejectment against his fellow, where the possession extended to no more than his share.

And we here particularly wish to direct the attention of the Court to the pregnant fact, that all the cases cited for the appellant to show that he had been ousted are where one co-tenant undertook to claim and dispose of the whole property, or denied the title of the demandant to any part of the common property.

But we are here met with another maxim of the common law, and which is the sole foundation upon which the appellant rests his right to maintain his present action. It is said that the occupation of tenants in common is undivided, and that neither of them knoweth his part in several. (See 5 Bacon's Ab. 240.)

What is the true meaning of the term undivided occupation? In order to arrive at the sense in which this term or maxim of the common law is used, let us refer to another maxim, namely, that all the tenants have a right to enter upon the common property and occupy the same; and again, it is said that one tenant in common has no right to disturb his co-tenant in his enjoyment of the common property. When, therefore, we come to harmonize these maxims of the common law, and to make them consistent the one with the other, and to preserve the rights which they are intended to confer, we must be governed by a practical common sense view of the whole subject, and give to the terms used rather an enlarged construction, suited to the condition of the country, than that narrow and technical one which the appellant relies and insists upon.

When it is, therefore, said that their occupation is undivided, it certainly does not mean that all the tenants shall occupy the same precise space at the same moment of time, because that would imply a mathematical absurdity. Neither can it mean that if one is occupying a particular spot, that his fellow may insist upon occupying that precise locality, for that would be disturbing him in his possession and enjoyment of the common property. The occupation must, therefore, to preserve its unity, and to give to each his proportionable share of the occupation and enjoyment of the common property, be in its very nature several; because there can, physically speaking, be no such thing as an undivided occupation of a single spot of ground by two or more persons at the same time, except in theory, or, more properly speaking, except as a legal fiction. And this legal fiction of undivided occupation was invented to preserve what is called the unity of possession, which is the only unity belonging to tenancies in common. Hence it is said that the possession of one tenant is the possession of his companions also. So, if one enters under the common title, he enters for all, and although the others may never enter at all, still the occupation is undivided, the unity of possession is preserved, and if they all enter and occupy in severalty, such occupation is undivided. It is, therefore, only when one ceases to claim under the common title, denies the title of his co-tenant, and ousts him from the possession of the entire common property, that this theoretical unity of possession is destroyed, and the presumption of law that the possession of one is the possession of his fellow, ceases to exist.

That all the tenants should occupy separate and distinct parcels, and at the same time preserve the unity of possession, seems to have resulted from a practical and useful necessity growing out of the occupation of estates held in common; because, if the possession of one did not inure to the benefit and protection of all, there could be no such thing as either the peaceable enjoyment or the improvement of such property,

but there would be a perpetual conflict and a perpetual contest betwixt the tenants in regard to every part and parcel and fraction of the entirety. From what has been said, it would seem to follow that the general right of each tenant, legally flowing from the nature of the estate, should be deemed to fall within the application of the maxim, "sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lœdas;" and that neither should so occupy the common property as to injure or entirely destroy the rights of the others. In this there is a species of severance, but it is a severance which does not destroy or affect the unity of possession, but, on the contrary, preserves and defends it, and at the same time harmonizes all the other elements of this peculiar estate, giving to the joint owners of land not only a beneficial but a peaceable enjoyment of their respective interests. And again, it is said that neither knoweth his part in several; and from this maxim it is argued that a several occupation amounts to a practical severance by metes and bounds. If such occupation were not the occupation of all the other tenants, then it might be urged, with great show of plausibility, that the party so occupying was by his own act making partition of the common property. The right to enter carries with it the right to occupy; but the exercise of this right does not imply that the spot chosen for such purpose is the part selected as the several share of such occupant, but it is a mere temporary location, liable to be changed when partition is made; and until partition shall have been made, neither can know his part in several. It is essential to an estate in common to be subject to partition, but Courts, regarding all equities which may exist between the parties, will, in decreeing a partition of the common estate, see that the partition does not lessen any part of the estate in value, (see 1 P. Wm. 446,) and if one tenant has made valuable improvements on the part occupied by him, if it can be done without injury to others, such division will be made as to give him the benefit of his improvements, and even in such cases, recompense in money is made to those who occupy the part of less value. Thus it will be seen that Courts in making final partition of the common prop-

The appellant has failed to point us to any authority, either English or American, where the action of ejectment was maintained by one tenant in common against his co-tenant for an ouster for a mere moiety of the common property; and we now refer to the authorities cited by the appellant when this case was submitted, and which we claim establish beyond controversy that the ouster must be from the whole of the common property.

The English authority cited by the appellant is the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowper, 217. The Court will see that the ejectment in that case was for the entire common property. Lord Mansfield, in defining the essential points necessary to constitute ouster, says: "So in cases of tenants in common; the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, as tenant in common, can never bar his companion; because such possession is not adverse to the right of his companion, but in support of their common title; and by paying him his share he acknowledges him his co-tenant. Nor, indeed, is a refusal of itself sufficient, without denying his title. But if, upon demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse, and ouster enough."

The rule here laid down may be treated as the settled English doctrine on the question of ouster, from the time of its announcement down to the enactment of the statute of W. 4, to which reference has been made, and we submit that it sustains the views we have urged to the fullest extent.

First, it is necessary that when a demand is made, it must be for the precise moiety the other denies or refuses to pay, and denies his title, that is, his title to the common property, saying he claims the whole, that is, in the language of Littleton, "all," and continues in possession; this, the learned Judge says, is adverse and ouster enough. Nothing could be clearer, because to entirely preclude the idea that the occupancy of a part only could be construed into an ouster. He says, that the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, can never bar his companion, because it is not adverse, but is in support of the common title. The case at bar falls clearly within this rule. The respondent claimed merely as a tenant in common, and his possession never could be adverse, but must, therefore, be in support of the common title. He admitted the co-tenancy of the appellant, and never denied his title even by implication.

So in Helling's Case, 11 East, 50, it is said, one tenant in common in possession claiming the whole, and denying possession to the other, is sufficient evidence of an ouster.

So, in Doe v. Wawn, 3 M. & W. 339, it was held that, where property owned by four tenants in common, the property being covered with houses, and three of the tenants leased the premises for ninety-nine years to a railroad company, and the company pulled down the houses and constructed a railroad upon their site, against the wish of the other tenant, that such occupation was sufficient evidence of ouster, and this decision was made on the ground—1st, of the rule laid down by Littleton, namely, "that if one tenant in common occupy the whole and put the tenant out of possession and occupation," it is sufficient evidence of ouster; and, 2d, on account of the peculiar use which the other tenants, through the railway company, made of the entire premises, being of such a character as to exclude the co-tenant from occupying the land. Such acts, the learned Judge says, would be as effectual an exclusion as if the defendant had been prevented from entering and occupying in person.

The broad principle which runs through all the cases is here again asserted, namely, that it must be an exclusion from the whole of the common premises, amounting to an absolute denial of title, in order that one tenant may maintain ejectment against his companion, on the ground of ouster.

The appellant has cited us to Brackett v. Norcross, 1 Greenleaf, 89, as an authority which he claims is strongly in his favor. The learned Judge, in discussing the question of ouster, says: "On advertng to the evidence as reported by the Judge who presided on the trial we find, 'The agent of the demandant had repeatedly demanded possession—the defendant uniformly refused to admit the demandant to enter, or to suffer demandant's agent to occupy—he also denied demandant's title, and has ever since held the exclusive possession and occupation.'" Upon the facts as reported it was held that they afforded sufficient evidence of ouster. The Court will perceive by a perusal of this opinion that the same English authorities to which we have already referred, are quoted and relied upon, particularly the case in 1 Cowper, 217, and great stress is laid on the words, "denies his title, saying he claims the whole."

How widely the facts of this case differ from the case at bar. The language is, "he denied demandant's title, and has ever since held exclusive possession and occupation." (Fredeck v. Gray, 10 S. & R. 188; Valentine v. Northrop, 12 Wend. 495; Sigler v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. 419; Mumford v. Brown, 1 Wend. 52; Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 3; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Pick. 372; Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77.)

We insist that in order to establish an ouster by one co-tenant of his fellow, upon proof of a demand for possession and a refusal to comply, a demand for the precise moiety or share which the co-tenant claims is indispensable.

The reason of this rule must be apparent to all. In the first place a refusal of the co-tenant in possession to allow another to enter, is, as a general proposition, based upon a denial of the demandant's title to any part of the demanded premises; and this denial of title, we shall be able to show, is one of the chief, if not indispensable requisites in the proof of ouster. The necessity, therefore, that the party making the demand should specify the precise share which he claims, in order that the extent of his demand, as well as the consequences of his admission into the possession may be fairly understood by both parties, would seem to be too clear a proposition for argument. But, again, while the party in possession might be willing to admit the demandant, provided he claimed no more than his share, he might be very unwilling to admit him if he claimed more than his share; and if he did demand more, and the tenant in possession refused, and even denied his title to the extent claimed, such refusal and denial would not constitute ouster; but, as in the case at bar, where the extent of the demandant's interest is designated by the words "principal owner," leaving the extent of his claim entirely indefinite, undefined, and uncertain, we hold that no reply that could be made to such a demand, should be held to constitute proof of ouster.

On this point we shall first refer to the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowp. 218. Lord Mansfield says: "But if upon the demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole, and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse and *custe*r enough." The language here used leaves no doubt as to its meaning; that is, there must be a demand for the precise "moiety." Now it must not be said that the term "moiety," as here used, has reference solely to a demand of the rents and profits, and not to a demand of his share of the common property; because the reason why it should apply to the latter as well as to the former is the same, namely, that the party in possession may clearly understand the nature and extent of the demand made upon him, in order that he may give an intelligible reply, and that he may not be deceived or mislead by an ambiguously, cunningly worded demand, intended to provoke a refusal, for the express purpose of making proof of ouster when none exists. Littleton, too, as we have before seen, in speaking of the remedy of one co-tenant when he is put out of occupation, says, he should have against the other a writ of ejectione firmæ of the moiety.

In Colburn v. Mason, 25 Maine, 434, the rule seems to be clearly laid down that should be adopted in the case at bar. The proof was that the demandant, to show a disseizin, had read to the tenant in possession the description in his deed of a fourth part of the premises, and the witness said to him, "These are the premises you are in possession of." The answer was "Yes; it is hard to pay twice." Upon this statement of the facts it was held that no ouster had been proved. The Court say that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that the defendant denied their right to the possession, or that he did some other notorious act indicative of holding adversely to them, and that the evidence did not establish anything of the kind. And again, they say that not a word escaped his lips tending to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and that what he said could not amount to an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title.

It will, in the first place, be seen that the precise share of the demandant was stated, and, in the next place, it is laid down as a rule that the reply must amount to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and, in the language of the opinion, "an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title." Did the reply of the respondent in the case at bar amount to or even tend to show a denial of the appellant's title? His statement was, "that he owned an interest in the rancho, and was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, and that he could not let Mr. Carpentier into possession unless at the end of a lawsuit." In construing this reply, we must keep in view the nature of the demand, which was, that he, Carpentier, was the "principal owner." The adjective "principal," as used on that occasion, meant that he was the chief owner, or, in fact, that he owned pretty much all of the Rancho of San Ramon, and he demanded "to be let into the immediate possession and enjoyment of the same, and of every part and parcel thereof." To this demand the respondent refused to comply; but he did not deny the right of Carpentier as a co-tenant; he did not deny his title; but he merely insisted, as he owned an interest, as he was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, that he could not surrender up the entire possession of the premises, because the language in which the demand was couched lead inevitably to one of two conclusions, either that if he did comply with the demand, Carpentier would take possession of the chief part of his house as well as of his field, or that he intended to turn him out altogether. He

the entire possession of such lands and tenements, not of a part, but of the whole; that is, of "all" the lands so held in common. And the reason of the rule assigned by the author is, that such things, he says, are chattels real, and may be apportioned and severed. This has reference to the writ of partition which, although it is a writ of right, yet a tenant out of possession is not entitled to it. (In this particular our statute adopts the common law rule; it will, however, be shown that even an adverse holding of a fraction of the common property by one tenant will not prevent partition, if the other is in possession of any part of the common property.) In order, therefore, that this right of apportionment and severance by writ of partition shall not be defeated by the mere ouster of one tenant by the other from the possession of the entire property, it is provided that in all such cases the tenant ousted shall have his ejectment, for the purpose of restoring to him not only the possession, but the right on his part to compel partition of the common property. If a tenant out of possession could still compel partition, the remedy by action of ejectment for his undivided moiety would be without an object and useless. It may be stated that, as a general rule, ejectment will not lie by one tenant in common against his co-tenant, in any case where the remedy of partition exists; because, as long as there is no disseizin, the estate is still in common, but when a disseizin takes place, the estate ceases to be in common. The action of ejectment is therefore for the purpose of bringing the estate back into common, thereby preparing it for partition, which ought to be the first process. But when there is no disseizin, a co-tenant's remedy is by petition for partition.

Since the enactment of the statute 3 and 4 W., (see Adams on Ejectment, 136,) the rule of the common law requiring proof of actual ouster in actions of ejectment, brought by tenants in common against their co-tenants, has been dispensed with; or, in other words, a different rule has been adopted. This statute enacts that when any person entitled to any land or rent as tenant in common shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than his undivided share of the land or rent, for his own benefit or the benefit of any person other than the person entitled thereto, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of the person so as aforesaid entitled.

"It follows," the learned author says, "as a corollary from this enactment, that one joint tenant, co-partner, or tenant in common, may always maintain ejectment against his companion, who is in possession of more than his share of the land, or receipt of more than his share of the rent; because such possession is no longer the possession of his co-tenant." (See Adams, 137.)

Now, while the English statute is not in force in this State, the common law, as it stood when that statute was enacted, is in force.

That statute changed the rule of the common law to this extent: 1st—It provided that one co-tenant might maintain ejectment against his companion who was in possession of less than the entirety; 2d—It changed the common law rule of evidence on the question of ouster, making the possession of one co-tenant, when it was for more than his share, evidence of ouster to that extent. The remedy applied by the statute indicates clearly the extent and reason of the change, because, before its enactment under the common law, one co-tenant could not maintain ejectment against his companion unless he was in possession of the entirety, on the ground that a possession of less than the entirety could not be deemed or treated as an adverse possession, which, under the common law, is an essential ingredient in the proof of ouster. And again, as to what constituted ouster under the common law, it is said that many subtle distinctions had been taken, and the statute was intended to provide a remedy in this particular, rendering the proof more simple and certain. The statute, however, left the common law as it stood before its enactment, so far as it relates to a co-tenant occupying no more than his share, which, under no circumstance, neither by the statute nor by the common law, can be tortured into an adverse possession. No stronger evidence could be adduced of the correctness of our position than is afforded by this English statute; because, if a co-tenant could have maintained ejectment against his companion when he was in possession of less than the entirety, and if such possession would have been adverse, then there would have been no necessity for the remedy provided by the statute, for the simple reason that there was no inconvenience in the rule as it stood at common law. Besides, we look in vain for any case, either in England or America, and the counsel for the appellant have failed in their researches to find or to point us to a single case where one tenant in common maintained ejectment against his fellow, where the possession extended to no more than his share.

And we here particularly wish to direct the attention of the Court to the pregnant fact, that all the cases cited for the appellant to show that he had been ousted are where one co-tenant undertook to claim and dispose of the whole property, or denied the title of the demandant to any part of the common property.

But we are here met with another maxim of the common law, and which is the sole foundation upon which the appellant rests his right to maintain his present action. It is said that the occupation of tenants in common is undivided, and that neither of them knoweth his part in several. (See 5 Bacon's Ab. 240.)

What is the true meaning of the term undivided occupation? In order to arrive at the sense in which this term or maxim of the common law is used, let us refer to another maxim, namely, that all the tenants have a right to enter upon the common property and occupy the same; and again, it is said that one tenant in common has no right to disturb his co-tenant in his enjoyment of the common property. When, therefore, we come to harmonize these maxims of the common law, and to make them consistent the one with the other, and to preserve the rights which they are intended to confer, we must be governed by a practical common sense view of the whole subject, and give to the terms used rather an enlarged construction, suited to the condition of the country, than that narrow and technical one which the appellant relies and insists upon.

When it is, therefore, said that their occupation is undivided, it certainly does not mean that all the tenants shall occupy the same precise space at the same moment of time, because that would imply a mathematical absurdity. Neither can it mean that if one is occupying a particular spot, that his fellow may insist upon occupying that precise locality, for that would be disturbing him in his possession and enjoyment of the common property. The occupation must, therefore, to preserve its unity, and to give to each his proportionable share of the occupation and enjoyment of the common property, be in its very nature several; because there can, physically speaking, be no such thing as an undivided occupation of a single spot of ground by two or more persons at the same time, except in theory, or, more properly speaking, except as a legal fiction. And this legal fiction of undivided occupation was invented to preserve what is called the unity of possession, which is the only unity belonging to tenancies in common. Hence it is said that the possession of one tenant is the possession of his companions also. So, if one enters under the common title, he enters for all, and although the others may never enter at all, still the occupation is undivided, the unity of possession is preserved, and if they all enter and occupy in severalty, such occupation is undivided. It is, therefore, only when one ceases to claim under the common title, denies the title of his co-tenant, and ousts him from the possession of the entire common property, that this theoretical unity of possession is destroyed, and the presumption of law that the possession of one is the possession of his fellow, ceases to exist.

That all the tenants should occupy separate and distinct parcels, and at the same time preserve the unity of possession, seems to have resulted from a practical and useful necessity growing out of the occupation of estates held in common; because, if the possession of one did not inure to the benefit and protection of all, there could be no such thing as either the peaceable enjoyment or the improvement of such property,

but there would be a perpetual conflict and a perpetual contest betwixt the tenants in regard to every part and parcel and fraction of the entirety. From what has been said, it would seem to follow that the general right of each tenant, legally flowing from the nature of the estate, should be deemed to fall within the application of the maxim, "sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lœdas;" and that neither should so occupy the common property as to injure or entirely destroy the rights of the others. In this there is a species of severance, but it is a severance which does not destroy or affect the unity of possession, but, on the contrary, preserves and defends it, and at the same time harmonizes all the other elements of this peculiar estate, giving to the joint owners of land not only a beneficial but a peaceable enjoyment of their respective interests. And again, it is said that neither knoweth his part in several; and from this maxim it is argued that a several occupation amounts to a practical severance by metes and bounds. If such occupation were not the occupation of all the other tenants, then it might be urged, with great show of plausibility, that the party so occupying was by his own act making partition of the common property. The right to enter carries with it the right to occupy; but the exercise of this right does not imply that the spot chosen for such purpose is the part selected as the several share of such occupant, but it is a mere temporary location, liable to be changed when partition is made; and until partition shall have been made, neither can know his part in several. It is essential to an estate in common to be subject to partition, but Courts, regarding all equities which may exist between the parties, will, in decreeing a partition of the common estate, see that the partition does not lessen any part of the estate in value, (see 1 P. Wm. 446,) and if one tenant has made valuable improvements on the part occupied by him, if it can be done without injury to others, such division will be made as to give him the benefit of his improvements, and even in such cases, recompense in money is made to those who occupy the part of less value. Thus it will be seen that Courts in making final partition of the common prop-

The appellant has failed to point us to any authority, either English or American, where the action of ejectment was maintained by one tenant in common against his co-tenant for an ouster for a mere moiety of the common property; and we now refer to the authorities cited by the appellant when this case was submitted, and which we claim establish beyond controversy that the ouster must be from the whole of the common property.

The English authority cited by the appellant is the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowper, 217. The Court will see that the ejectment in that case was for the entire common property. Lord Mansfield, in defining the essential points necessary to constitute ouster, says: "So in cases of tenants in common; the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, as tenant in common, can never bar his companion; because such possession is not adverse to the right of his companion, but in support of their common title; and by paying him his share he acknowledges him his co-tenant. Nor, indeed, is a refusal of itself sufficient, without denying his title. But if, upon demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse, and ouster enough."

The rule here laid down may be treated as the settled English doctrine on the question of ouster, from the time of its announcement down to the enactment of the statute of W. 4, to which reference has been made, and we submit that it sustains the views we have urged to the fullest extent.

First, it is necessary that when a demand is made, it must be for the precise moiety the other denies or refuses to pay, and denies his title, that is, his title to the common property, saying he claims the whole, that is, in the language of Littleton, "all," and continues in possession; this, the learned Judge says, is adverse and ouster enough. Nothing could be clearer, because to entirely preclude the idea that the occupancy of a part only could be construed into an ouster. He says, that the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, can never bar his companion, because it is not adverse, but is in support of the common title. The case at bar falls clearly within this rule. The respondent claimed merely as a tenant in common, and his possession never could be adverse, but must, therefore, be in support of the common title. He admitted the co-tenancy of the appellant, and never denied his title even by implication.

So in Helling's Case, 11 East, 50, it is said, one tenant in common in possession claiming the whole, and denying possession to the other, is sufficient evidence of an ouster.

So, in Doe v. Wawn, 3 M. & W. 339, it was held that, where property owned by four tenants in common, the property being covered with houses, and three of the tenants leased the premises for ninety-nine years to a railroad company, and the company pulled down the houses and constructed a railroad upon their site, against the wish of the other tenant, that such occupation was sufficient evidence of ouster, and this decision was made on the ground — 1st, of the rule laid down by Littleton, namely, "that if one tenant in common occupy the whole and put the tenant out of possession and occupation," it is sufficient evidence of ouster; and, 2d, on account of the peculiar use which the other tenants, through the railway company, made of the entire premises, being of such a character as to exclude the co-tenant from occupying the land. Such acts, the learned Judge says, would be as effectual an exclusion as if the defendant had been prevented from entering and occupying in person.

The broad principle which runs through all the cases is here again asserted, namely, that it must be an exclusion from the whole of the common premises, amounting to an absolute denial of title, in order that one tenant may maintain ejectment against his companion, on the ground of ouster.

The appellant has cited us to Brackett v. Norcross, 1 Greenleaf, 89, as an authority which he claims is strongly in his favor. The learned Judge, in discussing the question of ouster, says: "On adverting to the evidence as reported by the Judge who presided on the trial we find, 'The agent of the demandant had repeatedly demanded possession—the defendant uniformly refused to admit the demandant to enter, or to suffer demandant's agent to occupy—he also denied demandant's title, and has ever since held the exclusive possession and occupation.'" Upon the facts as reported it was held that they afforded sufficient evidence of ouster. The Court will perceive by a perusal of this opinion that the same English authorities to which we have already referred, are quoted and relied upon, particularly the case in 1 Cowper, 217, and great stress is laid on the words, "denies his title, saying he claims the whole."

How widely the facts of this case differ from the case at bar. The language is, "he denied demandant's title, and has ever since held exclusive possession and occupation." (Fredeck v. Gray, 10 S. & R. 188; Valentine v. Northrop, 12 Wend. 495; Sigler v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. 419; Mumford v. Brown, 1 Wend. 52; Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 3; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Pick. 372; Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77.)

We insist that in order to establish an ouster by one co-tenant of his fellow, upon proof of a demand for possession and a refusal to comply, a demand for the precise moiety or share which the co-tenant claims is indispensable.

The reason of this rule must be apparent to all. In the first place a refusal of the co-tenant in possession to allow another to enter, is, as a general proposition, based upon a denial of the demandant's title to any part of the demanded premises; and this denial of title, we shall be able to show, is one of the chief, if not indispensable requisites in the proof of ouster. The necessity, therefore, that the party making the demand should specify the precise share which he claims, in order that the extent of his demand, as well as the consequences of his admission into the possession may be fairly understood by both parties, would seem to be too clear a proposition for argument. But, again, while the party in possession might be willing to admit the demandant, provided he claimed no more than his share, he might be very unwilling to admit him if he claimed more than his share; and if he did demand more, and the tenant in possession refused, and even denied his title to the extent claimed, such refusal and denial would not constitute ouster; but, as in the case at bar, where the extent of the demandant's interest is designated by the words "principal owner," leaving the extent of his claim entirely indefinite, undefined, and uncertain, we hold that no reply that could be made to such a demand, should be held to constitute proof of ouster.

On this point we shall first refer to the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowp. 218. Lord Mansfield says: "But if upon the demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole, and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse and custet enough." The language here used leaves no doubt as to its meaning; that is, there must be a demand for the precise "moiety." Now it must not be said that the term "moiety," as here used, has reference solely to a demand of the rents and profits, and not to a demand of his share of the common property; because the reason why it should apply to the latter as well as to the former is the same, namely, that the party in possession may clearly understand the nature and extent of the demand made upon him, in order that he may give an intelligible reply, and that he may not be deceived or mislead by an ambiguously, cunningly worded demand, intended to provoke a refusal, for the express purpose of making proof of ouster when none exists. Littleton, too, as we have before seen, in speaking of the remedy of one co-tenant when he is put out of occupation, says, he should have against the other a writ of ejectione firmæ of the moiety.

In Colburn v. Mason, 25 Maine, 434, the rule seems to be clearly laid down that should be adopted in the case at bar. The proof was that the demandant, to show a disseizin, had read to the tenant in possession the description in his deed of a fourth part of the premises, and the witness said to him, "These are the premises you are in possession of." The answer was "Yes; it is hard to pay twice." Upon this statement of the facts it was held that no ouster had been proved. The Court say that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that the defendant denied their right to the possession, or that he did some other notorious act indicative of holding adversely to them, and that the evidence did not establish anything of the kind. And again, they say that not a word escaped his lips tending to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and that what he said could not amount to an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title.

It will, in the first place, be seen that the precise share of the demandant was stated, and, in the next place, it is laid down as a rule that the reply must amount to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and, in the language of the opinion, "an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title." Did the reply of the respondent in the case at bar amount to or even tend to show a denial of the appellant's title? His statement was, "that he owned an interest in the rancho, and was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, and that he could not let Mr. Carpentier into possession unless at the end of a lawsuit." In construing this reply, we must keep in view the nature of the demand, which was, that he, Carpentier, was the "principal owner." The adjective "principal," as used on that occasion, meant that he was the chief owner, or, in fact, that he owned pretty much all of the Rancho of San Ramon, and he demanded "to be let into the immediate possession and enjoyment of the same, and of every part and parcel thereof." To this demand the respondent refused to comply; but he did not deny the right of Carpentier as a co-tenant; he did not deny his title; but he merely insisted, as he owned an interest, as he was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, that he could not surrender up the entire possession of the premises, because the language in which the demand was couched lead inevitably to one of two conclusions, either that if he did comply with the demand, Carpentier would take possession of the chief part of his house as well as of his field, or that he intended to turn him out altogether. He

the entire possession of such lands and tenements, not of a part, but of the whole; that is, of "all" the lands so held in common. And the reason of the rule assigned by the author is, that such things, he says, are chattels real, and may be apportioned and severed. This has reference to the writ of partition which, although it is a writ of right, yet a tenant out of possession is not entitled to it. (In this particular our statute adopts the common law rule; it will, however, be shown that even an adverse holding of a fraction of the common property by one tenant will not prevent partition, if the other is in possession of any part of the common property.) In order, therefore, that this right of apportionment and severance by writ of partition shall not be defeated by the mere ouster of one tenant by the other from the possession of the entire property, it is provided that in all such cases the tenant ousted shall have his ejectment, for the purpose of restoring to him not only the possession, but the right on his part to compel partition of the common property. If a tenant out of possession could still compel partition, the remedy by action of ejectment for his undivided moiety would be without an object and useless. It may be stated that, as a general rule, ejectment will not lie by one tenant in common against his co-tenant, in any case where the remedy of partition exists; because, as long as there is no disseizin, the estate is still in common, but when a disseizin takes place, the estate ceases to be in common. The action of ejectment is therefore for the purpose of bringing the estate back into common, thereby preparing it for partition, which ought to be the first process. But when there is no disseizin, a co-tenant's remedy is by petition for partition.

Since the enactment of the statute 3 and 4 W., (see Adams on Ejectment, 136,) the rule of the common law requiring proof of actual ouster in actions of ejectment, brought by tenants in common against their co-tenants, has been dispensed with; or, in other words, a different rule has been adopted. This statute enacts that when any person entitled to any land or rent as tenant in common shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than his undivided share of the land or rent, for his own benefit or the benefit of any person other than the person entitled thereto, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of the person so as aforesaid entitled.

"It follows," the learned author says, "as a corollary from this enactment, that one joint tenant, co-partner, or tenant in common, may always maintain ejectment against his companion, who is in possession of more than his share of the land, or receipt of more than his share of the rent; because such possession is no longer the possession of his co-tenant." (See Adams, 137.)

Now, while the English statute is not in force in this State, the common law, as it stood when that statute was enacted, is in force.

That statute changed the rule of the common law to this extent: 1st—It provided that one co-tenant might maintain ejectment against his companion who was in possession of less than the entirety; 2d—It changed the common law rule of evidence on the question of ouster, making the possession of one co-tenant, when it was for more than his share, evidence of ouster to that extent. The remedy applied by the statute indicates clearly the extent and reason of the change, because, before its enactment under the common law, one co-tenant could not maintain ejectment against his companion unless he was in possession of the entirety, on the ground that a possession of less than the entirety could not be deemed or treated as an adverse possession, which, under the common law, is an essential ingredient in the proof of ouster. And again, as to what constituted ouster under the common law, it is said that many subtle distinctions had been taken, and the statute was intended to provide a remedy in this particular, rendering the proof more simple and certain. The statute, however, left the common law as it stood before its enactment, so far as it relates to a co-tenant occupying no more than his share, which, under no circumstance, neither by the statute nor by the common law, can be tortured into an adverse possession. No stronger evidence could be adduced of the correctness of our position than is afforded by this English statute; because, if a co-tenant could have maintained ejectment against his companion when he was in possession of less than the entirety, and if such possession would have been adverse, then there would have been no necessity for the remedy provided by the statute, for the simple reason that there was no inconvenience in the rule as it stood at common law. Besides, we look in vain for any case, either in England or America, and the counsel for the appellant have failed in their researches to find or to point us to a single case where one tenant in common maintained ejectment against his fellow, where the possession extended to no more than his share.

And we here particularly wish to direct the attention of the Court to the pregnant fact, that all the cases cited for the appellant to show that he had been ousted are where one co-tenant undertook to claim and dispose of the whole property, or denied the title of the demandant to any part of the common property.

But we are here met with another maxim of the common law, and which is the sole foundation upon which the appellant rests his right to maintain his present action. It is said that the occupation of tenants in common is undivided, and that neither of them kneweth his part in several. (See 5 Bacon's Ab. 240.)

What is the true meaning of the term undivided occupation? In order to arrive at the sense in which this term or maxim of the common law is used, let us refer to another maxim, namely, that all the tenants have a right to enter upon the common property and occupy the same; and again, it is said that one tenant in common has no right to disturb his co-tenant in his enjoyment of the common property. When, therefore, we come to harmonize these maxims of the common law, and to make them consistent the one with the other, and to preserve the rights which they are intended to confer, we must be governed by a practical common sense view of the whole subject, and give to the terms used rather an enlarged construction, suited to the condition of the country, than that narrow and technical one which the appellant relies and insists upon.

When it is, therefore, said that their occupation is undivided, it certainly does not mean that all the tenants shall occupy the same precise space at the same moment of time, because that would imply a mathematical absurdity. Neither can it mean that if one is occupying a particular spot, that his fellow may insist upon occupying that precise locality, for that would be disturbing him in his possession and enjoyment of the common property. The occupation must, therefore, to preserve its unity, and to give to each his proportionable share of the occupation and enjoyment of the common property, be in its very nature several; because there can, physically speaking, be no such thing as an undivided occupation of a single spot of ground by two or more persons at the same time, except in theory, or, more properly speaking, except as a legal fiction. And this legal fiction of undivided occupation was invented to preserve what is called the unity of possession, which is the only unity belonging to tenancies in common. Hence it is said that the possession of one tenant is the possession of his companions also. So, if one enters under the common title, he enters for all, and although the others may never enter at all, still the occupation is undivided, the unity of possession is preserved, and if they all enter and occupy in severalty, such occupation is undivided. It is, therefore, only when one ceases to claim under the common title, denies the title of his co-tenant, and ousts him from the possession of the entire common property, that this theoretical unity of possession is destroyed, and the presumption of law that the possession of one is the possession of his fellow, ceases to exist.

That all the tenants should occupy separate and distinct parcels, and at the same time preserve the unity of possession, seems to have resulted from a practical and useful necessity growing out of the occupation of estates held in common; because, if the possession of one did not inure to the benefit and protection of all, there could be no such thing as either the peaceable enjoyment or the improvement of such property,

but there would be a perpetual conflict and a perpetual contest betwixt the tenants in regard to every part and parcel and fraction of the entirety. From what has been said, it would seem to follow that the general right of each tenant, legally flowing from the nature of the estate, should be deemed to fall within the application of the maxim, "sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lœdas;" and that neither should so occupy the common property as to injure or entirely destroy the rights of the others. In this there is a species of severance, but it is a severance which does not destroy or affect the unity of possession, but, on the contrary, preserves and defends it, and at the same time harmonizes all the other elements of this peculiar estate, giving to the joint owners of land not only a beneficial but a peaceable enjoyment of their respective interests. And again, it is said that neither knoweth his part in several; and from this maxim it is argued that a several occupation amounts to a practical severance by metes and bounds. If such occupation were not the occupation of all the other tenants, then it might be urged, with great show of plausibility, that the party so occupying was by his own act making partition of the common property. The right to enter carries with it the right to occupy; but the exercise of this right does not imply that the spot chosen for such purpose is the part selected as the several share of such occupant, but it is a mere temporary location, liable to be changed when partition is made; and until partition shall have been made, neither can know his part in several. It is essential to an estate in common to be subject to partition, but Courts, regarding all equities which may exist between the parties, will, in decreeing a partition of the common estate, see that the partition does not lessen any part of the estate in value, (see 1 P. Wm. 446,) and if one tenant has made valuable improvements on the part occupied by him, if it can be done without injury to others, such division will be made as to give him the benefit of his improvements, and even in such cases, recompense in money is made to those who occupy the part of less value. Thus it will be seen that Courts in making final partition of the common prop-

The appellant has failed to point us to any authority, either English or American, where the action of ejectment was maintained by one tenant in common against his co-tenant for an ouster for a mere moiety of the common property; and we now refer to the authorities cited by the appellant when this case was submitted, and which we claim establish beyond controversy that the ouster must be from the whole of the common property.

The English authority cited by the appellant is the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowper, 217. The Court will see that the ejectment in that case was for the entire common property. Lord Mansfield, in defining the essential points necessary to constitute ouster, says: "So in cases of tenants in common; the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, as tenant in common, can never bar his companion; because such possession is not adverse to the right of his companion, but in support of their common title; and by paying him his share he acknowledges him his co-tenant. Nor, indeed, is a refusal of itself sufficient, without denying his title. But if, upon demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse, and ouster enough."

The rule here laid down may be treated as the settled English doctrine on the question of ouster, from the time of its announcement down to the enactment of the statute of W. 4, to which reference has been made, and we submit that it sustains the views we have urged to the fullest extent.

First, it is necessary that when a demand is made, it must be for the precise moiety the other denies or refuses to pay, and denies his title, that is, his title to the common property, saying he claims the whole, that is, in the language of Littleton, "all," and continues in possession; this, the learned Judge says, is adverse and ouster enough. Nothing could be clearer, because to entirely preclude the idea that the occupancy of a part only could be construed into an ouster. He says, that the possession of one tenant in common, eo nomine, can never bar his companion, because it is not adverse, but is in support of the common title. The case at bar falls clearly within this rule. The respondent claimed merely as a tenant in common, and his possession never could be adverse, but must, therefore, be in support of the common title. He admitted the co-tenancy of the appellant, and never denied his title even by implication.

So in Helling's Case, 11 East, 50, it is said, one tenant in common in possession claiming the whole, and denying possession to the other, is sufficient evidence of an ouster.

So, in Doe v. Wawn, 3 M. & W. 339, it was held that, where property owned by four tenants in common, the property being covered with houses, and three of the tenants leased the premises for ninety-nine years to a railroad company, and the company pulled down the houses and constructed a railroad upon their site, against the wish of the other tenant, that such occupation was sufficient evidence of ouster, and this decision was made on the ground — 1st, of the rule laid down by Littleton, namely, "that if one tenant in common occupy the whole and put the tenant out of possession and occupation," it is sufficient evidence of ouster; and, 2d, on account of the peculiar use which the other tenants, through the railway company, made of the entire premises, being of such a character as to exclude the co-tenant from occupying the land. Such acts, the learned Judge says, would be as effectual an exclusion as if the defendant had been prevented from entering and occupying in person.

The broad principle which runs through all the cases is here again asserted, namely, that it must be an exclusion from the whole of the common premises, amounting to an absolute denial of title, in order that one tenant may maintain ejectment against his companion, on the ground of ouster.

The appellant has cited us to Brackett v. Norcross, 1 Greenleaf, 89, as an authority which he claims is strongly in his favor. The learned Judge, in discussing the question of ouster, says: "On adverting to the evidence as reported by the Judge who presided on the trial we find, 'The agent of the demandant had repeatedly demanded possession—the defendant uniformly refused to admit the demandant to enter, or to suffer demandant's agent to occupy—he also denied demandant's title, and has ever since held the exclusive possession and occupation.'" Upon the facts as reported it was held that they afforded sufficient evidence of ouster. The Court will perceive by a perusal of this opinion that the same English authorities to which we have already referred, are quoted and relied upon, particularly the case in 1 Cowper, 217, and great stress is laid on the words, "denies his title, saying he claims the whole."

How widely the facts of this case differ from the case at bar. The language is, "he denied demandant's title, and has ever since held exclusive possession and occupation." (Fredeck v. Gray, 10 S. & R. 188; Valentine v. Northrop, 12 Wend. 495; Sigler v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. 419; Mumford v. Brown, 1 Wend. 52; Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 3; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Pick. 372; Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77.)

We insist that in order to establish an ouster by one co-tenant of his fellow, upon proof of a demand for possession and a refusal to comply, a demand for the precise moiety or share which the co-tenant claims is indispensable.

The reason of this rule must be apparent to all. In the first place a refusal of the co-tenant in possession to allow another to enter, is, as a general proposition, based upon a denial of the demandant's title to any part of the demanded premises; and this denial of title, we shall be able to show, is one of the chief, if not indispensable requisites in the proof of ouster. The necessity, therefore, that the party making the demand should specify the precise share which he claims, in order that the extent of his demand, as well as the consequences of his admission into the possession may be fairly understood by both parties, would seem to be too clear a proposition for argument. But, again, while the party in possession might be willing to admit the demandant, provided he claimed no more than his share, he might be very unwilling to admit him if he claimed more than his share; and if he did demand more, and the tenant in possession refused, and even denied his title to the extent claimed, such refusal and denial would not constitute ouster; but, as in the case at bar, where the extent of the demandant's interest is designated by the words "principal owner," leaving the extent of his claim entirely indefinite, undefined, and uncertain, we hold that no reply that could be made to such a demand, should be held to constitute proof of ouster.

On this point we shall first refer to the case of Fisher & Taylor v. Prosser, 1 Cowp. 218. Lord Mansfield says: "But if upon the demand of the co-tenant of his moiety, the other denies to pay, and denies his title, saying he claims the whole, and will not pay, and continues in possession, such possession is adverse and ouster enough." The language here used leaves no doubt as to its meaning; that is, there must be a demand for the precise "moiety." Now it must not be said that the term "moiety," as here used, has reference solely to a demand of the rents and profits, and not to a demand of his share of the common property; because the reason why it should apply to the latter as well as to the former is the same, namely, that the party in possession may clearly understand the nature and extent of the demand made upon him, in order that he may give an intelligible reply, and that he may not be deceived or mislead by an ambiguously, cunningly worded demand, intended to provoke a refusal, for the express purpose of making proof of ouster when none exists. Littleton, too, as we have before seen, in speaking of the remedy of one co-tenant when he is put out of occupation, says, he should have against the other a writ of ejectione firmæ of the moiety.

In Colburn v. Mason, 25 Maine, 434, the rule seems to be clearly laid down that should be adopted in the case at bar. The proof was that the demandant, to show a disseizin, had read to the tenant in possession the description in his deed of a fourth part of the premises, and the witness said to him, "These are the premises you are in possession of." The answer was "Yes; it is hard to pay twice." Upon this statement of the facts it was held that no ouster had been proved. The Court say that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that the defendant denied their right to the possession, or that he did some other notorious act indicative of holding adversely to them, and that the evidence did not establish anything of the kind. And again, they say that not a word escaped his lips tending to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and that what he said could not amount to an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title.

It will, in the first place, be seen that the precise share of the demandant was stated, and, in the next place, it is laid down as a rule that the reply must amount to a denial of the demandant's right as a co-tenant, and, in the language of the opinion, "an unequivocal denial of the demandant's title." Did the reply of the respondent in the case at bar amount to or even tend to show a denial of the appellant's title? His statement was, "that he owned an interest in the rancho, and was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, and that he could not let Mr. Carpentier into possession unless at the end of a lawsuit." In construing this reply, we must keep in view the nature of the demand, which was, that he, Carpentier, was the "principal owner." The adjective "principal," as used on that occasion, meant that he was the chief owner, or, in fact, that he owned pretty much all of the Rancho of San Ramon, and he demanded "to be let into the immediate possession and enjoyment of the same, and of every part and parcel thereof." To this demand the respondent refused to comply; but he did not deny the right of Carpentier as a co-tenant; he did not deny his title; but he merely insisted, as he owned an interest, as he was in possession of no more than he was entitled to, that he could not surrender up the entire possession of the premises, because the language in which the demand was couched lead inevitably to one of two conclusions, either that if he did comply with the demand, Carpentier would take possession of the chief part of his house as well as of his field, or that he intended to turn him out altogether. He ble for one tenant to oust his companion, it must be impossible also to possess adversely to him.

In Bennett v. Clemence et al., 6 Allen 10, the parties were tenants in common of a tract of land, and the plaintiff owned a tract adjoining in severalty. The plaintiff erected a permanent building, the principal part of which stood upon his own land, but a small portion of it was on the common lands, but not enough to be used separately with any advantage to the occupant. It was held "that such an exclusive appropriation of a part of the common lands by one tenant in common, to his own use, by the erection of a permanent structure, was evidence of an ouster of the co-tenant;" and it was stated as a general truth, that "a tenant in common may re-enter into the part from which he has been ousted, provided he can do so without a forcible entry or breach of the peace."

The entire correctness of these decisions is not only manifested by the principles and analogies already adduced, but also from a well settled doctrine to which we now for a moment invite attention. If one tenant in common convey a particular part of the lands held in common, to a stranger, the deed is void, or, at least, voidable, as to his co-tenant, though good against the grantor. It follows, then, that if the grantee should enter upon and occupy the part so conveyed to him, and should, furthermore, exclude the co-tenant therefrom, that the latter would have his action to be let into possession. According to Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 368, "the conveyance could have no legal effect to the prejudice of the co-tenant," but "that, until partition, the grantee would be entitled to the use and possession as co-tenant, in the parcel conveyed, with the other owners." Now, if the act of exclusion, in the case put, would amount to an ouster, why should not the same act, if performed by the maker of the deed, be followed by a like consequence? No reason can be suggested except those we have previously considered and held to be fallacious.

We close the discussion on this branch of the general subject, by suggesting that the cases which have been cited, are to be regarded as so many judicial expositions of the true meaning of the rule as stated in Littleton. By that statement, the one tenant must "occupy," as distinguished from "possess." He must also put the other "out of occupation." The aggressing tenant must occupy "all"—that is, he must actually occupy all of that from which he excludes his companion—the sole point and purpose of the author being to state that, as between tenants in common and joint tenants, there could be no ouster except one that was actual, as contradistinguished from constructive. And that Coke understood that to be the only point made in the text, is entirely manifest from the first passage in his general comment, which passage we here reproduce as it is written: "The one occupy all and put the other out of possession." These are words materially added, for "albeit one tenant in common take the whole profits, the other hath no remedie by law against him, for the taking of the whole profits is no ejectment."

Third—The remaining ground upon which it is argued that no evidence was introduced at the trial tending to prove an ouster, is, that there was none tending to prove a denial of plaintiff's title by the defendant; but, on the contrary, that the evidence was decisive to show that his title as tenant in common was formally and persistently acknowledged.

In case an ouster is sought to be proved, as between tenants in common, on the ground that the defendant being in the sole possession of the land, refused to pay to his co-tenant his just share of the rents and profits, the refusal, unaccompanied with a denial of the title of the co-tenant, will not amount to an ouster. The case of Fisher v. Prosser, 1 Cowp. 217, cited for the respondent, goes to that conclusion only. The case at bar is of an entirely different impression. On grounds already stated, the plaintiff had a right of entry upon the demanded premises; and that right was denied and resisted—the defendant being at the time in the sole occupation of the sixty acres. Littleton gives the rule applicable to the facts of this case in the passage previously cited; and the ouster therein declared consists solely in a putting "out of possession and occupation;" and it is well settled that exclusion from possession and putting out of possession are equivalents in law. Coke (Sec. 323) makes no account of denial of title in the sense in which the phrase is used in the objection; for he says if one tenant in common "will not suffer the other to enter and occupy the land, this is an ejectment or expulsion." These definitions make the ouster to consist in overt acts; and if the co-tenant is either expelled or excluded from the land by reason of them, he having the right to remain, or to enter upon it, all the facts are ascertained which the definitions contemplate. And it may be added, that such overt acts practically deny the only "title" directly involved in the transaction, viz: the then present right of entry. The admission made by the defendant of the plaintiff's title, whether studied or otherwise, in our judgment, amounts to nothing. Allegans contra-ria non est audiendus. A disseizor cannot qualify his own wrongs. (Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59.) Exactly stated, the defendant admitted the right of property, which was several, and which no hostile action on his part could presently affect, but denied the right which was joint and which it was within his power to thwart, viz: the right of immediate possession. If the defendant had denied the several right of property and allowed the plaintiff to enter, no ouster would have resulted; and it follows that a mere verbal admission of that right cannot defeat an ouster wrought out upon other and sufficient grounds. "The defendant positively refused to let the plaintiff into possession," and therein he denied to the plaintiff the benefit of the title which he admitted to be fully vested in him.

There is a diversity of methods by which it may be proved that one co-tenant has been ousted by another, and that now in question is one of the number, and is not to be confounded with the others. The authorities are decisive, that when the co-tenant makes a proper demand, not for his share of the rents and profits, but to be let into possession, and the request is refused, and the tenant upon whom the demand is made continues in possession thereafter, such possession will be considered as adverse, even though there was no formal denial of title. The result of the cases is well presented in 2 Greenleaf's Evidence, Sec. 318: "An ouster in such case, therefore, must be proved by acts of an adverse character; such as claiming the whole for himself, denying the title of his companion, or refusing to permit him to enter, and the like.

The respondent insists that the demand made by the plaintiff was substantially defective, for the reason that the precise share of the plaintiff in the rancho was not stated. The answer of the defendant shows that he knew at the time his answer was filed, that the plaintiff owned an undivided half of the rancho as tenant in common with him; and the evidence tended to prove that he knew of the relation at the time of the demand, and that the plaintiff was the principal owner. If the defendant knew that he and the plaintiff were tenants in common, and that plaintiff was the principal owner, the jury, in view of those and the other facts in the case, might very well have concluded that the defendant knew the precise extent of the plaintiff's interest at the date of the demand, if the fact was material to be proved.

It is further insisted that the demand must be considered as abortive, for the alleged reason that the plaintiff demanded the sole possession of the premises—the demand made involving a notice to quit. The demand, so far forth as it was in writing, required the defendant "to let the plaintiff into possession," etc. The words "let into possession," when occurring in a connection like the one in which they were used, do not, in our judgment import a notice to quit; but if the question admits of any doubt, still it appears by the record that the plaintiff during his interview with the defendant stated to him verbally that he wanted "to be let into the possession of the land with the defendant," and "the defendant did not accede to said demand," but "positively refused to let the plaintiff into possession." When the written demand and the verbal explanation are considered in connection with each other, it is apparent, that the claim of the plaintiff was not for the sole but the joint possession of the premises demanded.

It is further insisted for the respondent that inasmuch as the

Mexican grant under which both parties claim title was of two square leagues, to be located within certain exterior boundary lines, containing six square leagues, and inasmuch as no survey and location had been made before the commencement of the action, it cannot be considered that the defendant had been guilty of an ouster, even though all the legal views heretofore expressed in this opinion should be admitted or assumed to be correct.

It is urged that in Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 590, and in Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552, the defendants were mere trespassers without title; and the point made, is, that a distinction should be taken between the case of a defendant with title and that of a defendant without title.

The parties are tenants in common. The defendant, in his answer, recognizes that relation as existing between himself and the plaintiff, and he cannot properly claim any right, or any exemption, except such as are due to him under the law by which that relation is governed. The defendant, by the rule of the relation, is entitled to possess the land, and every part of it, in common with the plaintiff; and the plaintiff has the right to possess the land, and every part of it, in common with him; but if either the one or the other prevents his associate from entering upon the land, or any part thereof, he performs an act which the law of the relation forbids, and the wrong would be none the less a wrong for the reason that it was perpetrated by a coproprietor. We do not find it at all essential to consider whether the original grant to Castro and Pacheco passed the legal title to them on the delivery of the grant. It is enough that it passed to the grantees an immediate and vested interest in the quantity of land therein specified, (Fremont v. The United States, 17 How. 542,) with the joint right to hold and possess to the larger boundaries until survey. (Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 590; Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552; Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569.) In short, the record finds that the relation of tenants in common exists between the parties, and that it has existed since the 10th day of March, 1860. We must accept that relation as a fact, and our only office in error is to adjudge upon the rights of the parties by the tests which the law of that relation supplies.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

ISAAC ROFF v. C. P. DUANE, W. G. ROSS, DANIEL HARVEY, FREDERICK HOOD, DANIEL DONALDSON, JOHN A. KELLEY, DANIEL SWEENY, AND PATRICK H. OWENS.

RENTS AND PROFITS IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—As the right to the possession of the premises is not in issue in an action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer, if it is found that at the time of the alleged forcible entry the plaintiff had the actual and peaceable possession, and that the defendants unlawfully detained the premises, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the monthly rents and profits during the time of the unlawful detainer, without regard to the nature or extent of the right or title by which he held the possession.

EVIDENCE IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—If B. and H. are in the peaceable possession of a lot of land, and S. and S., accompanied by others — their employés — forcibly evict them therefrom and take possession, and then lease the lot to R., who enters into peaceable possession, and five days afterwards D. and H., with others, forcibly dispossess R. and take possession, and R. brings an action of forcible entry against them, D. and H. cannot introduce evidence of their prior eviction by S. and S. in defense.

EFFECT OF STATING PURPOSE OF EVIDENCE.—If a document is offered in evidence, and the party offering it states that he offers it for a particular purpose, it must be confined in its effect as evidence to the purpose expressed when it was offered.

A LEASE IN FORM NOT SIGNED BY THE LESSOR.—A lease in form, which contains the name of one person as lessor in the body of it, and is signed by another person, and also the lessee, is not a lease, nor is it admissible in evidence in an action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer on behalf of the nominal lessee, (the plaintiff in the action,) for the purpose of showing the extent of the property which the plaintiff claims he possessed.

ADMISSION OF ILLLEGAL TESTIMONY.—If illegal testimony is admitted by the Court below, and the appellate Court cannot determine whether the finding of the Court below was based on this or other testimony in the case, the judgment will be reversed.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

The complaint averred that on the 11th day of May, 1863, the plaintiff was and for a long time had been in the peaceable possession of the land in dispute. Plaintiff testified that he went into possession on the 7th day of May, 1863, and was forcibly evicted by defendants on the eleventh of the same month. The instrument offered in evidence by plaintiff as a lease, was dated on the 7th day of May, 1863. It purported to lease the land to plaintiff for the term of one month from the 7th day of May, 1863. The action was commenced on the 27th day of May, 1863. October 19, 1863, the Court gave judgment for restitution of the entire tract of land, and for the monthly value of the rents and profits up to the day of rendition of judgment. The plaintiff testified on the trial that he went on to the premises in dispute under an agreement with Smith and Sullivan, but did not see or sign the paper purporting to be a lease, until the 9th day of October.

After plaintiff had rested, defendants' counsel called as a witness F. Hood, and offered to prove by him the following facts:

1. That the defendants, five or ten days prior to the alleged forcible entry in this suit, were in the quiet and peaceable possession and occupation of the premises described in the complaint in this action; and while in such possession, E. L. Sullivan and Charles K. Smith, being the parties referred to by Roff in his testimony, forcibly entered, and forcibly evicted these defendants therefrom; and also with force tore down and burnt the building by them occupied; and that the building from which Roff was evicted was erected by Sullivan and Smith within twenty-five yards of the house so burned by them.

2. That said Sullivan and Smith employed and paid parties fifty dollars each per day for tearing down and burning said building, evicting these defendants and holding possession against them, and that such employes were fully armed with deadly weapons for that purpose.

The counsel for the plaintiff objected to such evidence upon the grounds that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and constituted no defense to the action.

Argument for Appellants.

The Court sustained the objections, to which ruling the counsel for the defendants excepted.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Bennett, Cook & Clarke, for Appellants.

The counsel for the plaintiff stated that he "only offered the paper purporting to be a lease in evidence for the purpose of showing the extent of the property which the plaintiff claimed he possessed." The right of the plaintiff (if any he had) extended only over the land of which he had actual possession. He could recover nothing by virtue of constructive possession. (Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 94; Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 684, 690.) This lease would be admissible only by reason of its relevancy for one of two objects; 1st — To prove title; 2d — To enable the plaintiff to recover beyond the limits of his actual possession. It was not relevant or admissible for either of these purposes; yet, by reason of its introduction, the plaintiff was enabled to recover to the extent of the boundaries therein specified, and far beyond any pretense of actual possession. Thus, this instrument was not only irrelevant, but its introduction has been positively prejudicial to the defendants.

The judgment for rents and profits is greater than the law authorizes. Roff, at the most, had the right of occupying the premises only for one month. The Court finds the monthly rents and profits to be twenty dollars. Roff's month commenced on the 7th day of May. It would terminate on the 7th of June. Yet the Court has given judgment for the rents and profits from the 11th of May to the 7th of October, being the sum of ninety-eight dollars. This sum of ninety-eight dollars the Court has trebled. This is manifestly all wrong. The plaintiff could have no claim for rents and profits after his interest or estate had ceased. According to the principle on which the Court rendered judgment, if the cause had not been "finally submitted" for five years, the Court would have gone on adding the monthly rents for the whole period, and then trebling the aggregate sum. Then Smith and Sullivan could have brought their ejectment, and again recover the rents and profits from the 7th day of June, 1863, down to the time of judgment.

Hoge & Wilson, for Respondent.

The lease was clearly admissible for the purpose of showing the nature and character of the plaintiff's possession, whether peaceable or otherwise, and the extent of that possession. The validity of the lease cannot be tried in this form of action, as this Court has repeatedly decided, and particularly in the case of McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 528, 529. Nor is it perceived what right a mere intruder or trespasser has to question the validity of a lease as between the person in possession of lands and the owner under whom he takes that possession, and whose right he acknowledges; and particularly when in this case the owners all recognize the relation of landlord and tenant, and the validity of the lease. It is not for the wrongdoer to question the validity of the lease. That is a matter entirely between the parties to the lease, and cannot be raised in this action. The paper in question was offered, as such documents always are, to show the possession, its character, and extent. It was done in the case already cited, and in many others, and, as we think, is eminently proper in cases like these. The very case cited by the counsel for the appellants, of Mitchell v. Davis, 23 Cal. 382, decides the very point in our favor. If it were otherwise, it would not avail the defendants, as the evidence was ample without it, and it could not possibly have done the defendants any injury.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This is an action of forcible entry and detainer. The County Court, on appeal, found for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. Several of the grounds assigned by the defendants on their motion for a new trial—that the judgment is against the evidence; that the plaintiff was a mere servant or hired man of Smith and Sullivan; and that the possession of the plaintiff was a mere scrambling possession — belong to the same general class and relate altogether to the weight or sufficiency of the evidence. The Court below found that the plaintiff was in the peaceable, actual and quiet possession of the premises, and that the defendants were guilty of the forcible entry and detainer complained of; and it is scarcely necessary to repeat that where there is any evidence of a fact in issue which is passed on by the Court below, and where the Court below has denied the motion for new trial based on the ground that the finding is contrary to the evidence, or to the weight of the evidence, or that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding, this Court will not reverse the order of the Court below, unless the order is manifestly an abuse of the legal discretion of the Court. The order in this case is not subject to that objection.

The defendants contend that the judgment for the rents and profits is greater than the law authorizes, because, they say, the plaintiff at most had the right of occupying the premises, according to his lease, only one month. The objection might be tenable if the object of the action was to determine the right to the possession of the premises, or to recover the rents and profits, the right to which depended on the right to the possession of the premises; but the right to the possession is not directly or incidentally in issue. The inquiry is, Had the plaintiff the actual and peaceable possession at the time of the forcible entry complained of? And if that issue and the unlawful detainer are found for the plaintiff the law awards to him the monthly value of the rents and profits during the time of the detention without regard to his right or title in the premises.

They make the further point, that the Court erred in excluding the evidence offered by them to prove that five to ten days prior to the alleged forcible entry they were in the peaceable occupation of the premises, and that Sullivan and Smith, the lessors of the plaintiff, forcibly entered and evicted them, and tore down and burnt the appellants' building, and employed and paid persons therefor and for holding possession against them, the employes being armed with deadly weapons for that purpose. Upon those facts, they were entitled to have instituted and maintained against Sullivan and Smith an action for the forcible entry and detainer, or an action of ejectment, if they had also the right of possession; but the forcible entry upon the appellants did not authorize them to seek redress by making a forcible entry upon the actual and peaceable possession of another. It was the object of the statute not only to prevent and punish the forcible entry of those having no right of entry, but also of those who, having a right of entry given by law, make entry "with strong hand," or "with multitude of people." The forcible entry of Sullivan and Smith is no justification of the forcible entry of the appellants upon the respondent. If the evidence offered had been admitted, it would not have constituted a defense to the action, for in addition to the reasons already given, there was no offer to show that the respondent participated in the alleged forcible entry of Sullivan and Smith, and his privity in estate with Sullivan and Smith would not render him directly or indirectly liable for their wrongful acts.

The appellants also assign as error, the admission in evidence of a document, purporting to be a lease of the premises to the plaintiff for one month. In the body of the lease, Charles K. Smith is described as the lessor, but it is not executed by him, it being signed by E. L. Sullivan and the lessee. The premises described in the lease, have the same name and number of acres and about the same boundaries as the tract described in the complaint. The signatures to the lease were admitted to be genuine signatures of Sullivan and the plaintiff. The defendants objected to the lease being given in evidence on the grounds: "1st — That it is incompetent, irrelevant and illegal testimony; 2d — That it was not a lease from Smith to Roff; 3d — That it was not a lease from Sullivan to Roff; 4th — That the paper in its body purported to be a lease from Smith to Roff, and that Roff never executed it; and 5th — That as a lease it was a nullity as between Smith and Roff." The counsel for the plaintiff thereupon stated that he only offered the paper in evidence "for the purpose of showing the extent of the property which the plaintiff claimed he possessed." The defendants renewed their objections to the document offered for the purpose stated, and the Court overruled the objections and allowed it to be read in evidence, and the defendants excepted.

The plaintiff now insists that the lease was admissible "for the purpose of showing the nature and character of the plaintiff's possession, whether peaceable or otherwise, and the extent of that possession. If it was admissible for any purpose, it must be confined in its operation to the purpose expressed when it was offered. Is it admissible for that purpose? It evidently is not the lease of Smith, nor is it the lease of Sullivan, for Smith does not sign it, and Sullivan does not profess to make it. It does not amount to a lease, and is no more in substance than the document would have been if there had been a blank where Smith's name appears, and there had been no signature but that of the intended lessee. It thus becomes unnecessary to determine whether a lease made between Smith or Sullivan as the lessor, and the plaintiff as the lessee, would have been admissible as evidence to prove the extent of the premises claimed by the plaintiff, for the record does not present that question. The question is, in substance, whether a draft of a lease unexecuted by the lessor is competent evidence to prove the extent of the land claimed by the nominal lessee. The plaintiff did not enter under that document, nor did he profess to have done so, and he does not pretend to have seen it until several days after his entry on the lands. The point that the defendants, being wrongdoers, have no right to question the validity of the lease has no force, because the document is not in fact a lease. We are clear that the document was not admissible for the purpose for which it was offered, for a paper, in form a lease, to be executed by both lessor and lessee, but in fact executed by the lessee alone, does not tend to extend, limit or define the boundaries of the lands held or claimed by the nominal lessee. We cannot say that because the remaining evidence was sufficient to authorize the Court to find for the plaintiff, therefore the error in admitting the lease became immaterial, for it is impossible for us to ascertain whether the Court found that the plaintiff was in the possession of the whole premises sued for or any part thereof, from the lease or from the other testimony in the case.

THE PEOPLE v. THOMAS B. POOL.

JUSTIFICATION OF A HOMICIDE.—The right to take life in defense of one's person, habitation, or property, or for the protection of those whom by the law of nature he is bound to protect, is founded on necessity; and when this defense is interposed in justification of a homicide, the first inquiry is as to the alleged necessity.

SAME.—If an officer in fresh pursuit of criminals comes suddenly upon several of them, and calls out "You are my prisoners—surrender:" and at the same time points a gun towards them, they are not justified in firing on him, or in taking his life.

SAME.—If several persons commit a robbery, and immediately flee from the scene of it, and are pursued soon after by an officer, who overtakes them at a distance of ten or twelve miles from the place where the crime was committed, and is slain by them in an attempt to arrest them, on the trial for the homicide the People may introduce evidence of the robbery, and the defendant's connection with it.

PROOF OF INTENT WITH WHICH HOMICIDE WAS COMMITTED.—In ascertaining the degree of guilt of one who has committed a homicide, it is important to determine the intent with which the act was done. The intent may be proved by evidence, direct or circumstantial, tending to establish the fact.

ACT OF ONE CONSPIRATOR THE ACT OF ALL.—If several persons conspire together to commit a robbery, and to resist arrest even to the taking of life, and after the robbery is committed take the life of an officer in resisting an arrest, whatever is said or done by any one of them in furtherance of the common design is a part of the res gesta, and the act of all.

NOTICE BY AN OFFICER OF HIS OFFICIAL CHARACTER.—Where a party is apprehended in the commission of an offense, or upon fresh pursuit afterwards, notice of the official character of the person attempting to make the arrest, or of the cause of the arrest, is not necessary.

ARREST WITHOUT A WARRANT.—A peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person for a felony he has committed—though not committed in the officer's presence—when the criminal is fleeing from the scene of the crime.

SAME.—The words "when he is pursued immediately after an escape" in the one hundredth and thirty-seventh section of the Practice Act, are not used in the sense of an escape from custody, but in the sense of flight from the scene of the crime; and the words "immediate pursuit," are the same as "fresh pursuit" used in common law phrase in criminal cases.

WHAT IS IMMEDIATE OR FRESH PURSUIT OF CRIMINALS.—If, after the commission of a felony, the guilty parties flee to avoid an arrest, and within three or four hours are pursued by officers for the purpose of apprehending them, and the officers by diligent pursuit overtake them at a distance of twelve miles from the place where the crime was committed, this is an immediate or fresh pursuit of the criminals.

STATUTE DEFINING MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE.—The adjectives "wilful," "deliberate," and "premeditated," considered in connection with the context in the phrase "or for any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing," found in that section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments defining murder in the first degree, are merely cumulative and expressive of the same idea.

ROBBERY.—If the Court in its charge to the jury characterizes the crime of robbery as an "outrage," it is not calculated to prejudice the cause of the defendant, or do him an injury.

CHARGE TO JURY AS TO THEIR VERDICT.—To charge the jury that they "have the power to find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, or manslaughter, or not guilty," is the same in effect as to charge them that it is their province so to find.

DEFINITION OF MURDER.—Each of the phrases, "wilful killing," "deliberate killing," and "premeditated killing," standing in relation to the offense of murder, embraces, essentially, the legal idea of the other.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eleventh Judicial District,
El Dorado County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

James Johnson, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted with others for the murder of Joseph M. Staples, committed on the first day of July, 1864, at a place called Somerset House, in El Dorado County. The defendant plead not guilty. On the trial it was proved that at about ten o'clock of the evening of the day previous, the defendant with thirteen other persons stopped two stage coaches which were on their way from the then Territory of Nevada to Placerville, in the County of El Dorado, and by violence took from one of them a large amount of gold—gold coin and bullion—which was in the custody of the person having charge of the coach in which the same was when taken. The scene of the robbery was about twelve miles from the Somerset House, and about fourteen miles from Placerville. Soon after the stage coaches arrived at the latter place, and the deceased, who was a Deputy Sheriff of El Dorado County, became informed of the robbery, he and a constable started in pursuit of the robbers, and at about five o'clock the next morning came upon some of them at the Somerset House, where they were together in a room, and finding a gun standing at the door of the room the deceased took it into his possession, and then opening the door addressed the defendant and his companions, saying to them: "You are my prisoners—surrender;" and at the same time pointing toward them the gun which he held in his hands, while they, on their part, instead of surrendering, drew their pistols and opened fire on the deceased. Several of the shots took effect upon a vital part of his body, causing his death in a few minutes. After the firing had been commenced by those in the room, the deceased shot the defendant, by which he was disabled.

The defendant was found guilty of the murder of Staples, and was sentenced to be executed. From this judgment he has appealed, and counsel on his behalf asks this Court to reverse the judgment on several grounds, which we have carefully considered, and concerning which we will now pronounce our judgment:

I. It appears from the evidence in the case that Staples did not, at the time he attempted to arrest the defendant and his companions, inform them in terms of his official character, nor the cause for the attempted arrest, and it is therefore argued on the defendant's behalf that the homicide was justifiable.

A false and mischievous notion seems to have obtained to a considerable extent that a person may justify or excuse the slaying of his fellow being for causes which fall far short of any exigency from which it may be lawfully presumed the act of the slayer was necessary for the defense of his person, habitation, or property, or for the protection of those whom by the law of nature he is bound to protect and defend. The right of defense in the cases indicated is founded on necessity, and when sought to be interposed in justification of the act, the first inquiry is as to the alleged necessity. Then, were it assumed that the defendant and the men with him were innocent of the crime for which the deceased sought to arrest them, and ignorant of his official character, could it be said they were justified by the circumstances which transpired in taking his life? He had it in his power to shoot, at the moment he informed them that they were his prisoners and demanded their surrender, and yet he did not exert such power; besides which, his language and menace, as associated, was calculated to convey the idea that he did not design violence if they would heed his demand. The circumstances, in our judgment, did not, even on the hypothesis stated, justify or excuse the taking of the life of the deceased. But whether the crime committed was of the magnitude of murder in the first degree, depends upon the entire circumstances of the case.

The defendant objected to the evidence offered and given at the trial in relation to the robbery, and now insists that the Court erred in permitting any examination as to that offense and the defendant's connection with it. In our view of the matter it was material for more reasons than one:

First — To show that the defendant was engaged in the commission of the robbery, and that he and his confederates had a motive beyond their own protection, as men innocent of crime, in killing the deceased while in pursuit of them.

Second — To show that in connection with their criminal purpose, they had agreed to resist being arrested even to the death, and that being confederated together for the felonious purpose of robbery and resistance to the civil power of the State, the killing of the deceased, by whichever of them actually done, was the act of each and all of the conspirators.

Third — To establish a condition of circumstances from which the robbers would be deemed to have sufficient notice that their pursuers were officers of the law, or citizens in pursuit of them as malefactors.

(1.) In ascertaining the degree of guilt of one who has committed a homicide, it is always important to ascertain the animus with which the act was done. It is the intent with which an act was done that constitutes its criminality. The intent and act must both concur to constitute the crime. And the intent must therefore be proved. The proof may be either by evidence, direct or indirect, tending to establish the fact, or by inference of law from other facts proved. (3 Greenleaf's Ev. Sec. 13; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, Secs. 253 to 257; Fowler v. Padget, 7 Term R. 514.) Whenever it is important to determine the character of the act perpetrated and to ascertain the intent of the accused, the existence of any motive likely to instigate him to the commission of the crime may be proved, and is relevant and competent for the purpose of fixing or tending to fix the crime upon him. (1 Stark. Ev. Secs. 13 and 14; Wharton's Cr. Law, Secs. 635 and 850.)

(2.) By the act of the defendant's conspiring with those who were with him when the deceased was slain, to commit robbery and to resist arrest even to the taking of life, they jointly assumed to themselves, as a body, the attribute of individuality, so far as regarded the prosecution of the common design, thus rendering whatever was done or said by any one of them in furtherance of that design a part of the res gestæ, and therefore the act of all. (3 Greenleaf's Ev. Sec. 94.)

(3) Where a party is apprehended in the commission of an offense, or upon fresh pursuit afterward, notice of the official character of the person making the arrest or of the cause of the arrest is not necessary, because he must know the reason why he is apprehended. Cases are not wanting to support this doctrine. In the case of Rex v. Davis, 7 Car. and Payne, 177, where it appeared that a gamekeeper, with a servant of his master, were out at night and heard two guns fired, and went toward the place and got into a covert and saw some men there, who ran away, and the servant pursued them and got close up to one of them and attempted to arrest him, and was immediately shot through the side, Baron Parke said: "Where parties find poachers in a wood, they need not give any intimation by words that they are gamekeepers or that they come to apprehend; the circumstances are sufficient notice. What can a person poaching in a wood suppose, when he sees another at his heels?" So in the case of Rex v. Whithorne, (3 Car. & P. 394.) Perry and Smith, charged with the murder of Richard Rounce, it appeared that Rounce, with other gamekeepers, found Perry and Smith out for the purpose of catching hares and arrested them. The persons so apprehended soon after called to Whithorne, who came up, and with a stick shod with iron, beat the gamekeepers on the head, killing Rounce, and rescuing Perry and Smith. For the prisoners it was objected, that as the gamekeepers did not announce to the prisoners who they were, the arrest was illegal, and further, that as their duty was to apprehend merely, and it was in proof that they beat the prisoners, that would reduce the offense to manslaughter. To this the Court answered that with respect to the keepers not announcing who they were, there was no pretense for saying the prisoners did not know that perfectly well. They did not make any question of their authority. They did not say, "You have no right to take us, Who are you?" or anything of that sort. The apprehension was legal; and being so, all the legal consequences must follow. So also in Rex v. Payne, 1 M., C. C. R. 378. Certain gamekeepers, upon hearing the report of guns, went towards the place from whence the sound came. The prosecutor saw six persons in the wood who were poachers, and with a cocked pistol ran after them as they ran away. After running about fifty yards, they made a stand. One of them shot the prosecutor while he was pursuing. The prosecutor said nothing to them nor they to him before he was shot. At the trial for maliciously wounding the prosecutor, it was objected for the prisoners that inasmuch as the prosecutor's authority to apprehend the prisoners was derived from the Act creating the offense for which he attempted to arrest them, it was incumbent on him to give them notice of his authority. The objection was overruled, and upon a case reserved, the Judges were of opinion that the circumstances constituted sufficient notice.

In the case of a public officer such as a Sheriff or a constable, acting in his own district, his authority to make arrests of persons who have recently committed crimes, is to be deemed a matter of notoriety. (Roscoe's Cr. Ev. 754.) The robbers were in the act of fleeing with a portion of the spoils of their crime committed several hours previous, and the deceased and the constable with him were at their heels in fresh pursuit. The circumstances of having committed the crime of robbing the stage coach was sufficient to cause them to apprehend pursuit. That they were aware they were pursued appears by the evidence of one of the party, who testified that Bulwer, one of the robbers, who occupied another room, came to the room in which the defendant and others were, and waked them and told them to get up — that somebody was after them. This was just before the deceased came to the door. After Staples was killed the firing was kept up until the constable surrendered. It was after this the constable told them he was an officer, and they demanded of him to show his authority, and asked him "How in hell did you find us so soon?" The deceased, upon entering the door where the defendant and his confederates were, addressed them, "You are my prisoners — surrender." These words were, according to the authorities, a sufficient notice of his character as a peace officer. (Roscoe's Cr. Ev. 755; 1 Russ. on Crimes, 627; 1 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 461; Mackalley's Case, 9 Coke R., 68 b, and 69 a.)

It is provided by statute that a peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person for a felony which he has committed, though not committed in his presence; and also where a felony has in fact been committed, and the officer has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. (Laws 1851, p. 226, Sec. 134.) The one hundred and thirty-seventh section of the same statute provides that when arresting a person without a warrant, the officer must inform him of his authority, and the cause of arrest, except when he is in the actual commission of a public offense, or when he is pursued immediately after an escape. The word escape we do not understand to be used in the technical sense of an escape from custody, but rather in the sense of flight from the scene of the crime to avoid being arrested and brought to justice. Even a private person may arrest one who has committed a felony, without a warrant and without informing him of the cause thereof, provided such arrest be made on pursuit immediately after the commission of the offense. (Laws 1851, p. 227, Sections 140, 141.) It would be strange indeed if conditions, stricter and more ceremonial, were imposed on peace officers in such cases than upon private persons. What is meant by pursuit immediately after an escape or immediately after the commission of the offense? Immediate pursuit is substantially the same as fresh pursuit, so frequently used in common law phrase in criminal cases. The phrase "when he is pursued immediately after an escape," is not to be taken so strictly as to defeat its reasonable operation. (1 Russ. on Crimes, 606, 607.) The interval which may elapse between one event and another may, in a particular instance, be sufficient to destroy their relations as immediate in time, while as to two other events the same interval would not have such effect. For example, if one living near the Post Office should call there for a letter and there remain an hour before his return to his own place, it could not be said he returned immediately; but if he should visit a foreign country, and there remain only for a few days and thence depart on his return homeward, it might with propriety be said his return was immediate. Thus it is seen that immediate is a word of relation, and as a measure of time is itself governed in degree by the events and circumstances to which it stands in a qualifying connection.

The conclusion to which we come upon the questions considered are:

1st. That the crime of robbery was committed by the defendant and others, and that the deceased and the constable with him were in the immediate or fresh pursuit of the robbers, for the purpose of apprehending them for the felony they had perpetrated, when the homicide was committed.

Opinion of the Court.

2d. That the defendant and his companions in the crime of robbery were aware at the time of the cause for which they were pursued, and had in legal contemplation notice of the character of their pursuers.

3d. That the testimony, taken as true, established the fact that the defendant as a conspirator with others to commit the crime of robbery, and to resist apprehension therefor even to the taking of life, was concerned in the unlawful killing of the deceased, Joseph M. Staples, while in the discharge of his duty as a peace officer in the County of El Dorado, and that the circumstances of the homicide showed that the act was done with an abandoned and malignant heart.

II. The defendant complains that the charge of the Court to the jury was erroneous in several important particulars, by which his cause was or may have been prejudiced. If this be so, the judgment should be reversed, notwithstanding the evidence, under proper instructions, might be deemed sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree.

(1.) In defining murder in the first degree the Court charged the jury that "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of any poison, or lying in wait, torture, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate or premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery or burglary, is murder of the first degree. All other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree." This charge is substantially in the language of the statute, except that the words "wilful, deliberate and premeditated" are disjoined by the word "or," instead of being conjoined by the conjunction "and," as in the statute. The effect of the charge in this particular is that either a wilful, deliberate or premeditated killing of a human being is murder in the first degree. These adjectives are severally expressive of the same idea. An act done wilfully is done designedly or of set purpose; an act performed deliberately is performed with careful consideration or after examination and reflection; and an act premeditated and then committed must be understood to be preconcerted, intended or meditated beforehand. In the sentence referred to, the words "wilful, deliberate and premeditated," as connected with the subject to which they relate, if intended to be conjoined, may be regarded as cumulative, and merely giving force to the subject matter by successive expressions of the same idea. In 1 Wharton on Criminal Law (Sec. 1,084) it is said: "In Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Virginia, Alabama, and Michigan, the killing, to commit murder in the first degree, must be 'wilful, deliberate and premeditated.' The omission of 'wilful' in New Hampshire, and the addition of 'malicious,' in Tennessee, cannot, it is apprehended, vary the construction given to the statutes." (Dale v. The State, 10 Yerg. 551; 1 Whart. Cr. Law. Secs. 1,085, 1,114.) But the word and is not always to be taken conjunctively. It is sometimes, in a fair and rational construction of a statute, to be read as if it were or, and taken disjunctively; and in the statute referred to, the several words characterizing a particular homicide being used in substantially the same sense, may be read disjunctively. (Smith's Com. on Statutes, 732.) The substance and effect of the statute is to be regarded and not every unimportant matter of form or circumstance. Quæ hæret in litera hæret in cortice.

(2.) In the course of the charge to the jury the Court said: "If several persons conspire together to seize with force and by robbery, treasure or property belonging to another, and escape with it, and if necessary, to kill any person who shall oppose them in the execution of the design, and death ensue in the prosecution of the design, it is murder in all who are present aiding and abetting in the common design. The law makes no difference or distinction between any of the parties engaged. All engaged in such an outrage are aware that their acts are unlawful, and that murder may result from such resistance, and all alike must suffer the consequences."

It is objected on behalf of the defendant that characterizing the commission of the acts stated by the Court in the form of a postulate an outrage was calculated to prejudice the cause of the defendant; but it is difficult to see wherein, for certainly to denominate the crime of robbery an outrage is a mild designation, which in no sense could do the defendant any injury.

(3.) After the Court had charged the jury respecting the law of homicide generally, and after having especially distinguished between the different degrees of crime in cases of criminal homicide, the Court instructed the jury as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury: Under this indictment you have the power to find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, murder of the second degree, or manslaughter, or not guilty."

The defendant's counsel objects to the word power as used in the portion of the charge here quoted; and it is argued that the instruction that the jury had the power to find as stated implied that they might, or that it was their province, to render a verdict of guilty of either of the offenses specified, regardless of evidence. If such be not the force of the objection then it is without meaning and senseless. The charge would have been the same in effect if the Court had told the jury it was their province to find the defendant guilty of any one of the offenses specified, or not guilty.

(4.) The portion of the charge following the passage last quoted, in these words: "The law, however, makes all murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery, murder of the first degree," is also objected to as amounting to an instruction that the killing of Staples was a murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a robbery, and was for that reason murder of the first degree.

This objection, in our judgment, is not well taken, for the reason that the words are not fairly susceptible of the construction given them on the part of the defendant. The language of the Court here used must be understood as it stands related to other portions of the charge, and it is to be presumed the jury understood it as thus related.

III. The defendant requested the Court to instruct the jury in the following words: "If the jury believe from the evidence in the case that the deceased, Staples, presented himself at the door of the room occupied by defendant Pool and his confederates, and presented a gun at them and demanded that they surrender to him, but did not inform them of his official position or authority to arrest them, or the cause of their arrest, and at the time the gun was pointed at them they had offered no violence to him, and they were ignorant of his official character, and that the killing took place immediately after the gun was presented to them first and while it was levelled upon them, then the killing was no murder." The Court refused to so instruct the jury, and the defendant excepted.

The questions of law involved in the language of the requested instruction have been quite fully considered already. To have charged that the killing was no murder, provided the facts were as hypothetically stated, would have ignored the existence of other facts and conditions (concerning which there was evidence before the jury), which, in some degree at least, were of the elementary conditions giving character to the acts and intentions of the defendant and his confederates, and upon which, to some extent, depended the criminal quality of the acts which were the immediate cause of the homicide. The requested instruction proceeds upon the hypothesis that the facts stated were the only material facts affecting the question of murder in the case, and because of this, if for no other reason, the request was properly refused. There was testimony in the case of other material matters, which, if true, and taken into consideration by the jury, might very properly have had their influence in determining the jury as to their conclusions respecting the character of the homicide, and whether the defendant was guilty of murder or otherwise, or not guilty of any crime at all.

We have carefully considered every point on which the defendant has relied for a reversal of the judgment, with a solemn sense of our duty in a case on the determination of which the life of a fellow creature depends, and the conclusion to which we have come is that the judgment should be affirmed.

The judgment is therefore affirmed, and the District Court is directed to appoint a day for carrying the judgment pronounced in that Court, and now affirmed, into execution.

Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON expressed no opinion.

By the Court, SAWYER, J., on petition for rehearing.

In the petition for rehearing, the counsel for appellant strenuously argues, that the substitution of the word "or," in the place of "and," in the phrase "wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing," constituting a part of the statutory definition of murder in the first degree, is a fatal error. He insists that the three words, "wilful, deliberate and premeditated" are not synonymous in meaning, and that the definition of murder in the first degree submitted to the jury was essentially, and materially different from that contained in the statute. It needs no argument to show that these several words, abstractly, and separately considered, are not synonymous. But we are not to consider them separately, or abstractly. They are to be considered in connection with the context. In discussing the question, a murder must be assumed to have been proved, and this fact must be considered as one of the conditions of the problem. For, unless there is a murder, no question can arise as to the degree of the murder, and the instruction bears upon the question of the degree only. The offense being murder the question is, not what does the word "wilful," or "deliberate," or "premeditated," mean, but what do the words "wilful killing," "deliberate killing," "premeditated killing," standing in relation to the offense of murder, signify? Can there be a "wilful killing," a "deliberate killing," or a "premeditated killing," without such killing embracing essentially the legal idea expressed by each of the other phrases? To determine this question it will be necessary to ascertain the legal signification of these several phrases, and upon an examination and analysis of the authorities upon the question as to the degree of murder, the result, we apprehend, will be found to be, that there is a "wilful killing," within the meaning of the statute, wherever there is simply a specific intent, a design or purpose formed to take life; that there is a "deliberate killing," wherever such intent or purpose is formed upon deliberation, or consideration, and the deliberation or consideration need not be for any particular period of time; a moment is as effectual as an hour or a day; and there is a "premeditated killing" wherever the deliberation or consideration precedes the purpose formed, and — as before stated with respect to deliberation — it need not precede the purpose formed for any particular period of time. In a late case in Tennessee (as quoted in Whar. Crim. Law, Sec. 1,114,) the Court say: "It is true the Act says the killing must be wilful, deliberate and premeditated. But every intentional act is of course a wilful one, and deliberation and premeditation simply mean that the act was done with reflection and conceived beforehand. No specific length of time is required for such deliberation." Compare these well established legal definitions of the several phrases in question, and see if each does not necessarily imply all of the others? As to the phrase, "wilful killing," there seems to be no room for doubt. How is it possible for the mind to perform the operation of willing — of determining to do an act — of forming a purpose, without a preconsideration of the question? If A. determines to go to San Francisco, he must necessarily have thought upon the subject, considered the question, before he determined to go. And there would seem to be as little doubt, as to the other two phrases. A man may deliberate or meditate upon the subject of killing, and stop short of willing, or forming a purpose to kill. If he does stop upon the deliberation or meditation, without forming a purpose, he certainly will not kill, at least under such circumstances as will constitute the crime of murder. It seems as impossible to perpetrate a "deliberate killing," or a "premeditated killing," without first willing or forming the purpose to do the act, as to form the purpose without a preconsideration. If there is any appreciable, substantial, material element affecting the degree of the offense expressed, or implied, by one of these phrases, that is not necessarily implied by each of the others, we are unable to discover it; and this seems to be the opinion of Mr. Wharton, the author of a very learned and carefully prepared work on American Criminal Law. He says: "In Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Virginia, Alabama, and Michigan the killing, to constitute murder in the first degree, must be 'wilful, deliberate and premeditated.' The omission of 'wilful' in New Hampshire, and the addition of 'malicious' in Tennessee, cannot, it is apprehended, vary the construction given to the statutes. (Am. Crim. Law. 5th ed., Sec. 1,084.) If the omission of "wilful" cannot vary the construction, it must be because a deliberate or premeditated killing necessarily implies a wilful killing, and if the word "wilful"—the most comprehensive term, if there is any difference—can be omitted without varying the construction, certainly, either of the others can be dispensed with. Such being the case it is not material whether the word "or," or "and," be used. The word "malicious" evidently could not vary the construction, for the killing must be malicious to constitute murder in either degree. We may add, that the passage quoted may be regarded as expressing the matured opinion of the author, for it is also found in the earlier editions of his work on Criminal Law. Thus, after this work has been for several years before the public and subjected to the criticisms of Courts and the legal profession, it is still retained in the fifth and last edition. The language in the statutes of Virginia is the same as in our own. Yet, in Jones' Case, 1 Leigh, 654, Mr. Justice Daniel, who delivered the opinion of the Court, in his frequent repetitions of the clause in question, uses the words "or," and "and," indiscriminately. The exact point was not under consideration as to the effect of the use of these different words, and of course the case is not authority upon the point now before us. But it shows, at least, that it did not occur to the learned judge at the time, that the two phrases did not sub-substantially express the same legal idea. Mr. Chief Justice Cornblower—as quoted in Wharton's Law of Homicide, 382—commenting upon the statutory provision in New Jersey—which is the same as ours—says: “Again, the premeditation intent to kill need not be for a day, or an hour, or even for a minute. For if the jury believe there was a design, a determination to kill, distinctly formed in the mind at any moment before, or at the time the pistol was fired or the blow was struck, it was a wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, and therefore murder in the first degree.” Now, here it is said, substantially, that “a design, a determination to kill, distinctly formed in the mind,” followed by the act of killing, embraces all the elements required by the statute to constitute murder in the first degree. It is scarcely within the range of possibility that the inadvertent use of the word “or,” instead of “and,” in the charge of the Court—whether upon a critical analysis it shall be found to express precisely the same idea or not—could have had the slightest influence upon the verdict.

Upon the case disclosed by the record, there cannot be a shadow of doubt that the prisoner was in fact guilty of murder in the first degree. Nevertheless, if it had appeared that any error had been committed, which rendered it even in a remote degree probable, that the verdict could have been in any way affected by it unfavorably to the defendant, we should feel it our duty to reverse the judgment. We cannot perceive that there is any substantial material difference in the legal construction to be given to the phrase contained in the charge, and that embraced in the statute, or that any injury could have resulted to defendant. We see no other point in the petition that requires further discussion.

BENJAMIN DORE, AND OWEN HANNIGAN, INTERVENORS
v. JOSEPH SELLERS, E. L. GOLDSTEIN, AND ADOLPH ZURN.

LIEN OF CONTRACTOR ON BUILDING.—The statute gives one who has entered into a contract in writing to construct a building a lien on the same as security for the payment of the money becoming due to him according to the terms of the contract, but this lien cannot be enforced for an amount exceeding the sum to become due the contractor.

CONTRACTOR HAS NO LIEN EXCEPT FOR MONEY TO BECOME DUE.—If a contractor engages to construct a building in consideration—in whole or in part—of a debt then due from him to the employer, or of a sum paid him by the employer upon the execution of the contract, that portion of the contract price represented by the debt or the advance payment cannot become a lien upon the building.

LIEN OF EMPLOYEES OF CONTRACTOR.—The employees of the contractor have no lien on the building as principals, and cannot acquire a lien on the building independent of the one existing on the original contract, which they may enforce to the amount due them, so that the same does not exceed the sum for which the contractor has a lien.

LIEN OF EMPLOYEES OF SUB-CONTRACTOR.—If the contractor has paid the sub-contractor according to the terms of his contract with him, and has not made premature payment, the employees of the sub-contractor are not entitled to demand anything from the contractor or employer.

SAME.—The employees of the sub-contractor cannot intercept any money due from the employer to the contractor, nor can they enforce the lien of the contractor for any of the same, beyond what is due from the contractor to the sub-contractor at the time.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. McM. Shafer, for Appellants.

The question presented is simply this: Can the materialman and laborer go upon the house, superstructure, etc., directly, to the extent of the contract price due, or are they subject to all the conditions which may be created by the account between the contractor and his sub-contractor?

The eighteenth section of the Mechanics' Lien Act provides that the procurement of lumber to be used in erecting buildings with the intent to apply the same to other purposes, is an offense punishable as a crime. The fraud consists in inducing one to part with his property upon the faith that it will be incorporated into a permanent and valuable form of real estate, which the builder can resort to as a reasonably certain source of payment.

Section four makes the lien of the material man operative from the time the materials were furnished. At this time no work would have been done, no payments made nor due. The lien depends upon the fact that the lumber is furnished alone, and not upon the state of the accounts between the several parties. If it be conceded that the lien will be defeated by the non-application of the lumber for the purpose designed, still this case shows the lumber was so applied.

This intention of making the security of the material man absolute, is further shown by section sixteen. The lumber furnished is not attachable as the property of either the contractor or sub-contractor. It is regarded as a trust to be executed exactly according to its terms, and for the benefit of the material man.

No distinction is taken between the case of lumber furnished to a contractor and that furnished to a sub-contractor. All lumber furnished for the building is protected from attachment or execution against its "purchaser."

If the sub-contractor should have a recovery against him in favor of the contractor for breach of the building contract, lumber furnished for the building would be protected from an execution thereon. Why, then, should the vendor who sold this lumber charged with the trust be deprived of his pay and his lien, which is co-extensive with this trust, by the simple breach of the sub-contractor's contract?

Section thirteen secures the rule of superiority and priority to us, as against both Giblin and Zurn & Hannigan, and provides for the marshalling and application of the contract price, first to us, second to the sub-contractor, and third to the original contractor. The intention of observing this order is involved in section twenty-five. The limitation of time to make claim is thirty days as to these "primary" claims, while to those last in order of payment sixty days is allowed to initiate proceedings to enforce the remedies of the statute.

The foregoing ideas we think are sustained fully by Cahoon v. Levy, 6 Cal. 295; Soule & Page v. Dawes, 7 Cal. 574; McGreary v. Osborne, 9 Cal. 119; Crowell v. Gilmore, 13 Cal. 56; S. C. 18 Cal. 370; McAlpine v. Duncan, 16 Cal. 126; Bower v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566.

E. B. Mastick, for Respondent.

The sub-contractor is entitled to recover only upon performance of sub-contract. All persons claiming through a sub-contractor can only claim that to which he would be entitled. The material man in this case derives his rights through the sub-contractor; the power of the sub-contractor is limited to the terms of his contract; he can confer no greater power than that which he has. The material man may come between the sub-contractor and the contractor, and intercept that to which the sub-contractor would be entitled; but how or by what right could he get more?

The question as put in appellant's brief, I think is not the question in this case. Has the material man who supplies material to a sub-contractor, a lien on the house, etc., for the material thus furnished, in case the sub-contractor fails to perform his contract, and has, up to the time of the notice to the owner, been paid all that was due of the money earned under his contract, and when all the money which is to become due under the original contract remains to be earned?

The appellant says that "the material man is entitled to a lien, etc., and the only limitation to the right is, that the owner of the realty shall not pay more, etc., than what he agreed to pay." Also: "The limitation of this right as against the defendants is, that they shall not be made to pay more than they have agreed."

Again: "The lien to be pursued is measured by the 'original contract,' for the reason, as we have seen, that Sellers and Goldstein ought not to be charged beyond their contract."

Opinion of the Court.

Now, "all that was due" has been paid; all that was to become due "remained to be earned." There was no money due at the time of the notice. "All that was then due," that is, had been earned, had been paid to Zurn and Hannigan, and that which was to become due, "remained to be earned." It was afterwards earned by Giblin, and earning it, he was entitled to it. Neither the material nor labor of the appellants earned it, but the material and labor of Giblin did.

If, then, the liability of the owner is bounded by the amount named in the contract as the price, how are the appellants to recover? (Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566.) If any other rule was to prevail, then the owner would be liable for all materials and labor, regardless of the contract price.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This action is brought under the Mechanics' Lien Act of 1862. Sellers and Goldstein, being the owners of a certain lot in San Francisco, contracted in writing with Giblin for the construction of two houses for a price named, payable in instalments. Giblin contracted in writing with Zurn and Hannigan to do the carpenter work on the buildings and furnish the materials for the work. On the 12th of January, 1863, the sub-contractors gave notice to the contractor and the architect, that they could not complete their contract, and they then abandoned the work. The contractor, up to that time, had paid to the sub-contractors all that was due them for work done and materials furnished by them, and it is not alleged and does not appear that a further sum was to become due to them, for work done or materials furnished before that time. On the 15th of January, 1863, the plaintiff served upon the owners of the premises and the contractor, a notice of his claim as a material man, for lumber, etc., furnished to the sub-contractors for the erection of the houses, the bill for which was on the 13th of January, 1863, certified by the sub-contractor to be correct. Upon the sub-contractors abandoning their contract, the contractor (Giblin) proceeded to complete the buildings, including that portion of the work uncompleted under the sub-contract; and at the time they abandoned their contract five thousand eight hundred and sixty dollars, as appears by the stipulation of the parties, "remained to be earned and paid upon the original contract as between the original parties (said Giblin, Goldstein and Sellers,) in two instalments—one of fifteen hundred dollars, and the last of four thousand three hundred and sixty dollars—to be paid on completion of the job. Fully completed March 20, 1863." The plaintiff sued to enforce his lien upon the lot as a material man, and he makes as defendants the owners of the lot and the sub-contractors.

The intervenor's position is similar in all respects to that of the plaintiff. The defendants had judgment in the Court below.

The appellants state the question involved in the case as follows: "Can the material man and laborer go upon the house, superstructure, etc., directly to the extent of the contract price due, or are they subject to all the conditions which may be created by the account between the contractor and his sub-contractor?" and in solving this question they lay down the proposition that, under the Mechanics' Lien Law, the material man and laborer are entitled to a lien upon the premises, as principals, subject to the limitation only, that the amount of such lien shall not exceed the price agreed to be paid by the owner of the real estate to the original contractor for the whole work. If this proposition can be maintained, the question must be answered in the affirmative.

The securing of liens to certain classes of contractors, mechanics and material men, for the value of the labor and materials furnished by them in the construction or repair of buildings and certain other structures, has been a favorite subject of legislation in this State, and remedies have been afforded to them, differing in material respects from those granted to other classes performing apparently equally meritorious services. The Act of 1862, which went to a greater extent in giving liens where none had been directly contracted for by the parties, superseded all former statutes on that subject. It is provided by section one that original contractors shall have a lien to the extent of the original contract price, and that such contract shall operate as a lien in favor of the sub-contractors, laborers and material men; and it is declared in section three, that the lien created by such contract "shall be and inure primarily to the benefit of all persons who, as employés of the original contractor, or [of] his assigns, shall perform work and labor, or furnish material for the construction or repair of such building," etc.; and that "after the payment of such material men, workmen and laborers, such lien shall inure to the benefit of the original contractor or his assigns." Sections one, three, and seventeen, are the only ones in the Act that declare the liens that the several classes of persons may acquire under a contract for the construction of a building, the other sections having relation to that general subject, prescribe the manner of acquiring, enforcing and satisfying such liens.

The statute grants to the contractor who has entered into a contract in writing to construct a house, a lien upon the house while it is being constructed, and for a limited time after its completion, as security for the payment of the money becoming due to him, according to the terms of the contract. Although the language of section one is that he shall have a lien "to the extent of the original contract price," it could not have been the intent of the Legislature, and it certainly was not within their power to give a lien for an amount exceeding the sum to become due to the contractor. For if the contractor engages to construct the house in consideration, in whole or in part, of a debt then due from him to his employé, or of a sum of money paid to him by the employer upon the execution of the contract, that portion of the original contract price represented by the debt or the advance payment, could not become a lien upon the house. The amount of the contract price which is to be paid to the contractor becomes a lien upon the house as the same falls due according to the terms of the contract, and it is this lien that the statute declares shall inure primarily to the benefit of the employés of the contractor. No lien is provided for them by the statute other than such as arises under and flows from the original contract, and no other or greater lien could by legal possibility inure to their benefit, without subjecting the employer to a contract that he never made. The law does not create one lien for the benefit of the contractor and another for the benefit of his employés, but the lien arises, as the contract is performed according to its terms, for the benefit of both contractor and employés; and the law in enforcing the lien and distributing the sum realized, prefers the employés to the contractor—in other words, the law permits the employés to intercept a portion or all of the sum that was agreed to be paid to the contractor. They have this right, not for the reason that the employer's property has been benefited by the labor or materials furnished by the employés, but because they have furnished the labor or materials for the contractor, to whom the law has granted a lien, for the amount which became due to him under the contract, in consequence of their labor and materials. It therefore necessarily follows that the employés cannot acquire a lien upon the house independent of the original contract, and that they are not entitled to a lien as principals, though entitled to be first paid out of the moneys becoming due under the contract, and which have been earned by the application of their labor or materials.

Are the employés of the sub-contractor subject to all the conditions that may be created by the account between the contractor and sub-contractor? If the account is consistent with the terms of the contract entered into between the contractor and the sub-contractor, and payment has not been prematurely made, there can be no doubt that the employés of the sub-contractor are not entitled to demand from the contractor or employer an amount exceeding the sum then due the sub-contractor, according to his agreement with the contractor. (See Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566, and cases cited.)

strated that a party who has fully complied with the terms of his agreement can be held responsible for an amount exceeding the amount he agreed to pay.

The mere fact that a portion of the work was done, and the materials furnished by the employes of the sub-contractor, could not entitle him to receive, either directly, or indirectly through payments to his employes a greater sum than he would have been entitled to had he personally performed all the labor and furnished the materials, in performance of the sub-contract. The action seems to have been brought in view of that principle, for it is alleged in the complaint that an amount exceeding the plaintiff's demand was then due the sub-contractors, on their contract with the original contractor, who is entitled to all the residue of the original contract price, that he has not agreed to pay to the sub-contractors, and the contractor is not made a party to the suit. Under the principle now contended for by the appellants, if the sub-contractors had purchased of the material man, on credit, a bill of lumber, to be used by them in performance of their contract, and had thereupon abandoned the contract and appropriated the lumber to other purposes, the original employer would be held liable for the price of the lumber, and he, upon settlement with the contractor, would be permitted to deduct that sum from the contract price, although the contractor, in performance of the contract, had been obliged at his own expense to furnish the full amount of lumber required for the building. The statute, for the protection of employes, holds the payment made before it fell due, according to the terms of the contract, void as against the unsatisfied claims of the employes; but if payment has been made according to the terms of the contract, and before the material man or laborer has given notice of his claim according to law, we find no provision in the statute holding the employer or the original contractor liable for the payment of such claim, and certainly there is no rule of the common law leading to such a result. If in such case the contractor is not indebted to the sub-contractor he is not responsible for the labor or material furnished to the sub-contractor by his employés; and the employés not being entitled to intercept it as a portion of the amount due or becoming due to the contractor, cannot have a lien upon the house for their payment. Their only remedy in such case is against the sub-contractor; and if they are not willing to trust to his personal responsibility, they must see that his contract is adequate, as to the price and terms, to afford them sufficient security.

JUDGMENT ON NOTE AND MORTGAGE NOT A BAR TO ACTION AGAINST INDORSER.

—A judgment against the maker of a promissory note secured by a mortgage executed by him simultaneously with the note for the amount due on the note, and directing a sale of the mortgaged premises and an application of the proceeds on the judgment, costs, etc., is not a bar to an action against the indorser of the note, who indorsed the same at the time of its execution for the accommodation of the maker.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The cause was, by the agreement of the parties, referred to Alexander Campbell, as sole referee, to try the case and report a judgment. The referee reported a judgment in favor of the defendants. This report was, on motion of the plaintiff, set aside and a new trial granted, and the present appeal is from that order.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Hoge & Wilson, for Appellants.

The case entirely turned upon the finding and opinion of the referee, that this action against the defendants as indorsers of the note in question, was barred by the proceedings and judgment in the foreclosure suit, set out in the report of the referee.

By the amendment to the two hundred and forty-sixth section of the Practice Act, adopted in 1861, it was provided that there should be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage, or lien upon real estate, etc., which action shall be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. And in that action the Court was empowered by its decree or judgment to direct a sale and application of the proceeds to the payment of the amount due, and if there should be any deficiency, the judgment should then be docketed for the balance against the defendant or defendants personally liable for the debt, and an execution, as in other cases.

It would seem that the force and intent of these provisions are perfectly manifest. No argument can make them plainer. The law is positive and admits of no evasion. There shall be but a single proceeding for the recovery of a debt when it is secured by mortgage upon real estate, etc., and that shall be against all parties liable for that debt, and shall administer a perfect remedy as between the parties. There is no necessity for and no right to any other proceeding for the recovery of that debt, or the enforcement of that right, and thus the door is closed against useless litigation and multiplication of costs.

The plaintiff seemed to understand the law as we understand it, for he commenced his original proceedings against all parties in conformity with the requirements of the two hundred and forty-sixth section. He voluntarily dismisses his suit, as against these defendants, and proceeds against the others, and obtains his decree and judgment, and by so doing he lost his right to proceed against the defendants as indorsers, and must look to his decree and the mortgaged property for his satisfaction. If the holder of a debt, secured by mortgage, may do this, in defiance of the express provisions of the law, he may sacrifice the mortgage premises, by proceedings without notice to the other parties, to foreclose his mortgage by a separate proceeding, and buy in the property, at some nominal sum far below its value, and still enforce his claims to the full amount against all others liable to him, or may drive them to expensive litigation, to get the benefit of the securities. This is directly violative of the whole policy of the law. At all events, before he should be permitted to pursue such course, he should at least be compelled to realize the benefit of his foreclosure proceedings, before he should be permitted to maintain a separate suit against the defendants upon their liability upon his note. As this Court said in the case of McGarvey v. Hall, 23 Cal. 141, the defendants have a clear right to set up the mortgage as a defense, and a right to have the mortgaged premises applied in satisfaction of the debt.

Delos Lake, for Respondent.

The obvious intent and object of this statute was to avoid and prevent a multiplicity of actions against the debtor. It was made for the benefit of the mortgagor alone.

In the absence of statutory regulations a mortgage creditor had it in his power to harass his debtor with three actions at one and the same time, i. e., an action at law to recover the debt, an action in equity to foreclose the mortgage, and an action of ejectment.

Ejectment to recover possession under a mortgage was prohibited by section two hundred and sixty of the Practice Act. But until the amendment to section two hundred and forty-six, passed in 1860, the mortgage creditor could maintain separate actions to recover his debt and to foreclose his mortgage.

(The additional amendment of 1861 was to correct a mere verbal inaccuracy.)

By this section the creditor is restricted to one action, as against his debtor, who has secured his debt or obligation by mortgage—the mode of proceeding being minutely pointed out by the statute.

The whole scope of the statute is that a promissor who has secured the performance of his promise by mortgage, shall be subjected to but one action, which shall include his promise and his security. The term "debt" or "right" in the statute obviously has reference to the obligation which the mortgage is intended to secure.

The maker of the promissory note in question executed the mortgage to secure the performance of its promise or obligation, not to secure the performance of the obligation of the indorsers, and as against the mortgagor there can be but one action.

The obligation of an indorser is wholly different from that of the maker. He is not jointly liable with the maker, and but for section fifteen of the Practice Act, could not be joined in the same action. His agreement is, that in case the maker does not perform his promise, he, the indorser, will pay the sum which the maker has promised to pay.

The action against the indorser is not on the maker's promise, but on the indorser's promise.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The defendants are charged by the complaint as indorsers of a promissory note. The following facts are set forth in the agreed statement on motion for new trial:

"On the fifteenth day of December, 1858, the plaintiff loaned to the French Town Canal and Mining Company, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, for which sum the said company made their promissory note payable to the order of the above named defendants, who indorsed the same for the accommodation of the said makers, the French Town Canal and Mining Company; and, after such indorsement, said note, so indorsed, was delivered to the plaintiff.

"That at the maturity of said note, the same was duly presented to said makers, for payment, at the office of R. E. Brewster & Co. in the City of San Francisco (being the place named in said promissory note,) and payment thereof demanded and refused, and that the above named defendants were duly notified of such demand and non-payment. That there was due on said promissory note, and unpaid, the sum of fifteen thousand four hundred and seventy-five dollars and ninety-one cents, after deducting all payments, and that the plaintiff is the owner and holder of said note.

"That simultaneously with the making, indorsing and delivery of said promissory note, the said makers, the French Town Canal and Mining Company, made, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a mortgage, conditioned for the payment of said sum of fifteen thousand dollars and interest, so loaned, as above set forth, to said company, according to the terms of said promissory note, and as security therefor; by which said mortgage said company mortgaged to the plaintiff certain real estate and premises in the County of Butte, known as the French Town Canal and Mining Company Water Ditch.

"That on the 13th day of January, 1862, said plaintiff instituted suit in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, wherein the said French Town Canal and Mining Company, and the defendants in this suit, and others, were defendants, to foreclose said mortgage and sell said mortgaged premises to satisfy said note and for judgment and payment against the said French Town Canal and Mining Company, and the defendants in this suit, for the amount which might be found to be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest upon the said note and mortgage, after applying the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged premises toward the payment of the same, and the costs of the said action.

"That on the first day of September, 1862, said last named Court made an order sending said cause to the County of Butte, in the then Fifteenth Judicial District of this State, for trial in the said County of Butte, on the fourth day of November, 1862; and at the trial of said cause said action was, on motion of counsel for plaintiff, dismissed as to the said defendants herein, and brought on for trial against said French Town Canal and Mining Company and others; and judgment was rendered in said cause that there was due to plaintiff therein, on said note secured by said mortgage, on the 4th of November, 1862, the sum of ten thousand seven hundred and fifty-five dollars and fifty-four cents, with interest at the rate of two and a half per cent per month; that said mortgaged premises be sold, and in case of deficiency in the proceeds of such sale to satisfy said debt, interest and costs and expenses, on the coming in and confirmation of the Sheriff's report of such sale, that the said French Town Canal and Mining Company should pay to plaintiff such deficiency, with interest aforesaid; and that said judgment remains in full force, unreversed and not appealed from."

It is insisted on behalf of the appellants that this action cannot be maintained against them in view of the two hundred and forty-sixth section of the Practice Act as amended in 1860, and in 1861. The section is as follows:

"There shall be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage or lien upon real estate or personal property; which action shall be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. In such action, the Court shall have power by its decree or judgment, to direct a sale of the encumbered property (or of such part thereof as shall be necessary) and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the costs and expenses of sale, the costs of suit, and the amount due to the plaintiff. If it shall appear from the Sheriff's return that there is a deficiency of such proceeds, and a balance still due to the plaintiff, the judgment shall then be docketed for such balance against the defendant or defendants personally liable for the debt, and shall from the time of such docketing be a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, and an execution may thereupon be issued by the Clerk of the Court, in like manner and form as upon other judgments, to collect such balance or deficiency from the property of the judgment debtor."

There are but two views possible, as to the meaning of this section — first, that the inhibition contained in it, is limited to the case where the mortgage given is collateral to the particular right which the action is brought to enforce; or, second, that the inhibition not only extends to cases of that class, but comprehends cases also where the mortgage is not collateral to that right. The question has been argued, to some extent, on considerations of convenience; but the intention is to be sought for primarily in the language of the section quoted, subject to the settled rules of interpretation and construction.

There may be a question, as suggested by respondent's counsel, as to whether the liability of an indorser sounds in "debt," in the common law sense of that term. But it is unnecessary to determine the point, for the word "right" is used in the same connection as the "debt;" and whatever material element there may be, not included within the latter term, would of course be comprehended by the former. If an indorser does not owe a "debt" to his indorsee technically considered, there can be no doubt that the indorsee has, as against the indorser, all the "rights" of a promisee. For all the purposes of discussion, then, the words "for the recovery of any debt" may be eliminated, leaving the section to read as follows: "There shall be but one action for the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage," etc. The right referred to, is obviously, not the right of a mortgagee as such, but a right existing independently of the mortgage, and which the mortgage is given to secure—a right, in short, the correlative of which is a liability in personam; and it results, that the provision may be paraphrased as follows: "There shall be but one action for the enforcement of a personal liability secured by mortgage," etc. The words "secured by mortgage" are descriptive of the right or personal liability, contemplated by the section, and any personal liability not so secured is manifestly without its purview. This action is brought for the enforcement of a personal liability, and if that liability is not secured by mortgage, then the action can be maintained.

On what may be called the question of fact involved in this proposition, it would seem that opinions could not be divided. The mortgage given in this case, was executed by the makers of the note, and the only personal liability secured by it, or intended to be secured by it, was that of the makers of the note—as such; or to use the language of the section, the only “right,” secured by the mortgage, was the right of the plaintiff, as indorsee of the note, to call upon the makers to fulfil their personal promise. The promise of a maker of a note is one thing, and the promise of an indorser is another. One is primary and the other is secondary; one is absolute, the other turns upon conditions; each may be secured by a separate mortgage, or one mortgage may be so framed as to secure them both. But a mortgage which by its terms is made applicable to the promise of the maker only, can in no just sense be regarded as collateral either to the personal liability or to the “right” of which the contract of indorsement is the source: On the ground, then, that the right which this action is brought to enforce is unsecured by mortgage, we consider that the plaintiff is at liberty to pursue the defendants in personam on their contract of indorsement.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT.—In actions to recover real property, testimony is admissible to show that a deed, absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Sierra County.

This was an action to recover possession of one undivided fourth part of a mining claim situated at Poverty Hill, Sierra County.

The complaint averred that on the first day of September, 1861, the plaintiff was the owner of and in possession of the interest in the claim in dispute, and that on the same day defendant entered and ousted him from the possession thereof.

Statement of Facts.

Plaintiff, on the trial, proved that on and before the 16th day of February, 1856, one James Cunningham was the owner of and in possession of the interest in dispute, and that on the same day he sold and delivered possession thereof to one James H. Bartlett.

Plaintiff then introduced in evidence the following bill of sale:

"POVERTY HILL, May 13th, 1856.

"Know all men by these presents, that I do, for and in consideration of the sum of two hundred and two dollars 65-100, with interest from date till paid by me, transfer all my right, title, and interest in the claims known as Bartlett, Craig & Co.'s, on Poverty Hill, to Geo. Raskt & Co. Said interest consists of one fourth part of six claims.

"JAMES H. BARTLETT.

"JAMES CUNNINGHAM,

"GEORGE WEST."

Plaintiff then proved that the land described in plaintiff's complaint was, at the time said conveyance was made, known and designated as Bartlett, Craig & Co.'s Claims, and that the interest described in said conveyance was the same interest in said land that this action is brought to recover. That the firm of Geo. Raskt & Co. named in said conveyance, was composed of Geo. Raskt and the defendant, T. H. Hawkins.

Plaintiff then gave in evidence a note from James H. Bartlett to Raskt & Co., of which the following is a copy:

"POVERTY HILL, Sierra County, Cal., May 13th, 1856.

"On demand, for value received, I promise to pay to Geo. Raskt & Co. the sum of two hundred and two dollars 65-100, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent a month till paid.

Plaintiff then offered to prove by the testimony of the said James H. Bartlett that the conveyance was intended as a mortgage to secure the payment of the note, and not as an absolute conveyance.

Plaintiff then introduced in evidence a deed from said Bartlett to him of the property in dispute, dated August 1st, 1861, and proved that a few days after the execution of the same he exhibited the same to defendant, and offered to pay him any demand he might have against said Bartlett which was a lien on the premises.

Defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Williams & Johnson, for Appellant.

It is now the settled rule in this State, and has been since the question was first before Mr. Justice Field, that parol evidence is admissible in equitable actions to show for what purpose a written instrument was given, when that evidence is pertinent to the issues made. We are unable to see a reason for a different rule in actions at law. Possession and the Statute of Limitations were made issues by defendant in this case, and we had a right to bring ourselves within the statute, and to show our possession by showing that Hawkins held as mortgagee. If in doing this it becomes necessary to prove for what purpose a writing was given, we have unquestionably the right to make the proof. True, the written instrument best proves its contents; nor do we seek to change or disturb the wording of the instrument, or its meaning — but we asked to show for what purpose it was given.

Creed Haymond, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

Plaintiff introduced in evidence an instrument in writing executed by James H. Bartlett, dated May 13, 1856, purporting to transfer to George Raskt & Co. "all my (his) right, title and interest in the claims" in dispute, "in consideration of the sum of two hundred and two dollars and sixty-five cents, with interest from date till paid by me." Also, a note given by said Bartlett to said Raskt & Co., bearing the same date, for the sum of two hundred and two dollars and sixty-five cents, payable on demand with interest until paid, at three per cent per month. He then offered to prove by Bartlett, that, the said instrument transferring said claims was intended by the parties to be a mortgage to secure the payment of said note. Upon objection of defendant the testimony was excluded by the Court, and exception taken to the ruling by plaintiff. The ground of the objection, is, that the evidence is irrelevant, and that it is inadmissible to show by parol that the instrument was intended as a mortgage. The testimony is relevant; and it is now settled in this State that parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed absolute on its face was intended to be a mortgage. (Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 116; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 291.) Nor can the rule be confined to cases that formerly were cognizable in equity alone. There is but one form of action in this State, and the same rules of evidence must be applied alike to all cases. It may be that formerly the rule prevailed only in cases in equity. But, however that may be, there is no distinction in this State.

Section two hundred and sixty of the Practice Act provides, that, "a mortgage of real property shall not be deemed a conveyance, whatever its terms, so as to enable the owner of the mortgage to recover possession of the real property without foreclosure and sale." If the rule contended for by the respondent prevailed, this provision of the statute would be nugatory, for the reason that when the mortgage is in its terms an absolute conveyance, the mortgagor would be prohibited from showing the real character of the transaction. The position contended for by the respondent would resolve the question into one of pleading, rather than a question as to the competency of evidence. But there is no equitable title to be set up. The plaintiff, if he has any title at all, has a legal title. A mortgage under our system, as between the parties, does not pass the legal title to the grantees. The title remains in the mortgagor until it is divested by a foreclosure and sale, whatever the terms of the mortgage may be.

There was error in excluding the testimony, and as we cannot know but that the Court might have come to a different conclusion and decision, had the testimony been admitted, there must be a new trial.

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

JOHN ANDERSON v. J. G. DOLL.

INTERLINERATION IN WRITTEN CONTRACT.—If the owner of a horse delivers him to another party in pledge to secure the payment of a debt, and the parties contract in writing that the pledgee may keep the horse one year, paying for his use a stipulated sum, and may further keep him a second year upon the same terms, by giving proper notice of his election to do so, and the copy of the contract kept by the pledgee is interlined the next day by consent of parties so as to allow the pledgee to keep the horse two years more, instead of one, and the owner afterwards sells the horse and contract to a third party, and the pledgee gives notice of his election to keep the horse one year more, and at the end of that time accepts from the purchaser the money due from the pledgee, these circumstances are evidence that the pledgee regarded the original contract as binding.

LICENSE TO DO BUSINESS NOT A TAX.—A license paid to keep a stallion is not a tax upon his assessed value.

APPEAL from the District Court, Second Judicial District, Tehama County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

The findings of the Court below show that the contract was executed in duplicate the day it bears date, and that on the subsequent day the alterations were made in the presence of Welsh, and with his consent, and for the express purpose of extending the time to three years.

Courts, in the construction of written contracts, always endeavor to give effect to the intention of parties, provided they can do so without violating any rule of law.

"A material alteration in a note or bill, made by the consent of all parties, is valid and binding. * * * Consent may be subsequent, as well as prior to the alteration, since the parties must be as competent to alter their contract after it was made as originally to make it."

The law of the alteration of other instruments is the same as that of negotiable paper. (2 Parsons, 581.)

While it might be true that Welsh, the vendor of Anderson, would be responsible to him for selling and assigning a paper that was not what it purported to be, it is extremely difficult to see what Doll had to do with the transaction, or how Doll is estopped from claiming his just rights under his contract by any transaction that might have occurred between Anderson and Welsh. It is not pretended that Doll was asked by what terms he held the horse, and that he made false representations on which Anderson acted to his injury. Nor is it possible to bring plaintiff's case within any definition of an estoppel. (Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23.)

Townsend & Combs, for Respondent.

By the terms of the contract only the "taxes upon the horse" were to be refunded by Welsh, not the taxes upon the use of the horse in a particular manner, to wit: for public hire.

The Court finds that "before the commencement of the standing season of 1863, defendant, in accordance with the contract, gave notice that he elected to keep the horse during that season." This furnishes the strongest inference from the defendant's own act that he knew that his right of election was only for one year after the first, and not for two, as he afterwards set up in his answer.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This is an action of replevin for a thoroughbred stallion called "Rifleman," valued in the complaint at six thousand dollars. It appears from the record that on the 18th of February, 1862, one Welsh, then the owner of the horse Rifleman, borrowed of the defendant one thousand dollars, for which he gave him his promissory note, bearing interest at the rate of one and one half per cent per month. To secure the payment of the sum so borrowed, Welsh delivered the horse in pledge to the defendant. The defendant, wishing to use the horse, agreed to pay Welsh one thousand dollars for the use of the horse one year, and it was further agreed between the contracting parties that the defendant should have the privilege of keeping the horse another year, upon the same terms, upon giving proper notice of his election to do so; in which event the note mentioned was not to become due until the lapse of the extended term. The defendant was to pay the expenses of keeping the horse, and also the taxes upon his assessed value. The taxes so paid were to be refunded with interest by Welsh to the defendant at the expiration of the term.

On the sixth of September, 1862, Welsh sold the horse to the plaintiff, and at the same time assigned to him the contract entered into between himself and the defendant. Early in the year 1863 defendant gave notice, in accordance with the terms of the contract, of his election to keep the horse the second year. Immediately after the second year had expired the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the horse, and at the same time tendered him the amount due on the note due him from Welsh, and also the sum due for the taxes on the assessed value of the horse for State and county purposes for the years 1862 and 1863, and the interest thereon at the rate stipulated. The sums so tendered the defendant accepted, but refused to surrender the horse. The plaintiff then brought this action. In defense the defendant alleged that by the contract he was entitled to have and hold the horse for three years, and also that the county license tax for the years 1862 and 1863 for keeping the stallion for hire was not paid him.

The Court found that by the original contract the defendant had the right by his election to extend the term of holding the horse in his possession for one year in addition to the first year stipulated, so that by its terms the whole period would expire in the spring of 1864. It was also found that the copy of the contract offered in evidence by the defendant was interlined so as to give him the right to elect to keep the horse two years instead of one, additional to the first year; and that it was in evidence that the interlineation was made by the defendant in the presence of Welsh and with his consent on the day after the original contract was executed, but that there was no evidence that the plaintiff had notice of the change so made in the defendant's copy or counterpart of the contract as first executed.

If it were admitted that the change made by the interlineation referred to, could have operated to give the defendant the right to elect to keep the horse two years in addition to the first year, instead of one only, even as against the plaintiff who purchased the animal without notice of the change, still it does not appear that he made such election, but on the contrary it is found by the Court that the defendant did elect in terms to retain the possession and use of the horse for the second year only; besides which it is also found that the defendant accepted the money on the note for one thousand dollars, and also the taxes on the assessed value of the horse with the interest thereon as due. These several circumstances are to our minds strong evidence that the defendant regarded the original contract as the one of binding validity. If the original contract was not subsisting and binding at the time he gave notice of his election to keep the horse the second year, then he was not entitled to have and hold him under such notice.

The defendant further controverted the plaintiff's right to recover, on the ground that the county license tax for the years 1862 and 1863 were not paid him. This objection we think not well founded. The amount paid for a license to do a particular kind of business could not be charged to the owner of the horse under the terms of the contract to refund the amount paid for taxes on the horse.

We are satisfied the Court below came to a correct conclusion as to the rights of the parties upon the facts found, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Neither Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON nor Mr. Justice SAWYER expressed any opinion.

A. DELAND v. HARVEY H. HIETT.

DISCHARGE OF A JUDGMENT.—A payment of part of the amount due upon a money judgment under an agreement that it shall operate as satisfaction in full will not discharge the judgment.

VOID AGREEMENT.—An agreement to discharge a judgment for a sum less than the amount for which it was rendered is void.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Yuba County.

The complaint averred that on the 22d day of April, 1861, W. S. Webb recovered a judgment against the plaintiff in the District Court of Yuba County, for four thousand three hundred and forty dollars, to bear interest at three per cent per month, and that J. O. Goodwin was the attorney of record for said Webb. That on the 18th day of October, 1861, W. S. Webb assigned the judgment to J. R. Webb. That on the 31st day of May, 1862, plaintiff paid said Goodwin one thousand dollars in full satisfaction of said judgment, and that said Goodwin, then and there acting on behalf of said Webbs, and at the request of said Webbs, and being authorized by them to do so, agreed to receive and did receive said money in full satisfaction and payment of the judgment, and with the knowledge and consent of said Webbs, acknowledged in writing upon the margin of the judgment roll, satisfaction of the judgment, in the words and figures as follows:

"For value received, the within and foregoing judgment is hereby satisfied in full. May 31, 1862.

"J. O. GOODWIN,

"Attorney of record and a fact for W. S. and Josiah R. Webb."

That on the 13th day of October, 1862, J. R. Webb assigned the judgment to defendant Hiett, and that he received the assignment with full knowledge of the facts, and that he was threatening to compel payment of the judgment by execution and forced sale of plaintiff's property.

The complaint prayed that the judgment be decreed satisfied, and that the defendant be enjoined from proceeding to enforce the collection thereof by execution or otherwise.

The answer denied that defendant, when he received the assignment, knew that the judgment was paid in whole or in part, or that he knew satisfaction of the same had been entered of record, and admitted the other allegations of the complaint.

The case was submitted on the pleadings.

The Court adjudged that the judgment be credited with one thousand dollars, but denied the injunction.

ment that it should operate as a satisfaction in full. It was held in Cumber v. Wane, 1 Strange, 426, the leading case upon the subject, that a liquidated indebtedness, presently due, could not be discharged by a payment of less than the whole sum; and in the case of Fitch v. Sutton, 5 East, 230, the doctrine is not only reasserted, but the reason of it is given—such a contract is nudum pactum. The question has been adjudged, probably in every State in the Union, and the rule has been uniformly affirmed, and on the ground stated. There is a diversity of cases that are sometimes spoken of as exceptions to the rule, but they are, more properly, not within its scope. A composition, going solely upon the grounds stated, is universally bad. Inasmuch as the discharge in this case was of record, it is possible that it might operate as an estoppel, were it not for the fact that the complaint itself goes behind the record and exposes the fact that the discharge was entered in pursuance of a nudum pactum. The cases bearing upon the main question are collected in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, page 147, where the present state of the law upon the point is fully and learnedly exhibited in the note on Cumber v. Wane.

The judgment is affirmed.

PATRICK CREIGHTON v. JOHN S. MANSON.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS BY A MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.—The municipal government of a city, in causing street improvements to be made, acts under the authority conferred upon it by the Legislature, and is subject to all the constitutional limitations and restraints imposed on the Legislature, and has no other or greater power than is and lawfully may be conferred on it by the legislative act.

ASSESSMENT NOT A TAX.—An assessment levied by a municipal Government upon lots adjacent to a street to pay for improvements made on the street. If held to be a tax, cannot be maintained, because it lacks the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS IN A CITY.—The Legislature has not the power to charge the persons who reside on a street in a city with the expenses of an improvement on that street.

CONSOLIDATION ACT AS TO STREET IMPROVEMENTS.—The Legislature has not, by the Consolidation Act for the government of San Francisco, and the amendments thereto prior to 1862, done anything more than to provide for a lien upon lots adjacent to a street for improvements made on the street.

Argument for Appellant.

and define the manner in which the same may be enforced. These Acts do not create any personal liability on the part of the owners of such lots for such improvements, nor does the amendment of 1862 create any personal liability for work done or to be done under contracts entered into before its passage.

ASSESSMENT ON LOT FOR IMPROVEMENT OF STREET.—If, under the power to take private property for public uses upon making a just compensation therefor, the Legislature possesses the power to levy an assessment upon lots in a city adjacent to a street to pay for improvements made on the street, the assessment cannot exceed the value of the benefit conferred on the lot or its owner by the improvement, and can be enforced only by proceedings to subject the lot to a sale in discharge of the lien.

SAME.—Such assessment cannot be laid on the lot or its owner when the lot has received only an injury by the work on the street for which the assessment is levied.

STATUTE CREATING A LIEN ON A LOT FOR STREET ASSESSMENTS.—A statute creating a lien upon a lot in a city to secure the payment of an assessment levied on the lot for improvements in the street adjacent, must be strictly construed, and the proceedings authorized by the statute to create and enforce the lien must be followed precisely as directed, or the whole proceeding will be void.

RESOLUTION TO GRADE STREET IN SAN FRANCISCO.—A resolution of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco of intention to grade a street, must be presented to the President of the Board for his approval; and if not so presented, no lien can be enforced on the lots adjacent to the street for assessments for grading the same.

HOW MUNICIPAL LEGISLATURE CAN ACT.—The legislative department of a city government can act only through the medium of an ordinance, but the ordinance may be in the form of a resolution, or be preceded by the words "Be it ordained," etc.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendant appealed from the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Haight & Pierson, for Appellant.

We know of no precedent in legislation or in judicial decisions under a Constitution like ours for creating a personal liability against an owner for an improvement of this kind over and above the value of the lot. The usual remedy is to assess the expense of the work upon the property responsible for it, without loading the owner with a heavy penalty over and above the value of his lot.

The adjudications on questions arising heretofore under similar laws do not control the present case, because no similar one has ever been decided.

Argument for Appellant.

The facts of this case being radically different from those of any previous one, present a different question for determination.

A law making one responsible without his knowledge or assent for an expenditure which results in impairing or destroying the value of his property, should manifestly receive a strict construction, and a strict compliance should be exacted in favor of the latter. It is a question not of moral or equitable obligation, but of naked technical legal liability.

The cases in which this principle has been decided are collected in the second chapter of Blackwell on Tax Titles, page 43, and following. (See, also, Sharp v. Spier, 4 Hill, 76; Sharp v. Johnson, 4 Hill, 92.)

Most of the cases referred to in Blackwell are those of a sale of land for taxes, and the rules applicable to such sales are too familiar to need comment.

There is an obvious duty to pay taxes, but no such obvious duty to incur a heavy expense in making a highway for the use of the population, resident and transient, of a great city. The rule is a most salutary one in the case of general taxes, as universal experience demonstrates, and should not be relaxed, but rather made more stringent; much more in the case of a special and onerous exaction, no argument is needed to show that the most severe and stringent rule should be adopted and the most exact compliance required. In such statutes nothing is left to the discretion of the officer. None of the provisions are directory, which can be obeyed or not without affecting the validity of the proceeding. Every step required to be taken by the statute must be taken, or the defendant will not be liable.

Whether the proceeding is one that creates a liability for a definite sum of money, or deprives a man of a piece of land equal in value, does not change the principle. Whether a man is made liable for one thousand dollars, or loses a piece of property of the value of one thousand dollars, the effect and rule of construction in both cases are the same.

Some have argued that a statute which authorizes taking from a man a sum of money without his consent, is not to be construed so strictly as one which takes from him a parcel of land of equal value. The bare statement of the proposition refutes it sufficiently.

The fact that in the case of a pecuniary liability a suit has to be brought is of no importance, if the defendant is not at liberty to require on the part of the plaintiff a strict compliance with the law. Of what advantage in such a case is the privilege of a defense, if the defendant cannot avail himself of omissions and failures to comply? The defendant cannot go outside of the statute to show equities in his defense. No matter how inequitable the plaintiff's claim may be, if the law has been pursued, there is no remedy. The plaintiff has simply to say, "ita lex scripta est." He cannot complain, therefore, of being tried by the same rule which he invokes.

The first objection is that no legal or official action was taken by the Board of Supervisors to cause notice of their intention to be given. Section sixty-eight of the Consolidation Bill, (Stats. of 1856, p. 164,) provides that "every ordinance or resolution of the Board of Supervisors, providing for any specific improvement, and for laying a tax or assessment, shall, after its introduction, be published five days; and every such ordinance, after the same shall pass the Board, shall, before it takes effect, be presented to the President for approval. If he approve he shall sign it; if not he shall return it," etc. "If at any stated meeting thereafter, two thirds of all the members elected to the Board vote for such ordinance or resolution, it shall, despite the objections of the President, become valid."

Section forty provides that whenever the Board shall determine to grade any street, they shall cause notice of their intention to be published for the period of ten days, etc.

The resolution of intention is the foundation of the whole proceeding — the first step upon which the others rest. It provides for a specific improvement, and for laying an assessment; it must be presented to the President for his approval; without his approval it is no more the official act of the Board of Supervisors than if it had been signed by a majority of the members not convened in session as a Board. Without the signature of the President it lacks the very element required by the statute.

Daniel Rogers, for Respondent.

Appellant's counsel contend that the assessment is void and unconstitutional; inasmuch as it conflicts with that part of section eight of Article I of the Constitution, which declares "nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." It is also contended that the appellant cannot be made to pay an amount over the assessed value of the property. These positions are untenable. The Superintendent, in the execution of the contract, is the agent of the owner as well as the city. The principle involved is the same as laying a tax; upon failure to pay in either case, the property is liable to sale. The tax is for the benefit of the public, and yet it cannot be urged that upon a sale for taxes property is taken for public use without compensation. The improvement for which this suit is brought, is, to some extent, of general benefit—yet more chiefly for the benefit of the immediate neighborhood. The benefit is immediately to adjacent property holders, and only indirectly to the city. (Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 283.)

This Court has already decided that assessments for street repairs are constitutional, without respect to the amount assessed being disproportionate to the assessed value of the property. (Hart v. Gaven, 12 Cal. 477.)

C. H. Parker, also for Respondent.

The first objection is based upon the assumption that the notice of intention falls within the provisions of section sixty-eight. This is a mistake. The modus operandi is this: The Superintendent, whose duty it is to see what street work ought to be done, recommends to the Board that a street should be graded. At the next meeting, the Board, acting upon this information, passes a resolution stating that it is their intention to order (or provide for) said grading. This notice of an intention is a feeler thrown out by the Board to ascertain the wishes of the parties interested, and to enable them to protest, if they choose, against "providing" for this "specific improvement." Now, an intention to provide, is not actually providing, any more than the announcement of an intention to go to Sacramento necessarily involved the actual going to Sacramento. The Board may never proceed any further in the matter; if so, it cannot be said that they have actually provided for said specific improvement. It is one of a series of resolutions—a notice—but it is not the resolution of the series "providing for any specific improvement." After ten days publication, there being no objection to the grading of the street—all things being ready—the Board pass a resolution "providing" for the grading. This is the important resolution: and for this the old law required the formalities of section sixty-eight to make it effective. (The law of 1862 has dispensed with all this formality, so far as street improvements are concerned.)

It was never understood that the resolution of intention was within section sixty-eight, and it was seriously doubted whether the second resolution was within it. (9 Paige, Ch. R. p. 24.) Section sixty-eight was intended to cover only those resolutions which were not preceded by a prior resolution of intention.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This action is brought to recover of the defendant the amount of the assessment levied upon a lot in San Francisco, by the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways, to pay the plaintiff, as the contractor, for his services in grading Union street; also to enforce the assessment as a lien upon the lot.

The defendant was the owner of the lot when the services were performed, and still remains the owner. Previous to the making of the contract for the grading of the street between the Superintendent and the contractor, the lot was appraised, for revenue purposes, at fourteen hundred dollars. The assessment amounts to nineteen hundred and eighty-nine dollars and fifty-four cents. The lot is rendered worthless in consequence of the grading of the street. The Court gave judgment against the defendant for the amount of the assessment, and decreed that the plaintiff should have a lien on said lot to the amount of said judgment.

The construction and improvement of streets are public works, and are intended for the benefit of the public at large; and though the presumption may be indulged in that the larger portion of the benefit inures to the owner of the contiguous property, yet it is but a presumption which in a large proportion of cases is not true, and it remains but a presumption that is liable to be rebutted by proof of the truth. The streets, although public works and designed for public use, are not always constructed at public expense, but more generally they are graded and improved under the direction of the municipal authorities, at the expense of the contiguous lots and lands. The municipal governments, in causing street improvements to be made, act under the authority conferred upon them by the Legislature, the authority being a portion of the sovereignty delegated to them for the purposes of municipal government.

The municipal government, in the exercise of the authority thus conferred, is subject to all the constitutional restraints and limitations imposed on the Legislature, and has no other or greater power than is and lawfully may be conferred on it by the legislative act. It can make no order for the improvement of a street, and make no provision for the payment of the expenses, that the Legislature might not do if it should act directly in the matter. When the improvement has been made, an assessment is levied upon the adjacent real estate by the city government, in such manner as the Legislature has directed, to pay for the expenses of the work. Is the right to levy the assessment thus conferred upon the city a portion of the power possessed by the Legislature of raising money for public purposes by taxation, or does it rather fall within the right of eminent domain? If not derived from one of these, it is difficult if not impossible to refer it to any source of legislative power under the Constitution. It appears to us very clearly that the assessment is not a tax, and though the authorities are not uniform on this point, we think the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Bronson in Sharp v. Spier, 4 Hill, 76, and in Sharp v. Johnson, Id. 92, unanswerable and decisive against its being regarded as a tax. (See also the able opinion in People ex rel. Post v. Mayor, etc., of Brooklyn, 6 Barb. 209; and Municipality No. 2 v. White, 9 Louis. Ann. 446.) If held to be a tax, it would be in violation of the cardinal rule of the Constitution which requires taxation to be equal and uniform. The Legislature may lawfully divide the State into districts, as counties, townships, cities, etc., and may provide that the authorities of each district may raise money for local purposes by taxation, and the amount may vary in the several districts, but the tax must be equal and uniform upon the persons and property subject to taxation in each district. If the assessment for street improvements is a tax it would be no more competent for the city government to levy the entire amount of it upon the property contiguous to the street that had been improved than to levy upon the same property the whole amount of the expenses of any branch of the municipal Government.

It is also very difficult to uphold the power of levying the assessment on the adjacent property upon the theory that it is parcel of the right of eminent domain, transferred by the Legislature to the subordinate authority. When private property, whether lands or personal property, or the value of either of them, is taken for public use, just compensation must be made therefor. In order to overcome this apparently unsurmountable difficulty, it has been often held that the owner of the property should be deemed to be compensated by the benefits in the way of an increase of value that the property has received by the adjacent improvements. We do not under take to say whether such benefits, as fallacious as they are in many cases, and of which this case is a striking instance, do or do not constitute a "just compensation," according to the requirements of the Constitution; but for the purposes of this case, we admit that such benefits may satisfy the constitutional demand. The cases sustaining this view, generally, but not uniformly, hold that this benefit resulting from the street improvements attaches itself to the adjacent property, and does not directly accrue to the person who may happen to be the owner. The owner, as an individual disconnected from the property, receives no other or greater benefit from the making of the improvement than each person within the corporate limits. The doctrine that a limited number of persons, who may happen to own property in a given locality within the city, shall be chargeable personally with the expenses of a public improvement, is not in accordance with the presumption on which those cases proceed, and cannot be sustained upon any theory of the constitutional authority of the Legislature—neither as included in the taxing power nor the right of eminent domain, nor, indeed, upon any theory except that of the absolute power of the legislative department of the Government—for it would be merely the exercise of the power of taxation freed from the constitutional limitations of equality and uniformity, and would be as odious in all its features as a forced loan, without the justification of imperious necessity.

When expenses for the improvements have been incurred by the city, or some one acting under her authority, it has been usual to give a lien upon the adjacent property, or to authorize it to be sold for the payment of those expenses, or some part of them. This brings us to the inquiry whether, by the provisions of the San Francisco Consolidation Act, and the amendments thereto, the Legislature has in fact done anything more than to provide for a lien upon the adjacent property and define the manner in which the same may be enforced. Sections forty-two, forty-seven, and other sections of the Act of 1856, provide that the expenses of the several kinds of work shall be borne by the adjoining property and shall become a lien thereon; and the amendatory Act of 1859, which was in force when the contract in this case was let, in corresponding sections, makes similar provisions.

The Act of 1862, which was in force when the work under the contract was completed, in the eighth section prescribes in detail the property that shall be liable for the payment of the different kinds of improvements; and a subsequent section provides that upon the doing of certain official acts the amount assessed upon each parcel of property shall be and constitute a lien thereon. It is apparent from these provisions of the Consolidation Act, that it was intended that the expenses of each street improvement should be borne by the contiguous lots; and there is no clause in the Act of 1859, or of the Act of 1862, which, either directly or by necessary implication, charges the owner of the lot personally with those expenses that are required to be assessed upon the lot, unless that is done by those provisions of the Act prescribing the mode of procedure for the collection of the assessment. No cause of action accrued in any manner to the plaintiff as against the defendant, to recover the assessment until after the Act of 1862 took effect; for the work was not then completed, and the several official acts had not then been performed which were requisite before he could sue the defendant. The plaintiff, in his own right, acquired no cause of action against the defendant for the services performed, for there was no contract, express or implied, between the parties, but the right of action was transferred to him by a sort of legislative assignment, and when transferred to him he took it subject to the laws then in force, so far as his remedy against the defendant was concerned, though the contract with the Superintendent may have been made under a former Act.

It is provided in section twenty-nine of that Act that "All proceedings which may have been taken under the law, for which this law is a substitute, and which are pending at the time this law shall take effect, may be continued and completed under this law;" and it is further provided by section thirteen that "In all suits now pending or hereafter to be brought to recover street assessments, the proceedings therein shall be governed and regulated by the provisions of this Act." Section thirteen of the Act of 1862, which is the only section of the Act authorizing the contractor to sue the lot holder to recover the assessment made as in this case, provides that the contractor after thirty-five days from the date of the warrant may sue "the owner of the land, lots or portion of lots assessed on the day of the date of the recording of the warrant, assessment and diagrams, or on any day thereafter during the continuance of the lien of said assessment, and recover the amount of said assessment remaining due and unpaid." The language and plain meaning of the section includes not only the person who owned the lot at the date of the recording of the warrant, assessment and diagrams as liable to be sued, but also each person successively who may thereafter and during the continuance of the lien be the owner. The statute does not provide a different remedy against the subsequent owner from that given against the owner at the time the lien attached, but it affords the same remedy in every case. The action is to be brought, not in the county in which the defendant resides, but in the county in which the lot is situated. The form of the judgment is also prescribed, the Court being empowered to "adjudge and decree a lien against the premises assessed and to order such premises to be sold on execution, as in other cases of sale of real estate by process of said Courts." The proceedings authorized to be taken in the case indicate that it was intended that the action should be an action in rem to enforce the payment of the assessment by a decree for the sale of the lot, and in proceedings of that character it was proper that the person owning the lot charged with the lien at the commencement of the action should be made a defendant to the action.

No one would contend that a subsequent purchaser of the lot was personally liable for the assessment, or that in enforcing the lien a personal judgment could be rendered against him. And it will be observed that no provision is made that judgment against the person owning the lot when the assessment was made may be taken in the action brought against the subsequent owner. It is beyond all doubt that the Legislature intended to charge the lot with the assessment, to give a lien upon the lot to secure the payment of the assessment, and to authorize the Courts to enforce the lien by ordering a sale of the property, but not to give any recourse against the owner or make him personally liable. If there was any doubt upon this point, we would be justified, and indeed required, to give the owner of the lot the benefit of the doubt, because, under the well established rules of construction, it is our duty to so interpret the Act, if its terms will admit of it, that it shall harmonize with the recognized rules of law and rights of property. It is not to be presumed, unless the terms of the Act imperatively require it, that the Legislature intended that under this Act such a wrong might be perpetrated as would result if the personal judgment against the defendant could be maintained for the recovery of the assessment, levied to pay for work performed not at his request, but against his objections, and when by the work, as performed, the value of his property was wholly destroyed.

It is proper to mention another principle, which we think is sufficient to control the whole case. If it is admitted that the benefits received by the property or its owner, by means of the improvements, will satisfy the constitutional requirement of a just compensation for the assessment levied upon the property, that theory is subject to the rule that the assessment must not exceed the value of the benefit conferred by the making of the improvement. This doctrine is laid down in Matter of Fourth Avenue, 3 Wend. 452; Matter of Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149; Matter of Canal Street, 11 Wend. 154; Matter of William and Anthony Streets, 19 Wend. 678; Matter of Flatbush Avenue, 1 Barb. 286; and is affirmed in Canal Bank of Albany v. Mayor, etc., of Albany, 19 Wend. 244; and People ex rel. Post v. Mayor, etc., of Brooklyn, 6 Barb. 209; and we think the doctrine is correct and applicable to cases like the one at bar. And certainly an assessment should not be laid either upon the property or the owner, where instead of a benefit to the property the owner has received only an injury by the work on account of which it is proposed to levy the assessment.

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

SAWYER, J., concurring specially.

I dissent from some of the views expressed in the opinion, but concur in the reversal of the judgment.

By the Court, RHODES, J., on petition for rehearing.

We have carefully considered the respondent's elaborate petition for a rehearing, but in the view we take of the case, a decision of several of the points therein made is unnecessary.

As suggested by the learned counsel, it may be far more convenient, in enforcing the payment of street assessments, to be permitted to take a personal judgment than a judgment in rem only, but that consideration would certainly not be seriously urged as a sufficient reason for allowing a judgment to be taken which was clearly in conflict with constitutional law.

If it is said that in the absence of a personal liability of the lot owner for the assessment, the contractor is liable to lose that portion of the assessment which exceeds the value of the lot presumed to be benefited by the improvement, for which the assessment was made, it may be answered that the same result might happen if the lot was the only property possessed by the lot owner; and further, that it is the duty of the contractor to see that some sufficient responsibility exists for the payment of his work; that is to say, to ascertain whether the lot is of value enough to bear the burden proposed to be imposed upon it for its improvement. It is as unquestionably his duty to see that ample liability exists for his payment as it is to know that a valid ordinance passed authorizing the work to be done, for he

We are earnestly pressed by the learned counsel for the respondent to grant a rehearing, because the case cannot be fully argued on briefs, as the law is special and complicated, presenting many points for discussion; but if our view of the situation and rights of the parties is correct, the points arising out of the details—the machinery—of the Act are immaterial to the decision of the leading question in the present action.

We are referred to section seventeen of the Act of 1862 as decisive of the question of the personal liability of the lot owner in favor of the contractor. It will be noticed that the contract was made under laws in force prior to the passage of the Act of 1862, and what we said in respect to the question whether a personal liability for the assessment was given by the statute, had relation, not to a case that might arise out of a contract executed under the Act of 1862, but to the case then before us growing out of a contract made under laws in force anterior to the passage of that Act. Although the Act of 1862 purports to create a personal liability, it does not in terms, nor by necessary implication, have a retrospective operation so as to create a personal liability for work performed or to be performed under contracts made before the passage of the Act. The Legislature, by the Act, granted to parties proceeding under the statute then in force the benefit of the remedies provided in that Act; but the grant of a new remedy—a mere mode of procedure to maintain an existing right—which is clearly within the power of the Legislature, is very different in substance and effect from the grant of a new or additional liability for services performed or being performed under an existing contract. We do not now, nor have we in the opinion already delivered, attempted to controvert the position of the respondent—that the Legislature have in express terms, in the seventeenth section of the Act of 1862, declared that the lot owner shall be personally liable for the payment of the assessment, but we hold that such liability can attach, if at all, only to contracts made after the passage of the Act, and when we said that the Legislature did not intend that the lot owner should be personally liable, we had reference to an assessment for work done under a contract made before, not after, the passage of that Act.

The principles upon which we rely for a solution of the principal questions in this case, and the course of reasoning adopted, may tend to show the invalidity of the personal liability clause in section seventeen of the Act of 1863, but the question of the validity of that clause is not in issue, because it has no application to the present case.

An assessment for the improvement of a street, levied solely upon the owners of the lots lying adjacent to the street that has been improved as a public street, and which is authorized by law to be collected from the lot owners as a personal charge, without regard to the benefit actually accruing to them by means of the improvement, is a tax, and as such is obnoxious to the objection that it violates the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity.

We rest our opinion mainly on the proposition that street assessments, of the form of the present one, can be maintained; if at all, only on the theory that the power to levy such assessments upon the lots adjacent to the street that has been improved under the direction of the city government is parcel of the right of eminent domain transferred by the Legislature to the city; and that to maintain them even on that theory, it must be assumed that the benefits that the lots have received from the improvements constitute a "just compensation" for the lien cast upon them. The requirement of a just compensation to be made for private property taken for public use attends every exercise of the power by an authority subordinate to the sovereign power of the State, as well as by the State itself, and applies as well where the value or a part of the value of the property is taken by being subjected to the payment of a sum of money, as where the property itself, or some interest therein, is directly taken for public use. As a necessary consequence of this doctrine, the amount of the charge or lien imposed upon the property cannot exceed the value of the property, and the payment of the amount can be enforced only by proceedings to subject the lot to sale in discharge of the lien. The personal judgment rendered against the appellant is therefore erroneous.

The validity of the lien thus asserted, and of the judgment ordering the lot to be sold, must be ascertained mainly by an examination of the acts and proceedings required by law to be done and had by the officers of the city and the contractor previous to the time at which the alleged right of action accrued to the contractor. We previously omitted to consider this branch of the case because, the parties admitting the lot to be of no value, we deemed it unnecessary to ascertain whether the proceedings requisite to charge the lot with the payment of the assessment had been taken according to law, but as the contractor is entitled to his judgment, without regard to the value of the lot, if the proceedings have been regular, it becomes necessary to pass also upon the judgment ordering the lot to be sold.

Upon this question the appellant maintains that when summary proceedings are authorized by statute, the effect of which is to divest or affect rights of property, the statute is to be strictly construed, and that the power conferred must be executed precisely as given, and that any departure vitiates the whole proceeding. This doctrine is well expressed in the axiomatic language of Mr. Justice Bronson in Sharp v. Spier, 4 Hill, 76: "Every statute authority in derogation of the common law to divest the title of one and transfer it to another must be strictly pursued or the title will not pass." We expressed our concurrence in this principle in Curran v. Shattuck, 24 Cal. 427, as applicable to proceedings to acquire the right of way for a public road, and proceedings as in this case to acquire a lien for the payment of a street assessment are within the reasons of the rule.

We shall notice but one of the objections made by the appellant to the proceedings, and that is, that the resolution of intention of the Board of Supervisors to grade the street in question, was not presented to the President of the Board for approval according to the requirements of section sixty-eight of the Consolidation Act. It is a general rule that the legislative department of a city government can act only through the medium of an ordinance, unless the organic law specially provides another mode. The instrument containing the expression of the legislative will need not necessarily be in the usual form of a municipal ordinance and be preceded by the words "Be it ordained," etc., but it may properly be, as in this case, in the form of a resolution, but whatever its form, it amounts in substance to an ordinance, and must be passed in the mode prescribed for the passage of ordinances.

It is provided in section forty of the Consolidation Act, that the Board may order a street to be graded after notice of their intention has been published in a daily newspaper for the period of ten days, unless the owners of a specified proportion of the lands or lots bounded by the street shall make written objection thereto. The declaration of intention is the fundamental act of the whole proceeding to grade the street, and in the absence of the declaration of intention manifested by an ordinance or some act that is its equivalent in substance and effect, though differing from it in form, the whole proceedings must fail of compulsory effect. The manner of making the declaration of intention is not specified in the Act, but the power to make the declaration is conferred upon the Board and expressed in the same general terms as in the preceding and subsequent sections, is the authority to lay out a street or to order a street to be graded, and it is impossible to see why an ordinance or a resolution is not as requisite in declaring the intention to grade the street, as in ordering the street to be graded. If it is said that the resolution of intention is not comprised within the meaning of the words "every ordinance or resolution of the Board of Supervisors providing for any specific improvement," as used in section sixty-eight, it may be answered that the declaration of intention, whatever may be its form, is a legislative act, and as such must be passed in the mode prescribed by law; and for that purpose it must be presented to the President of the Board for his approval.

I concur in denying a rehearing for reasons different from those expressed in the opinion. I also dissent from the construction given in the opinion to sections forty and sixty-eight of the Consolidation Act.

THE PEOPLE v. JESUS YSLAS.

IMPEACHING A WITNESS.—Evidence of bad character for chastity is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of a witness.

SAME.—An inquiry into the character of a witness for the purpose of impeaching his testimony must be restricted to his character for truth and veracity.

AN ASSAULT.—The statutory definition of an assault is substantially the same as at common law.

SAME.—An intent to commit violence, accompanied by acts which, if not interrupted or avoided by the retreat of the other party, would be followed by personal violence, amounts to an assault.

SAME.—It is not indispensable to the commission of an assault that the assailant should be at any time within striking distance.

TESTIMONY IN CRIMINAL CASE.—On trial for an assault with intent to commit murder it appeared that the defendant committed the assault in the prosecutrix's house, and the prosecutrix immediately escaped and went to a butcher shop a few rods away, and that the defendant followed her thither after some few minutes had elapsed; Held, that what occurred between the prosecutor and defendant at the butcher's shop was admissible in evidence, at least on the question of intent.

WHAT IS AN ASSAULT.—To constitute an assault the party must have the intent to strike, the ability to do so, and must make the attempt.

CURREY, J.

IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.—Testimony to impeach a witness should not be confined to his character for truth and veracity, but should extend to his entire moral character, and a witness may be impeached by testimony showing that his general moral character is bad.

APPEAL from the County Court of Santa Clara County.

The testimony for the prosecution showed that the defendant entered the house of the prosecutrix and called for liquor, and was refused. He insisted, and it was given to him, when he called on the prosecutrix to drink, and upon her declining to do so, throwed the tumbler on the floor, threatened to kill her, and seized a hatchet and started towards her having it raised in a threatening attitude. The prosecutrix, when the defendant had approached within seven or eight feet of her, fled through the door into an adjoining room, and locked the door after her. The defendant then went up to the door and struck it with his hatchet. The prosecutrix, after waiting a few minutes, passed through another door and went to a butcher shop a few rods distant. The defendant, after waiting a short time, followed the prosecutrix to the butcher shop and again threatened her life.

The attorney for the defendant asked the Court to give the following instructions, which were refused:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that when the defendant rose from taking the hatchet in his hand, and before raising it in a striking posture, the prosecutrix, on whom the assault is alleged to have been made, had left the room in which he and she were, and shut the door, they will find the defendant not guilty as charged in the indictment, because whatever may have been his intention in taking hold of the hatchet, there was an absence of ability to carry the same into effect.

"If the jury believe from the evidence that defendant, while with the hatchet in his hand, did not attempt to throw the same at the prosecutrix, and did not raise it to strike her while within striking distance, they will find him not guilty as charged in the indictment.

"The testimony of the witness as to what took place in the butcher shop does not go to sustain the charge in the indictment, because the defendant had not at the time or there any weapon in his hand as charged in the indictment."

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. Alexander Yoell, for Appellant, referred to the following authorities on the question of the impeachment of the witness: 1 Greenleaf on Ev., note 2, p. 59; People v. Rector, 19 Wend.

570; People v. Murphy, 14 Mass. 387; State v. Boswell, 2 Dev. 209; 1 Hill, S. C. 251.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

An assault is committed when the defendant, with the intent, makes the offer to commit the violence, with the apparent though not the actual power, not necessarily within striking distance, but so near as to put a man of ordinary firmness not in actual but in well founded apprehension of peril. And these are the true ingredients of the common law and of the statutory assault. In both there is the "unlawful attempt, coupled with the present ability to commit the injury," etc.

And we refer to some authorities, and especially to Bishop, the most philosophical criminal law writer of the age: State v. Davis, 1 Iredell, N. C. 125; 1 Whar. Crim. Law, §§ 1,241-3; 2 Bishop's Crim. Law, §§ 32, 36, 37, etc.; 1 Bishop's Crim. Law § 409.

The defendant in such a case as this had no right to show the prosecutrix was unchaste. If the offer was because she was the party injured, then it was inadmissible. (3 Greenleaf on Ev., § 27.) If to impeach her like any other witness, then also the better opinion is it was inadmissible. The evidence as to character in every case, whether of party or witness, should bear some analogy and have some reference to the nature of the charge. In this case the trait in the character to be inquired into was that of the general reputation for truth and veracity only of the prosecutrix. (1 Greenleaf on Ev. § 461 n; 1 Wharton on Crim. Law, § 814; People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 129.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The defendant was indicted for an assault with intent to commit murder, tried and convicted as charged.

At the trial the defense proposed to impeach the testimony of the prosecutrix by proving her to be of a notoriously bad character for chastity. The testimony was rejected by the ground that the decision of the Court in that respect was erroneous.

That the ruling of the Court is sustained by the great mass of authority is not disputed by counsel for appellant; but it is insisted, notwithstanding, that the better reason is opposed to it. We do not deem it necessary to enter into a discussion as to what the law ought to be upon this subject. There is much force in the argument made in support of the theory that the inquiry into the character of a witness, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony, ought not to be restricted to his reputation for truth and veracity; but the rule is too well settled the other way for us to disturb it. If it is thought that the ends of justice would be subserved by changing the rule so as to make the entire moral character of the witness in the estimation of society the subject of inquiry, let the change be made by the Legislature, and not the judiciary.

The instructions asked for on the part of the defendant were properly refused. The first and second seem to be founded upon the idea that there is a substantial difference between an assault at common law and an assault as defined in our statute. In our judgment no such distinction exists. The common law definition of an assault is substantially the same as that found in the statute. (1 Russell on Crimes, 748; 1 Wharton, Section 1,241.) The vice in the two instructions under consideration is found in the idea which they countenance that there may be an intermediate point between the commencement and the end of an assault where if the assailant is interrupted either by the escape of the party assailed or the interference of bystanders, the offense is thereby made incomplete.

In order to constitute an assault there must be something more than a mere menace. There must be violence begun to be executed. But where there is a clear intent to commit violence accompanied by acts which if not interrupted will be followed by personal injury, the violence is commenced and the assault is complete. Thus riding after the prosecutor so as to compel him to run into a garden for shelter, to avoid being beaten, was held to be an assault. (Martin v. Shoppee, 3 Car. & Payne, 374.) So where the defendant was advancing in a threatening attitude, with intent to strike the plaintiff, so that his blow would in a second or two have reached the plaintiff, if he had not been stopped, although when stopped he was not near enough to strike, it was held that an assault had been committed. (Stephen v. Myers, 4 Car. & Payne, 349.) It is not indispensable to the commission of an assault that the assailant should be at any time within striking distance. If he is advancing with intent to strike his adversary and comes sufficiently near to induce a man of ordinary firmness to believe, in view of all the circumstances, that he will instantly receive a blow unless he strike in self defense or retreat, the assault is complete. In such a case the attempt has been made coupled with a present ability to commit a violent injury within the meaning of the statute. It cannot be said that the ability to do the act threatened is wanting because the act was in some manner prevented. In the present case the defendant was guilty of an assault if he advanced on the prosecutrix in such a manner as to threaten immediate violence, notwithstanding she succeeded in making her escape without injury.

The third instruction asked for by the defendant was also properly refused because what occurred in the butcher shop appears to have been a part of the res gestæ, and at least was admissible on the question of intent.

The third instruction asked for by the prosecution, to the effect that the assault was complete if the defendant had the intent to strike and the ability to do so, when by itself considered, is a little inaccurate in so far as it can be said to ignore the idea of an attempt. But this portion must be read in connection with the residue of the charge, which sufficiently informed the jury as to what constituted the attempt, to wit, the defendant's rushing toward the prosecutrix with the axe in his hand in such a manner as to show that he could and would have struck her had she not escaped through the door.

Opinion of Currey, J., concurring specially.

Taking the entire charge together, we do not think the jury could have misapprehended the law of the case.

As to the question whether the verdict is sustained by the evidence, it is sufficient to say that the testimony is conflicting. Judgment affirmed.

CURREY, J., concurring specially.

The rule restricting the examination of impeaching witnesses to the general character for truth and veracity of the witness sought to be impeached, I do not understand to be settled to the exclusion of the broader inquiry as to his general character or general moral character, and in my judgment the examination ought not to be so restricted. In England the inquiry in such cases involves the entire moral character of the witness attempted to be impeached, and the estimation in which he is held in society. (2 Taylor's Ev. Secs. 1,082, 1,083.) The authorities on this point may be found collated in 3 American Law Journal, 145, where it is said, "So far as the decisions of the Courts of England are concerned, they are unanimous to the point that the true criterion of the credit of the witness, is his general character and conduct, and not his character for truth and veracity."

In New York the rule allowing an inquiry respecting the general character of the witness sought to be impeached obtains. (People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229; People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 579; Johnson v. People, 3 Hill, 178; Fulton Bank v. Benedict, 1 Hall, 558.) In Fulton Bank v. Benedict, Mr. Justice Oakley—a very able Judge—held the true rule to be to inquire of the impeaching witness his means of knowing the general character of the witness impeached, and whether from such knowledge he would believe him under oath. And he further said, "To inquire only as to general character for truth seems too narrow. His general character for truth and honesty must be the ground of his general credit as a witness."

In Kentucky the rule is to allow an inquiry as to the general character of the witness attempted to be impeached.

Opinion of Currey, J., concurring specially.

(Hume v. Scott, 3 A. K. Marsh. 261; Blue v. Kibby, 1 Monroe, 195.) In South Carolina (Anonymous, 1 Hill, 258,) the Court of Appeals of that State held that the inquiry need not be restricted to general character for truth only, but that the true inquiry was as to the witness' general character. The Court says: "If the witness assailed is of general bad moral character, his general character, in legal contemplation, is a bad one in all respects. For a general bad moral character can only exist where a man's vices so far preponderate over his virtues as to force the conclusion in the mind of a majority of his acquaintances that he is a bad man." In North Carolina, as early as 1804, it was decided that a witness might be discredited by proving him of bad moral character, and that the inquiry should not be confined to the general character of the witness for veracity. (State v. Stallings, Martin & Harwood, 490,) and twenty-five years afterwards the Supreme Court of that State reiterated the rule in an opinion of great cogency and power. (State v. Boswell, 2 Dev. 210.) The same rule is laid down by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Wilke v. Lightner, 11 Serg. and Rawle, 198. Mr. Chief Justice Pennington, of New Jersey, in illustration of the fallacy of the rule confining the inquiry to the character of the witness for veracity, said: "Suppose a witness is a notorious cheat, sharper and swindler, although nothing has been alleged against him on the ground of his veracity under oath, is he to stand in point of credit on equal ground with a man of unblemished character and good standing in society? Reason revolts at the idea. I take it that the general character of the witness, so far as it goes to show turpitude of mind, is in issue, less credit being due to a corrupt mind than a pure one." (2 Cow. Treat. 451.)

The decisions and authorities to which I have referred, and the reasons on which they are founded, to my mind, are conclusive that the inquiry as to the character of the witness sought to be impeached ought not to be confined to his character for truth and veracity. Such a limitation necessarily excludes all discrimination between men of bad characters, except as the same may be generally known and understood as to their truth and veracity, and men of unsullied lives and corresponding reputations. If the general character of a witness which is proverbially and notoriously bad as a sharper or a swindler, or whose life is steeped in vice and immorality, may not be established to be as it is generally reported among his neighbors and acquaintances—though his character and reputation as to truth and veracity in terms may not have been the general subject of discussion—then such witness stands upon an equality with him whose character is without stain and whose life, at every stage of it, has been distinguished by the performance of every duty. For jurors, sworn to try the case before them according to the evidence, though they may know without the aid of testimony produced upon the trial of the wide difference between the characters of the two witnesses, are precluded notwithstanding their knowledge derived before the trial from observing such difference, for the reason that they are sworn a true verdict to give according to the evidence. Thus it is seen that the witness of bad character may secure by his testimony a verdict which would have never had existence, if the truth as to his general character could have been made manifest.

I am unable to perceive wherein any material inconvenience would be likely to result from the adoption of the broad rule opening the door to inquiry respecting the general character of witnesses upon whose testimony the rights of litigants are made to depend. Good men need not fear the ordeal of an examination of their character, while the vicious and dishonest, to a degree securing for themselves notoriously bad reputations, should be weighed in the balance by which their actual comparative worth and worthlessness may be determined.

The defendant proposed at this trial to impeach the prosecutrix on the ground that her character was notoriously bad in one particular, and the testimony was rejected. The offer was not within either of the rules of inquiry which I have considered, but was in violation particularly of the one which

THE PEOPLE v. AWA.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.—A restriction upon the competency of a witness must be strictly construed in favor of life, liberty, and public justice.

CHINESE WITNESSES.—A defendant in a criminal case who is a Chinaman is entitled to introduce Chinese witnesses in his behalf.

Per SANDERSON, C. J.—The words "in favor of or against any white person," in the Act prohibiting persons of one half or more Indian blood, or Mongolian or Chinese, from giving evidence, refer to the defendant alone in a criminal action.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eighth Judicial District, Del Norte County.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. P. Haynes, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney General, for the People.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The appellant, a Chinaman, was convicted of manslaughter. On the trial he offered another Chinaman as a witness on his behalf. The District Attorney objected to his examination on the ground, that he is incompetent to testify for or against a white person, and the testimony of the witness was excluded by the Court. Section fourteen of the "Act concerning crimes and punishments," relied on by respondents, reads as follows: "No Indian, or person having one half or more of Indian blood, or Mongolian, or Chinese, shall be permitted to give evidence in favor or against any white person." (Laws 1863, p. 69.)

This restriction upon the competency of a witness must be strictly construed in favor of life, liberty and public justice. The people as a political organization—the State—and not any individual member of the community, is the party on one side. The terms of the Act do not strictly apply to the People as a political organization, and we think the plaintiff—the State—is not a white person within the meaning of its provisions.

For this error the judgment must be reversed and a new trial had, and it is so ordered.

SANDERSON, C. J., concurring.

The words “in favor or against any white person,” found in the fourteenth section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, are manifestly intended to refer to the defendant only in a criminal action, and not to the plaintiff. If we read them as referring to the People as well as to the defendant, the effect is to exclude the races in question from the witness stand in all cases, regardless of the race of the defendant, for in criminal actions the plaintiff is always the same. Such however was not the intention of the Legislature. Had it been, they would have declared the incompetency of the races in question in general terms unaccompanied by words of limitation. Where the defendant in a criminal action is a white person, Indians and Mongolians are incompetent witnesses, but in all other cases their competency is unaffected by the statute in question.

REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
APRIL TERM, 1865.

CHARLES J. LEACH v. T. B. DAY.

INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN TRESPASSES.—An injunction will not be granted to restrain the commission of trespasses where the party complaining has a complete and adequate remedy at law.

COMPLAINT TO ENJOIN TRESPASSES.—Where a complaint, in an action to restrain the commission of trespasses, avers that the defendant has torn down the fences of plaintiff, and entered his close for the purpose of opening a private road across plaintiff's land, under a claim of right founded on an order of a Board of Supervisors laying out a road, and does not state that the right has been settled in an action at law, and that the defendant continues his acts after a Court of law has decided against him, it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

AN ORDER LAYING OUT A ROAD.—An order of a Board of Supervisors laying out a road, which is unconstitutional and null and void upon its face, does not affect or cloud the title to the land over which it passes, and an injunction will not be granted to restrain the carrying of the order into effect, but the party will be left to his remedy at law.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The complaint averred that the plaintiff was the owner of land lying between the land of defendant and the Upper Sacramento Road, and had applied to the Board of Supervisors to lay out a private road from defendant's land to said road, and that such proceedings were had in the Board that a private road was pretended to be laid out forty feet wide and forty rods, more or less, in length, and that plaintiff believed the acts of defendant were committed in order to open the road. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and the demurrer was overruled by the Court. A preliminary injunction was granted at the commencement of the action, which, upon the final trial, was made perpetual. The defendant appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John C. Byers, and Buck & Carr, for Appellant.

The complaint does not state facts sufficient to warrant an injunction, either preliminary or perpetual. It does not allege that the threatened injury would be irreparable, or that it went to the substance or value of the estate in the character in which it was enjoyed, or that defendant was insolvent. Some such allegation has always been held requisite to maintain an action for an injunction. (See Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. R. 315; Frost v. Beekman, 1 Johns. Ch. R. 318; Hanson v. Gardiner, 7 Vesey, 305; 2 Story's Eq. Jur. Sec. 925; Burnett v. Whiteside, 13 Cal. 156; Branch Turnpike Company v. Sup. Yuba County, 13 Cal. 196; Tomlinson v. Rubio, 16 Cal. 202; Hihn v. Peck, 18 Cal. 640; Robinson v. Russell et al., 24 Cal. 467; Tavis v. Ellis, Calderwood et al., 25 Cal. 520.)

Tyler & Cobb, for Respondent, referred to McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121, as authority for the injunction, and also to Hicks v. McMichael, 15 Cal. 107.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

We deem it unnecessary to determine whether the road laws of this State are unconstitutional so far as they authorize the laying out and establishing of private roads. It is not necessary to determine that question in order to finally dispose of this action. All that the plaintiff claims on that score may be conceded without its following therefrom that he is entitled to the relief which he seeks. Admitting that the Act of the Legislature empowering the Board of Supervisors to lay out and open private roads is unconstitutional, and that therefore their acts in laying out and opening a private road for the use of the defendant across the land of the plaintiff are null and void, it only follows that the grounds upon which the defendant seeks to justify his acts have failed him, and he stands convicted of the trespass alleged in the complaint.

Leaving this constitutional question out of view it only remains to determine whether on the case made by the complaint the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction.

The complaint merely alleges that the defendant on a day stated, and at divers other times between that day and the commencement of the action broke and entered the close of the plaintiff and did by himself and servants tear down and destroy the fences of the plaintiff to his damage in the sum of fifty dollars, for which he prays judgment. Such is the nature and extent of the trespass alleged in the complaint.

For the purpose of obtaining an injunction the complaint thereafter proceeds and shows that the trespass in question was committed by the defendant under a pretended claim of a right of way over the plaintiff's land by virtue of a pretended order of the Board of Supervisors, opening and establishing a private road for his use, and that the defendant threatens to tear down the plaintiff's fences at each end of the road as often as he erects the same — wherefore he asks an injunction.

The bare statement of these facts is a complete answer to the prayer for an injunction. No reasons are given or attempted to be given why the plaintiff has not an adequate and complete remedy at law; on the contrary it is apparent, from the nature of the case stated, that he has. Where such is the case, equity will not interfere, but will leave the complainant to his action at law. The whole case made is merely that the defendant, under a claim of right, has torn down three or four lengths of the plaintiff's fence, and threatens that he will do it again if the plaintiff puts it up. By themselves considered, the acts in question have none of those elements which lie at the foundation of equity interference in cases of trespass. All that the defendant has done has been done under a claim of right, founded upon an order of a lawful tribunal, having, as he claims, full power and jurisdiction to make it. Whatever he threatens to do he threatens to do under the same claim of right. This being the first action which has been brought, and it appearing that the defendant is acting under a claim of right, there is no pretense for saying that he will continue his acts after a Court of law has once determined the right under which he claims to act against him. The threatened trespass is not irreparable, either from the nature of the injury itself, or from the want of responsibility in the party threatening its commission.

Anciently Courts of equity would not interfere at all by injunction in cases of trespass, but left the party to his legal remedy. In modern times, however, this doctrine has been very much relaxed, and although the general rule remains, yet there are exceptional cases where equity does and will interpose, but a strong case must be made. It will interpose for the purpose of quieting a possession or preventing a multiplicity of actions, or where the value of the inheritance is put in jeopardy, or where irreparable mischief is threatened in relation to mines, quarries or woodland, whether the same result from the nature of the injury itself or from the insolvency of the party committing it. (West v. Walker, 2 Green's Ch. R. 279; Van Winkle v. Curtiss, Ib. 422; Kerlin v. West, 3 Ib. 449.) Obviously the case at bar does not come within either of the foregoing exceptions. It does no more than present a case of naked trespass for which an action at law, for ought that yet appears, affords an ample and adequate remedy.

But it is insisted on the part of the respondent that this is not an ordinary action of trespass, and it is argued that it is like the case of McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121, and rests upon the same principle. The facts of that case were that the Board of Supervisors had, by resolution, extended a street or public thoroughfare through the land of the plaintiff without providing any compensation for the private injury consequent thereon, and were in the act of opening the street through the land of the plaintiff at the time the complaint was filed. The complaint asked for five hundred dollars damages and a perpetual injunction. The case went off upon demurrer to the complaint, upon the ground that the plaintiff's claim for damages had never been presented to the Board of Supervisors for allowance, and rejected in whole or in part, as required by law. In the course of his opinion, Mr. Chief Justice Murray remarks, that the act of the Supervisors in appropriating the land of the plaintiff to public use before compensating him for the value thereof, was illegal, and he might resort to a Court of equity to restrain them. That doctrine is undoubtedly correct. It proceeds upon the theory that the Board of Supervisors have the power to condemn private property for public use, upon making compensation therefor. Such condemnation, if legally accomplished, acts directly upon the title and takes it practically from the individual and vests it in the public; if not done legally and in accordance with the Constitution, it nevertheless, by reason of the existence of the acknowledged power, casts a cloud upon the title which is the ground of equitable interference in such cases.

In our judgment there is no analogy between the two cases, and however applicable the dictum, upon which respondents rely with so much apparent confidence, may have been to the facts of that case, it has no application here. This is not an action to restrain the Board of Supervisors from taking the land of the plaintiff and appropriating it to public use without providing any compensation whatever for its value. Had this action been brought against the Board of Supervisors before or at the time they were engaged in laying out the private road in question upon the theory that they had the power to do so, but were not proceeding according to law, and had made no provision for compensating the plaintiff for the value of his land, the doctrine and the case invoked would have been in point. But this is not an action against the Board of Supervisors, and it does not proceed upon the theory that they have the power in question, and are attempting to exercise it without first complying with the condition upon which its exercise is only permitted; on the contrary, it is an action against a private individual, who confessedly has not the power to take the plaintiff's property from him and apply it to either a public or private use, under any circumstances, and whose acts, therefore, are necessarily nothing more than a naked trespass, and can in no respect affect the plaintiff's title, or put the inheritance in jeopardy, or, as we have already seen, work in any respect an irreparable injury. Not does it even proceed upon the theory that the Board of Supervisors had the power to do the acts complained of, and thereby either totally deprive the plaintiff of his freehold, or at least cast a cloud upon his title, but, on the contrary, proceeds upon the theory that the Board had no such power, and, therefore, the title of the plaintiff to the land and his possession, and right of possession, are wholly unaffected thereby.

We may add that, so far as the plaintiff's right to equitable relief is based upon the alleged invalidity of the acts of the Board of Supervisors in laying out the road in question, the complaint is manifestly felo de se. If, as contended, those acts are absolutely null and void on their face upon the ground that the Act under which they were had is unconstitutional, it follows that they cannot hurt the plaintiff, for they have not even the appearance of legality, and, therefore, cannot affect or cloud in any manner his title. In such a case he has no need for an injunction, and, therefore, is not entitled to one.

Argument for Respondents.

Our conclusion is that the demurrer to the complaint ought to have been sustained.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

J. MARRINER AND D. WILLARD, v. RUFUS SMITH AND HENRY GOODING.

REMOVAL OF LIEN OF A JUDGMENT FROM LAND.—One who purchases land subject to the lien of a judgment obtained by fraud against his grantor is not entitled to have a Court of equity remove the judgment lien and enjoin a sale of the land under the judgment, unless he shows affirmatively that he will be injured by an enforcement of the lien by a sale of the land on execution.

LIEN OF JUDGMENT AGAINST HUSBAND ON THE HOMESTEAD.—If, while a judgment is standing against the husband, the husband and wife make a sale of the homestead, and at the same time make a relinquishment of the homestead right in the manner required by law, so that the two constitute but one transaction, and the homestead does not exceed in value five thousand dollars, the lien of the judgment will not attach to the homestead, and a Court of equity will enjoin a sale of the same upon an execution issued on the judgment.

SAME.—If husband and wife make a relinquishment of the homestead right, and afterwards sell the homestead property, and the relinquishment takes effect before the sale, the lien of the judgment will attach to the property.

MAKING UP TRANSCRIPT ON APPEAL.—If an amended complaint and answer are filed, and no question arises on the original pleadings, it is not necessary to include them in the transcript on appeal. Other abbreviations of transcript are indicated in the opinion.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Appellants.

Jo Hamilton, for Respondents.

There can be at this day little doubt that under authority of the following, besides numerous other decisions of like import, that a suit to remove or prevent a cloud upon plaintiff's title, may be maintained; indeed, it would be his only remedy. (Shattuck v. Carson, 2 Cal. 588; Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 75; Alverson v. Jones, 10 Cal. 11; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133.)

Opinion of the Court.

It will very readily be seen, that if Smith obtained his judgment, as in this instance, before the sale to respondents, and while the property was a homestead, and Goode and wife afterwards divest the lands of their homestead estate, for the purpose of sale to respondents, they came to defendants' hands cumbered with the judgment lien. If, then, the Sheriff be permitted to go on and sell the lands under this fraudulent judgment, a cloud would rest on respondents' title. It was not necessary to aver ignorance on the part of the respondents of the existence of this judgment, or that they had not bought the property, cum onere; the invalidity of the judgment once established, then knowledge or ignorance was not material.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

On the 16th day of November, 1861, the defendant, Smith, recovered a judgment upon a promissory note in the District Court for the County of Placer, against one D. B. Goode for the sum of four hundred and sixty-four dollars. At the date of said judgment said Goode was the owner of the lands described in the complaint, which lands constituted his homestead. Subsequent to the entry of said judgment, an instrument of abandonment of said homestead was duly executed and acknowledged by said Goode and wife, and regularly recorded, and the premises were conveyed by said Goode and wife to plaintiffs; but whether the abandonment and conveyance were contained in one instrument, does not appear. In October, 1863, subsequent to said conveyance, Smith procured an execution to be issued upon his said judgment against Goode, and placed it in the hands of the defendant, Gooding, Sheriff of Placer County, who was proceeding thereunder by the direction of said Smith to sell said lands. Plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action to restrain the sale, and thereby prevent the defendants from further clouding their title, and to procure a cancellation of the judgment as a fraud upon their rights. In addition to the foregoing facts, the plaintiffs allege in their complaint, that on the 5th day of November, 1861, after the commencement of said suit by Smith against Goode, and before the entry of judgment therein, said Goode and said Smith settled said suit, and said Goode delivered to said Smith a horse of the value of three hundred dollars, and other property specified, exceeding in value, in the aggregate, the amount due in the matter in suit, and that said Smith accepted the said property in full payment and satisfaction of the entire amount due, and in consideration thereof, agreed with said Goode to dismiss said suit, and that the same should not be further prosecuted; that said Goode, relying upon said promise, and supposing the said suit would be dismissed, paid no further attention to it; that said Smith, in violation of said agreement, and without the knowledge or consent of said Goode, and in fraud of his rights, did, nevertheless, cause said judgment to be entered by default; and that said judgment was thereby obtained by fraud, upon a demand which had been fully paid, satisfied and discharged. The Court found the facts to be as alleged, and rendered a judgment annulling and setting aside the said judgment, also perpetually enjoining any sale under it; from which judgment defendants appeal.

The grounds of appeal are, that the facts alleged in the complaint, and found by the Court, are insufficient to entitle plaintiffs to the judgment rendered, or to any relief.

Goode, the defendant in the judgment vacated, is not a party to this action. He has made no complaint against the judgment. Of course the plaintiffs cannot interfere on his behalf, and they have no interest in the matter, except so far as the judgment lien may affect their property. They have no right to have the judgment absolutely vacated and annulled. The only question is, as to whether plaintiffs stand in such a relation to the judgment against Goode and the parties thereto, as to entitle them to the aid of a Court of equity to remove a judgment lien upon the land described in the complaint, and to an injunction against a sale under said judgment.

The judgment was in existence long before, and at the time plaintiffs took their conveyance, and they had record notice of the lien of said judgment, if any there was. It is not alleged, and it nowhere appears, that defendant Smith, and Goode, or either of them, practiced any fraud upon plaintiffs, or that plaintiffs did not assume the payment of the judgment as a part of the purchase price. It does not appear that they paid full value for the premises upon the understanding, that the judgment was satisfied, or void, or even that they paid anything at all for the land. If they took the land subject to the lien, and with an understanding that they were to discharge it, they certainly have no grounds to complain that they are compelled to pay the judgment. The presumption is that the plaintiffs have stated their case as favorably to themselves as the facts will admit. Yet it nowhere appears that they are, or can be, injured by the judgment. That Goode should pay the amount due defendant, Smith, twice is a matter of no concern to plaintiffs. If plaintiffs did in fact knowingly purchase the land, subject to the judgment, at a less price than its value in consequence of the lien upon it, they have no ground of complaint, and it rests upon them to affirmatively show that they are injured. This we think they have failed to do.

The complaint also alleges, that the premises in question were, on the twenty-third day of October, 1861, dedicated by Goode as a homestead in the mode prescribed by law, and that said premises at the date of said conveyance to plaintiff were still owned by said Goode, and occupied by himself, wife and family as a homestead, and that both said Goode and wife made, executed and delivered the conveyance therefor, and made the proper relinquishment of homestead in the manner provided by law for the sale of homesteads. These allegations are not denied by the answer, and for the purposes of the action must be taken as true. Conceding that it sufficiently appears that the relinquishment of the homestead and the conveyance constituted one transaction, and took effect at the same moment of time, and that the value of the homestead did not, at the time of said relinquishment and conveyance, exceed five thousand dollars, the judgment, even if valid, never constituted a lien; for, while the title remained in Goode, there was nothing subject to the lien of the judgment, or to a sale upon execution. Upon such a state of facts, the plaintiffs would perhaps be entitled to have the judgment against Goode adjudged not to be a lien upon the land, and to a perpetual injunction against a sale. A sale, notwithstanding the judgment, for the reasons stated, might not be a lien upon the land, would tend to cloud the title, upon the principle announced in the case of Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 128, and other cases affirming it. But it is nowhere averred that the value of the premises did not exceed five thousand dollars. Besides, as if to cut himself off from this ground of relief, the plaintiff, in a subsequent allegation, expressly avers the said judgment to be a lien upon said land of older date than the plaintiff's deed and relinquishment of homestead. The allegation is not very distinct, that the relinquishment and conveyance constituted one transaction and took effect at the same time, nor does the date very clearly appear. If the relinquishment of homestead took effect before the conveyance, the lien of the judgment attached. For the reasons stated we are of the opinion that the facts alleged and found are insufficient to entitle plaintiff to the relief sought and obtained. The judgment must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. We think the plaintiff should have leave to amend his complaint.

In this case, as in many others, the appellant has overlooked the amendment of 1864 to section three hundred and forty-six of the Practice Act, and has consequently incurred double the expense necessary in making up his transcript on appeal. The transcript, it is true, is not voluminous, but it is still nearly or quite three times as large as necessary. As will be seen by referring to the amendment indicated, it is not necessary in all cases to bring up the entire judgment roll. In this case the original pleadings and summons might have been omitted, as no question arises on them. The amended complaint and answer thereto formed the issues tried. The entire first half of the transcript, therefore, is utterly useless here. And no inconsiderable portion of the remainder is taken up with titles of the cause in the several papers, indorsements upon each paper filed, and verifications in full. Each time the style of the Court and title of the cause is repeated, one half of a printed page is taken up, and the indorsement of title, names, etc., on each paper, takes another half page. Where papers are short and numerous, such repetitions are frequent, and constitute a very large portion of a transcript. All this is unnecessary, especially where the transcript is made up and certified under the rules of Court by the attorneys of the respective parties, as is now usually done, and as was done in this case; and when the transcript is certified by the Clerk the certificate can easily be adapted to such omissions of irrelevant and useless matter. It is sufficient when the style of the Court, and title of the cause is given in the first paper, to afterward give the name of the document and at the head say, "Title of cause." And where a paper is verified or acknowledged, and no point is made on the verification or acknowledgment to say, "Duly verified," or, "Duly acknowledged." The date of the paper, date of filing, date of service, etc., and every indorsement that may be important should, of course, appear. The rest may, with advantage, be omitted.

Attorneys, in making up their transcripts, by observing these suggestions, will still further greatly diminish the expense of making up and printing records, and thereby also facilitate the examination of the record on the part of the Court.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint, as he may be advised.

Points decided.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
rel. THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COM-PANY OF CALIFORNIA v. THE BOARD OF SUPER-VISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, AND WILHELM LOEWY, CLERK OF THE
 CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

MANDAMUS.—The rules of the Civil Practice Act are applicable to pleadings and proceedings in mandamus.

ANSWERS TO PETITION FOR MANDAMUS AGAINST A BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.—In a proceeding against a Board of Supervisors, in its corporate capacity, to procure a writ of mandate, the answer of one or more than one of the Supervisors in his or their own name or names, whether as Supervisor or otherwise, cannot be regarded as the answer of the Board, and, on motion, will be stricken from the files of the Court.

SAME.—In such case the answer should be in form the answer of the Board in its aggregate capacity.

SAME.—In such case, if an answer is filed in due form as the answer of the Board, the presumption is that it is the answer of the Board; and the fact that it was sworn to by one member of the Board does not make it his answer, nor is it necessary that such answer should aver that the Board by resolution adopted it.

SAME.—In such case, if two answers are filed each in form the answer of the Board, the Court may ascertain which is the return of the majority.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS IN MANDAMUS.—In proceedings to procure a writ of mandate, a motion of the relator for judgment on the pleadings is equivalent to a demurrer to the answer, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action. Objections to the answer which are required to be taken by special demurrer, or by motion to strike out, will be disregarded on such motion.

DENIALS IN ANSWER OF ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT.—If the complaint contains averments of the rendition of a judgment against the defendant by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and states the character of the judgment, an answer denying that the defendant became or was lawfully bound by the judgment, is only a denial of a conclusion of law, and does not raise an issue of fact. If the judgment can be attacked collaterally, the answer must specify the points of its invalidity.

SAME.—If a complaint avers the passage of an ordinance by a municipal corporation, and the answer in reply states in general terms that the ordinance is illegal and void, no issue of fact is raised.

MATTERS res judicata.—If a judgment has been rendered by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and a certain matter was necessary to be averred in the complaint and found to be true by the Court, to authorize the rendition of the judgment, the truth of this matter becomes res judicata, and not subject to be again litigated between the same parties.

RIGHT TO SHOW THAT AN ELECTION WAS INFLUENCED BY BRIBERY.—If a majority of the electors of a municipal corporation vote in favor of a proposition for the corporation to subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad company, under a law directing such subscription to be made if such majority vote is obtained, the municipal authorities, on proceedings to compel them to make such subscription, have a right to allege and show that the election was not fairly conducted, but was influenced by bribery and corruption practised and perpetrated by the railroad company and its employes.

CONTRACT PROCURED BY FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATIONS.—An answer seeking to avoid a contract sued on by reason of fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiff in procuring it, must state in what the misrepresentations consisted, and they must be of matters of fact of which defendant was ignorant, and not of law.

PUBLICATION OF AN ORDINANCE.—The publication of an ordinance alone is sufficient to give it validity without a publication of the law authorizing it. All persons are charged with notice of a law on which the ordinance is founded.

CONTRACT BETWEEN CORPORATIONS.—A proposition made by some corporate act of a railroad corporation to the authorities of a municipal corporation, and an acceptance of the terms thereof by an ordinance of the municipal corporation, constitutes a contract between them.

HOW MUNICIPAL CORPORATION MAY CONTRACT.—A municipal corporation may contract by ordinance, and an ordinance accepting of the terms of a proposition made to the municipality amounts to an assent to the contract on the part of the corporation, and not a mere declaration of intention to enter into a contract.

AID TO A RAILROAD BY A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.—If a municipal corporation has become bound by a vote of its electors, taken under a law of the Legislature, to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company, and pay the amount of its subscription in its bonds, and then makes a compromise with the railroad company by which it agrees to deliver the company a less amount of its bonds in consideration of being released from its subscription, the delivery of this less amount of bonds is not a donation to the railroad company, nor is the fact that the railroad does not touch the city and is not one of local interest, a defense in an action to compel the issuance of the bonds under the compromise.

COMPROMISE OF CLAIM AGAINST A CORPORATION.—A municipal corporation, if authorized to do so by law, may compromise a valid claim against it, and the valid claim is a consideration which will support the compromise.

COUNTERSIGNING BONDS OF SAN FRANCISCO TO CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco is not in default for not countersigning the bonds required to be issued by the Act of 1863; authorizing said city to subscribe to the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railroad of California, until the Board of Supervisors direct him to countersign the same or afford him an opportunity to do so in their presence, and he refuses.

APPLICATION FOR MANDAMUS A CIVIL ACTION.—A proceeding to procure a writ of mandate is a civil action, and the general rules of the Civil Practice Act are applicable to it.

JUDGMENT IN MANDAMUS.—If the relator, in proceedings to procure a writ of mandate, proceeds by petition and notice for a peremptory writ without procuring an alternative writ, the Court may grant any relief consistent with the case made by the petition and embraced within the issues, although it may be only part of that asked in the prayer of the petition.

The Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco consisted of twelve members. The Board held a meeting, and by a majority vote passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the City and County Attorney be, and he hereby is requested to represent the Board of Supervisors and the members thereof in the proceedings lately instituted against said Board and Wm. Loewy, by the People of the State of California, upon the relation of the Central Pacific Railway of California, and other litigation upon the same subject, with a view to an early and definite determination of all the questions involved. And that G. W. Bell, F. N. Torrey and Henry L. King be and are hereby appointed a committee of this Board to confer with the City and County Attorney, with power, if they upon such conference think it best for the public interest, to employ assistant counsel; the compensation of such counsel to be hereafter fixed and determined by the Board."

In French v. Teschemaker et als., 24 Cal. 518, and The People v. Coon et als., 25 Cal. 635, will be found a full statement of any facts not contained in the opinion of the Court.

· E. B. Crocker, for Relator.

The first question we propose to examine is that relating to the return made by the Supervisors, under the motion to strike out the answers of six of the Supervisors. Although no alternative writ of mandamus has been issued, yet the affidavit and notice under the statute occupies substantially the same position, and the affidavits in answer to the petition are properly subject to the same rules as a return to the alternative writ. The application differs materially from an ordinary action, as the Supervisors are the parties, and not the City and County of San Francisco, the corporation they represent. As Supervisors they are liable individually in this proceeding for damages and costs, (Practice Act, § 472,) which they must pay, and not the corporation they represent. The corporation of San Francisco has not refused to do the act required, but the Supervisors as individuals have, and are therefore liable.

Argument for Relator.

The proceeding is against an aggregate body, and the proper way for them to make a return is to meet together, and resolve by a majority vote what return shall be made. (Tapping, Mandamus, 384, 386,) [341].

In the absence of any return thus resolved upon, it is well settled that individual members dissenting from the return made, may file their separate returns, which will have force and effect according to the number thus dissenting. (Tapping, Mandamus, 384, 385, 386,) [341 to 344].

Apply these well settled rules to the present case. A paper purporting to be a return of the Board is drawn up, but never acted upon by them at any official or other meeting. It is sworn to by but one Supervisor, and thus it is virtually the return of but that one. Six of the Supervisors find that return to be false, and as they are liable to be mulcted in heavy damages and costs, file their returns, setting up the facts as they really are, as they have a perfect right to do, to protect themselves from personal liability.

Thus it follows that here are the returns of six members which admit the rights of the plaintiff, to one which deny them. If, however, the return made by McCoppin is to be treated as the return of himself and the other five members, who make no return, then it stands six affirming and six denying, and thus there is no issue raised. The allegations of the petition would stand undenied, and the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment. The Mayor might perhaps step in, and by siding with one or the other create a preponderance, but he has not done so.

It will be noticed that not a single allegation of fact in the petition is specially denied as required by section forty-six of the Practice Act. Every material allegation not "specifically controverted," is to be taken as true. (Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644; Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 93; Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 200; Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 126; Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 149.)

The only inquiry then is, does McCoppin's return set up any new matter which shows that notwithstanding the truth of the facts stated in the petition, the relator is not entitled to the writ?

Argument for Relator.

The first allegation, or rather series of allegations, are those charging fraud and corruption in bribing voters at the election in May, 1863.

These averments of alleged bribery should be disregarded for the reason that the election cannot be attacked in this collateral proceeding. The law regulating elections provides how the same shall be contested. Wood's Digest, page 380, section forty-six, requires the filing of a statement within forty days after the return day of the election. No such action having been taken in this case, the validity of that election cannot be contested in this proceeding. (Satterlee v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 320, and the cases there cited.)

So, also, the validity of this election is res judicata. In the case of French v. Teschemaker et al., in which the Board of Supervisors and the relator were parties, the validity of this election was one of the issues tried and adjudicated. The District Court found that the election was valid, and their judgment was affirmed by this Court, on appeal.

So, also, in the first mandamus brought by the relator against the Board of Supervisors to compel them to make the subscription and issue the bonds for six hundred thousand dollars, the Supervisors had an opportunity to raise the question of the validity of that election, but did not see proper to do so. The judgment in that proceeding is conclusive not only of the issues actually tried, but also of all questions which might have been put in issue, or which would have constituted a proper ground of defense. (2 Phillips' Ev., C. H. and E.'s Notes, 29, 30; 1 Blackford, 360.)

The next reason given is that the compromise was obtained by fraudulent representations, and is therefore void and should not be enforced.

The alleged false representations are, that the officers of the company stated to the Board and the Mayor, immediately previous to the passage of the ordinance, that if the proposed compromise was not made, the whole subscription of six hundred thousand dollars, with at least a year's back interest thereon, would be immediately due and owing to the company from San Francisco.

Argument for Relator.

It then avers that this representation was false, because the Company had not at the time and have not up to this date called in or collected from individual subscribers the whole amount, or any large portion of their subscriptions to the capital stock.

But all these averments are uncertain and evasive, as well as too general. The facts and circumstances are not stated, as they must be in cases where fraud is charged. (Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 207.)

There are certain rules on this subject of misrepresentation it may be well to refer to. In the first place, the misrepresentation must be of something material, constituting an inducement or motive to the act of the other party, and by which he is actually misled to his injury. So it must be of something in regard to which the one party places a known trust and confidence in the other. It must not be a mere matter of opinion, equally open to both parties for examination and inquiry, where neither party is presumed to trust to the other, but to rely on his own judgment. So, if the representation be of such a nature that the other party had no right to place reliance on it, and it was his own folly to give credence to it. So, if a party does not choose to avail himself of the knowledge or means of knowledge open to him, he cannot be heard to say that he was deceived. It is his own folly not to use the knowledge within his reach. (1 Story's Eq. Jur., Secs. 195-201.)

The next reason given is that the claim to the bonds is founded upon a contract to deliver obligations which have more than one year to run, and therefore it is "an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof," and must be in writing under the Statutes of Frauds. If the ordinance on which the rights of the company are founded can be termed an agreement, it is clear that it merely provides for the immediate delivery of certain specified bonds, and as an agreement it is fully performed by the delivery of the bonds. It is not, therefore, within the statute.

Argument for Defendants

Even if it was within the statute, the record of the ordinance, with the vote on its passage, and the signature of the Mayor approving it, constitutes a writing within the statute. But the Board of Supervisors in passing this ordinance exercised the legislative power vested in them by the laws. The ordinances of the city possess the character, force, and effect of laws. (McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591; Holland v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 377; Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 161.)

John H. Saunders, and John B. Felton, for Defendants.

The question, then, is distinctly presented to the consideration of this Court, whether the Legislature can impose on a municipal corporation of the State the burden of exclusively building or aiding to build a work of general interest to the State, which is in no sense a work of local interest to the corporation on which the burden is imposed.

In this State the question comes up for the first time before these evils have arisen. No bonds have been issued under circumstances like the present, for in every other case the railroad aided has passed through the county called upon to subscribe, or has had its terminus there, and so the subscription can be justified as a local improvement.

In the case of Pattison v. Board of Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 188, the road aided by the county was purely a local road, and the validity of the subscription was placed upon that ground.

In the case of Robinson v. Bidwell et als., 22 Cal. 380, the road assisted by public subscription terminated at Sacramento.

The question as to whether the Act was unconstitutional on this ground was not raised in the main argument, but, to use the language of the Court, was "suggested" in the petition for rehearing. Mr. Justice Norton, in his opinion, puts the constitutionality of the subscription on the ground that he could not say that a road directly communicating with the Argument for Defendants.

City of Sacramento, and passing through the county, was not a local work.

The leading New York cases go only to this extent, and while their reasoning justifies local taxation for local improvements, it also negatives the idea that a city or county can be exclusively taxed for an improvement which is in no sense a local one.

The leading case of Bank of Rome v. The Village of Rome, 18 N. Y. 32, was decided as late as September, A. D. 1858. The careful reasoning of the Court is remarkable. It says: "No Judge would, I think, venture to state a more restrictive rule than that the powers conferred on a municipal corporation must relate to the public interests of the territory or body of persons within its limits. Taking this definition, can a Court say that a railroad, terminating at a village or city, is so foreign to its public interests and those of its inhabitants, that it is beyond the legislative powers to authorize the village or city to become interested in its construction. The general judgment of men is, we all know, that a railroad, so terminating, does or at least may add to the value of property, promote trade, and contribute to the convenience of the inhabitants of the place."

The preceding case was decided on the authority of Clarke v. Rochester, 24 Barb. 474. But, in the latter case, the Court lays down the cardinal principle that a tax must be "general, and imposed on all, or all of a class of persons within prescribed limits or districts, upon some common principle or rule." (See page 481.)

Again: On page four hundred and eighty-two, the Court justifies these subscriptions on the sole ground that they are in aid of local improvements; and places its decision on the same ground on which it justifies the making and repairing of streets, that is, "upon the ground of benefit locally conferred."

Again: The Court, in resuming the points governing the case, (see page 489,) says, that works of internal improvement may be constructed by general taxation, and, in case of local works, by local taxation.

Argument for Defendants.

The two leading cases in Illinois are the cases of Johnson v. County of Stark, 24 Ill. 89, and Perkins v. Lewis, 24 Ill. 208. In the former of these cases, the Court puts its decision on the ground that "the construction of a railroad through a county is a county purpose," and expressly declines to pass upon the question whether a railroad, not confined to or penetrating the limits of a county or city, is a local work. The latter decision goes upon the authority of the former. These cases were decided in 1860.

The answer sets up that there had never been any legal assessment laid upon any of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railroad, and that no assessment is now due thereon. There consequently would have been no bonds due from the city to the company, even if the city had subscribed. It further sets up that the railroad company never had accepted the city's subscription under the Act of 1863.

Two consequences result from this: First—That the company had nothing that could be called a claim against the city for bonds under the Act of 1863. There was, therefore, nothing to compromise or settle. Second—That inasmuch as no bonds were due by the city to the company, the power to compromise had not vested in the Board of Supervisors. By the Act of 1864 the power to compromise does rest in said Board of Supervisors "only after and in case said Board of Supervisors shall be compelled by final judgment to execute and deliver the bonds under the Act of 1863."

(1.) The relation which the city assumes to the company under the Act of 1863, is that of subscriber to its capital stock. What are the rights of a subscriber to stock? Is he exposed to bear the full burdens of the company while the other subscribers are exempt? Can one subscriber be thus singled out as a packhorse for the rest?

(2.) Again: These bonds are to be received at par, dollar for dollar. (See Section 4, Act 1863, p. 381.)

What is meant by receiving them at par? Evidently, the meaning is that a dollar in bonds is equivalent to a dollar in cash from the other subscribers. But what mockery to speak of receiving them at par, if all of them are to be issued whether the other stockholders pay or not. We assume, then in arguing this point, that these bonds were in the nature of assessments, to be issued as regular assessments on the capital stock of the company when called in.

The claims, then, which the Act of 1864 authorized the compromise and settlement of, were claims for bonds to be issued as assessments on stock. When did these claims arise? It is clear that no claim arose from the Act of 1863, independent of subscription by the city and acceptance by the company. Until such subscription and acceptance the Act could be repealed. If the companies had a claim against the city, it is very clear that no legislative action could divest such claim. In the case of Aspinwall et al. v. Commissioners, 22 How. U. S. 376, the Court decided that a railroad company acquired no claim against a city by such an act; that it could be repealed, and that a subscription after such repeal and bonds issued was void. The same point was decided in Covington and Lexington Railroad Company v. Kenton County Court, 12 B. Monroe, 144. In People ex rel. Peoria and Oquawka Railroad Company v. County of Tazewell et al., 22 Ill. 156, the Court say: "Until the city or county has subscribed there is no privity between the road and county or city."

There has, then, been as yet no acceptance of the terms of the Act of 1863, by the railroad company. It is not pretended that there has ever been any subscription by the city to the capital stock of this company, so that no contract has ever been made between the city and this company.

So far, then, we have these two propositions: First—That the Act of 1863 gives nothing which can be called a claim to the railroad company against the city. Second—That as yet no claim has arisen by contract; first, because the railroad company has never accepted the conditions of the Act of 1863; second, because as a matter of fact no contract has ever been made for subscription between the company and the city.

Argument for Defendants.

If the Legislature, prior to this pretended compromise, had repealed the law of 1863, it would have found no vested claim of this company as an obstacle to its so doing. And this power of the Legislature to repeal the law is evidently the test of the existence of a claim; for if the claim exists, it cannot be affected by legislative action.

The alleged contract of compromise between the Board of Supervisors and the railroad company is void for want of consideration.

What does the company surrender as the consideration of such a contract? Evidently, nothing at all. It gives no stock, no obligation to build the road, no agreement to spend the bonds or any part thereof on the road. It simply says to the corporation: "I will release you from the public duty imposed upon you by statute of taxing the City of San Francisco, for a certain public purpose, for so much." But, clearly, no consideration moves from the company to the city, nor does the city receive any benefit from any source. True, it pays less money—but then it receives no public benefit. The private company can pay dividends with this money, and spend it as it chooses. Treating this compromise, then, as a contract, there is no consideration for it. The city receives nothing; the company gives nothing. (Hampshire v. Franklin, 16 Mass. 84; Grogan v. The City of San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590.)

No mandamus will lie to compel William Loewy to sign these bonds, because it is not a duty imposed upon him by his official position. The Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco is simply a County Clerk. His duties are defined by statute. (See Wood's Digest, Article 274, et seq., p. 88.) Now his whole obligation to sign these bonds comes from the ordinance of the Board of Supervisors, and it is obvious that this Board, itself a Board of limited powers, has no authority to enlarge, change, or interfere with the duties imposed by statute on a wholly independent officer.

Some attempt to meet this was made on the argument by asserting that Loewy's obligation to sign these bonds comes from the statute of 1863. But it is so clear that that statute is only incorporated into this ordinance because the Supervisors selected the form and mode of executing these bonds there pointed out, and that they could just as well have selected any other mode of executing them, that we will not argue the question at length.

If the wrong person be made a party to a proceeding in mandamus, the whole proceeding must be superseded.

"If, therefore, the Mayor and ex officio President of the Board of Supervisors had been made a party to this proceeding the whole proceeding would have been superseded." And counsel cite Rex v. Mayor of Hartford, Salkeld, 701; Rex v. Mayor of Ripon, Salkeld, 433.

In support of this proposition, contended for on the other side, and conceded by us, we add the cases of The People ex rel. Commissioners of Highways of Poughkeepsie and Fishkill v. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Dutchess, 1 Hill, 50, and the case of People ex rel. McSpedon v. The Board of Supervisors, 10 Abbott Prac. R. 233.

John W. Dwinelle, and J. McM. Shafter, in reply.

The County Clerk can be compelled, by mandate, to countersign the bonds in question.

The office of County Clerk is created by the Constitution. (Article VI, § 7.) The only duties annexed to the office by the Constitution are those of Clerk of the District Court. (Ib. § 7.) All other duties are to be defined by law. (Ib. § 7.) It was competent, therefore, for the Legislature to throw upon the County Clerk the duty of countersigning the bonds of the city and county, by Laws of 1863.

Under the Civil Practice Act of California, the relator in this proceeding is entitled to any and all of the relief authorized by the case stated in the petition and affidavit.

"SECTION 147. The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, shall not exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but in any other case, the Court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint, and embraced within the issue."

The return of the six Supervisors must be taken as the true return.

Boards of Supervisors are dealt with by law as an aggregate, and for this reason, service of process, in this and the like proceeding, is sufficient if made upon a majority, and the decision is binding upon their members, and upon their successors. (People v. Contracting Board, 20 How. Practice R. 206; Maddox v. Graham, 2 Metcalf, Ky. 156.)

The Board of Supervisors in this case are to act ministerially only, in execution of their own ordinance, which stands unrepealed, and unrepealable, having been accepted by the railroad.

Mandamus will be maintained against the council of a municipal corporation to compel the execution of a ministerial act, when it is evident that they are bound to perform it, and their conduct shows that they do not intend to do the act required. And this although there may be an action against the corporation for the delinquency, and such an action has been commenced and discontinued. (Maddox v. Graham, 2 Metcalf, Ky. 156.)

Where a party has no other adequate remedy, and his right is clear and undoubted, mandamus is not only the proper remedy, but is one of the most efficient proceedings known to the law for the enforcement of a right. (People v. The Contracting Board, 20 How. Pr. R. 206; Commonwealth v. Pittsburgh, 34 Penn. State Rep. 496.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.

Proceedings were commenced in this Court for a mandamus, to compel the Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco to countersign four hundred of the bonds of said city and county, and to compel the Board of Supervisors of said city and county to perform all the duties required on their part for the complete execution and delivery of the bonds to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, according to the provisions of the Acts of the Legislature of April 22, 1863, and April 4, 1864, and of the ordinance of said city and county, Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two.

An answer, in form the answer of the Board of Supervisors, signed by the City and County Attorney and the assistant counsel, and verified by Frank McCoppin, one of the members of the Board of Supervisors, was filed in the case, and subsequent to the filing of this answer, six of the twelve Supervisors comprising the Board filed answers to the petition in their proper persons.

The counsel for the Board of Supervisors, upon the cause being called for hearing, filed their affidavit, stating that the answers of the six Supervisors were filed without the knowledge of said counsel, and that they had no information thereof until about twenty minutes before the meeting of the Court on that day; and they thereupon moved that those answers be stricken from the files of the Court. The counsel for the relator objected to the motion. It appears from the answer of the Board, that the Board, by resolution, requested the City and County Attorney to represent the Board and the members thereof in these proceedings, and authorized a committee of the Board to employ assistant counsel; and the counsel for the relator do not deny that Messrs. Saunders and Felton, the counsel who signed the answer of the Board, were duly authorized to appear for and represent the Board in the pending proceedings.

The answer of the six Supervisors, after the title of the cause, commences substantially in the following form: "For answer to the amended petition of the above named plaintiff, * * * one of the Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, and as such one of the defendants herein, for himself says that he is now and at the time of the commencement of this proceeding was one of the Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco," etc.; and they do not purport to be the answer of the whole Board or of a majority of the Board, nor do the six Supervisors pretend to answer for the Board in its aggregate capacity. The Board of Supervisors, organized and acting as one body, in its corporate capacity is the defendant, and not the individual Supervisors who collectively make up the Board, "for this is not a proceeding against any individual until an attachment issues." (Spencer, J., in People v. Champion, 16 John. 60.) The answer of a Supervisor or of a number of Supervisors, in his or their own name or names, whether as Supervisors or otherwise, could with no more propriety be regarded as the answer of the Board, than could the answers of a number of citizens included within the municipality that elected the Board. The Supervisors constitute the Board, and possess the powers, and are capable of discharging the functions conferred by law upon the Board, only when they are assembled as a body, in the manner prescribed by law. Admitting that the members of the Board may severally answer, suppose that all make default except one, and he answering shows that the Board were not required to perform the alleged duty, could the writ issue either to the Board or to the members who made default? If it could issue, the Board or the members would be required to perform an act, that had been determined in the action, one of the members was not by law required to perform. If it could not issue, it would then appear that the answer of one member, traversing or confessing and avoiding the matters averred in the petition, was a sufficient defense to the whole proceeding, notwithstanding that the other members admitted every allegation in the petition. If one half of the members should make default and the other half should show good cause, still greater absurdities, if possible, would be manifest.

The answers of the six Supervisors, so far as they relate to the matters stated in the petition, amount to no more than would their default, for they do not deny nor confess and avoid any fact alleged in the petition; but it is attempted, by means of the answers, to raise issues between themselves and the Board, or the remaining members of the Board, respecting certain facts alleged in the answer of the Board. It is difficult to see how such issues could, under any rules of practice, be tried in this action, or how anything would result from the finding of the issues in their favor, as they do not demand any affirmative relief against either the Board or any of its members.

It is said in Tapping on Mandamus (p. 340) that the return to the writ should be made either by those to whom such writ is directed, or who are legally competent to execute it. There can be no question that the Board, and not any member or number of members, must execute the writ (if one should be issued) by the performance in its aggregate capacity, of the duty enjoined. The rules of the Civil Practice Act are as strictly applicable to the pleadings in mandamus as to those in any action, and under those rules no one may answer except those who are made, or are by the Court admitted as defendants. The remark found in the treatises on mandamus, that if two separate returns be made by different portions of the same corporation, the Court will take that which appears to be made by the majority, and other statements of similar import, do not mean that separate returns may be made by the several members of one "portion of the same corporation," as of one of the two boards composing the legislative branch of the municipal government, and that the Court may ascertain which return had the majority of the members; but in order to have any standing it must be made as the return of the whole corporation, or at least of a particular portion or branch of it, if the writ is directed to it, and then if two returns are made in that capacity, the Court will ascertain which is the true return; that is to say, the return of the majority. There might not be a majority to any return if made by individual members, for each member might make a separate return differing essentially from that of each of the other members.

The motion must be allowed, and the answers of the six Supervisors stricken from the files.

The relator moves for judgment on the pleadings; and in support of the motion it is insisted among other things that the answer filed by the counsel for the defendant is only the answer of Supervisor McCoppin, who verified it, and that if it is held to be either his answer or that of the Board, it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action.

It is apparent upon inspection that it is not the answer of McCoppin, for its form is: "The Board of Supervisors do come, and for answer to the amended petition and affidavit, upon which the application of the above named plaintiff is made, allege and show," etc. The fact that it is verified by him has but slight, if any, tendency to show that it is his answer, and is entirely overcome by the fact that all the allegations are made in the name of the Board. If it can be regarded as a pleading in the cause, it must be held to be the answer of the Board of Supervisors.

The relator objects to the answer being considered as the answer of the Board, because it does not appear that the Board, as an aggregate body, resolved upon and made the return; or as we understand the objection, that the Board has not by resolution adopted the return, as prepared by their counsel, nor directed what matters should be set forth in their answer. It is not doubted, that the counsel who signed and filed the answer of the Board, were duly authorized to represent them, and such being the case, they were fully empowered to appear for them in the action, and do all those things that counsel might lawfully do in behalf of a person who was the sole defendant. In this respect they bear the same relation to the Board that they do to the Clerk of the City and County, and their authority is the same in either case, and similar presumptions will be indulged in, that the answer is the answer of the persons or body that it purports to be. No authority is cited, holding that it must be stated in the answer to the petition, or the return to the alternative writ, made by a corporation or a Board forming a constituent part of the corporate authority, that the corporation or Board had resolved upon the return or answer; and no reason suggests itself to our mind why such a statement should not be required in the petition, when a corporation is the relator, if it is necessary in the answer of the corporation. The general rules of pleading are substantially the same in mandamus as in other civil actions. (Tap. on Man.; 8 N. Y. 348; Commercial Bank v. Canal Commissioners, 10 Wend. 26; People v. Ransom, 2 Comst. 490.)

Among the numerous cases found in our reports of actions brought by or against corporations, none is noticed in which it is stated that the corporation had resolved upon the complaint or answer, or had, as a corporate act, directed what either should contain; and in examining many of the cases cited by Tapping on Mandamus, no such statement is found or said to be required in the return; but it would appear from those cases that it was neither usual nor necessary — the presumption being that it was the return of the officer or body it purported to be. In Mayor of Thetford's Case, 1 Salk. 192, which was mandamus to the Mayor and Common Council, the return was made in the name of the corporation, but without the common seal, or the hand of the Mayor set to it. After search of precedents, which were found both ways, the Court held the return good, because they were estopped by the record to say it is not their act; and the Court say that the City of London every year makes an attorney, by warrant, without either sealing or signing. In Rex v. Mayor of Abingdon, 2 Salk. 431, which was mandamus to the Mayor, Bailiffs and Burgesses, the Mayor made a return, and brought it in to file it, and it was objected to as the return of the Mayor and a minority; but Mr. Chief Justice Holt said: "It is not fit that we should examine upon affidavits whether there was the consent of the majority." (See also Rex v. St. John's Coll., 4 Mod. 241.)

But it is said that there are, in effect, two returns, or answers, that in the name of the Board, and that composed of the answers of the six Supervisors; and that as the latter is inconsistent with the former, and is made by one half of the members, it must overrule the answer made in the name of the Board — at least that, taking all the answers together, they make such an inconsistent return, that they must be all disregarded. We have already said that the members of the Board are not parties to this action, and their answers as such members must be disregarded. The presumption is that the answer made and filed by the counsel for the Board in their name is the answer of the Board. "When a corporation aggregate, to which a writ is directed, has regularly resolved upon and made a return, individual dissentients cannot be allowed to dispute its propriety" (Tap. on Man. 341); but if the dissentients also file a return as the return of the corporation, the Court will ascertain which is the return of the majority; and doubtless without holding to the strict rule in 1 Salk. 192, that the members are estopped to say that the return is not the return of the majority, they may allege that the return is not the return of the majority, or has not been resolved upon by the corporation, and thereupon have the collateral issue determined by the Court. That, however, is not the case before us, but the dissentients merely undertake to controvert certain of the facts alleged in the answer of the Board, in avoidance of the facts stated in the petition.

The question then recurs, is the relator entitled to judgment on the pleadings, regarding the answer verified by McCoppin as the answer of the Board of Supervisors? The motion of the relator to that effect is equivalent to a demurrer to the answer, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. Section thirty-seven of the Practice Act providing that "All the forms of pleading in civil actions, and the rules by which the sufficiency of the pleadings shall be determined, shall be those prescribed in this Act" is applicable to proceedings in mandamus.

The principal facts upon which the right of the relator depends, briefly stated, are as follows: The Board of Supervisors had been commanded by the final judgment of this Court to subscribe six hundred thousand dollars to the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and to issue the bonds of the city and county in payment of such subscription, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of April 22, 1863; that afterward, under the provisions of the Act of April 4, 1864, the Board of Supervisors passed Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two, approved June 21, 1864, the terms of which were accepted by the relator, by which the parties compromised the claims of the railroad company upon the city and county, under the Act of 1863, it being agreed that the Board should in lieu of making the subscription and delivering the bonds to the amount of six hundred thousand dollars, deliver such bonds only to the amount of four hundred thousand dollars, without making any subscription to the stock, the bonds to be delivered to the relator, upon condition that they should be accepted in full discharge and satisfaction of all obligations, claims, etc., of the company against the city and county; that the company tendered to the city and county a full release and discharge of said obligations, claims, etc., to be delivered on the receipt of said bonds; that the Mayor, Auditor and Treasurer of said city and county, whose duty it was to prepare and sign said bonds, were in certain proceedings in this Court wherein they were the defendants and the company was the relator, ordered by a peremptory writ of mandamus, to execute and deliver without delay, to the company the four hundred bonds, of one thousand dollars each, as in said ordinance provided. It seems not to be doubted, and the decision in the last mentioned case (People v. Coon, Mayor, et al., 25 Cal. 635) settles the point, that the four hundred bonds to be issued under Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two are parcel of the six hundred bonds provided for in the Act of 1863, they differing from the latter only in the date they were to bear.

In examining the answer somewhat in detail the only question will be whether it states facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action, and many of the objections taken in the argument by the counsel for the relator, which might have been considered if made the grounds of a special demurrer, or of some proper motion to strike out, etc., must be disregarded.

The defendants' denial that they "became or were lawfully or duly or otherwise bound or obliged to subscribe six hundred thousand dollars, or any other sum to the capital stock" of the company, or to execute or deliver any bonds, is not the denial of any fact alleged in the petition. The judgment in the case of The People ex rel. Central Pacific Railroad Company v. The Board of Supervisors, etc., whereby the defendants were commanded to subscribe to the stock not being denied stands admitted, and the denial that they were bound to obey the judgment, is only a denial of a conclusion or principle of law. (People v. Commissioners of Fort Edward, 11 How. Pr. 89.) If it is permitted to show collaterally that the judgment is void, the points of invalidity must be specified.

The remarks we have just made are applicable to the denial that they were "bound by law to execute or deliver" the four hundred bonds of the company, and the accompanying averment that Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two is "wholly illegal and void." The facts from which the Court might draw the inference that the ordinance was void, and not the assumed inference, should have been stated. The further allegation that neither the Board nor the Legislature have the right or power to make a donation to the company of four hundred thousand dollars of the money of the City and County of San Francisco, even assuming that it appeared that such a donation had been attempted, is rather a specification of a ground of demurrer, than an allegation of a fact.

The next averment of the answer is that the election in the City and County of San Francisco, held pursuant to the Act of April 22, 1863 — the Act authorizing the subscription to the stock of the company "was not fairly, or properly or legally conducted, but was affected, influenced and controlled by corruption and bribery" practised and perpetrated by the company and its agents and employés; and they specify nine instances, in which the alleged agent of the company employed the company's money, to corruptly influence the electors, to vote in favor of the proposition, to subscribe to the stock of the company. It will be seen on reading the Act of April 22, 1863, (Statutes 1863, p. 380,) that the Board could not be required, and were not permitted to subscribe to the capital stock of the company, unless a majority of those voting upon the proposition voted in favor of the subscription. It was absolutely essential, therefore, in instituting proceedings against the Board to compel the subscription to be made, that the relator should allege, and if it was denied by the Board, to prove on the trial, that a majority of the votes cast were in favor of the proposition. The fact must have been found by the Court or have been admitted by the pleadings—in other words the facts must have been alleged, and must have been true—for it was the fundamental fact in the action, and in its absence the Court could not have rendered the judgment that was pronounced, commanding the Board to make the subscription and issue the bonds. The matter thus became res judicata, and not subject to be again litigated in another action between the same parties. It is unnecessary to determine whether the alleged bribery and corruption could have been shown at the time the vote was canvassed, or in proceedings to contest the election, but if not admissible on either of those occasions, it would have been admissible in the proceedings against the Board to compel them to make the subscription, if they had alleged that the result at the election had been procured by those means. But now, in addition to the reason already given for excluding the alleged acts of bribery and corruption, they are immaterial and irrelevant, as they do not in any manner avoid the compromise, on which the relator proceeds in this action.

The allegations respecting the failure of the Board to procure an inspection of the books of the company, and to procure answers from the company to questions propounded to them, are so clearly immaterial that they require no notice.

They allege that the passage and approval of Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two were procured by the false and fraudulent representation of the company, that if the proposed compromise were not made the whole subscription of six hundred thousand dollars, with a year's interest, would be immediately due; but it is not stated that any fact was falsely and fraudulently stated, from which the inference might be drawn that the whole amount of bonds and interest was then due, and in the absence of an allegation that they were ignorant of the facts, upon the existence or occurrence of which the subscription became due, we must hold that the alleged representation was of a conclusion of law drawn from existing facts known to the defendants. Conceding the point contended for by the defendants, that the six hundred thousand dollars in bonds were payable in instalments, as assessments were called in from the stockholders generally, it yet is not alleged either that the company represented that assessments to the full amount had been levied, or that the Board were ignorant that they had not been so levied.

The defendants allege that Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two was never published and printed, as required by law; and by that which follows in the same paragraph we understand them to mean, not that the ordinance in the words in which it passed was not published, but that the several provisions of the law directly or indirectly referred to in the ordinance were not published with it. We do not understand that such a publication is required, but it was only necessary to publish the ordinance as passed—all persons being charged with notice of a public Act of the Legislature on which an ordinance is founded.

It is next alleged that the company did not accept said compromise after the passage of the ordinance, and did not comply with the conditions expressed in the ordinance. It is not stated wherein they failed to comply, and therefore that portion of the allegation is insufficient. They set out in the answer the resolution of the company accepting the terms of the ordinance, which had then passed to print, and say that they are advised that such resolution is not an acceptance of the terms of the compromise proposed in the ordinance. The objection amounts in substance to a demurrer to the resolution that it is not sufficient in law to amount to an assent on the part of the company to the terms of the compromise contained in the ordinance. It is not requisite that the assent to or acceptance of the terms of the compromise should have been made by the company after the ordinance had been approved by the Mayor. The company might by some proper corporate action have proposed the terms of the compromise, and the Board might thereupon have passed an ordinance, as they have done, and such acts would have constituted an assent by each party to the terms. The question as to how the contract must be proven is quite different from that which relates to the time of assenting to the terms proposed. It may be remarked that the commencing of this action, as well as the previous action against the Mayor, Auditor and Treasurer are very indicative of an acceptance by the company, even if it could be held that the acceptance of the terms by the company should have been subsequent to the approval of the ordinance.

The defendants say that the alleged contract, in order to be binding, must have been made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged. It requires no citation of authority to prove that a municipal corporation may contract by ordinance directly, and that a contract made in that manner as fully satisfies the Statute of Frauds as one made by the agents of the corporation who have been authorized to execute the contract. But they insist that the ordinance is not a contract; that it is but a resolution to do a certain thing—that is, to render to the company certain bonds; that the company resolved to receive bonds if all of them were tendered; and that when the bonds have been tendered by the city and received by the company, and the company have executed to the city a release, as provided for, then the parties will have made an executed contract; but as yet there is no contract between the parties, the ordinance of the city and the resolution of the company amounting to nothing more than declarations of intention to enter into an executed contract. This certainly was not the view of the Court in The People v. Coon et al., nor do we think the position tenable. True, the company say, after accepting the proposal contained in the ordinance, that such acceptance shall be effectual only when the whole of the bonds shall have been delivered to them; but, taking the whole transactions of the parties together, it is manifest that the parties entered into a contract of compromise, but that the company would not yield their rights, or discharge their claims, under the Act of 1863, until the city had complied with the terms of the compromise contract. The parties did not contemplate a further contract, but the company, in assenting to the contract, insisted on a performance of its terms by the city, before the company would release the city from the obligations cast on her by the Act of 1863.

The defendants further say that the company have not, by any corporate act, consented to be bound by the provisions of the Act of 1863, nor agreed to receive the bonds mentioned in the Act. Such consent of the company was not required by the Act of 1864 to be the basis of the compromise, but it was only requisite that this Court should have commanded the Board to execute and deliver the bonds. The commencing of the proceedings by the company against the Board was sufficient evidence, in that cause, of the acceptance by the company of all the terms of the Act, and the judgment having been rendered compelling the Board to make the subscription and issue the bonds, the inquiry now whether the company had in fact agreed to receive the bonds which they, in that proceeding, demanded should be issued to them, is immaterial.

The denial in general terms that they became bound to execute and deliver the bonds to the amount of six hundred thousand dollars, or that they have ever been compelled by the judgment of this Court to execute or deliver the bonds, forms no answer to the allegation in the petition that a judgment of this Court was rendered by which they were commanded, by the peremptory mandate of the Court to execute and deliver the bonds, as no fact is alleged tending to invalidate the judgment. We have sufficiently indicated our opinion that a denial of this character is not a denial of a fact, but of a conclusion of law, and would be more properly classed among the grounds of demurrer than the allegations of the answer.

The question arising upon the facts alleged by the defendants that the company's road does not have a terminus at San Francisco, nor at any point nearer than the City of Sacramento, that the work is one of general interest to the whole State, but not of local interest to San Francisco, and that the city has subscribed to the stock of the San Francisco and San José Railroad, which has a terminus at San Francisco, etc., have been discussed by counsel with great ability, but the great length of the opinion will preclude us from considering them in detail. They are resolvable into the question whether the Legislature can impose upon a municipal corporation the burden of building or aiding in building a work which is in no sense a work of local interest to the corporation, but which is of general interest to the people of the State. The counsel for the defendants deny the power to the Legislature, and say that the facts alleged by the Board show that the railroad is not of local interest to the city. By the provisions of the Act of 1863, the city was required to become a subscriber, to a certain amount, to the capital stock of the railroad company, in the event that, at the election provided for in the Act, a majority of the electors of the city, voting on the proposition to subscribe, should cast their votes in favor of the proposition. The majority of the votes having been cast in favor of the proposition to subscribe, it became the duty of the Board of Supervisors to make a subscription to the amount of six hundred thousand dollars, whereupon the city would become a stockholder in the corporation, with all the rights of other stockholders, and subject to all the liabilities of other stockholders, except certain ones, from which she was exempted by the provisions of the Act, and having the right to pay her subscriptions in her bonds instead of money. Upon the subscription being made, and the bonds, or an instalment of them equal to the assessments upon other stockholders, being delivered to the company it could not be said that the city had made a donation to the company, or had been charged with the expenses of a work which was being constructed for the benefit of the public, in any other sense than the same could be said of any stockholder in the company, but she would be a stockholder in a work which was being prosecuted for the benefit of all the stockholders in the company. True, the work might not result in profit, but that is a risk incident to all enterprises of the kind. It became the duty of the city to subscribe to the stock, and to deliver her bonds to the company, and she was commanded so to do by the Court; and the company having accepted the terms of the proposed subscription, a claim accrued to the company against the city, that she should make the subscription and deliver the bonds, and thereby assume such liabilities as a stockholder, as were required of or cast upon her by law. But the city not wishing to become a stockholder and assume the liabilities incident to that relation, enters into a compromise with the company, under the authority of the Act of 1864, by which it is agreed that the city shall not subscribe nor deliver the stipulated amount of bonds, nor incur the liabilities of a stockholder, and that in satisfaction of the claim of the company against her, she shall deliver to the company a certain less amount of her bonds. The bonds are the price she pays in extinguishment of the company's claim against her; and the transaction cannot be regarded as a donation in any other sense than as any compromise may be, nor as a burden imposed on her to aid in the construction of a public work. The facts, therefore, that the work is not one of local interest to the city, and that she has already subscribed to a railroad that is of local interest to her, are immaterial and constitute no defense to the action.

The remaining allegations of the answer have been disposed of in considering other points in the case, but it may be added that in our view it makes no difference as to the validity of the compromise, whether the bonds were payable in instalments or in gross, nor whether a legal assessment had been laid on the capital stock of the company, for irrespective of the time when the bonds under the Act of 1863 might become due, the company held a claim against the city, which was a proper subject of, and formed a good consideration for, a compromise.

The answer of the Clerk of the City and County remains to be considered. It is provided in section five of the Act of 1863, authorizing the subscription of the city to the stock of the company, that upon the bonds being signed by the Pacific Railroad Loan Commissioners, they "shall be presented by the President of the Board of Supervisors to the Clerk of said city and county, who shall countersign the same as such Clerk, in the presence of a quorum of such Board, at a meeting thereof," etc.; and it is provided by Ordinance Number Five Hundred and Eighty-Two that the bonds thereby required to be issued should be executed in all respects, except as to date, as required by the Act of 1863. The relator alleges in his petition that when the bonds had been signed by the Pacific Railroad Commissioners they were, by the President of the Board, at a meeting of the Board, in the presence of a quorum thereof, on the 7th day of September, 1864, presented to the Clerk for the purpose of being countersigned by him, in the presence of a quorum of the Board, but that he did not countersign the same; and that on the 27th day of September the relator notified him that there would be a meeting of the Board on the evening of that day, and requested him to attend and complete the countersigning of the bonds, but that the Clerk did not present himself and countersign or offer to countersign any of the bonds. The relator shows that at the meeting on the 27th of September the Clerk was not requested by the Board to countersign the bonds, and had no opportunity so to do; but, on the contrary, that the Board refused to adopt a resolution requesting the Clerk to countersign the bonds, and, by resolution, directed him to deposit them with the County Treasurer, subject to the order of the Board, which was immediately done.

The Clerk denies that on the 7th of September, or at any other time or meeting of the Board, he had an opportunity to countersign the bonds, or that he was ever authorized to countersign them; and he denies that he has authority so to do without the request of the Board. The bonds, from the first step in their preparation up to their delivery to the company, are under the control of the Board, and everything relating to their execution is done under the direction of the Board. The Clerk of the City and County, in proceeding to countersign them, is as completely subject to their orders, as the Clerk of the Board is, in entering in their journal the fact of countersigning, and the number, date and amount of the bonds. It will not be contended that the Clerk could have proceeded to countersign the bonds after the Board directed him to deposit them with the Treasurer, and it is equally clear that he had no authority to proceed, unless the Board directed him to do so, or afforded him an opportunity to proceed with the countersigning in their presence. His denial raises a material issue of fact, for if his answer is true in that respect, and the motion admits it to be true, he is not in default in the performance of the duties imposed upon him by the Act, and continued by the ordinance.

Our conclusion is that the answer of the Board does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense; and that the answer of the Clerk sets up a valid defense to the action.

The point presented by the defendants that as the relator is not entitled to all the relief he claims, the peremptory writ must be denied, may be passed upon now, though strictly speaking, the issues of fact raised by the answer of the Clerk should be first disposed of upon the evidence that may be introduced by the parties, but the action, so far as the Clerk is concerned, cannot be disposed of under this motion, on the ground of a misjoinder of parties defendant or of causes of action, as those objections should have been taken by demurrer, for if they exist they are apparent upon the face of the petition. The defendant cites two cases: The People v. The Board, etc., of Dutchess, 1 Hill, 50, and The People v. The Board, etc., 10 Abbott's Pr. 233, to sustain the proposition "that if the relator is not entitled to what he demands in the alternative writ, his motion for a peremptory writ should be denied, though it appear that he is entitled to a portion of the relief." The doctrine of those cases is that the peremptory writ should follow the alternative writ, and that if the alternative writ demands too much — something more than the relator is entitled to — the judgment must be for the defendant; for there cannot be a judgment for the relator for a part of the relief demanded in the writ and for the defendant for the other part. To the same effect also is Tappan on Mandamus, 402, 403. Without commenting upon the distinctions that might be found between such a case, when the question is: Shall the alternative writ be made peremptory? and a case in which the proceeding is by petition and motion for a peremptory writ, when the Court would doubtless have the right to frame the writ according to the exigencies of the case; we think the point may be solved on other principles. A proceeding to procure the issuing of a writ of mandamus is a civil action. In Kendall v. United States, 12 Peters, 615, the Court say: "It is an action or suit brought in a Court of justice, asserting a right, and is prosecuted according to the forms of judicial proceedings." (See People v. Ransom, 2 Comst. 490; Commercial Bank v. Canal Commissioners, 10 Wend. 26; Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 26.) The final determination of the Court in the matter is a judgment, and if rendered in any Court but the Supreme Court an appeal lies from the judgment. The parties appear, and by their pleadings form issues, and if of fact they may be tried by a jury, and new trials may be had. The relator may in the same action recover the damages he may have sustained, and execution may issue for the damages and costs. In People v. Croton Aqueduct Board, 5 Abbott's Pr. 372, it is held that the rules of the code of New York do not apply to mandamus, because Sec. 471 expressly excludes from their operation that class of cases. There is no such reservation in our Practice Act, and in our opinion the general rules of that Act are applicable to mandamus, in the same manner as to an action for an injunction or of quo warranto; and whatever may be the rule when the relator, after having procured the alternative writ, moves for the peremptory writ, we have no doubt that, when the relator proceeds by petition and notice for the peremptory writ, without procuring an alternative writ, the Court, under the enlarged discretion conferred by Sec. 147, may grant any relief consistent with the case made by the petition, and embraced within the issues, although it may be only a part of that demanded in the prayer of the petition.

We have omitted to comment on many of the cases cited by the respective counsel, for the obvious reason that the attempt to do so, in a case brought before this Court, as a Court of original jurisdiction, in which all the numerous points are presented that suggest themselves to the minds of able and ingenious counsel, as is usual at nisi prius trials, would involve very great labor, without any corresponding benefit.

The relator is entitled to judgment for a peremptory mandamus on the pleadings against the Board of Supervisors, but not against the Clerk of the City and County, and as to him the proceeding must be dismissed.

SAWYER, J., and SHAFTEE, J., concurring specially.

We are not prepared to say that the individual answers of the six Supervisors, alleging a willingness to perform the duties sought to be enforced, ought to be struck out. But disregarding them, and conceding the answer verified by McCoppin to be the answer of the Board, we are satisfied that said answer does not "raise a question as to a matter of fact essential to the determination of the motion;" and that complainants are entitled to a peremptory mandamus against the Board of Supervisors, as prayed for in the petition.

Loewy, the County Clerk, substantially denies that he had an opportunity to countersign the bonds, and the inference from his answer is that he is ready to countersign when a proper opportunity is given. We think his answer raises a material issue as to him; but we do not understand that the relators propose to put in any evidence on that issue; and taking the answer as true, Loewy is not in default. The proceeding must, therefore, be dismissed as to Loewy, and a peremptory writ of mandamus issued against the Board of Supervisors.

PESTNER.

SETTLEMENT OF STATEMENT AND AMENDMENTS THEREON.—The Court should not settle a statement made in support of a motion to set aside a nonsuit which does not specify the errors upon which the moving party will rely, nor should it entertain a motion to amend the same after it has been filed and served on the opposite party.

SAME.—Such statement should, on motion of the opposite party, be stricken from the files of the Court.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL.—A statement which does not purport to be a statement on appeal, cannot be considered on an appeal from the judgment.

REVIEW OF ORDER GRANTING NONSUIT.—The District Court cannot review an order granting a nonsuit upon a motion to set aside the nonsuit.

APPEAL FROM ORDER REFUSING TO RETAX COSTS.—An appeal cannot be taken from an order denying a motion to retax costs made before final judgment.

SAME.—An order denying a motion to retax costs should be reviewed by an appeal from the judgment, and annexing a statement to the judgment roll.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendants as copartners, under the name of H. Getleson & Pestner. Defendant Getleson made default; defendant Pestner answered, denying his liability on the note.

The case was tried October 16, 1863, before a jury, and after the close of the testimony the Court, on motion of the attorney for defendant Pestner, granted a nonsuit as to him, with leave to plaintiff to move to set aside the nonsuit, and directed the jury to find a verdict for plaintiff against defendant Getleson. October 19th, plaintiff's attorney filed and served on defendant Pestner's attorney, the following notice:

"Please take notice, that the plaintiff intends to move the Court to set aside the judgment of nonsuit herein, and for a judgment against both of the defendants, and that the proposed statement of the case, upon which said motion will be made, is herewith served upon you."

Plaintiff's attorney, on the same day, filed and served a statement embodying the evidence and rulings of the Court, with his exceptions thereto. This statement, after the title of the case, was headed:

"Statement of case on motion to set aside nonsuit in favor of defendant Pestner, and on motion for judgment upon the pleadings and proof, against both defendants."

Argument for Appellant.

The statement did not contain a specification of the errors upon which plaintiff would rely. On the 28th of October plaintiff's attorney served on the attorney for Pestner a specification of the grounds upon which he would rely on his motion to vacate the judgment of nonsuit, but the latter returned it. Plaintiff then moved the Court to be allowed to amend his statement by inserting the specification of grounds upon which he would rely, but the Court denied the same May 2, 1864. June 29, 1864, on motion of the attorney for defendant Pestner, an order was made striking the statement from the files of the Court. July 2d plaintiff's attorney moved the Court to sign the statement as the settled statement of the case, which was denied July 11th.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Wm. W. Chipman, for Appellant.

In a case of this kind, no specification of grounds is necessary. None are contemplated nor provided for in the statute. A motion to set aside a nonsuit, and for judgment non obstante veredicto, may, I conceive, be made without asking for a new trial, and such a motion may be granted without a new trial.

The Court ought to have allowed an amendment of the statement, if an amendment be deemed necessary; and the order denying the motion is not discretionary merely. It is a matter of right, and is appealable. It is an order subsequent to judgment, and authorized by statute to be reviewed by appellate Court. Transcripts have been sent back to lower Court to allow statements to be amended, restated, and reformed. (Powell v. Waters, 8 Cow. 55; Codwise v. Hecker, 1 Cain, 74; Smith v. Grant, 7 How. Pr. 381; Westcott v. Thompson, 16 N. Y. 613; Johnson v. Whitlock, 3 Kernan, 344; Tillotson v. Cheatham, 3 Johns. 95; and see Loucks v. Edmondson, 18 Cal. 203, citing Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 396; Howe v. Briggs, 17 Cal. 385; Branger v. Chevallier, 9 Cal. 351.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

One of the questions presented is whether it is error for a District Court to refuse to settle a "statement" made in support of a motion to set aside a nonsuit—or to refuse to entertain a motion to amend such statement after it has been filed and served on the opposite party—or error to grant an order striking such statement from the files of the Court.

The District Courts cannot be called upon to review a case upon the testimony, nor upon an allegation of errors of law occurring at the trial, except in the way pointed out in the Practice Act. That method is simple and straightforward, and, in our judgment, was intended to exclude all others. If the plaintiff desired to have the nonsuit entered against him investigated upon its merits in the District Court, he should have moved for a new trial upon a statement; or if he preferred to bring the case to this Court directly, he could have done so by an appeal from the judgment aided by a statement annexed to the roll. There is a statement in the transcript but it does not purport to be a statement on appeal from the judgment. The result is that the Court did not err in refusing its sanction to a method of reviewing decisions made in the course of a trial, altogether unknown to our system.

The plaintiff has not only appealed from the judgment in favor of Pestner, but also from an order overruling a motion to retax the costs. The memorandum of costs was duly filed October 17, 1863; the notice of motion to retax was served June 20, 1864, and the order denying the motion was made on the twenty-seventh of that month. The judgment was entered July 18, 1864. The order appealed from is not in itself appealable, inasmuch as it was not made after final judgment. The proper course would have been to appeal from the judgment—raising the question of the correctness of the taxation by a statement annexed to the judgment roll. (Practice Act, Sec. 344.) We cannot approach the alleged error through an appeal from a non-appealable order.

Forwarders are responsible for ordinary care, skill, and diligence. They are not, it is true, insurers, like common carriers, but they are responsible for all injuries to property while in their charge, resulting from negligence or misfeasance of themselves, their agents, or employees, p. 27.

Limitation of Liability, by an express company in its contracts for forwarding, must be construed most strongly against the company; and a stipulation, that the company are "not to be responsible except as forwarders," does not relieve the company from liability for loss of the goods, while in transit, by negligence of their agents. The fact that defendants made use of various public conveyances, their messenger with the treasure traveling a part of the way by stage, a part by steam tug and lighters, and a part by ocean steamer, makes no difference as to their liability. For defendant's purposes the managers of those various conveyances were their agents and employees, pp. 28-30.

Amendment in Appellate Court.—Where the complaint alleges damages in a definite sum, and the verdict is for a larger sum, to include

Statute of Frauds.—Promise to indorse a note, written on the back of a contract for sale of goods, before sale and delivery, held to be a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement that in such case there must be a note in writing, expressing the consideration for the promise, p. 84.

Cited in Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 606, construing section 2808, Civil Code, and holding guarantors absolutely liable on principal's default; Ford v. Hendricks, 34 Cal. 675, to the point that "the promise of a guarantor is not within the statute of frauds, if made before the delivery of the note"; and to same effect in Howland v. Aitch, 38 Cal. 135, 136. Cited in notes to 87 Am. Dec. 126, and 60 Am. St. Rep. 437.

Pre-emption of Suscol Rancho.—The act of Congress of 1863 withdraws the lands of the Suscol Rancho from the operation of the general laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, p. 87.

27 Cal. 87-91. KERNAN (ALIAS KERMAN) v. GRIFFITH.

Grant of Swamp Lands to the state, by the act of Congress of 1850, operated "as a full and perfect conveyance in praesenti"; and a patent, issued later to the state, would have no operation except by way of further assurance, p. 89.

Cited in Megerle v. Ashe, 27 Cal. 327, to the point that "a legislative grant is as effectual to pass the title to lands, in all respects and for every purpose, as a grant evidenced by a patent." Affirmed in Sherman v. Buick, 45 Cal. 668. Cited in Tubbs v. Wilhoit, 73 Cal. 63, to the point that "the provision made for a patent in the second section (of the act of 1850) is for the purpose of furnishing to the grantee documentary evidence that the land was swamp and overflowed, and a further assurance of title." Affirmed in GrosLouis v. Northcut, 3 Oreg. 397, 399; Blakesly v. Caywood, 4 Oreg. 288; Gaston v. Stott, 4 Oreg. 57, 58; Miller v. Tobin, 16 Oreg. 542. Cited in Wells v. Pennington Co., 2 S. Dak. 9, 39 Am. St. Rep. 763, holding that an act of Congress, as to highways over public lands, was a grant in praesenti, and settlers on the lands thereafter took them subject to the right of way. In Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 504, Field, J., says, after citing the principal case and others: "The result of these decisions is that the grant of 1850 is one in praesenti, passing the title to the lands as of its date, but requiring identification of the lands to render the title perfect; that the action of the secretary in identifying them is conclusive against collateral attack, as the judgment of a special tribunal to which the determination of the matter is intrusted; but where that officer has neglected or failed to make the identification, it is competent for the grantees of the state, to prevent their rights from being defeated, to identify the lands in any other appropriate mode which will effect that object." Affirmed by Field, J., in San Francisco Savings Union v. Irwin, 11 Sawy. 670; 28 Fed. Rep. 710.

Swamp Lands.—The question whether lands in dispute were "swamp and overflowed," at the date of the act of 1850, must always be responded to by the jury on evidence submitted to them and applicable to the question, p. 91.

Affirmed in Thornton v. Thompson, 28 Cal. 603, 87 Am. Dec. 78, and Robinson v. Forrest, 29 Cal. 319, 322. Cited in Keeran v. Griffith, 31 Cal. 464, saying that "the question whether a given subdivision of land is within the act will remain a question of fact, to be determined not upon official certificates, but upon evidence that would be competent to prove the fact if it arose in issue upon a conveyance between private persons. And we do not undertake to say that the action of the two governments in that behalf will preclude a person claiming under either government, by right of title having its origin previous to such action, from showing the truth as to the character of the land claimed by him." Cited in Keeran v. Allen, 33 Cal. 545, holding that swamp lands must be "unfit for cultivation." Affirmed in Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 584, and Read v. Caruthers, 47 Cal. 182. Denied in French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 172, where Miller, J., says: "With all the respect we have for that learned court, we are unable to concur in the views therein expressed"; and holds that a United States patent for swamp lands cannot be contradicted by parol evidence to show that the lands were never "swamp and overflowed."

27 Cal. 92-99. MCGILLIVRAY v. EVANS.

Partition of Water Rights in a mining ditch can be made only by sale of the ditch and distribution of the proceeds, p. 98.

Affirmed in Lorenz v. Jacobs, 59 Cal. 263. Cited in Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 411, 24 Am. Rep. 267, holding that a dower interest in mines could not be assigned except by the sale of the mines and division of proceeds; to same effect, as to partition of a spring and aqueduct, in Allard v. Carleton, 64 N. H. 25; also, as to partition of a water right, in Brown v. Cooper, 98 Iowa, 455; 60 Am. St. Rep. 197. Cited in Head

v. Amoskeag Co., 113 U. S. 211, to the point that "water rights held in common, incapable of partition at law, may be the subject of partition in equity, either by apportioning the time and extent of use or by a sale of the right and a division of the proceeds."

27 Cal. 99-104. LAMPING v. HYATT.

Judgment by Default cannot grant any greater relief than is demanded in the prayer of the complaint and specified in the summons, p. 102.

Distinguished in Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 294, 87 Am. Dec. 124, saying: "Where judgment is by default, the court cannot grant greater relief than is demanded in the complaint; but where there is a trial, the court may grant any relief consistent with the case made in the complaint and embraced within the issue." Cited in Ellis v. Rademacher, 125 Cal. 557, noted under Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 19; Gautier v. English, 29 Cal. 168, holding that where judgment by default was entered for the sum demanded in the complaint, and interest thereon at the rate demanded, it was error to add that the judgment should bear interest at the same rate, because the complaint did not demand it; also, in Bond v. Pacheco, 30 Cal. 535, holding that where the clerk of the court, in entering judgment by default, included too much interest by mistake, it was "an error committed in the performance of an act within his jurisdiction to perform, which could be corrected on motion made in time, or on appeal, but which would not vitiate the judgment if not corrected. There is no want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter but only an error in its exercise." Affirmed in Lowe v. Turner, 1 Idaho, 112. Cited in Bank v. Dyer, 14 Wash. St. 283, holding that a judgment for foreclosure of a mortgage could not also include a personal judgment for deficiency, because the complaint did not ask for such relief; and in Wilbur v. Maynard, 6 Colo. 488, holding that judgment by default on a note should be only against a wife, where the complaint joined her husband but asked for no relief against him.

Judgment for Money, "to be enforced and collected in gold coin," is erroneous, where the complaint and summons do not specify any particular kind of money, but the note sued on stipulated that if it was not paid in gold, the maker should pay the difference between gold coin and paper currency, p. 103.

Distinguished in Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 292, 87 Am. Dec. 122, where the intent of a contract, for payment in gold coin or its equivalent in currency at current rates, was held to be to compel payment in gold coin, and a judgment for gold coin was held to be proper; also, in Reese v. Stearns, 29 Cal. 275, holding that where a judgment was for "U. S. gold coin or its equivalent," those words must be stricken out, saying: "In contemplation of law, a dollar in legal tender notes is equal to, and therefore the equivalent of, a dollar in gold coin." Cited in Hazard v. Cole, 1 Idaho, 287, holding that a judgment for gold coin was not void but irregular, and might have been modified on motion in the lower court, or by appeal; and in note on this point to 87 Am. Dec. 126.

Judgment cannot be rendered against defendants who were served, but were not named in the complaint or summons, p. 104.

Cited in King v. Randlett, 33 Cal. 322, holding that where a suit was brought in justice's court against the Independent Company, summons was issued against the Independent Tunnel Company and served on a member of the Independent Company, a judgment against the Independent Tunnel Company was void.

N. B.—The principal case is referred to in Johnson v. Lamping, 34 Cal. 298, which is a subsequent phase of the same transaction, on other points.

27 Cal. 104-106. BOLTON v. LANDERS. S. C. 26 Cal. 393.

Tenant, who denies landlord's title, in a suit between them, becomes a trespasser, and is not entitled to notice to quit, p. 105.

Cited, as an illustration, in dissenting opinion in Campbell v. Jones, 38 Cal. 512, a majority of the court holding that in an action for unlawful detention of personal property the complaint must allege a demand before suit. Affirmed in Simpson v. Applegate, 75 Cal. 345, and McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 20. Cited in note to 42 Am. Dec. 134, on notice to quit.

Pendency of Another Suit held no ground for abatement, for "although the same questions are litigated in both, the relief sought is different, p. 106.

Affirmed in Coles v. Yorks, 31 Minn. 215, holding that an action to foreclose a mortgage was not barred by the pendency of a suit in ejectment; and in note on this point in 84 Am. Dec. 456.

27 Cal. 106-107. BOLTON v. LANDERS.

Jurisdiction of the supreme court being of cases where the amount in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars, a judgment for two hundred dollars and costs cannot be reviewed, for "costs constitute no part of the matter in dispute," p. 107.

Referred to in Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 657, where under a constitutional limit of jurisdiction to three hundred dollars, the amount sued for being nine hundred dollars, and a recovery being only for two hundred dollars, it was held that the supreme court had jurisdiction, for the amount sued for was the test of jurisdiction. Affirmed in Payne v. Davis, 2 Mont. 381.

27 Cal. 107-115. HARPER v. MINOR.

Judgment-roll.—On an appeal from the judgment, where there is no statement, Supreme Court only considers matters appearing in the judgment-roll. A referee's report, and clerk's minutes, form no part of the judgment-roll, p. 109.

Affirmed as to clerk's minutes, in More v. Del Valle, 28 Cal. 174, and People v. Empire Co., 33 Cal. 173. Cited in Batchelder v. Baker, 79 Cal. 267, holding that where the appeal is on the judgment-roll, the court cannot look outside of it; Lee Sack Sam v. Gray, 104 Cal. 246, to point that report of a referee, and testimony, are no part of the judgment-roll; Wood v. Nissen, 2 N. Dak. 30, holding that a stenographer's transcript of proceedings and evidence is not a bill of exceptions or statement; Hecla etc. Co. v. Gisborn, 21 Utah, 75, noted under Dawley v. Hovious, 23 Cal. 103; Zeile v. Moritz, 1 Utah, 285, holding that a judgment on demurrer can be reviewed on appeal without a statement or bill of exceptions.

Intermediate Orders do not form part of the judgment-roll, but the appellant "must, by means of a statement on appeal, bring them into the record, together with such facts, forming the basis of the orders, as are necessary to explain the action of the court below," p. 109.

Affirmed in Abbott v. Douglass, 28 Cal. 299, by Sawyer, J., dissenting on other points; also, in Wetherbee v. Carroll, 33 Cal. 554, and Sutter v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 114; and in McClelland v. Dickenson, 2 Utah, 107. Cited in Spence v. Scott, 97 Cal. 182, to the point that an order striking out part of an answer cannot be reviewed "without a bill of exceptions"; and to same effect in Graham v. Linehan, 1 Idaho, 781.

Statement on Appeal is for the purpose of bringing into the record orders and rulings, with the facts necessary to explain them, that do not arise during the progress of the trial, and are not contained in the motion for new trial or judgment-roll; also, if the appellant from an order refusing a new trial desires only a review of rulings of law during the trial, he may introduce such rulings upon questions of law, with sufficient evidence to point them, into his statement on appeal, or make a bill of exceptions, p. 110.

Approved in dissenting opinion of Sawyer, J., in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 322. Cited in Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 515, holding that objections to legal sufficiency of an affidavit and order of publication must be raised by motion made in the action, or on an appeal supported by a statement; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 605, 94 Am. Dec. 772, saying: "There is no controversy as to any material fact, and the action of the court below is sought to be reviewed on questions of law alone. In such cases a statement on appeal is not only a proper method, but is often the most convenient, expeditious, and economical mode of bringing the alleged errors before this court." Cited in Gates v. Walker, 35 Cal. 290, where an appeal was dismissed for lack of statement and judgment-roll, the court declining to refer to the record of another appeal by other parties in the same case, in the absence of a stipulation; and Cooper v. Pac. M. Co., 7 Nev. 121, holding that objections to rulings of law at the trial should be brought up by statement on appeal or bill of exceptions.

Statement on Motion for New Trial is for the purpose of bringing into the record matters arising during the trial that the appellant wishes reviewed, p. 110.

Affirmed in Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 376. Referred to in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 305, holding that an order striking out a statement is not appealable, and saying that though such appeal was allowed in the principal case, the point was not made, "and it escaped our notice"; Sawyer, J., dissenting, on page 327.

Costs may be imposed on a prevailing party, for introducing irrelevant matter into a statement on appeal or motion for new trial, p. 111.

Cited as an illustration in dissenting opinion in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 316. Affirmed in Stark v. Hill, 31 Mo. App. 109.

Notice of Intention to move for a new trial must be filed and served within the statutory time, subject to the court's power to extend the time as the statute provides, pp. 112-114.

Affirmed in Cottle v. Leitch, 43 Cal. 321, 322.

Statement on Motion for New Trial must be filed within five days after service of notice of intention, unless the court extends the time as provided by statute, p. 114.

Affirmed in Stevens v. Northwestern Co., 1 Idaho, 605.

Statement on Appeal, not filed and served within the statutory time, held properly stricken out, p. 115.

Cited in Kavanagh v. Maus, 28 Cal. 262, holding that a statement was not served in time. Approved in dissenting opinion of Sawyer, J., in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 325. Cited in Cody v. Filley, 4 Colo. 437, holding that where a statement was filed on the last statutory day, service of it on the next day was invalid; and in First Nat. Bank v. Irvine, 2 Mont. 556, holding that where an appeal was from the judgment and also from the refusal of a new trial, and the statement was filed too late for the first, but in time for the second, it did not operate as a waiver of any rights.

Statement, on motion for new trial, need not itself be included in the statement on appeal from the order of refusal, where the only question is not as to the sufficiency or character of the statement, but as to whether or not it was filed in time, p. 115.

Approved in dissenting opinion of Sawyer, J., in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 315.

27 Cal. 119-148. MILLARD v. HATHAWAY.

Waiver.—Where an order refusing a new trial recites that the motion was submitted on a statement by consent of counsel, the respondent is precluded from saying that the statement was not filed in time, p. 138.

Cited in Meredith v. Santa Clara Assn., 60 Cal. 620, holding that sureties to an undertaking on appeal waived their right to object to the jurisdiction of the court by signing the undertaking; and in note to 76 Am. Dec. 467, on this point.

Resulting Trust arises where a deed is made to one person, but the consideration is paid by another. These trusts are expressly exempted from the operation of the statute of frauds, p. 139.

Affirmed in Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 487. Cited in Case v. Coddington, 38 Cal. 193, holding that if "the one party pays only a part of the consideration, the party taking the title to the whole land becomes a trustee for the other party, pro tanto. The party setting up the trust must show that the money was paid by him at or before the execution of the conveyance"; to the same effect in Roberts v. Ware, 40 Cal. 637; Walton v. Karnes, 67 Cal. 256; and Tripp v. Duane, 74 Cal. 91; Savings etc. Soc. v. Davidson, 97 Fed 712, noted under Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92; O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 439, holding that a purchaser of land at a tax sale held it in trust for the owner, who furnished the money to buy it in; Hellman v. Messmer, 75 Cal. 170, to the point that the consideration "may have been paid by the party who took the title, but advanced as a loan to the other party, and if so, a trust results"; and to same effect in Thomas v. Jameson, 77 Cal. 93; Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 338, holding that an attorney who bid in property, at a sale by the assignee of an insolvent, for the benefit of the insolvent and his creditors, held it in trust for them. Affirmed in Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 580, 33 Am. St. Rep. 211. Cited in Warren v. Adams, 19 Colo. 522, holding that a trust results from acts; dissenting opinion in Towle v. Wadsworth, 147 Ill. 99, a majority of the court holding that the statute of frauds is no defense; Lyons v. Bodenhamer, 7 Kan. 478, holding that one who borrows a land warrant, settles on and improves the land without any claim by the owner, becomes the beneficiary of a resulting trust; Tenny v. Sampson, 37 Kan. 363, 365, to the point that the consideration need not come directly from the beneficiary; dissenting opinion in Grumley v. Webb, 48 Mo. 596, a majority of the court holding that accord and satisfaction had been made of plaintiff's claim to an equitable interest in lands, based on his furnishing money for their purchase. Cited in Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 143, 15 Am. St. Rep. 576, saying: "The distinction between resulting trusts and trusts for charitable or pious uses is almost as clear and as broad as that between legal and equitable estates. . . . A resulting trust is to be performed or executed by the trustee by transferring the title of the cestui que trust at his request"; and in Chenoweth v. Lewis, 9 Oreg. 152, holding that an agreement, for sale of an interest in land acquired under a resulting trust, must be in writing under the statute.

Findings cannot be altogether detached from each other and considered piecemeal. If a particular finding be doubtful or obscure, reference may be had to the context for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning, p. 141.

Affirmed in Alhambra Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 604, remarking that "the counsel treats the findings as if they were dug up from the ruins of ancient cities at different epochs." Cited in Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 211, saying that an assignment "is pleaded in the same language as that of the findings, and this is sufficient." Affirmed in Mott v. Ewing, 90 Cal. 235, and Barnes v. Sabrom, 10 Nev. 248.

Parol Evidence is admissible to explain or contradict a recital in a deed as to payment of consideration; if the evidence is merely parol, it will be received with great caution, and the court will look anxiously for some corroborating circumstances to support it, p. 142.

Affirmed in Duffy v. Duffy, 104 Cal. 607, and Dalton v. Dalton, 14 Nev. 428; Brooks v. Union Trust etc. Co., 146 Cal. 137, parol evidence is admissible to establish resulting trust in realty arising under Civil Code § 853, though money consideration recited which was not in fact paid by trustees.

Statute of Limitations.—Where a trustee under a resulting trust agrees to convey land to the beneficiary upon payment by the latter of the purchase price and interest, the statute does not begin to run until such payment is made, pp. 145, 146.

Cited in Day v. Cohn, 65 Cal. 509, holding that where a vendee under a contract of sale remained in possession, paying installments of the purchase price, and the last of such payments was made two years before bringing of suit by him to enforce the contract, his equitable right to compel performance of it was not barred by the statute of limitations; note to 85 Am. Dec. 78.

27 Cal. 151-152. PEOPLE v. COUNTY JUDGE.

Prohibition will lie to prevent a county judge from punishing contempt against a district court, p. 152.

Cited in Huerstal v. Muir, 62 Cal. 481, holding that an order adjudging one guilty of contempt cannot be appealed from "simply on the ground that the record shows want of jurisdiction to render the judgment," but certiorari is the proper remedy; also in Phillips v. Welch, 12 Nev. 177, where, on certiorari to review a judgment punishing for contempt, the court said that where the lower court "acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of the petitioner, this court has no jurisdiction either on appeal, writ of error, habeas corpus, or certiorari"; People v. Carrington, 5 Utah, 532, holding that prohibition lies against a commissioner of the supreme court to prevent his inflicting a punishment for libel, certiorari and habeas corpus not being adequate or speedy remedies; State v. Circuit Court, 97 Wis. 15, 65 Am. St. Rep. 98, awarding writ to terminate improper contempt proceedings; In re Litchfield, 13 Fed. Rep. 869, holding that one court cannot punish a contempt against another; and in note to 12 Am. Dec. 184, on contempt.

Gilder*, 61 Miss. 672, holding a confession of judgment void, because there was no plaintiff; *Mendes v. Continuing Trust.—If the trustee has not, by act or declaration, manifested a determination to repudiate the trust and violate the contract under which the money came to his hands, there must be a demand by the cestui que trust for the money, and a refusal, before he is liable to an action for the money. Appearance by defendant is when he answers, demurs, or files notice of appearance; service of this notice should antedate or be contemporaneous with the service of all other notices and papers; notices the purpose of which is "not to give notice of appearance but to give notice of a step taken or about to be taken," are not included in the statutory definition, p. 299.

McCullough*, 3 Nev. 213, holding that a statute prescribing what shall constitute an appearance does not preclude appearance in a different manner for other purposes, and saying that a different rule, "so manifestly against the universal practice of all courts, should not be adopted, except upon the most unequivocal language of the statute." Cited in McCoy v. Bell, 1 Wash. Jurisdiction.—If it appear by the record or otherwise that the court never had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, the judgment will be pronounced a nullity, whether it comes directly or collaterally in question; and this is so whether the court be of inferior or superior jurisdiction. It is a fundamental rule that no court can acquire jurisdiction by the mere assertion of it, or by deciding that it has it, p. 314.

Affirmed in McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 246. Cited in Wallace v. Mayor, 29 Cal. 188, holding with regard to a corporation that "no officer can acquire power or jurisdiction by the mere assertion of it": also in Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 348, to the point that when it appears in the record that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, the judgment may be collaterally attacked. Modified in Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 402, 94 Am. Dec. 746, saying that in the principal case "the rule may be stated too broadly," and that the language there used "implies that a want of jurisdiction may be shown aliunde, but no such question was involved in that case, and what was said upon that subject must be considered dictum"; and holding "the true rule to be that . . . where the record is silent as to what was done, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done but rightly done; but when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done," p. 407. Cited in Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 369, where Field, J., says: "Whenever, therefore, it appears from the inspection of the record of a court of general jurisdiction that the defendant, against whom a personal judgment or decree is rendered, was at the time of the alleged service without the territorial limits of the court and thus beyond the reach of its process, and that he never appeared in the action, the presumption of jurisdiction over his person ceases, and the burden of establishing the jurisdiction is cast upon the party who invokes the benefit or protection of the judgment or decree." Cited in Hall v. Melvin, 62 Ark. 444, 54 Am. St. Rep. 302, saying: "Where a bill shows no cause of action against the defendant with reference to the subject matter of the suit, . . . a decree based upon such a bill is a nullity, no matter how attacked"; Adams v. Adams, 154 Mass. 297, where a divorce record from a California court is held invalid for lack of jurisdiction therein of the person of defendant. Affirmed in Palmer v. McMaster, 8 Mont. 192.

Attachment Lien on land cannot be effectual to impeach a conveyance of the land by the defendant in the attachment suit, until judgment is rendered therein, p. 315.

Cited in McClellan v. Solomon, 23 Fla. 444, 11 Am. St. Rep. 387, holding that a "judgment lien relates back to the date of the levy, as against the judgment debtor and his fraudulent grantee, or as against anyone purchasing the real estate as the property of the judgment debtor subsequent to the attachment"; and that the "title of the purchaser at a sale under the judgment dates as against such parties from the date of the levy of the attachment."

Distinguished in Grant v. Murphy, 116 Cal. 431, 432, 58 Am. St. Rep. 191, holding that where the interest of the estate of a decedent in partition had been ascertained, but a contest between claimants to the estate was pending in the probate court, it was proper to proceed to a division, leaving the contestants to settle their claims among themselves in the proper court. It is impossible that two persons claiming adversely to each other can at the same time hold such right or title in the premises as will entitle each as against the other to the possession. . . . The court determines which of the two holds it." Affirmed in Larco v. Clements, 36 Cal. 134; Martin v. Splivalo, 69 Cal. 615. Cited in Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 541, 23 Am. 27 Cal. 360-369. AMERICAN CO. v. BRADFORD.

Special Verdict may be rendered by the jury, in their discretion, in a suit for the recovery of money only on specific real property. In other cases the court may direct a special verdict, and it is the court's province to determine as to what particular facts the jury shall find specially, and neither party has the right to dictate the terms of any particular question to the jury, and for refusing to comply with such a request no error can properly be assigned, p. 365.

Affirmed, as to discretion of court, in Smith v. Occidental Co., 99 Cal. 472; also, as to discretion of jury, in Thompson v. Gregor, 11 Colo. 534. Cited in Prosser v. Montana Central Co., 17 Mont. 386, saying: "In the case at bar no findings were requested by the appellant. He did not ask that the court submit special findings upon any branch of the case. Not having made this request, he cannot complain of the action of the court. It certainly would have thrown the jury into inextricable confusion to instruct them, as appellant requested, that they might find special findings or a special verdict, when not the slightest intimation was given to them upon what questions of fact they should find." Cited in Bank v. Marshall, 8 Sawy. 39, 11 Fed. Rep. 28, to the point that "submission of particular questions of fact to the jury is a matter wholly within the discretion of the court"; and Mangum v. Bullion Co., 15 Utah, 551, holding it was not error to refuse to submit to the jury defendants' request for special findings in a suit for damages for negligence.

Easement in Water is created by an exclusive and interrupted enjoyment of water, in any particular way, for a period corresponding to the time limited by statute within which an action must be commenced for the recovery of the property or of the assumed right held and enjoyed adversely. The right must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land, and uninterrupted. The burden proving this is on the party claiming the easement, pp. 366, 367.

Cited in Bree v. Wheeler, 129 Cal. 147, Strong v. Baldwin, 137 Cal. 438, and Smith v. Water Co., 16 Utah, 203, holding evidence insufficient to sustain finding of adverse user of water; Franz v. Mendonca, 131 Cal. 208, on point that permissive use is not adverse; Montecito Valley Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 597, holding prescriptive right properly pleaded; Oregon Constr. Co. v. Allen Ditch Co., 41 Or. 216, as against riparian owners one who diverts water may require title by prescription in same time necessary to acquire title by adverse possession; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 358, holding (on page 355) that "both the right to appropriate water on the public lands and that of the occupant of portions of such lands are derived from the implied consent of the owner, and as between the appropriator of land or water the first possessor has the better right. The two rights stand upon an equal footing, and when they conflict they must be decided by the fact of priority. Since the United States, the owner of the land and water, is presumed to have permitted the appropriation of both the one and the other, as between themselves the prior possessor must prevail." Cited in Stanford v. Felt, 71 Cal. 250, to the point that "the diversion by lapse of time may grow into a right;" also in Alta Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 226, 20 Am. St. Rep. 221, holding that the use must be "adverse" and "uninterrupted" on which to base a claim by prescription, and saying (on page 230): "So far the right of a riparian proprietor to the use of water for purposes of irrigation at all has been assumed rather than determined, and has been properly regarded as among the last, though perhaps not the least important, of his riparian rights; one that must be always held in subordination to the rights of all other riparian proprietors to the use of water for the supply of the natural wants of man and beast." Affirmed, as to burden of proof of adverse possession of land being on the party relying on it, in DeFrieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 663, 28 Am. St. Rep. 157; and to same effect, as regards appropriation of water, in Ball v. Kehl, 95 Cal. 613; also in Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 146, holding that after adverse and uninterrupted user of water for five years "the law will presume a grant of the right." Cited in New Mercer Co. v. Armstrong, 21 Colo. 365, saying as regards abandonment: "Nonuse alone is not sufficient evidence; the intent to abandon must also be present. . . . Y. never made use of any portion of either of his ditches for more than nine years, and of no part of this water in excess of three and five tenths cubic feet per second of time during a period of from eighteen to twenty-one years, and this was an unreasonable time for an owner of a water right not to make any use thereof, to entitle him afterward to reclaim it as against intervening rights." Cited in Carmody v. Mulrooney, 87 Wis. 554, which was a case of right of way, to the point that while burden of proof is on one claiming the right by prescription, an uninterrupted user for twenty years is presumed to have been under claim of right; also in Union Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 91, holding that "a mere scrambling possession of the water, or the obtaining of it by force or fraud, gives no prescriptive right, nor can this right be acquired if, during the time in which such right is claimed to have accrued, there has been an abundant supply of water in the stream or river for all other claimants;" and in note on this point in 85 Am. Dec. 151.

Easement as a Defense must be specially pleaded, p. 367.

Cited in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 267, to the point that "a party claiming the right to use water by adverse possession for the statutory time must set up the same as a defense in his answer"; McKeoin v. Northern Pacific Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 465, holding that an easement must be set up as new matter in defense; and in note to 69 Am. Dec. 706, on this point.

N. B.—In Courtwright v. Bear River Co., 30 Cal. 585, the principal case is cited as an example of a suit to abate a nuisance being brought in a district instead of a county court; and it is also cited, evidently by mistake, in Knight v. Fisher, 15 Colo. 180, to the point that an error of a two cents in a verdict was immaterial.

St. Rep. 493, holding that "the fact of a residence being had after judgment does not in itself determine that the judgment is not final." Cited in Rhodes v. Williams, 12 Nev. 26, holding an appeal premature, because the decree appealed from had ordered an accounting and sale.

Statement, on motion for new trial, must specify alleged errors of fact, p. 385.

Affirmed in Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 376.

27 Cal. 394-404. PEOPLE v. SHOTWELL.

Where Court Directs Sheriff to Discharge Jury if they do not agree by certain hour, discharge by sheriff at hour named is not once in jeopardy, p. 398.

Smith*, 103 Cal. 565 holding that where one count is bad and another good, but the lower court holds both good and there is a verdict of guilty on both, it is error; dissenting opinion in People v. Gusti, 113 Cal. 179, holding that a number of acts charged in one count were really but one offense. Cited in dissenting opinion in Territory v. Duffield, 1 Ariz. 70, a majority of the court holding an indictment bad for charging two offenses; People v. Stapleton, 2 Idaho, 52, to the point that objection to sufficiency of indictment must be raised by demurrer; *People v. Indians.—The act of 1850, regarding punishment of Indians, applies only where they are living in separate communities, and not to an Indian living among white men, p. 405.

Cited in State v. Williams, 13 Wash. Rosenthal v. Merced Bank, 110 Cal. 202; also in dissenting opinion in McGuire v. Van Pelt, 55 Ala. 357, a majority of the court disapproving the principal case. Cited in Newton v. Summey, 59 Ga. 400, holding that a partnership had no right to an injunction against the allowance of a homestead to the wife of one of the partners, for if her claim was subordinate to partnership claims the allowance of a homestead would not protect it; also in Lindley v. Davis, 6 Mont. 456, holding that a homestead cannot be carved out of partnership property by a partner; but in a rehearing of the same case in 7 Mont. 214, the former decision was reversed, and the court held that a cotenant was entitled to a homestead exemption, there being no reason why homestead laws should be strictly construed. Haggin, 69 Cal. 359, holding that on the public lands "as between the appropriator of land or water the first possessor has the better right. The two rights stand upon an equal footing, and when they conflict they must be decided by the fact of priority"; Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 515, where Field, J., says: "What diminution of quantity or deterioration in quality will constitute an invasion of the rights of the first ap-proprietor will depend upon the special circumstances of each case, considered with reference to the uses to which the water is applied"; and in same case, 1 Mont. 567, holding a prior appropriator of water not entitled to an injunction against miners fifteen miles up the stream, who did no material harm to the stream, as "an injunction would cause infinitely more damage than it would remedy"; *Fitzpatrick v. Distinguished in Conkling v. Pacific Improvement Co., 87 Cal. 298, holding that in a bill for injunction against the diverting of water, it was sufficient for plaintiff to allege possession of the land and payment therefor, and it was unnecessary to aver that the lands were subject to pre-emption, because plaintiff made no claim of title in himself and did not question that of defendant. Cited in Shiveley v. Pennoyer, 27 Oreg. 37, holding that a pre-emption claimant must show his qualifications before he can purchase from the state; and in note to 87 Am. Dec. 133.

Suscol Rancho lands were withdrawn from pre-emption by the act of congress of 1841, except as to prior purchasers from Vallejo who had taken possession, p. 487.

Affirmed in Page v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 609, saying: "And there can be no doubt that congress had the power to thus withdraw the lands from pre-emption and the sale under the general laws, at any time prior to Notes Cal. Rep.—87 the acquisition by a settler of a right in the lands that he could maintain against the United States, so as to secure ultimately the legal title"; also in People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 650; and in Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 490, 491, saying: "The right of pre-emption is a mere privilege, . . . not a right of property as against the government, and it can be withdrawn at any time before it has been perfected into an obligation which can be enforced against the government itself, and that is before a sale and payment"; and in dissenting opinion in same case, pages 502, 503; also in Durfee v. Plaisted, 38 Cal. 83, saying: "The patent is the record of the government that the land was subject to entry by the patentees under the act of Congress, and was entered by them in conformity to law; and is conclusive evidence of the regularity, as well as the validity, of the action of the officers in passing upon and finally confirming their claim as purchasers from Vallejo or his assigns."

Declarations of Intention to pre-empt lands that are not subject to pre-emption are inadmissible in evidence, p. 487.

Distinguished in Tyler v. Green, 28 Cal. 408, 87 Am. Dec. 131, where plaintiff claimed under a pre-emption right to lands that were subject to pre-emption, and it was held he could prove by witnesses the facts necessary to establish his pre-emption right.

Cited in Harding v. Cowing, 28 Cal. 214, holding that a judgment by default was the judgment of the court, not of the clerk who entered it; also in Glidden v. Packard, 28 Cal. 652, holding that a notice of motion to dissolve attachment "was not such an appearance in the case as would authorize the clerk to enter judgment by default"; Bond v. Pacheco, 30 Cal. 535, holding that where the clerk entered judgment by default for too large an amount, owing to an error in calculation of interest, it was "an error committed in the performance of an act within his jurisdiction to perform, which could be corrected on motion made in time, or on appeal, but which would not vitiate the judgment if not corrected"; Providence Co. v. Prader, 32 Cal. 636, 91 Am. Dec. 600, holding that in each case it must appear that what the clerk did was within the authority conferred on him by the statute; Sacramento v. Central Pacific Co., 61 Cal. 255, holding that on an offer by defendant to allow judgment to be entered for a certain sum, for state and county taxes, the clerk had no right to enter judgment in a gross sum, not specifying the separate taxes of state and county, but less than the total amount claimed in the complaint. Cited in Files v. Robinson, 30 Ark. 494, holding that a judgment by default entered by the clerk in vacation did not comply with the statute; Hazard v. Indictment for murder need not state the means of death or nature and locality of wound and ought not to state the degree of the crime. Camp, 2 Idaho, 218, holding that the charge should be a few plain propositions of law applicable to the facts; State v. McGinnis, 5 Nev. 339, holding a charge as to facts, in a case of assault with a weapon, to be error; Territory v. Romera, 2 N. In the absence of any statement or bill of exceptions embodying the evidence, or declaring its purport or tendency, so far as may be necessary to point the exception, we must presume in favor of the action of the court below, upon the principle that the party who alleges error must show it. 27 Cal. 588-596. DORE v. SELLERS.

Mechanic's Lien, of employees of the contractor, arises under and flows from the original contract, p. 594.

Affirmed in Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 290, adding: "And it follows, that no agreement subsequently made between the principal parties, unless seasonably disclosed to the workmen and materialmen, can be set up to their disadvantage"; to same effect in Shaver v. Murdock, 36 Cal. 298; Aste v. Wilson, 14 Colo. App. 328, noted under Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566; Whittier v. Blakely, 13 Oreg. 559, holding that the lien attaches on delivery of the material and service of notice of lien.

Mechanic's Lien does not exist in favor of a contractor's materialman or laborer, against the owner of the property, if they did not give the statutory notice of their claim until after payment was made to the contractor according to the contract, p. 595.

Affirmed in Blythe v. Poultney, 31 Cal. 238; Dingley v. Greene, 54 Cal. 335; Wiggins v. Bridge, 70 Cal. 439. Cited in Frost v. Falgetter, 52 Neb. 694, on point that contractor may waive lien, and holding subcontractor affected thereby. Distinguished in Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 175, holding that under sections 1183 and 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended, if the owner fails to record the contract, it is void, and subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen may enforce their lien, without notice to the owner and without regard to his payments to the contractor.

27 Cal. 596-603. VANDEWATER v. McRAE.

Indorser of note secured by mortgage may be sued personally, after foreclosure of the mortgage, for any deficiency, p. 603.

Affirmed in Allin v. Williams, 97 Cal. 407; Savings Bank v. Central etc. Co., 122 Cal. 35, discussing right to sue junior mortgagor personally after loss of security under senior mortgage; County Bank v. Greenberg, 127 Cal. 130, holding suit on note given as collateral security for overdraft not barred by prior suit on mortgage to secure such overdraft; Mallory v. Kessler, 18 Utah. 15, 72 Am. St. Rep. 766, sustaining action for deficiency on note after application of proceeds of sale under power in trust deed; Blumberg v. Birch, 99 Cal. 417, 37 Am. St. Rep. 69, holding that where the mortgage was foreclosed upon publication of summons to the mortgagor, a deficiency judgment against him could not be included in the foreclosure proceedings, but must be by separate action. Affirmed in Merced Bank v.

Casaccia, 103 Cal. 643. Cited in Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal. 119, 58 Am. St. Rep. 158, holding that an indorser of a note secured by mortgage was not discharged by failure of the mortgagor to foreclose when the premises were sold on foreclosure of a prior mortgage; and in First Nat. Bank v. Williams, 2 Idaho, 626, holding that where a note is secured by mortgage, a suit cannot be brought on the note alone, unless the mortgage is valueless.

27 Cal. 603-607. CUNNINGHAM v. HAWKINS.

Parol Evidence is admissible to show that a deed absolute on its face was intended to be a mortgage. There is but one form of action in this state, and the same rules of evidence must be applied alike to all cases, p. 606.

Affirmed in Hopper v. Jones, 29 Cal. 19. Cited, as an illustration, Peck v. Vandenberg, 30 Cal. 28, to the point that parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed is a gift. Cited in Byrne v. Hudson, 127 Cal. 256, on point that no title passes under such deed; Sears v. Dixon, 33 Cal. 332, holding that the object of admitting parol evidence is "to show the real nature of the transaction, without regard to the mode or form in which the instruments in writing were executed." Affirmed in Gay v. Hamilton, 33 Cal. 690; also in Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 48, 49, a majority of the court holding that the rule applies at law as well as in equity, and the dissenting opinion disapproving of the principal case, on page 63. Affirmed in Raynor v. Lyons, 37 Cal. 454; Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 514; Turner v. McDonald, 76 Cal. 180; 9 Am. St. Rep. 191; and in Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 461, holding that the rule of the principal case and Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 48, was "restored by sections 2924 and 2925 of the Civil Code," and the "doctrine of Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117, has been abrogated"; Hughes v. Davis having overruled Jackson v. Lodge, without referring to the principal case, Rhodes J., who delivered the dissenting opinion in Jackson v. Lodge, saying in the opinion in Hughes v. Davis: "Since the decision of that case I have seen nothing which tended to shake my confidence in the conclusion which I then expressed, and I again announce that, in my opinion, an absolute deed does convey the legal title." Affirmed in McAnnulty v. Seick, 59 Iowa, 590, holding that parol evidence is admissible in law and equity to show that a bill of sale was intended as a mortgage. Cited in note on this point in 76 Am. Dec. 488.

27 Cal. 611-613; 87 Am. Dec. 102. DELAND v. HIETT.

Part Payment of a Judgment, under a dry agreement that it should operate as a satisfaction in full, does not discharge the judgment, p. 612.

Affirmed in Siddall v. Clark, 89 Cal. 323, holding that an agreement of an administratrix to accept, in payment of a judgment due the estate, a note for a less amount, was without consideration and void; also in Brockley v. Brockley, 122 Pa. St. 6. Cited in notes on this point in 91 Am. Dec. 183, 244, and 1 Am. St. Rep. 398.

27 Cal. 613-630. CREIGHTON v. MANSON.

Street Assessment is not a tax; if it were, it could no more be levied solely on the property contiguous to the improved street, than the expense of any branch of the municipal government could be so levied. And to uphold it on the principle of eminent domain, just compensation must be made for property taken; it has been often held that the owner of the property should be deemed to be compensated by the benefits in the way of an increase of value that the property has received by the adjacent improvements, but that theory is only admitted for the purposes of this case, pp. 620-621.

Overruled in Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 348, 349, holding that a street assessment is a tax, and saying that after a more thorough investigation of the subject than was given in the principal case, the views of the court "have been somewhat modified," and the discussion of the subject now is "as if the questions were new in this state, without further reference to Creighton v. Manson." Cited in Martin v. Tyler, 4 N. Dak. 304, holding that a statute providing for the taking of land for drainage purposes, without providing for proper compensation, is unconstitutional; Warren v. Hanly, 31 Iowa, 42, holding that a statute providing for paving streets, at the expense of lots abutting thereon, is constitutional; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. St. 155, 3 Am. Rep. 621, 622, holding that a statute authorizing the paving of a street is unconstitutional, so far as it authorizes the expense to be paid by the owners of property abutting on the street; and in notes, on eminent domain in 25 Am. Dec. 622, and 40 Am. Dec. 267.

Owner of Property Assessed, prior to act of 1862, was not personally liable for a street assessment, but the action was in rem, to enforce the payment of the assessment by a decree for the sale of the lot, p. 623.

Distinguished in Walsh v. Mathews, 29 Cal. 124, saying: "It was not decided in that case that the property holder could not be made personally responsible, but only that the act under which the improvement was made did not impose a personal liability. In this case . . . the work was done and the assessment levied under the act of 1862, which in express terms makes the owner as well as the property liable."

Assessment must not exceed the value of the benefit conferred by the making of the improvement and certainly an assessment should not be laid either upon the property or the owner where, instead of a benefit to the property, the owner has received only an injury, p. 624.

Cited in dissenting opinion in Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 441, to the point that the statute ordering the widening of Dupont street in San Francisco was unconstitutional, because the assessment was in excess of benefits; a majority of the court holding the statute constitutional. Affirmed in Zoeller v. Kellogg, 4 Mo. App. 165.

Statute as to street assessments must be strictly construed, p. 628.

Affirmed in Hudford v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 353, holding that where the grade of a street is changed without first finding and tendering the amount of damages to property owners, the proceedings are void.

Resolution of Intention of board of supervisors to grade a street need not necessarily be in the usual form of a municipal ordinance and be preceded by the words, "Be it ordained, etc." but whatever its form it amounts in substance to an ordinance, and must be passed in the mode prescribed for the passage of ordinances. It is a legislative act it must be presented to the president of the board for his approval, 629, 630.

Affirmed, as to presentation of resolution to president, in Thompson v. Hoge, 30 Cal. 179, 180. Distinguished in Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 243, holding that the act of 1862 prescribed that the resolutions as to street work should not be deemed ordinances, therefore they need not be presented to the mayor for approval, and resolutions of intention need only be passed by the board and signed by the clerk. Referred to in Creighton v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 448, another phase of the principal case, decided on other points. Cited in Napa v. Easterby, 78 Cal. 228, as not being opposed to the view that a provision in the city charter of Napa as to the style of ordinances was "merely directory" as applied to a resolution for street work; and in Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 113 Cal. 669, to the point that "whether an existing street shall be improved is a question to be addressed to the governing board of a municipality in its legislative capacity, and its determination upon that question, as well as upon the character of the improvement to be made, is a legislative act"; and in Martindale v. Palmer, 52 Ind. 414, holding the signature of a mayor not essential to the validity of an ordinance passed by a municipal corporation.

27 Cal. 630-638. PEOPLE v. YSLAS.

Evidence of Unchastity of a witness is inadmissible to impeach her testimony; the inquiry must be restricted to her reputation for truth and veracity, p. 633.

Cited in Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 551, holding that under sections 1847 and 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "general character for truth, honesty, and integrity may be inquired into." Affirmed in State v. Larkin, 11 Nev. 331. Cited in notes on this point in 15 Am. Dec. 100, 17 Am. Dec. 77, and 53 Am. St. Rep. 479.

The common-law definition of an assault is substantially the same as that found in the statute, p. 633.

Cited in People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 668, 29 Am. St. Rep. 167, holding that firing a pistol through the roof was an assault, though the party fired at was not there at the time; State v. Sears, 86 Mo. 174, holding that intent to do bodily harm is essential; Thomas v. State, 99 Ga. 43, holding that demonstrations of violence, coupled with apparent ability, so as to compel the party assaulted to retreat, constitute an assault; Cited in Hollister v. State, 156 Ind. 258, holding evidence not sufficient to sustain conviction for assault with intent to commit rape; notes to 39 Am. Rep. 713, and 41 Am. Rep. 493.

27 Cal. 643-648. LEACH v. DAY.

Injunction Against Trespass may be granted for the purpose of quieting a possession or preventing a multiplicity of actions, or where the value of the inheritance is put in jeopardy, or where irreparable mischief is threatened in relation to mines, quarries, or woodland, whether the same result from the nature of the injury itself or from the insolvency of the party committing it, p. 646.

Cited in More v. Massini, 32 Cal. 594, granting an injunction against entry on lands to quarry asphaltum; Nevada Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 307, refusing an injunction against diversion of water, because it did not amount to waste; Richards v. Kirkpatrick, 53 Cal. 434, refusing an injunction against a sale on execution, because there was an adequate remedy at law; Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 64, granting an injunction against constructing a tunnel through lands; and in Spring Valley v. Bartlett, 8 Sawy. 569, 16 Fed. Rep. 626, refusing an injunction against passage by a board of supervisors of an ordinance fixing water rates, because there was an adequate remedy at law.

27 Cal. 649-654. MARRINER v. SMITH.

Cloud on Title.—Injunction against execution sale of land as a cloud on title, refused because plaintiff's bought the land with record notice of the judgment on which the execution issued, and it does not appear that any fraud was practiced on them, and they did not make the judgment creditor a defendant in their suit for an injunction, pp. 651, 652.

Cited in Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 176, enjoining an execution sale, because it would be a cloud on title; and in Archbishop v. Shipman, 69 Cal. 592, holding that a sale on foreclosure would not be a cloud on the title of the owner of the land who was not a party to the judgment; and in notes, on relief in equity against a judgment, in 19 Am. Dec. 607, and 54 Am. St. Rep. 252.

Homestead.—If an abandonment of homestead, and conveyance thereof to a stranger, was "one transaction and took effect at the same moment of time," and the value of the homestead did not exceed five thousand dollars, prior judgment against the husband was not a lien on the homestead, pp. 652, 653.

Cited in Eby v. Foster, 61 Cal. 286, holding that the delivery of a deed, and filing it and a declaration of homestead for recording, were simultaneous, and the lien of a prior judgment did not attach; and in notes, on judgment liens against homesteads, in 87 Am. Dec. 278; 83 Am. Dec. 351; 20 Am. Rep. 151; 34 Am. St. Rep. 501; 38 Am. St. Rep. 247.

Fraud in obtaining judgment, by taking a default in a case that had been settled, held not to be an issue under the pleadings, p. 652.

Cited in Hogg v. Link, 90 Ind. 351, holding that where a judgment lien was obtained by fraud, it could not be collaterally attacked by a subsequent vendee of the land, although his vendor might have done it; and in dissenting opinion in Humboldt Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 248, a majority of the court holding that a confession of judgment was rightly entered.

27 Cal. 655-685. PEOPLE v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

Mandamus.—The rules of the Civil Practice Act are as strictly applicable to the pleadings in mandamus as to those in any action, p. 670. The general rules of pleading are substantially the same in mandamus as in other civil actions, p. 671.

Affirmed in People v. Lothrop, 3 Colo. 448, and Chamberlain v. Warburton, 1 Utah, 270. Cited in Jones v. Board, 141 Cal. 96, holding application subject to general rules regarding limitations.

Facts must be Pleaded, showing wherein an ordinance is illegal, not the assumed inference, p. 675.

Affirmed in Hedges v. Dam, 72 Cal. 522, and Lyman v. Martin, 2 Utah, 149, 150.

Distinguished in People v. Reclamation Dist., 121 Cal. 526, sustaining complaint in quo warranto.

Bribery at Election held to be immaterial issue, p. 676.

Cited, and not decided, in Belo v. Commissioners, 76 N. C. 497; Board v. Coler, 113 Fed. 735, quoting Belo v. Commissioners, 76 N. C. 489.

Res Judicata.—A fundamental fact in an action, that must have been found by the court before a judgment could have been rendered, cannot be again litigated in another action between the same parties, p. 676.

Affirmed in Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 38. Cited in Sauls v. Freeman, 24 Fla. 223, 224, 12 Am. St. Rep. 198, holding a former judgment to be an absolute bar to further litigation; Cited in Slater v. Skirving, 51 Neb. 114, 66 Am. St. Rep. 448, holding prior default judgment res adjudicata.

Municipal aid to a railroad having been authorized by the legislature and the city having voted in favor of it, delivery of municipal bonds by the city to the corporation became a duty, and a subsequent compromise between the city and the railway did not affect its legality, p. 681.

Cited in Leavenworth Co. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 506, 12 Am. Rep. 440, holding that the legislature may authorize municipal aid for a railroad; State v. Davis, 11 S. Dak. 115, 118, 74 Am. St. Rep. 782, sustaining right of county to compromise judgment claim against it; Talcott v. Pine Grove, 1 Flipp. 136, Fed. Cas. No. 13,735, noted under Pattison v. Board, 13 Cal. 175; Harcourt v. Good, 39 Tex. 472, holding that a tax in aid of a railroad could be collected.

27 Cal. 685-688. LEVY v. GETLESON.

Statement on Appeal.—After a nonsuit in the lower court, the merits of that judgment can be investigated only on motion for new trial or on appeal from the judgment; and a statement, not conforming to the statutory requirements in this regard, is properly stricken out by the lower court, p. 688.

Distinguished in Calderwood v. Pyser, 31 Cal. 337, holding that where a referee's report contains an erroneous conclusion of law, the lower court may correct it before entering judgment; dissenting opinion in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 326, as an example of the practice of striking out a statement; Nicoll v. Littlefield, 60 Cal. 240, holding that as an appeal from a nonsuit contained no statement, it must be dismissed. Affirmed in Williams v. Rice, 13 Nev. 237. Cited, Sanford v. Duluth Co., 2 N. Dak. 10, holding that on an appeal from the judgment errors of law at the trial can be reviewed.

Taxation of Costs, made before final judgment, must be reviewed by a statement on appeal from the judgment; an order refusing to retax costs is not appealable, p. 688.

Affirmed in Lansky v. Davis, 33 Cal. 678, holding that though the taxation is made after entry of judgment, the law considers it as having been made before. Distinguished in Dooly v. Norton, 41 Cal. 441, 443, holding that an order refusing to retax costs, made at the next term after the entry of judgment, was appealable. Affirmed in Rader v. Nottingham, 2 Mont. 158.

APRIL TERM 1865.

REPORTS OF CASES

DETERMINED BY

THE SUPREME COURT

APRIL TERM, 1865.

WILLIAM PRADER v. CHARLES H. GRIMM AND GEORGE COOPER.

ACTION ON INJUNCTION BOND.—The plaintiff in an action on an injunction bond is not entitled to a judgment for damages for expenses incurred for attorneys' fees and in procuring testimony, unless he proves that he has actually paid the attorney and the expenses of procuring testimony.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. Cook, for Appellants.

P. L. Edwards, and Robert C. Clark, for Respondent.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

This is an action upon an injunction bond, and was tried under the law of appeals as it stood prior to the passage of an Act entitled "An Act to regulate appeals in this State." (Statutes 1861, p. 589.) The trial was by the Court, and the judgment was for the plaintiff. The only point which it is necessary for us to notice is to the effect that the finding does not sustain the judgment.

The finding is in the following words.

"From the evidence in this case, the Court finds all the issues in favor of the plaintiff except as to the amount of damages claimed; and in regard to damages, the Court finds that plaintiff was compelled to employ counsel to dissolve the temporary injunction, and did employ counsel, and that a reasonable counsel fee was three hundred and twenty-five dollars. The Court further finds that the plaintiff, in procuring and taking testimony to dissolve the injunction, incurred the further expense of forty-seven dollars and twenty-five cents, making the whole damage sustained by the plaintiff up to the time of giving the second bond, the sum of three hundred and seventy-two dollars and thirty-five cents. As a conclusion of law, the Court holds that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against defendants for the sum of three hundred and seventy-two dollars and twenty-five cents, and costs."

It will be observed that the foregoing does not find that either of the sums of money therein stated have been actually paid by the plaintiff, or that he has given his note or any other security therefor.

Wilson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 169, was an action in all respects like the present. The only breach of the bond assigned in that case was, that by reason of the injunction the plaintiff had been compelled to retain and employ attorneys and counsellors at law, and to pay them the sum of one thousand dollars to prevent said injunction from being made perpetual, and to procure its dissolution. As in the present case, the

Statement of Facts.

Court found all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, except as to the damages, as to which it found that there was no evidence of any money having been paid by the plaintiff, or of his having given any valuable or other consideration to any person for or on account of the services in question; and thereupon and for the reason that the plaintiff had failed to establish any actual loss, and at most only a liability, the Court rendered a judgment in favor of the defendants, holding that under those circumstances no recovery could be had. On appeal to this Court we affirmed the judgment. We are entirely satisfied with the rule in that case, and upon its authority as well as upon principle the judgment in this case must be reversed and a new trial directed.

Ordered accordingly.

JERRY FORD v. R. C. CHAMBERS.

ACTUAL AND CONTINUED CHANGE OF POSSESSION OF GOODS SOLD.—If a merchant, having a stock of goods in his store, and engaged in a retail trade, with clerks in his employ, makes a sale in good faith of his entire stock in trade to a creditor in payment of the indebtedness, and for a fair price, and the creditor immediately goes into the store, takes entire control of the business, and proceeds to take an inventory, and also to retail the goods to customers with the assistance of the clerks of the vendor, this constitutes an actual and continued change of possession, and the sale is valid as against the creditors of the vendor, although there has been no formal discharge of the clerks of the vendor and rehiring of them by the vendee, and the vendor continues to occupy a room in the upper part of the store where he had previously slept.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court below found the following facts:

"1. That on the first day of November, 1859, William Ford was doing business as a merchant at Quincy, and had been so doing business for more than a year before that time. That the stock in such business consisted of goods, wares, and merchandise usually kept in a store in the country. That he had several clerks in his employ in his business.

Statement of Facts.

" 2. That at that time he was indebted to Jerry Ford, the plaintiff in this suit, and his brother, about the sum of ten thousand dollars.

" 3. That on the 28th of October, 1859, Arrington & Co. obtained a judgment against said William Ford for $5,063.09, in this Court, for goods before that date sold to said William Ford.

" 4. That on the first day of November, 1859, an execution was issued upon the said judgment and immediately forwarded to R. C. Chambers, the defendant in this action, and then Sheriff of Plumas County.

" 5. That on the first day of November, 1859, the said Jerry Ford arrived at Quincy from San Francisco, and said William Ford agreed to sell to the said Jerry Ford his entire stock of goods, and the amount thereof to be credited upon the debt which William Ford then owed Jerry Ford.

" 6. That Jerry Ford and William Ford's clerks, then in the store, proceeded to take an inventory of the stock of goods in the said store, and so continued from day to day until the morning of the 5th of November, 1859, and the amount of such inventory was charged in the books of William Ford to Jerry Ford.

" 7. That the evidence of the indebtedness from William Ford to Jerry Ford was an entry of such debt in the said books of William Ford, and the amount of the said inventory was entered in the same books as so much paid upon said debt.

" 8. Within two hours after the inventory was made, and the entry of the amount thereof was made in the books as aforesaid, the defendant as Sheriff, with the aforesaid execution, entered the said store and levied upon the entire stock therein and proceeded to take an inventory thereof, and did make an inventory of the same and took them into his custody as such Sheriff, and in the month of December following sold the same under said execution.

Statement of Facts.

"9. That a portion of the goods levied upon were in a warehouse about one hundred and twenty-five feet from the principal storehouse.

"10. That during the time of the taking of the inventory by the said Jerry Ford and clerks the goods remained in the said store the same as before, and a portion of them were sold by Jerry Ford and the clerks during that time and up to the time of the levy of the defendant.

"11. During this time, and for some days previous to that time, William Ford was sick in the upper part of said store, which part had been and then was occupied by the said William Ford and the said clerks as sleeping apartments, the entrance to which was by a stairway outside and apart from said storehouse, through a woodshed.

"12. That during the time of the taking of said inventory, and up to the time of the said levy, the said Jerry Ford was there present in the store, giving directions as to the goods, and was selling goods to customers as they called for that purpose.

"13. On the 5th of November, 1859, the said William Ford gave the said Jerry Ford a lease of the said store, dated the 2d day of November, 1859, and it was so dated to correspond with the time of the taking of the inventory under the contract of sale from William Ford to Jerry Ford.

"14. The clerks in the store at the time of taking the inventory and of the levy were the same clerks in the employ of William Ford on and before the 1st day of November, 1859, and it does not appear that there was any specific hiring or employing of said clerks by Jerry Ford before the levy.

"15. William Ford had a small sign over the door of the said store, upon which was the name 'Ford,' and said sign continued over said door without any alteration up to the time of the said levy.

"16. That after said levy by the said defendant, he (the defendant) rented from Jerry Ford the said warehouse to store the said goods on which he had so levied and taken under the said execution.

Argument For Appellant.

"17. That at the time of the said levy, the said Jerry Ford gave the defendant notice that he was the owner of the goods, and forbid him from taking the same under said execution.

"18. The inventory of that portion of the goods in the warehouse was completed, and the amount thereof entered in the books of William Ford before the defendant levied upon such portion; and that such portion of goods in said warehouse thus seized were worth at the time of the levy at Quincy $2,440; and the whole store of goods so taken and sold by the said Sheriff were, at wholesale price, at said Quincy, of the value of $6,000 at the time of said levy."

The Court also found as conclusions of law:

"That there was no immediate delivery nor actual or continued change of possession of the said goods from the said William Ford to the said Jerry Ford, and that the said sale as to the creditors of the said William Ford was fraudulent and void, and that the defendant is entitled to judgment."

Defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and plaintiff appealed from an order denying a new trial and from the judgment.

This case was before the Supreme Court at the October term, 1861, and is reported in the 19 Cal. 144.

B. D. Wheeler for Appellant.

The sale of the stock of merchandise from William Ford to Jerry Ford, was a legal and valid sale, and vested the title in the plaintiff:

1st. Because there is neither proof nor pretence of actual fraud.

2d. The delivery was immediate, and the change of possession actual and continued. (Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503; Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545; Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316.)

3d. Plaintiff had no knowledge of Arrington & Company's claim, nor of the issuance of the execution. But even if plaintiff knew, at the time he purchased from William Ford, that there was an execution in the officer's hands against the property of his vendor, it did not render the transaction fraudulent. (Wheaton v. Neville, 19 Cal. 41.)

Argument for Respondent.

The Statute of Frauds, like all other statutes, must be reasonably construed; and we are not aware that any especial sanctity attaches to that statute, or that it is obligatory on the Courts of the land to give to it a more strict or literal construction than belongs in common to the various legislative enactments standing upon our statute books. It was virtually held at one time by the Supreme Court of this State, that the "immediate delivery" required by the statute, meant an almost instantaneous delivery; but subsequently it was determined that the character of the property sold, its situation, and all the attendant circumstances should be taken into consideration in determining whether the delivery had been made within a reasonable time or not. And again, it was held that the "continued change" of possession required by statute, in reality meant an unbroken and perpetual change of possession; but this Court subsequently held that the terms "actual and continued" were used merely in contradistinction to the terms formal and temporary; and that even though the chattel sold should at some future time revert, temporarily, to the hands of the vendor, yet it would not, while thus in his hands, be subject to seizure for his debts, provided the vendee, pursuant to his purchase, had possessed it long enough to satisfy a reasonable mind of the bona fides of the transaction. (16 Cal. 503.)

J. P. Hoge, and H. H. Haight, for Respondent.

This Court is so familiar with the authorities upon this subject that we propose to dismiss them with a very brief review.

And one remark is to be made here, that the late cases modify the earlier ones to this extent only, that the employment of the vendor by the vendee after a lapse of a longer or shorter time is not a fact of such a controlling character as of itself to make the sale void against creditors. This, we understand, is the only respect in which the earlier cases in this State are modified, and this modification has no bearing upon the case at bar.

The case of Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, in which the modification above referred to was first made, was a case in which the vendee had been in possession more than a year, and the vendor then went into his employ. This was very properly held not fatal; but in that very case Judge Baldwin lays it down that the change of possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks of change of ownership, so as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner.

The delivery and change of possession need not have consumed more than twenty minutes. The amount of credit to be given was to be arrived at by computation after taking an inventory, and was not an essential part of the delivery or change of possession. If the credit were not entered for six months, or not at all, it would not affect the delivery and change of possession if that were in compliance with the statute.

Instead, however, of making an immediate delivery and actual change of possession, there was, after the lapse of four days, no change whatever, much less that actual change which Courts have over and over again declared to signify open, public, unequivocal, and notorious. (Struper v. Echert, 2 Wharton, 303; Jarvis v. Davis, 14 B. Monroe, 529; McBride v. McClelland, 6 Watts & Sergt. 95.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The main question in this case is, as to whether there was an immediate delivery of the stock of goods to plaintiff, Jerry Ford, before the levy of defendant, within the meaning of the fifteenth section of the Statute of Frauds, so as to render the sale valid, as against creditors. We are satisfied that there was, and that the conclusion of law drawn by the Judge below from the facts found is, in this respect, erroneous. We have carefully examined the evidence, and think it fully sustains the facts found by the Court, and that in some respects the facts might have been properly stated still more strongly in favor of the plaintiff.

It is clear to our minds, from the findings, and also from the evidence, that, from the time of the arrival of Jerry Ford at Quincy, he took the entire management and control of the goods. William was not about the store, and gave no direction, except when the inventory was footed up and taken to his room up stairs, he directed the amount to be charged to Jerry on his books. The Court find the bargain to have been made on the arrival of Jerry. Jerry from that time went on with the inventory in connection with the clerks, assumed the direction of matters in the store, and sold goods to customers — the memoranda of sales being kept during the taking of the inventory on loose papers. The inventory was leisurely taken, occupying from the first till the morning of the fifth of November, and was fully completed, and the amount charged over to Jerry Ford, on the books of William, some two hours before the levy by the Sheriff. The goods were taken, so far as they went, in satisfaction of a debt of long standing found to be due Jerry Ford for goods sold to William — said sum appearing as a credit in favor of Jerry, on the books of William Ford. A lease of the store was also executed and delivered on the morning of the fifth, before the arrival of the Sheriff, as shown by the uncontradicted testimony of the witnesses, dated as of the second — the day that Jerry took charge. True, there had been no formal discharge and rehiring of the clerks, but they manifestly acted under the orders of Jerry, and William never came into the store, or interfered in any way after the arrival of Jerry, till he was called down at the instance of the Sheriff at the time he came to make the levy. Unquestionably, as between William and Jerry Ford, the title had passed, and had the goods been destroyed by fire at the moment of the levy, the loss would have fallen on the vendee; and we think the conclusion to be drawn from the facts found, and from the testimony, equally clear, that the actual possession had passed to Jerry Ford, and that the goods were under his actual personal control as early as the second of November, and from that time till the levy. The sale had been made, the control of the store had passed to Jerry on the second of November, and it only remained to complete the inventory and ascertain the amount to be charged over, and this was fully completed and the entries made upon the books of William Ford before the defendant commenced his levy. We are fully satisfied that the judgment is erroneous. The only doubt we entertain is, as to what judgment should be entered. The facts are very fully found, and regarding the final conclusion in the finding, as a conclusion of law drawn from the facts found—the light in which the Judge below considered it—we think it erroneous, and the conclusion should have been, that there was an actual delivery, and continued change of possession sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and that the sale was valid as against the creditors of William Ford. And we do not see how any other result could be arrived at, on the testimony, if a new trial were had. This case was tried once before by a jury, and the verdict was in favor of the plaintiff. But our predecessors reversed the judgment for error in one of the instructions. The instruction was, doubtless, erroneous, and the judgment properly reversed for that reason, yet we think it not very likely that the verdict was really affected by the error. The Justice who delivered the opinion, while he expressly disclaimed any intention to decide the matter, remarked that “upon reviewing the testimony in the case, we are strongly inclined to the opinion, that there was no such actual delivery of the goods proved as made the contract between William Ford and Jerry Ford complete as against the former’s creditors.” It is highly probable that this suggestion influenced the learned Judge who tried the case below, in deducing his conclusion from the facts found. But whatever may have been the evidence adduced on the first trial, we are satisfied that upon the evidence now presented by the record, and upon the specific facts found, there was such an actual change of possession as to render the sale valid as against the other creditors of William Ford.

Upon the whole we think the plaintiff should have had judgment upon the facts found, and clearly so upon the evidence.

Ordered, that the judgment be reversed, and the District Court be directed to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of six thousand dollars, and interest from November 5th, 1859, at the rate of ten per cent per annum and costs of suit, and that appellant recover his costs on appeal.

Mr. Justice CERRY being disqualified did not participate in the decision of this case.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. CALEB DORSEY v. EDWARD SMYTH, COUNTY AUDITOR OF TUOLUMNE COUNTY.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.—The salaries of District Attorneys are not audited and allowed by the Boards of Supervisors of counties, but by the County Auditors. Boards of Supervisors have no power over or duties to perform touching the salaries of District Attorneys.

JUDGMENT IN MANDAMUS.—One having the title to the office of District Attorney, but not in possession, is not bound by a judgment in mandamus against a Board of Supervisors to which he was not a party, requiring the Board to audit and allow the salary of another in possession of the office without title.

OFFICER BOUND TO KNOW THE LAW AS TO WHO IS HIS SUCCESSOR.—When the question as to who is the legal successor of an officer is in litigation upon a point of law, the officer is bound to know who his successor is, and if the legal successor qualifies and demands the office, and the incumbent refuses to deliver it up upon the termination of the litigation he becomes a trespasser ab initio.

SALARY OF AN OFFICE IS INCIDENT TO THE TITLE.—One having the legal right to an office, but not in possession of the same, is entitled to the salary for the term for which he was elected; and the payment of the salary to one in possession of the office without title will not prevent the one having the title from recovering the salary.

RECOVERY OF OFFICE OR ITS INCIDENTS.—One claiming by action an office or the incidents to the office, can only recover upon proof of title.

JUSTIFICATION OF SURETIES ON OFFICIAL BOND.—An official bond is not vitiated because the sureties swear that "they are worth the amount for which they become liable over and above all their ~~past~~ debts and liabilities." Instead of saying "over and above all their debts," etc.

Statement of Facts.

APPLICATION to the Supreme Court for writ of mandate to compel the defendant, County Auditor of Tuolumne County, to audit and allow the salary of the relator as District Attorney of said county.

The affidavit of the sureties on the official bond of the relator states that they "are each and severally worth the amount for which they have become sureties in the above bond over and above all their just debts and liabilities."

At the September election, in 1863, the relator, Caleb Dorsey, and one Hugh G. Platt were opposing candidates for the office of District Attorney of Tuolumne County. At that election two hundred and eleven votes were cast for the candidates for that office by soldiers in the military service of the United States. Of these votes, Platt received two hundred and ten, and Dorsey one. With these votes in, Platt was elected, otherwise Dorsey. They were included in the count, and Platt declared elected. Thereupon Dorsey brought suit to contest the election upon the ground that the votes in question were illegal, which was finally determined in his favor by the County Court on the 7th of December, 1863, and by this Court on appeal at the October term, 1864. Prior to the first Monday in March, 1864, at which time the term of office to which he had been elected commenced, the relator duly qualified, and on that day formally demanded from C. C. Brown, the then incumbent, possession of the office and the books and papers pertaining thereto. On account of the pending controversy between the relator and Platt, Brown refused to comply with the demand, and continued to hold the office and exercise its functions until after the final determination thereof, at which time he surrendered the office to the relator. For the time during which he thus held over, Brown received from the county the salary belonging to the office, amounting to the sum of seven hundred dollars, which was paid to him in obedience to a mandamus issued by the District Court upon his relation against the Board of Supervisors, to which proceeding neither the relator nor the respondent were parties; both, however, were cognizant of the proceeding and the judgment thereon. Upon coming into the possession of his office, the relator made claim for the back salary before the respondent, and demanded from him a warrant therefor, which was refused. Hence the present proceeding.

Caleb Dorsey, in pro. per., for Relator.

It is a well settled principle of law that the compensation of an office, whether it be a salary or fees, does not depend upon its mere occupation and exercise, but upon the title to the office. The party who has the title to the office is the one entitled to the salary. The salary is an incident to the title. The Supreme Court of New York has laid down the doctrine as follows: "The compensation of a public officer is an incident to the title to the office, not to its mere occupation or exercise. The principle which avails to sustain the acts of officers de facto in respect to third persons, will not avail to sustain the claim of such an officer to salary or fees." (People v. Tieman, 8 Abbott's Rep. 359.)

The salary commences with the term. The certificate of election is only evidence of the title derived from the election. (Magee v. Supervisors, 10 Cal. 376; Wammach v. Holloway, 2 Ala. 31; Peter v. Stale, 1 McCord, 233.)

In this case the judgment of the County Court and the judgment of the Supreme Court affirming that of the County Court, were the evidences of title to said office of petitioner. Said judgments show that petitioner was entitled to the office from the first Monday in March, 1864, and if the principle laid down in the foregoing decisions be correct, he is entitled to the salary from that date.

H. P. Barber, for Defendant.

The plaintiff performed none of the duties of the office, and cannot recover the back salary, at least from the county. The statute (Wood's Dig. p. 1,147, Art. 478,) provides that the District Attorney of Tuolumne "shall receive for his services annually" the sum of one thousand two hundred dollars. (Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 122.)

Opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff refers to the New York case of People v. Tie-man, 30 Barb. 123. The Court will see, on examination, that that case was decided expressly on the ground that under the New York statute no power to hold over was vested in the incumbent.

Although the County Auditor may be the party required to draw the warrant, it is the duty of the Supervisors to "examine, settle, and allow all accounts legally chargeable against the county." (Wood's Dig. Art. 3,319.)

It is particularly requisite that the Supervisors should inspect the account of the District Attorney, for if he fail to attend the term of any District Court or Court of Sessions, the Court is authorized to appoint a substitute, to be paid from the County Treasury. (Wood's Dig. Art. 118.)

Petitioner, not having filed the requisite bond, could not legally perform the duties of his office, and therefore could claim no compensation. (W. D., 77, Art. 208.)

If a party were allowed to interpolate the word "just," the statute might easily be avoided. He might confess a fraudulent judgment covering his entire property; this evidently would not be a "just" debt—yet, as between himself and the party to whom the same was confessed, it would be perfectly valid, on the ground that he could not interpose his own fraudulent act as an answer to the judgment, being particeps criminis.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The question involved in this case is whether Brown, the old incumbent, or the relator is entitled to the salary for the time during which the former held over. This question is wholly unaffected by the mandamus against the Board of Supervisors. The relator was not a party to that proceeding, nor had the Board any power over or duty to perform touching the salary of his office. The salary of District Attorneys is not audited and allowed by the Board of Supervisors but by the County Auditor. (Wood's Digest, p. 664, Sec. 2, and

p. 694, Sec. 9.) Admitting that he could have intervened in that proceeding we know of no rule by which he was compelled to do so, and such being the case his rights in the premises could not be prejudiced by his omitting to do what no rule of law required.

Every one is presumed to know the law, and therefore Mr. Brown was bound to know under the circumstances who was his successor, and to yield the office upon his qualification and demand. He was bound to act at his peril, and if he held over, and thereafter it should appear that the party so qualifying and demanding the office had at the time a title thereto he could claim nothing on the score of services rendered, for upon the determination of that question he became a usurper ab initio. The salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title to the office, and not to its occupation and exercise. (The People ex rel. Morton v. Tieman, 8 Abbott's Practice Reports, 359.) In the case cited the Court said: "The salary and fees are incident to the title, and not to the usurpation and colorable possession of an office. An officer de facto may be protected in the performance of acts done in good faith in the discharge of the duties of an office under color of right, and third persons will not be permitted to question the validity of his acts by impeaching his title to the office. Public interests require that acts of public officers, who are such de facto, should be respected and held valid as to third persons who have an interest in them, and as concerns the public, in order to prevent a failure of justice. (2 Kent's Com., 295.) But it does not follow that a right can be asserted and enforced on behalf of one who acts merely under color of office, without legal authority, as if he were an officer de jure. When an individual claims by action the office or the incidents to the office, he can only recover upon proof of title. Possession under color of right may well serve as a shield for defence, but cannot, as against the public, be converted into a weapon of attack to secure the fruits of the usurpation and the incidents to the office."

Points decided.

The technical objection interposed to the relator's official bond is, in our judgment, untenable.

Having the title to the office, the relator is entitled to the salary from the commencement of the term for which he was elected, and he cannot be deprived of it by the usurpation of Brown, or the wrongful payment of the same to the latter by the direction of a Court in a proceeding to which he was not a party.

Peremptory mandamus allowed.

JACOB P. LEESE v. WILLIAM S. CLARK.

JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT WHERE DEFENDANTS SEVER IN THEIR ANSWERS.—

If, in an action against several defendants, sued jointly to recover the possession of a tract of land, the defendants sever in their answers, but do not demand separate trials, and the jury finds specially that the defendants are severally in possession of separate parcels of the land sued for, and if, on appeal to the Supreme Court, that Court directs judgment to be entered in the Court below "for the plaintiff upon the special findings for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint," a joint judgment rendered in the Court below upon filing the remittitur there against all or a part of the defendants is erroneous.

NOTE.—In such case, notwithstanding the entry of the joint judgment, the plaintiff may apply for and have a several judgment against the defendants.

NOTE.—In such case, also, the entry of a several judgment against part of the defendants is not a discontinuance of the action nor an abandonment of the same by the plaintiff as to the others, nor does it preclude him from afterwards moving for and having a several judgment against a defendant not included in the first several judgment.

FORM OF JUDGMENT A QUESTION OF LAW.—The question, whether a judgment entered in the Court below, is entered in accordance with the mandate of the appellate Court, is one of law, and not of fact.

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.—The entry of a judgment by the Clerk is a ministerial act.

EFFECT OF RECITALS IN A JUDGMENT.—The recitals in a several judgment against one of a number of defendants, that in a former judgment in the same action the name of this defendant was stricken out on plaintiff's motion, is prima facie evidence only of the fact, and may be contradicted by the recitals in said former judgment.

NOTE.—The recital in a judgment that a party defendant against whom it is entered appeared in the action is prima facie evidence only of the fact.

CLERK'S RECITALS IN JUDGMENT.—It is not necessary for a Clerk in entering up a judgment to insert therein recitals of his exposition of the preceding facts.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

This case was before the Supreme Court at the July term, 1861, when the judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial, and again at the July term, 1862, when the judgment was reversed, and the Court below directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the special findings for the premises in controversy pursuant to the prayer of the complaint. (See 18 Cal. 535, and 20 Cal. 387, where the general facts pertaining to the action are fully reported.)

The following is the judgment of the Supreme Court rendered at the July term, 1862:

“And now, at this day, this cause being called, and having been heretofore argued and submitted, and taken under advisement by the Court, and all and singular the law and premises being by the Court here seen, heard, understood, and fully considered, the opinion of the Court herein is delivered by Field, C. J., Cope, J., concurring to the effect that the judgment of the Court below be reversed, with directions to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the special findings for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.

“Whereupon it is now considered, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court here, that the judgment of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the County of San Francisco, in the above entitled cause be and the same is hereby reversed with costs, and said Court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the special findings for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.”

Upon the filing of the remittitur, and on the 29th day of October, 1862, the following judgment was entered in the District Court:

“Whereas, on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1862, a judgment was entered in the above entitled cause in favor of the above named defendants, against plaintiff, upon a special verdict of a jury duly impanelled to try said cause, from which judgment the said plaintiff, on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1862, perfected an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of California. And, whereas, the said appellant having filed in said District Court the remittitur of said Supreme Court, wherein it is 'ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, in the above entitled cause, be and the same is hereby reversed with costs; and said Court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the special findings for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.' Now upon application and motion of counsel for plaintiff for judgment in conformity with the mandate of said Supreme Court, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment heretofore entered herein on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1862, in favor of defendants against the plaintiff, stand for naught, and that the said plaintiff, Jacob P. Leese, do have and recover of and from William S. Clark, Daniel Gibb, James Spear, Charles M. Hitchcock, Charles Minturn, W. Hood, and John Pfeiffer, executor of Ed. F. Saelzer, deceased, defendants, possession of the premises mentioned and described in the complaint on file herein, as follows, to wit: "

Then follows a description of the land as contained in the complaint.

On the 9th day of December, 1862, the following judgment was entered in the same cause :

"The plaintiff, by his counsel, having heretofore moved the Court to modify the judgment in this cause, and the Court having taken the same under advisement, now at this day, the respective parties appearing by counsel respectively, and the defendants not objecting thereto, said motion is granted; and it is ordered, that the judgment heretofore entered in this cause, in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants, be and the same is so modified as to read as follows, to wit:

tiff, upon the special verdict of a jury, duly impanelled to try said cause, from which judgment the said plaintiff on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1862, perfected an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of California; and, whereas, the said appellants having filed in said District Court the remittitur of said Supreme Court, wherein it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the judgment of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the City and County of San Francisco, in the above entitled cause, be and the same is hereby reversed with costs; and said Court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff, upon the special findings, for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.

"Now, therefore, upon application and motion of counsel for plaintiff for judgment in conformity with the mandate of said Supreme Court, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the judgment heretofore entered herein on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1862, in favor of defendant, against the plaintiff, stand for naught, and that the said plaintiff, Jacob P. Leese, do have and recover of and from the defendant, James Spear, all that part or parcel of," etc. Here follows a description of the portion of the land described in the complaint, found by the special verdict to be in the possession of Spear. After the description, like several judgments were entered against three of the remaining defendants, for the separate parts of the land of which they were in possession. The recitals in the judgment were not repeated. Defendant Clark was not included in this judgment.

May 2d, 1864, on motion of plaintiff, made on written notice, filed April 4th, 1864, the following judgment was entered in the District Court against defendant Clark:

"Whereas, on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1862, a judgment was entered in the above entitled cause in favor of the above named defendants against plaintiff, upon a special verdict of a jury duly impanelled in said cause, from which judgment the said plaintiff on the 5th day of March, A. said District Court the remittitur of said Supreme Court, wherein it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the judgment of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, in the above entitled cause, be and the same hereby is reversed with costs; and said Court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff, upon the special findings, for the premises in controversy, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.

"And judgment having been heretofore entered in pursuance of the direction of the Supreme Court as to all of said defendants appertaining, including the said defendant Clark, which said judgment was afterwards, on motion of the plaintiff, amended by striking out the name of the said defendant, Clark, and judgment was thereupon entered against his co-defendants, leaving the said defendant, Clark; now, upon application of counsel for the plaintiff, and after hearing counsel for the said defendant Clark, and due deliberation having been thereupon had, on motion of Brooks & Whitney, attorneys for the plaintiff, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the said judgment heretofore entered herein on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1862, in favor of said defendant, and against the plaintiff, stand for naught, and that the said plaintiff, Jacob P. Leese, do have and recover of and from the defendant, William S. Clark, all that," etc.

Here follows a description of the part of the land in Clark's possession.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Clarke & Carpentier, for Appellant.

The voluntary abandonment of the judgment, entered October 29th, 1862, which included Clark with the other defendants, and covered all the land in dispute, by the amended judgment of December, 1862, which industriously excludes him from it, without any necessity, propriety, or good reason, and without permission or leave of the Court, or any express or implied reservation of a right to proceed against Clark subsequently, operated a discontinuance as to him.

Argument for Appellant.

The trial before the jury in February, 1862, was a joint one against all the defendants, and a joint judgment was entered in their favor, from which the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversing that judgment, dictated the judgment to be entered in favor of the plaintiff, leaving no discretion in the District Court.

The judgment so to be entered was ordered to follow the prayer of the complaint and the special findings of the jury. It was a simple clerical act, to prepare the judgment thus ordered. It was prepared and entered, and the office of the mandate accomplished. The trial was a joint one, and the judgment is required to be entered by the clerk, "in conformity to the verdict." (Practice Act, § 197.)

If the verdict had been for the plaintiff, "according to the prayer of the complaint," but one judgment could have been entered thereon.

The one hundred and forty-fifth section of the Practice Act provides that "judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants, and it may, when the justice of the case requires it, determine the ultimate rights of the parties on each side, as between themselves." And section one hundred and forty-six is as follows:

"In an action against several defendants the Court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." By these two sections all cases, whether of joint or several liability, are placed upon the same platform.

The point has been directly decided in New York, under exactly similar provisions of the code of procedure:

In Bacon v. Comstock, 11 Howard's Practice Rep. 200, Mr. Justice Harris in deciding the point remarks: "The common law rule is that the judgment must dispose of the rights of all the parties. There could be no two final judgments in the same action."

Argument for Respondent.

Brooks & Whitney, for Respondent.

The judgment of October 29th, 1862, was wiped out of the record by the judgment which was entered in December, 1862. If the judgment of December, 1862, disposed of the entire controversy, that was an end of the action. If it did not, then the action was not at an end.

If the Court could not enter up several judgments in an action of ejectment, that would be the end of the matter. But this the appellant does not pretend. He admits that the Court had this power. The very point was presented in the case of Lick v. Stockdale, 18 Cal. 220. That was an action of ejectment. The plaintiff brought his suit to trial as to some of the defendants, had a finding in his favor, and entered up final judgment against them, and executed his judgment, ejected those defendants, and was put in possession of the land which was severally occupied by them. The suit was for four fifty-vara lots, and these defendants occupied only one of them. Some two years after, he went on with his suit against the other defendants, and had judgment. The defendant Stockdale appealed, and one of the grounds of appeal assigned by him was that there was a final judgment already entered in the cause; but the Supreme Court held this point not well taken.

Section one hundred and forty-six of the Practice Act allows the Court to render judgment against one or more of the defendants, leaving the action to proceed against the other, when- ever a several judgment is proper. It will not be pretended that a several judgment was not proper in this case. It was not only proper but necessary, because the defendants had no community of title or possession. They were not joint tenants, tenants in common, or co-parceners, but derived their claims of title from divers sources, and occupied in severalty each his particular portion; and, by a stipulation made part of the judgment record, it was precisely ascertained what particular lot or parcel each defendant held, so that a several judgment was not only proper but necessary. The judgment was precisely the same in this case as in Lick v. Stockdale.

Opinion of the Court.

Nor does it make any difference that the trial was a joint one. Trials in ejectment are almost always joint. It does not follow that the judgment must be. Whether the judgment shall be joint or several does not depend upon the fact whether the trial is joint or several, but whether the defense is joint or several.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

Ejectment for the recovery of certain lots in the City of San Francisco. There were forty-one defendants in all, who answered severally. The jury rendered a general verdict for the defendants, and answered also to certain special issues. Plaintiff moved for judgment on the special findings. The motion was denied and judgment was entered for all of the defendants. On appeal to the Supreme Court the judgment was reversed, and the Court below was directed "to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the special findings, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint." Amongst other things, the special findings disclosed the parts or portions of the premises sued for of which the defendants were respectively possessed. The remittitur having been sent down and filed, the plaintiff's counsel, on the 29th of October, 1862, "moved for judgment, in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court," and thereupon a joint judgment was entered against eight of the forty-one defendants, Clark being one of the eight. Thereafter, and as we must assume, before the expiration of the term, and upon like "application and motion of counsel for plaintiff for judgment in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court," a second judgment was entered (containing several judgments in effect) against four only of the eight defendants named in the first judgment—Clark being one of the four omitted. It appears from the recitals in this second judgment, that it was entered upon a motion of the plaintiff to "modify" the first judgment; but all we know with regard to the nature of the modifications sought for is found in the particular recital above quoted.

Opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff, thereafter, moved for a several judgment against Clark. The motion was made upon the remittitur and papers on file, and came on to be heard April 4th, 1864. The motion was opposed by Clark on grounds set forth in the record. The files were used at the hearing and affidavits were introduced by both parties. The files and affidavits are left out of the transcript by stipulation. The Court decided in favor of the motion, and a several judgment was entered accordingly against Clark, May 2d, 1864.

The judgment recites, among other things, the appeal to the Supreme Court, the remittitur and the joint judgment against the eight defendants in the first instance, and states that it was entered "in pursuance of the directions of the Supreme Court;" and then follows the further statement that the first judgment "was afterwards amended, on motion of the plaintiff, by striking out the name of Clark; and that judgment was thereupon rendered against his co-defendants, leaving [out] the said defendant Clark. Now, upon application of counsel for the plaintiff, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed," etc. The appeal is taken from this judgment against Clark and from the order by which the judgment was awarded.

The proposition of the appellant comes to this: That the record establishes a voluntary discontinuance or abandonment of the action as to Clark. The argument, generally stated, is, that the first judgment was substantially in conformity to the mandate; that the plaintiff moved to modify or amend the judgment by striking out the name of Clark and three others; and, furthermore, that he procured the judgment against the remaining four to be turned or resolved into several judgments against each of them, thereby, as is contended, manifesting an intention to abandon all further proceedings in the action as to Clark. The counsel of the respondent, however, does not assent to but controverts the facts upon which the reasoning proceeds.

First — The judgment first entered upon the remittitur, was not, in our opinion, in conformity to the mandate of the Supreme Court. In the first place, the judgment was entered against eight of the defendants only. In the second place, it was entered against the eight jointly. The answers were several — the findings were several — and, in the absence of any stipulation of parties, the joint judgment was erroneous and any party prejudiced by the error could have appealed. (Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70; McGarvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 31.) And the Supreme Court took that view of the law when it directed judgment to be entered upon the special findings. It does not appear that that form of judgment was departed from on stipulation, nor by reason of any interposition of the plaintiff. He did nothing, so far as the record shows, except move for judgment "in conformity with the mandate;" and the judgment that he got was very far from conforming to the mandate. Thereafter, according to the record, the plaintiff moved to "modify the judgment" by making a fresh "application and motion for judgment in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court." In view of this specification it is manifest the plaintiff was dissatisfied with the judgment as it stood on the ground that it met the mandate neither in form nor in substance. We gather from the specification that it was the fixed purpose of the appellant to stand upon the mandate as the test of his right and of the form in which the judicial vindication of it should be pronounced upon the record. But the judgment entered ministerially upon this motion was a wider departure from the requirements of the mandate than the one which it was the purpose of the motion to supplant. The new judgment was several to be sure, but it was against four defendants only. And for this eccentricity the plaintiff is in no manner responsible upon the record. There are then no acts of discontinuance or abandonment by the plaintiff, but a persistent seeking on his part for the relief adjudged by the Supreme Court instead.

There is an apparent conflict between the recitals of the several judgment against Clark — the third in the series — and the recitals contained in the first and second judgments respectively. By the recitals of the first judgment it "was entered upon the plaintiff's motion for judgment in conformity to the mandate," and the recitals of the second judgment are to the same effect. Each of these judgments may be said to state the facts of its own history, and the third judgment undertakes to recapitulate them. It recites that the first judgment "was entered in pursuance of the direction of the Supreme Court." Whether it was so entered or not is a question of law and not a point of fact. We have the judgment and the mandate both before us, and hold that the first judgment is not in pursuance of the mandate, except it be in a very limited sense. We consider that the Clerk in entering up the third judgment fell into a mistake of law in this respect. The third judgment recites also that the first judgment "was, on motion of the plaintiff, amended by striking out the name of the said defendant Clark, and judgment was thereupon entered against his co-defendants, leaving out the said defendant Clark."

These judgments are all in pari materia, and counsel have so treated them by bringing them all into the record, and by arguing upon each of them as illustrated by the others. The judgments were entered by the Clerk as a ministerial officer (McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 468); and if entered by judicial direction, it comes to the same thing. The recital in a judgment that a party defendant against whom the judgment is entered appeared in the action is prima facie evidence only of the fact; and we consider the Clerk's recital in the third judgment, that the first was amended by "striking out Clark's name on the plaintiff's motion," to be so far within the rule that it may at least be confronted with the recital in the second judgment which gives a very different version of the character and object of the plaintiff's motion. Again: at the time the third judgment was applied for and ordered, the Court had nothing before it bearing upon the question in hand, of which we have any knowledge, except the second judgment and its recitals; and they constitute the basis, as we must presume, on which the several judgment against Clark was ordered. The recitals of the third judgment were not ordered by the Court — nor was it necessary to insert them. They were put in by the Clerk, and are nothing more than his exposition of the motion antedating the several judgment and fully set forth therein. The result is, that there are in our judgment no facts in the record which per se work a discontinuance of the action as to Clark, and none showing that the action was abandoned as to him by the plaintiff. The plaintiff had a several verdict against Clark. The Supreme Court had adjudged the plaintiff was entitled to a separate judgment, and the plaintiff, after two unsuccessful applications, secured the entry of such judgment for the first time, on the 2d of May, 1864. We cannot adjudge that the plaintiff had lost his right to have judgment entered on the grounds stated except upon the clearest demonstration, and the whole force of the record is the other way.

Second—There is another view of the matter which may be very briefly stated. If there is any state of facts under which the entry of the third judgment can be vindicated, we must presume that that state of facts existed at the time the entry was ordered, and that the order was made on the ground of them. The files and affidavits used at the hearing are not inserted in the transcript. For anything we can know to the contrary, there may have been a stipulation among the files, or one may have been brought forward by affidavit, fully accounting for all the phenomena put as the basis of the argument submitted for the appellant—and conserving also the plaintiff's right to a several judgment against Clark—and by direct expression.

The order and judgment are affirmed.

SEPARATE ESTATE OF WIFE.—Property purchased during coverture with funds which constitute a part of the separate estate of the wife, will also be her separate estate.

CLOUD UPON THE TITLE OF A MARRIED WOMAN'S PROPERTY.—A mortgage executed by the grantee of the husband upon property purchased with funds belonging to the separate estate of the wife, and deeded to the wife during coverture, is a cloud upon the wife's title which a Court of equity will remove.

PROPERTY PURCHASED DURING COVERTURE.—The presumption is that property conveyed to the wife for a money consideration is common property; but this presumption may be rebutted by showing that it was purchased with money belonging to her separate estate.

PURCHASE FROM HUSBAND OF PROPERTY DEEDED TO WIFE.—Parties purchasing of the husband real estate deeded to the wife for a money consideration during coverture, do so at their peril. The record of the deed to the wife is notice to all the world that the land may be the separate property of the wife, and is sufficient to put purchasers upon inquiry.

MORTGAGE ON SEPARATE ESTATE OF WIFE.—If land is purchased with funds belonging to the separate estate of the wife, and the deed, expressing a money consideration, is executed to the wife during coverture, and recorded, and the husband afterwards sells the land, the wife not joining in the deed, and his grantee executes a mortgage on the same to one who has no notice other than the record of the deed to the wife that it was purchased with the separate funds of the wife, the mortgage will be set aside by a Court of equity, although the deed on its face did not state that the consideration paid was the separate estate of the wife. The fact that the title stands in the name of the wife is sufficient to put parties dealing with land upon inquiry.

APPEAL from the District Court Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Walter Vandyke, for Appellant.

Section nine of the Act defining the rights of husband and wife, provides that "the husband shall have the entire management and control of the common property, with the like absolute power of disposition as of his own separate estate."

Under this provision of our statute it is not questioned, as I understand, that the husband, Silas Fuller, had a perfect right to convey the premises to Lawrence at the date of his deed, provided it were common property.

The statute says: "All property acquired after the marriage, by either husband or wife, except," etc., "shall be common property." There is no exception in regard to such property as may be so acquired by the separate funds of either. The legal title to such property is in the community, although in equity it may be the separate property of one or the other. Suppose the property be purchased in the name of the husband, or both, but with the wife's separate funds, although, as in the present case, nothing to show that fact on the face of the deed, it will hardly be claimed that he could not convey the legal title of the same to an innocent purchaser for value, unencumbered of the wife's claim to such property. If so, then the husband in the present case could convey the legal title, for the statute and our decisions say that it makes no difference in whose name it stands so that it be acquired by purchase.

The wife surely can stand in no better position in respect to her separate property than other people. The most that can be claimed is that her rights in regard to property are the same as the husband's.

In this extreme view of the case in favor of the wife, how does the law stand? If an estate be purchased in the name of one person and the consideration money belong to or be paid by another, a trust results therefrom, and the former thereby becomes a trustee for the latter. (1 Saunders on Uses and Trusts, 352, and cases cited in note a.)

So if a partner buys land in his own name with the partnership funds. In all such cases, although the legal title is in the grantee named in the deed, yet in equity the estate belongs to the party whose funds purchased it. The legal title then being in the community in this case, notwithstanding in equity the estate belonged to the wife, the husband possessed the right to dispose of the same. (See the Statutes and cases cited from our State Reports.)

The estate being, however, as between them, subject to the trust or equitable interest in favor of the wife, all persons who should purchase from the husband with notice of such trust or interest, would hold the estate subject to said trust the same as the husband held it. On the other hand, the law is equally clear and without exception that one who should purchase of the husband for a valuable consideration without notice, would hold the estate discharged of the trust or equitable claim of the wife. (1 Saunders on Uses and Trusts, 351, star page; Dart. on Vendors and Purchasers, 390, star page;

1 Story's Eq. Juris. 396, § 410; 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, 371, § 88; Willard's Eq. Juris. 248, 249; Somes v. Brewer, 2 Pick. 84.)

A. & H. C. Campbell, for Respondent.

We contend: That while a deed to a married woman for a valuable consideration expressed is prima facie evidence of common property, (12 Cal. 224, Smith v. Smith; 16 Cal. 557, Mott v. Smith; 12 Cal. 254, Mayer v. Kinzer,) that it is only prima facie so, and like any other presumption, may be rebutted by evidence fully and clearly proving that the consideration paid was the separate property of the wife. The burden of proof rests on the wife.

The law allows a wife separate property. She has the deed. It may be her own, it may be common property. A purchaser from the husband is presumed to know the law. He is bound to know the husband's alleged title; and in this case it is of record through deed to the wife. The question of ownership is an open one, and he is put on his guard and bound to inquire. If he neglect to inquire, he takes the risk and must abide the result. He may collude with a knavish husband to cheat the wife, or he may shut his eyes and purchase in a blind stupidity, and call it good faith. In neither case will the law aid him to deprive the wife of that which the same law confirms to her. Vigilantibus non., etc.

Mr. Justice Story, (1 Story's Eq. Ju., Sec. 403,) says: "It is uniformly held that the registration of a conveyance operates as constructive notice to all subsequent purchasers of any estate legal or equitable in the same property."

And in section 400: "Whatever is sufficient to put a party upon inquiry (that is, whatever has a reasonable certainty as to time, place, circumstances, and persons) is in equity held to be good notice to bind him."

Here plaintiff had notice of this deed by the record. It gives time, (during the marital relation,) circumstances, (the payment of the consideration by some one,) and persons, a married woman and her husband. He should have inquired.

Opinion of the Court.

In confirmation of these views we refer to the following cases, some of which are cited with approval in Smith v. Smith, 1 Texas, 354; Pitch v. Willard, 7 Texas, 13; Ward v. Wheeler, 7 Texas, 6; Love v. Robertson, 8 Texas, 242.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

On the 13th of November, 1856, the premises described in the complaint, for a consideration expressed in the deed of $3,000, were conveyed by one George W. Brown to the defendant, Jane E. Fuller, who was then the wife of Silas Fuller. The purchase money was paid out of funds belonging to the separate estate of Mrs. Fuller. On the third day of November, 1859, Silas Fuller, at that time the husband of defendant, Jane E. Fuller (but who was very soon afterward separated from her by a decree of divorce), executed a conveyance of said premises to L. L. Lawrence. Said Lawrence, on the 11th of August, 1860, conveyed to defendant Summers. These deeds were regularly acknowledged and recorded. Both Lawrence and Summers took their respective conveyances with actual knowledge of the fact that the consideration of the conveyance from Brown to defendant, Jane E. Fuller, was paid out of the separate estate of Mrs. Fuller. On the 15th of June, 1861, defendant, Summers, executed the mortgage in suit to one Alexander G. Ramsdell, to secure the note set out in the complaint, which note and mortgage were afterward assigned to plaintiff. There is nothing, other than the record of the deed from Brown to Jane E. Fuller, to show that plaintiff, or his assignor, the mortgagee in said mortgage, had notice at the time of the execution and assignment respectively of said mortgage, that Mrs. Fuller claimed the land, or that the purchase money was paid to Brown out of her separate estate. Subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, the defendant, Jane E. Fuller, in an action instituted for that purpose against defendant, Summers, recovered the premises in question. Plaintiff brought this action to foreclose the said mortgage, making Mrs. Fuller a party defendant.

Opinion of the Court.

The defendant, Jane E. Fuller, in her answer, set up her title as aforesaid, alleging plaintiff's mortgage to be a cloud upon it, and asking, as affirmative relief, that the said mortgage be declared null and void as against her, and that the same be set aside, and be removed as a cloud on her title to said premises. The facts having been found upon the trial as herein stated, a judgment was entered in accordance with the prayer of the answer of defendant, Jane E. Fuller; and from that portion of the judgment this appeal is taken.

Conceding Mrs. Fuller to have a valid title as against the plaintiff's mortgage, there can be no doubt that the mortgage is a cloud upon it, which will be removed, within the principle of the case of Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 130, and numerous other cases. Property purchased during coverture with funds which constitute a part of the separate estate of the wife, will also be her separate estate. Such a transaction would only be changing the form of the property, which is already held as separate estate, without in any degree affecting its character as separate property.

In Houston v. Curl, 8 Texas, 242, the Court say: "It is the settled doctrine and law that property purchased during the marriage, whether the conveyance be made to the husband or wife separately, or to them jointly, is presumed to belong to the community. This presumption may be rebutted by clear and satisfactory proof that the purchase was made with the separate funds of either husband or wife—in which case it remains the separate property of the party whose money was employed in the acquisition." (See, also, Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 252.)

The power to change the form of the investment, without impairing the right of the wife, is absolutely essential to the full beneficial enjoyment of her separate estate.

A presumption arises from a conveyance to a married woman upon a money consideration that the property conveyed is common property. But this is only a presumption of law arising from the fact, that a purchase has been made during coverture, and the real character of the transaction may be shown. It is much easier for the party purchasing land to show affirmatively, that the funds used are separate property of the party purchasing, than for others interested to show negatively that they were not. The evidence is peculiarly within the knowledge and control of such party. For these and other reasons, when the fact is required to be proved, the law throws the burden of identifying the funds as a part of the separate estate upon the party claiming the benefit of such estate.

In this case it was shown to the satisfaction of the Court, that the premises in question were purchased with funds belonging to the separate estate of the wife. They became, therefore, in fact, her separate property. The conveyance was upon its face to the wife. The apparent record title was in her, and not in her husband, Silas Fuller. The deed is sufficient in law to convey a title to the wife, but whether it did, in fact, convey an estate in common, or a separate estate, manifestly depended upon a fact dehors the deed. Ostensibly the intent was to vest the title in the grantee named, Jane E. Fuller. It did not appear on the face of the deed that the grantee was a married woman—or that, being a married woman, the consideration was paid out of her separate estate. The deed, then, so far as shown on its face, might have conveyed a title absolute to a feme sole; a separate estate to a feme covert; or an estate in common to husband and wife. Upon the best view for plaintiff, the deed upon its face was equivocal. But it afforded to all persons seeking to acquire title under it a clue to the title, which they were bound to pursue, or suffer the consequences of their laches. The grantee is a woman. The presumption of law is that she is sole, and prima facie a conveyance from her would pass the title. But she may be married, and her deed may not pass the title. The fact as to whether she is married or single, all parties dealing with the land must ascertain, or omit to do so at their peril. So, also, if a grantee of a conveyance for a money consideration is a married woman at the date of the conveyance, prima facie a conveyance by the husband in his own name, of the land so conveyed to the wife, will be presumed to pass the title; but in fact it may not, for the reason that the land may still be the separate property of the wife, which he has no power to convey. And in such cases, as in the case last mentioned, all parties claiming title through the husband to lands, the title to which never stood in his name, must ascertain, at their peril, whether he did in fact have the power to convey.

The record title in this case was notice to all the world, that the land in dispute might be the separate property of Mrs. Fuller, and every party dealing with it, did so at his peril. The plaintiff was by the record put upon inquiry as to the true condition of the title. The grantee upon the record was capable of taking the land, and was a different person from the one from whom the plaintiff derives his title. If the plaintiff did not avail himself of the means afforded by the record to ascertain the true state of the title, it is his own fault, and he cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser. He stands in no better position than he would had he taken his mortgage from Fuller himself. We think the judgment fully supported by the pleadings and the facts found.

It is therefore affirmed.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. WM. C. STRATTON v. GEORGE OULTON, CONTROLLER OF STATE.

SALARY OF AN OFFICE.—The salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title of the office, and not to its occupation and exercise.

RIGHT OF OFFICER TO HOLD OVER.—The State Librarian holds over his office, after the expiration of his term, and until the election and qualification of his successor, by title, notwithstanding the law creating the office contains no provision authorizing him to do so.

SAME.—The above rule applies to civil functionaries whose duties consist in the safe keeping and current management of public property committed to their care and custody.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

This proceeding was commenced in the Supreme Court. The writ of mandate was applied for on affidavit and notice. The following are copies of the same:

Statement of Facts.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, }
County of Sacramento. } ss.

William C. Stratton, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That during the twelfth session of the Legislature of this State, an Act was passed, "prescribing rules for the government of the State Library." Said Act was approved by the Governor on the eighth day of March, A. D. 1861.

The first section of said Act provides that "the State Library shall be under the direction and control of a Board of Trustees, to consist of five members, as herein provided. The Governor and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall be ex officio members of the Board. J. R. McConnell, J. W. Winans, and S. Heydenfeldt, are hereby appointed members of the Board."

The fifth section provides that "the Board of Trustees shall have power to appoint a Librarian."

The seventh section provides, "that the Librarian appointed by the Trustees shall hold his office for the term of four years, and before entering upon the duties of his office he shall make and execute his bond to the State of California in the penal sum of three thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Said bond shall be approved by the Governor, and shall be by him deposited in the office of the Secretary of State."

The sixth section provides, that "the Librarian shall receive for his salary the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars per annum. He may at any time be removed by consent of all the members of the Board of Trustees."

The seventeenth section provides, "this Act shall take effect from and after its passage."

That the Board of Trustees mentioned in the first section of the Act, held a meeting in the State Library rooms, on the 16th day of March, A. D. 1861, and at the meeting there held, this deponent was appointed Librarian by the said Board of Trustees for the term of four years, and this deponent executed his bond, and took the oath of office as required by law, and on the 17th day of March, A. D. 1861, he entered upon the duties of the office of Librarian, and has continued to discharge the duties of said office continuously to the present time.

This deponent further sheweth, that on the 21st day of March, A. D. 1864, the Legislature passed an Act (which was approved on the day and year aforesaid) entitled: "An Act to amend an Act entitled an Act prescribing rules for the government of the State Library, approved March eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one," which amends the first section of the Act of March 8th, A. D. 1861, and provides, that "the State Library shall be under the direction and control of a Board of Trustees, to consist of five members, as herein provided. The Governor and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall be ex officio members of the Board; J. F. Morse, J. W. Winans, and H. W. Harkness, are hereby appointed members of the Board."

That on or before the 30th day of December, A. D. 1864, the Governor appointed B. B. Redding a Trustee of the State Library to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of J. F. Morse.

That on the 8th day of March, A. D. 1865, the Board of Trustees held a meeting for the purpose of electing or appointing a Librarian. There were present at said meeting, B. B. Redding, J. W. Winans, H. W. Harkness, and F. F. Low, the Governor of the State. The Board proceeded to vote for a Librarian; H. W. Harkness and J. W. Winans voted for this deponent, B. B. Redding and F. F. Low voted for J. L. Perkins.

That F. F. Low has exercised the office of Governor continuously for one year last past, and was on the said 8th day of March, and is still exercising the office of Governor, and that by section twelve of Article Five of the Constitution of this State, he is prohibited from holding the office of Trustee of the State Library while exercising the office of Governor, and by thus being incompetent to hold the office of Trustee of the State Library, his action as such and vote for Librarian was void, and this deponent having received a majority of the votes of the legal Trustees of the Library, was, as he is advised and believes, duly appointed Librarian for the term of four years from the 17th day of March, A. D. 1865.

That this deponent executed his bond as required by law, which was presented to the Governor for his approval on the 16th day of March, A. D. 1865, and the Governor received and retained the same without objecting to its sufficiency, until the 30th day of March, A. D. 1865, when this deponent received a notice from the Governor. Said notice was dated March 28th, 1865, and informed this deponent that the Governor returned said bond without his approval, and in the following words declined to do so: "As you have not been re-elected by the Board of Trustees, I cannot recognize you as Librarian, and therefore cannot approve your bond."

That this deponent took the oath of office and entered upon and has discharged the duties of Librarian from the said 17th day of March, A. D. 1865, to the present time.

That no other person has claimed the office of Librarian, and this deponent is justly entitled by virtue of his appointment as aforesaid, and the performance of the duties of the office, to the salary allowed the Librarian by law.

That the sum now due this deponent as Librarian, is one hundred dollars and eighty cents, for salary from the 17th day of March, A. D. 1865, to the 31st day of March, A. D. 1865.

That the Legislature of the State passed an Act which was approved by the Governor on the 4th day of April, A. D. 1864, entitled "An Act making appropriations for the support of the civil government of this State for the sixteenth and seventeenth fiscal years, commencing on the first day of July, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and ending on the thirtieth day of June, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-six."

Section first of said Act appropriates the sum of five thousand dollars out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the salary of the State Librarian, from the 1st day of July, A. D. 1864, to the 30th day of June, A. D. 1866.

That the salaries of officers of State are by law due and

Statement of Facts.

payable on the last day of each month, and it is the duty of the Controller to draw his warrant for the same on the last day of each month. (Laws, 1863, p. 235.)

And this deponent further says, that on the last day of March, A. D. 1865, he demanded of George Oulton, Controller of State, that he, said Controller, should draw his warrant on the Treasurer of State in favor of this deponent, for the sum of one hundred dollars and eighty cents, the amount due this deponent for his salary as Librarian from the 17th to the last day of March, A. D. 1865.

And this deponent further says, that on said last day of March, when the said demand was made upon the said Controller, there was a large amount of money in the State Treasury not otherwise appropriated by law, out of which the statute authorizes the appropriation in question to be made, and subject to be applied to the payment of the warrant demanded of the Controller by this deponent; but the said Controller, in violation of the clear legal rights of this deponent, as this deponent is advised and believes, and of his, the said Controller's plain duty in the premises, unjustly refused and still refuses to draw said warrant for said sum or any part thereof.

And this deponent says further, that he is advised and believes that for the wrongful refusal of the said Controller to draw the said warrant, there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

Therefore, plaintiff prays that the above named George Oulton, Controller, the defendant in this action, may appear in this Court, and answer this complaint, and show why a peremptory writ of mandamus shall not issue, requiring him to draw his warrant on the Treasurer of State in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of one hundred dollars and eighty cents, for this plaintiff's salary as Librarian, from March 17th to March 31st, A. D. 1865, and that the Court will award a writ of mandate requiring and commanding said Oulton, Controller aforesaid, to issue said warrant.

WILLIAM C. STRATTON.

Argument for Relator.

To the Honorable George Oulton, Controller of the State of California:

SIR:— You will please take notice that on Tuesday, the 11th day of April, A. D. 1865, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, I shall apply to the Supreme Court of the State of California to issue a peremptory mandamus commanding you, that, as Controller of the State of California, you do forthwith draw your warrant on the Treasurer of the said State, in favor of William C. Stratton, for the sum of one hundred dollars and eighty cents, due from the State of California to said Stratton, for his salary as State Librarian, from the 17th to the 31st days of March, A. D. 1865.

The said application will be founded upon the affidavit of William C. Stratton, a copy of which affidavit is herewith served.

WILLIAM C. STRATTON.

The defendant demurred to the complaint. The case was submitted on complaint and demurrer.

Wm. C. Stratton, in pro. per., for the Relator.

It is admitted that in most cases an information in the nature of a quo warranto is the proper proceeding to try the title to an office; but in case of an application for a writ of mandamus by an officer to compel the Controller to draw his warrant, if the refusal be on the grounds that the person claiming the salary is not an officer, "the title to the office is directly in issue and is the only material fact in the case." (People v. Tieman, 30 Barb. 196.)

The plaintiff here desires to institute no direct proceedings for the purpose of testing the right of Governor Low to hold the office of Trustee of the State Library. But deeming himself the duly qualified State Librarian, he invokes the power of the Court for the purpose of compelling the Controller to draw the warrant for his salary.

If Stratton was not elected Librarian on the 8th of March, 1865, although his former term expired on the sixteenth of the same month, he must continue to hold the office until the Trustees appoint a Librarian to take charge of the office. (McCall v. Byram Manufacturing Co., 6 Conn. 428; Spencer v. Champion, 9 Conn. 536; Bethany v. Sperry, 10 Conn. 200.)

He is not a usurper, as his original possession was by authority of a legal appointment. The possession of the office of Librarian is possession of the books and property of the library, for which he is responsible. He cannot resign, nor can he lawfully abandon the office, but must continue to hold possession until he can deliver it up to some person legally appointed Librarian by the Trustees.

The Act provides that the Librarian appointed by the Trustees shall hold his office for the term of four years. The Act does not provide that the Librarian shall hold his office until his successor is appointed; but if the Trustees, who can act at any time, and who have the direction and control of the library, refuse to appoint a successor, and by such refusal compel the incumbent to continue in charge of the office, it is a reasonable construction that he is not a usurper, but is legally holding over as Librarian, and is entitled to the salary allowed the Librarian by law.

The theory of the Constitution and statute law is that officers must hold over until their successors are qualified to relieve them; and it certainly could not have been the intention that so important an institution as the State Library should remain without any person to take charge of it.

The Act provides that the Librarian may at any time be removed by consent of all the members of the Board; and Stratton, after being once duly appointed, must be considered the legal incumbent by consent of the appointing power, so long as the Trustees neither appoint another person nor remove him, as provided by law.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for Defendant.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

Stratton, the applicant in this proceeding, prays the Court that a peremptory writ of mandamus may be awarded, requiring Oulton, the State Controller, to issue his warrant on the Treasurer for the sum of one hundred dollars and eighty cents, due for the applicant's salary as State Librarian, from the 17th to the 31st days of March, 1865.

Stratton was duly appointed State Librarian in March, 1861, and his term of office, assuming that he could under no circumstances hold it more than four years by virtue of that appointment, expired on the 16th of March, 1865.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 8th of March, 1865, for the purpose of electing a Librarian, three of the five Trustees named in the Act of 1864 and the successor of another Trustee named therein, were present. Two of the four, Winans and Harkness, voted for Stratton, and the other two, Governor Low and Redding, voted for Perkins.

Since the 16th of March, Stratton has had the custody of the library, and has performed all the duties connected with the office of State Librarian.

The applicant claims that he is Librarian de jure. He could do no less, for the salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title to the office and not to its occupation and exercise. (People ex rel. Dorsey v. Smyth, County Auditor, 28 Cal. 21.) In aid of his alleged right to the office of Librarian, the applicant insists, first, that he was elected to the office at the meeting of the Trustees on the 8th of March—inasmuch as the vote of the Governor against him was a nullity, the Governor having, as is claimed, no power to cast a vote in view of the twelfth section of the Fifth Article of the Constitution; and if not so elected, then the applicant further insists, that he holds the office by title until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified. Both of these propositions are controverted by the respondent; and, for the purposes of this decision, the first of the two may be considered as fallacious. This not only narrows the ground covered by the applicant in argument, but does away with the objection stated by the respondent, that the validity of the vote cast by the Governor cannot be gone into in this proceeding. As thus disburdened, the case presents but a single question: Does the applicant hold over under his appointment in 1861 in the absence of a statute provision authorizing him to do so?

In the case of Foul v. Prowse, Mayor of Truro, 1 Strange, 625, it appeared that the Mayor was to be chosen out of the Aldermen, who were themselves to be elected annually. The Aldermen present at and participating in the election of the plaintiff had been in office several years, and none of them had been re-elected within a year. On a bill of exceptions, the Court was of the opinion that the election of the plaintiff was void for want of an annual election of the Aldermen. But upon error in the Exchequer Chamber, and two solemn arguments, the judgment was reversed; and it was held "that the words 'to be annually elected' were only directory, and that an annual election of Aldermen was not necessary to make an election of Mayor in their presence good; and King, C. J., de C. B., who delivered the opinion of the Court, compared it to the case of a Constable and other annual officers who are good officers after the year is out and until another is elected and sworn. The reversal was affirmed in Parliament."

In The Queen v. The Corporation of Dunham, 10 Mod. 146, it was considered that "a Town Clerk, to be elected annually, would continue Town Clerk until the election of his successor."

In the Anonymous Case, 12 Mod. 256, it is said "a Constable is not discharged until his successor is appointed and sworn in; because the parish cannot be without an officer."

It was held in McCall v. Byram Manufacturing Company, 6 Conn. 427, Mr. Chief Justice Hosmer delivering the opinion, "that the Secretary of a corporation appointed in January, 1823, for the ensuing year, and continuing to act as such after the year had expired, was, by virtue of the legal construction of his appointment, Secretary de jure." That "it was a well settled principle that an annual officer continues until superseded by the appointment of another in his place. The time when such an appointment is to be made is considered as directory and not imperative." It was admitted that "a statute or by-law, or even an appointment, might be so restrictive, by the expression or implication of a negative, as to terminate an annual office at the end of the year. But the election to an office for a year has never been considered of this description. Such are the appointments to town offices; but the persons appointed continue indefinitely until the incumbent's place is supplied."

In Spencer v. Champion, 9 Conn. 536, it appeared that the charter of a manufacturing company, under which the plaintiff claimed by levy of execution, provided that the affairs of the corporation should be managed by a Board of Directors who should hold their offices for one year and should be annually elected. The question was whether Directors, elected under the charter, could hold over de jure; and it was held that "an annual officer, there being no restrictive provision in his appointment, holds his office until the appointment of another in his place."

In Bethany v. Sperry, 10 Conn. 200, the whole subject was learnedly reviewed on principle and authority, and the doctrine of the above cases was reaffirmed. In People v. Runkle, 9 John. 148, the Court acquiesced in the English decisions cited, as correct expositions of the rule of the common law; and that conclusion received the sanction of Chancellor Kent in Slee v. Bloom, 5 J. Ch. 377. And in his Commentaries (Vol. 2, p. 295), the learned author, giving his conclusions as a jurist, considers "the sounder and better doctrine to be, that where the members of a corporation are to be annually elected, the words are only directory, and do not take away the power incident to the corporation to elect afterwards." And it was held in Wier v. Bush, 4 Litt. 434, that the words would be regarded as directory, unless the implication was displaced by "negative expressions."

The Attorney-General cites The People ex rel. Morton v. Tiesman, 30 Barb. 193, as being opposed to these decisions. But the point now in question did not arise in that case; for it appeared that the Act under which the relator was appointed City Inspector had been repealed, and therefore it was unnecessary to inquire whether the relator would have held over or not if the Act had not been repealed. The opinion, in so far as it bears upon the question, is obiter dictum, and cannot be considered as reversing the rule in New York as established by The People v. Runkle and Slee v. Bloom. It is suggested in the opinion in 30 Barbour that the instances in which officers have been held to hold over by right until the appointment and induction of their successors, have been limited to officers and agents of private corporations or to subordinate agents and officers of municipal corporations. But inasmuch as Morton was a subordinate officer of a municipal corporation, and inasmuch as the Court, or, rather, the Judge who wrote the opinion, held, nevertheless, that he would not have held over on any known principle of common law in the event the Act creating the office of Inspector had been on foot, it follows that the cases, both at home and abroad, establishing the contrary to be the rule, were not considered as correct expositions of the common law. But those decisions nowhere limit the operation of the rule to the subordinate or inferior officers of municipal corporations; and it is conceived that a distinction that should make the operation of the rule to depend upon official grade could be referred to no intelligible principle. The case cited from the 12th Mod. illustrates the ground of the rule. (A Constable holds over, not for the reason that he is a subordinate officer, but "because a parish cannot be without an officer.") By this it is not meant that a parish when it loses its Constable ceases to be a parish, for that is not true, as matter of law (5 Com. Dig. 180); but that a parish without a Constable would fail in one of the ends to which it is appointed. The ground of the rule then is public necessity; and if the public welfare would be endangered if subordinate officers in a municipal corporation could not hold over until their successors were appointed and qualified, a fortiori, would it be endangered if the chief officers were to be considered as out of office by limitation, before others were appointed to whom they could safely resign their trusts?

Officers of public corporations are themselves as public as the corporations to which they belong. Such corporations and all official positions in them, are created either directly or indirectly by the Government, and for public political purposes only. To say that a man is an officer of a public corporation is to say that he is a public officer in the largest sense. He may be limited in the exercise of his powers to a particular locality, but his position and powers are, in the matter of essential quality, as public as those of an officer of the highest station. And, therefore, should it be considered that the distinction stated in People v. Tieman, for the first time, was well taken, it may well be insisted that Stratton, as Librarian, is a "subordinate officer," or rather a mere ministerial agent of a public corporation of largest magnitude, charged, as such, with the custody and care of corporate property. Such, then, being the Librarian's character and relations, he holds over under the limitations put upon the common law rule in the case cited for the respondent; and, in addition to that, it is perfectly manifest that the office of State Librarian is within the principle upon which the rule of the common law proceeds.

If Stratton is not now in custody of the library by right, to whom does its custody rightfully belong? If he is not "bound to be constant in attendance upon the library during the hours it shall be directed to be kept open" (Stat. 1861, p. 46, Sec. 9), upon whom does that obligation rest? Who, if not he, is bound to act "as Secretary of the Board of Trustees and to keep a correct record of its proceedings?" Who, if not he, "is responsible for the safe-keeping of the books?" Section fourteen requires "that the library shall be kept open every day of the year, Sundays excepted, during such hours as the Trustees may direct." Who is at once authorized and bound to fulfil this command if Stratton is not? If he is a naked usurper, as is contended, then he does not rightfully control the approaches to the library—and if he enters it as Librarian it is only by usurpation of that character. If he holds the key lawfully, it is merely as depositary, having no powers and no duties with respect to it, except to keep it safely in his own possession until called upon by the Trustees or his successor to surrender it. On this view of the law we have not only a library without a Librarian, but a library suspended as to all the uses for which it was established; and not only are citizens barred of lawful access to it during the alleged interregnum, but the Governor also, and every officer of the Executive Department, and the Justices of the Supreme Court. All of which, in effect, comes to this: that the State has lost the right to use its own books die in diem, while the present condition of things shall continue to subsist.

The rule of the common law, as settled by the cases cited, conserves the public good by conserving the methods and instrumentalities by which alone public business can be transacted; while the opposite rule, when pushed to its consequences, might result in a suspension of business in every department of the public service. We do not decide, nor would we be understood as holding, that the rule of the common law would extend to members of the Legislature, or to judicial officers, or to the Executive. They may be without the mischiefs which the rule was intended to forestall. But as to the State Librarian, and other civil functionaries like him, the sum of whose duties consists in the safe keeping and current management of public property committed to their custody, they, in our judgment, are broadly within the rule and its reason. If Aldermen, whose duties are legislative in the main, are within it, a mere custodian and manager of a public library must be.

It is urged in the learned argument filed by the Attorney-General that, inasmuch as the Act of 1863, "concerning offices" (Stats. of 1863, p. 386,) provides that certain officers, some of whom hold by constitutional and others by statute tenure, shall hold until their successors are elected and qualified; and inasmuch as the Act creating the office of State

Opinion of the Court.

Librarian contains no such provision, the common law rule is constructively negated as to him.

The Acts are not in pari materia. The subject matter of the Act of 1863 is confined to the offices and officers therein named, and the subject matter of the Act of 1861 is made up of other and distinct offices and officers. If the office of Librarian and its tenure, had been included in the Act of 1863 as a portion of its subject matter, and a holding over in the matter of that office had been omitted, the maxim expressum facit cessare tacitum might have applied. But as between two detached and independent statutes without a common subject matter in any exact sense, the maxim has no application. The question, then, comes to this: Did the Legislature in passing the Act of 1861 negative the rule of the common law by omitting to restate it? Certainly not in the judgment of the tribunals by which the cases previously cited were determined, otherwise the very point decided could not have arisen. But the question was directly presented in Bethany v. Sperry, 10 Conn. 206, already cited, and it was held that the fact that it was expressly provided that the society clerks should hold over, while the Act was silent in that particular as to the other society officers did not necessarily argue that a holding over by them was intended to be forbidden. (Smith's Com. 655.) There the legislation as to the clerk and the other society officers was not only in the same Act but in one and the same section.

We consider the constitutional provision that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Attorney-General and Surveyor-General, shall hold their offices until their successors are respectively elected and qualified, as a most impressive recognition of the policy upon which the rule of the common law proceeds; and the Legislature has given the largest countenance to it, by the Act of 1863, and by other Acts relating to civil officers.

TRANSCRIPT ON APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING A NEW TRIAL.—On appeal from an order denying a new trial, the appellant is only required to furnish the appellate Court with copies of the notice of appeal, order appealed from, and of the papers used on the hearing of the motion for new trial in the Court below.

UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.—The appellant must show that the required undertaking on appeal has been given. The fact may be shown, either by introducing a copy of the undertaking into the transcript, or by stating in the transcript that an undertaking in due form was filed within the time prescribed.

MOTION TO DISMISS AN APPEAL.—On motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that an undertaking on appeal is not shown by the transcript to have been filed, the appellant may suggest a diminution of the record, and obtain an order directing the Clerk of the Court below to certify a copy of the undertaking to the appellate Court.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The transcript in this case contained a copy of the pleadings, findings of fact of the Court below, and its conclusions of law, the notice of motion for new trial, statement, order denying a new trial, and notice of appeal. Defendants recovered judgment in the Court below, and plaintiffs appealed.

Shafter & Gould, for Appellants.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

Respondents move to dismiss the appeal on the following

grounds: Firstly—The transcript does not contain a copy of the judgment. The appeal is not from the judgment, but from the order denying a new trial. On appeal from an order, it is only required that the “appellant shall furnish the Court with a copy of the notice of appeal, * * * order appealed from, and a copy of the papers used on the hearing in the Court below.” (Practice Act, Sec. 346.) These papers are contained in the transcript. Secondly—It does not appear in the transcript that any undertaking has ever been filed. “As no appeal is effectual for any purpose without an undertaking, the appellant must show affirmatively that the required undertaking has been given.” (Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 134; Franklin v. Reiner, ib. 340.) The fact may be shown either by introducing a copy of the undertaking into the transcript, or by stating in the transcript that an undertaking in due form was filed within the time prescribed. (Ib.)

The appellant suggested a diminution of the record in this respect, and by way of counter motion asked an order directing the Clerk of the District Court to certify a copy of the undertaking on file to this Court, and since the submission of the motion to dismiss, the appellant has transmitted to this Court a certified copy of an undertaking on appeal in due form.

We think the appellant should be permitted to supply the defect in the record.

Ordered, that the certified copy of the undertaking on appeal transmitted to this Court be filed by the Clerk, and that the motion to dismiss be denied, and that respondents recover the costs of their motion.

them put on the land after the date of the lease, unless the lessor should pay for the same, and that the value of the same should be ascertained by two persons, one appointed by the plaintiff, and one by the defendant, and in case of a disagreement, a third by the two, and that the lessor should not take possession except on payment of the value of the improvements, and that he should give the lessees thirty days notice of his intention to take possession of the premises. Held, that the leasehold became determined by the lessor's thirty days' notice to quit, and his offer to perform on his part and his tender of the full value of the improvements. Held, further, that an appointment by the lessor of one appraiser and notice of the same to the lessees, and their failure for thirty days thereafter to appoint another, gave the lessor the right to appoint two appraisers, although the lease did not provide within what time the lessees should appoint an appraiser, nor that the lessor might appoint both. Held, further, that a demand for rent due up to a day before the expiration of the thirty days named in the notice did not keep on foot the relation of landlord and tenant after the expiration of said thirty days.

DENIAL OF TENANCY BY TENANT.—If a tenant denies the relation of landlord and tenant, and refuses to pay rent, he cannot afterwards revive that relation by offering to pay rent.

APPEAL from the County Court, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Henry H. Hartley, for Appellants.

P. L. Edwards, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The parties entered into an agreement on the 22d of October, 1860, by which the plaintiff leased to the defendants certain premises at a certain rent reserved, for the term of one year from the date thereof, with the privilege to the defendants of a renewal of the lease for one year longer on the same conditions, with the right to remove from the premises at the expiration of the term of the leasehold all the buildings and improvements before then erected thereon, unless the plaintiff should pay for the same—and it was further provided by the agreement that the plaintiff should not enter and take possession of the premises at the expiration of the second year, except on payment to the defendants of the value of all the improvements they might put or cause to be put on the premises after the date of the lease. It was stipulated that the value of such improvements should be determined by two persons, one of whom should be nominated by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant, and in case of the disagreement of the persons so named, they were to select a third. The agreement of two of the three persons so selected, it was provided, should be binding on the parties. It was further agreed that the plaintiff should give to the defendants at least thirty days notice of his intention to take possession of the premises at the expiration of the second year, and on failure to do so, the defendants were at liberty to renew the lease until the foregoing conditions should be fully complied with by the plaintiff.

Sometime in the year 1863, after the 20th of May, but at what particular time the record does not show, the plaintiff commenced an action in a Justice's Court, under the Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers, for the purpose of obtaining possession of the demised premises. The complaint contains allegations of the performance of the conditions entitling him to the possession of the premises and of a refusal of the defendants to surrender the possession of the same, according to the agreement on their part so to do. The defendants controverted the material averments of the complaint. The cause was tried before the Justice and a jury, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The defendants appealed to the County Court, and judgment was again rendered for the plaintiff. The defendants then moved for a new trial, which was denied, and from the judgment and order an appeal was taken to this Court.

From the record it appears that on the 10th of April, 1863, the plaintiff gave to the defendants a notice in writing informing them that the lease had expired, according to its terms, and demanding that they surrender to him possession of the premises within thirty days thereafter. That he declined purchasing or paying for any improvements put on the premises prior to the date of the lease, and requiring them to remove the same within thirty days. That he had selected and appointed a certain person as referee to ascertain and value the improve ments put on the premises by them since the date of the lease, and requesting them to select and appoint a referee for the like purpose, to act in conjunction with the one appointed by him. That he was ready and offered to pay for the improvements whatever amount the referees might determine to be just, and also to comply in all respects on his part with the terms and conditions of the agreement.

It appeared in evidence, also, that defendant Jones stated to plaintiff in February or March, 1863, upon the plaintiff's demanding of him the rent then due, that the lease terminated on the 22d of October, 1862; that he did not hold under the lease, and would not pay any more rent. On the 6th of April, 1863, the plaintiff addressed a letter to the defendants requesting them to pay to Joseph Hull the amount of rent due up to the 22d of that month. This letter was delivered by Hull to the defendant Sheriff, who took it away with him without saying whether he would pay it or not. On the 22d of April the defendants tendered to the plaintiff the amount then due, which the plaintiff refused to receive, and on the 18th or 19th of May following the defendants again tendered to plaintiff the rent due and also a month's rent in advance, which the plaintiff refused to accept. The sum of money first tendered was paid into Court for the plaintiff when the defendants' answer was filed, and there remained at the time of the trial, subject to the order of the plaintiff.

The defendants failing and refusing to appoint a referee to ascertain and appraise the value of the improvements made on the premises after the date of the lease, two persons selected by the plaintiff for the purpose appraised and reported the value of such improvements at a certain sum, which one of the appraisers testified was their full value. The plaintiff testified he was willing to pay the amount fixed by these appraisers, and had tendered the same to the defendants, though at the time of the tender he thought, and still was of opinion, it was more than the improvements were worth.

The second section of the Act referred to provides that any Justice of the Peace shall have authority to inquire as therein-

after directed, as well against those who make unlawful or forcible entry into lands, tenements or other possessions, and detain the same as against those who, having lawful and peaceful entry into lands, tenements or other possessions, unlawfully detain the same; and that if it be found, upon such inquiry, that an unlawful or forcible entry hath been made, and that the said lands, tenements or other possessions, after a lawful entry, are held unlawfully, then such Justice shall cause the party complaining to have restitution thereof. The thirteenth section of the same Act provides, among other things, that when any person or persons shall hold over any lands, tenements or other possessions after the termination of the time for which they are leased to him or them, if the lessor shall make demand in writing of the tenant or tenants to deliver to him the possession of the demised premises, and if the tenant or tenants shall refuse or neglect for the space of three days after the demand to quit the possession, then upon complaint to any Justice of the Peace of the proper county the Justice shall proceed to hear, try and determine the same in the same manner as in other cases provided for in the Act, but shall impose no fine.

In this case the leasehold became determined by the lessor's thirty days notice to quit, and his offer and tender of performance on his part of the terms and conditions contained in the agreement, on his part to be performed and fulfilled, and his tender of the full value of the improvements for which he had contracted to pay the defendants. The agreement between the parties prescribes the mode by which the value of the improvements for which the plaintiff contracted to pay should be ascertained. But it is argued, on behalf of the defendants, that it is not provided within what time this should be done, nor that the failure of either of the parties to nominate a referee or appraiser for ascertaining such value should give the other the right to go on and select both appraisers. It may be admitted that the contract between the parties does not so provide in terms, but it does not, therefore, follow that either of the parties could defeat the object of their stipulation for all time, nor that the contumacious refusal by one of the parties to appoint an appraiser would keep the lease on foot forever. The object of the parties was, in the first place, to secure to the lessees thirty days within which to surrender the premises to the lessor, and, in the second place, to ascertain the amount which the lessor should pay the lessees for the improvements which they had placed on the premises after the date of the lease. That the plaintiff offered and tendered to the defendants the full value of such improvements is in evidence, and does not, in fact, seem to be disputed. What more could the plaintiff have done? He could not compel the defendants to select an appraiser on their part to determine with one chosen by plaintiff the value of these improvements, nor could a Court of equity have compelled them to do so, had suit been brought for the purpose, nor could the plaintiff have had a mandamus for such purpose. The plaintiff did all that he could or was bound to do in the premises, and his offer to make payment and his readiness so to do at the time of the trial was all that could justly be required of him. The defendants cannot be permitted to say that the relation of landlord and tenant was still subsisting between the parties at the time the action was brought. They had denied the relation previously and refused for a time to pay the rent due. They cannot for one purpose say they are tenants, and for another say they are not. They were tenants until the lease was determined by the notice of thirty days to surrender, and the demand for rent up to the 22d of April could not operate to keep on foot the relation of landlord and tenants after the expiration of the thirty days specified in the notice, because the thirty days expired after the term for which rent was demanded. We deem it unnecessary to pursue the subject further. We think substantial justice was done to the parties by the Court below and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

BERNARD STOUT AND JOSEPH S. SHUSTER v. OLIVER C. COFFIN.

VARIANCE BETWEEN COMPLAINT AND PROOF.—The rule that the allegata and probata must correspond is not abrogated by the Civil Practice Act. The plaintiff must prove his contract as alleged in his complaint, or he is not entitled to recover.

ALLEGATA AND PROBATA TO CORRESPOND.—If the complaint charges that the defendant received goods as a common carrier and warehouseman, to be stored by him, and by the next boat to be by him shipped and carried and conveyed to the place of destination, and to be by him there safely delivered to the plaintiffs, proof that defendant received the goods in his warehouse as bailee, and shipped them according to plaintiffs' directions, does not entitle plaintiffs to recover.

SAME.—In such case plaintiffs cannot recover without proof that the defendant contracted to convey the goods.

APPEAL from the District Court, City and County of San Francisco.

Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

S. F. & J. Reynolds, for Appellant.

Crockett & Whiting, for Respondents.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The plaintiffs sue to recover the value of goods which they allege they delivered to the defendant, to be shipped to the County of Fresno, and which the defendant received as a "common carrier, warehouseman and forwarding merchant," to be safely and securely taken, stored and kept by him, "and by the boat next departing from the said Town of Martinez to be safely and securely taken and conveyed, or caused to be conveyed by the said defendant, for the said plaintiffs from the said Town of Martinez to the County of Fresno, in the State aforesaid, and then and there, at the said County of Fresno, to be safely and securely delivered by the defendant, his servant or agents, to the said plaintiffs, for a certain reward, to be paid by the said plaintiffs to the said defendant therefor."

Opinion of the Court.

The breach alleged, is that the defendant neglected and refused to store and safely keep the goods, and neglected and refused to convey, or cause to be conveyed, the goods from Martinez to Fresno County, or there to be delivered to the plaintiffs, but wrongfully and negligently permitted them to be taken and carried away by persons to the plaintiffs unknown, and neglects and refuses to deliver them to the plaintiffs.

The defendant denies that he was a warehouseman or forwarding merchant, or that he was a common carrier, except by his ferryboat between Martinez and Benicia, and denies all the allegations of the complaint respecting the contract and his receipt of the goods, and denies that he permitted them to be taken or carried away, because he says he never had the charge or custody of the goods.

The defendant requested the Court to give the following instruction to the jury: "Before the jury can rightfully render a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs against the defendant, it must be found and determined from the evidence that defendant contracted with plaintiffs to carry, or cause to be carried, the goods mentioned in the complaint, from Martinez in Contra Costa County, to the County of Fresno." The Court refused the instruction, and the defendant excepted, and now assigns the refusal as error.

The words "carry or cause to be carried" employed in the instruction, are of similar import to the words "conveyed or caused to be conveyed" as used in the complaint. The respondents object to the instruction, on the ground that it assumes that it was incumbent on them to prove, that the defendant undertook to transport the goods from Martinez to Fresno, and say that the gist of the action is that the defendant received the goods as a bailee for shipment to a specified place, instead of which he allowed them to be taken away and lost. One of the material issues of fact raised by the pleadings, is whether the plaintiffs and defendant entered into the contract mentioned in the complaint; and a material and substantial portion of the contract was, that the goods were to be "taken and conveyed or caused to be conveyed by the said defendant" from Martinez to Fresno County. There can be no doubt that the complaint states a contract to convey, and this is the more apparent when the allegations in that respect are read in connection with the allegation that the goods were "to be safely and securely delivered by the defendant, his servant or agents, to the plaintiffs" at Fresno, and that the defendant was a common carrier. The gist of the action is that the defendant lost the goods he received under contract not only to ship them, but also to carry or convey them to their destination. The instruction is but an expression of the familiar rule of evidence that the plaintiffs must prove the contract as alleged in their complaint, otherwise they are not entitled to recover in the action. (1 Phil. Ev., C. H. and E. Notes, 864, Note 240.) Proof that the defendant was to convey the goods, is as essential to maintain the action as proof that he received or was to deliver the goods — in fact, without such proof the contract alleged would be a materially different one from that proven. The rule that the probata must correspond with the allegata is not abrogated by the Practice Act. The case affords a good illustration of the propriety and necessity of the rule that the proof must correspond with the substantial allegations of the pleadings. The evidence tends to prove that the goods were shipped according to the plaintiffs' directions on a steamer, and were lost while in charge of the persons who were conveying them, and if the evidence had, in the opinion of the jury, amounted to proof of those facts, no recovery could be had against the defendant for the loss of the goods, without proof that he contracted to convey them.

The consequences of a variance between the averments in a pleading and the proof are the same under our system of practice as at common law, except that they may be, to a great extent, obviated by amendments to the pleadings, which are allowed with great liberality. The allegations made in setting out the contract, that the defendant undertook to convey, or caused to be conveyed, the goods to their destination, are not of the class that are usually denominated impertinent, and which may be struck out as surplusage, and of which proof is not required, but they form the very substance of the contract, and must be proved. (1 Phil. Ev., C. H. and E. Notes, 845, and Note 240.)

Opinion of Sanderson, C. J., concurring specially.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Mr. Justice CURREY, having been of counsel, did not sit in this case.

SANDERSON, C. J., concurring specially.

Excessive damages was one of the grounds upon which a new trial was claimed in this case. The true measure of the damages was the value of the goods and lawful interest thereon. The value of the goods, according to the allegations of the complaint and the evidence (in which there is no conflict) was three hundred and fifty-five dollars. Lawful interest upon that sum, from the time at which the goods were lost up to the date of the trial is ninety-two dollars and forty-five cents (if I have made no error in the computation,) making the true amount which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, if at all, four hundred and forty-seven dollars and forty-five cents. Yet the jury found a verdict for five hundred and fifty dollars, which was too much by one hundred and two dollars and fifty-five cents. For this reason I concur in the judgment reversing and remanding the case for a new trial.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. CARPENTIER v. GEORGE P.
LOUCKS, COUNTY CLERK OF CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

EFFECT OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON JUDGMENT.—The pendency of a motion for new trial does not stay proceedings upon the judgment. The party in whose favor the judgment is rendered is entitled immediately to the proper process for its enforcement unless proceedings are stayed by the Court.

MANDAMUS ON CLERK OF COURT.—The Clerk of a Court may be compelled by writ of mandate to issue process for the enforcement of a judgment, notwithstanding his liability on his official bond for damages for a refusal to do so.

Statement of Facts.

WHEN MANDAMUS WILL LIE.—The rule that mandamus will not lie where the relator has another remedy is not universally true where the writ is sought against ministerial officers.

AN action for the recovery of a tract of land in Contra Costa County, and for damages for its detention, in which the relator was plaintiff and Thurston et al. were defendants, was tried in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County, at the July term, 1864. A jury was waived, and the cause was submitted and taken under advisement by the Court. On the 24th of February, 1865, at a regular term of said Court, the attorneys for both parties being present, the Court announced its decision, and directed judgment to be entered against defendants, and an entry of the same was made by the Clerk in the minutes of the Court. The Court at the same time announced that the findings of fact would be filed thereafter. On the 11th day of March, 1865, the Judge signed his findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the same were delivered to the Clerk, but were not marked as filed by him until the 13th of March. On the 11th of March the plaintiff's attorney served on the attorney for defendants a written notice of the filing of the findings and decision. On the 13th of March the Clerk entered up a judgment in favor of plaintiff for restitution of the premises and for damages and costs. On the 22d of March, notice of intention to move for new trial was served on plaintiff's attorney and filed, and within five days thereafter a statement was made and filed. Afterwards, the plaintiff demanded of the Clerk that he issue a writ of habere facias possessionem, and an execution for the enforcement of the judgment, but the Clerk refused to issue the same because notice of motion for a new trial had been given. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the Supreme Court for a peremptory writ of mandate to compel the Clerk to issue the proper writ for the enforcement of the judgment.

Thomas A. Brown, for Respondent.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

It is unnecessary to determine whether the respondent's motion for a new trial was in time or not. If in time it did not per se operate as a stay of proceedings, and the relator was entitled to final process upon his judgment, notwithstanding. The notion which has prevailed hitherto, that a motion, or notice of motion, for a new trial of itself stays all proceedings upon the judgment until such motion has been determined, is without foundation. The Practice Act contains no such provision. On the contrary, the reverse is at least implied. The one hundred and eightieth and one hundred and ninety-seventh sections provide when judgments shall be entered; and the two hundred and ninth provides that "the party in whose favor judgment is given, may, at any time within five years after the entry thereof, issue a writ of execution for its enforcement." Upon this provision the Act contains no limitation whatever, and it must necessarily follow that the party in whose favor the judgment is entered is entitled to his execution immediately, as therein provided, and he cannot be deprived of his right or delayed in its exercise by any mere act of the opposite party.

Doubtless this question might be regulated by a rule of Court, but in the absence of such a rule a party desiring a stay of proceedings pending his motion for a new trial must obtain an order to that effect from the Court, as in the case of a stay of the entry of judgment, as provided in Section 197. Upon such application the Court can grant the order unconditionally, or upon terms according to the circumstances of the case. If a stay would be likely to jeopardize the judgment an execution and levy might be allowed, and further proceedings thereafter stayed, or security for the payment of the judgment might be required, and the like. We think this question has been wisely left by the Practice Act to the sound discretion of the Court. The rule contended for on the part of the respondent might lead to a gross abuse of the right to move for a new trial. Were such a rule to prevail a motion for a new trial could be made subservient to the dishonest purposes of the moving party, and all the benefits and fruits of the judgment might thereby become lost to the other side.

The case of Lurvey v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 4 Cal. 106, does not establish the doctrine that a motion for a new trial per se stays execution upon the judgment until after it has been determined. No such question was involved in that case, as we recently had occasion to declare in the case of the Copper Hill Mining Company v. Spencer, 25 Cal. 16.

Nor has Cowell v. Buckelew, 14 Cal. 640, any application to the present case. That case was decided under the Constitution as it stood prior to the amendments of 1863, and the mandamus was denied upon the ground that the Court then possessed only appellate jurisdiction, and could issue, with the exception of writs of habeas corpus, only such writs and process as was necessary or proper for the exercise of that jurisdiction. Under the present Constitution this Court has original jurisdiction in cases of mandamus, as was held by us in Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 26.

Nor is there any doubt as to mandamus being the proper remedy. The judgment awards to the relator the possession of land which can be obtained only through the writ which he seeks. The duty of issuing the writ is especially enjoined upon the respondent, and it is manifest that a suit upon his official bond for damages resulting from a non-performance of that duty would be wholly inadequate. (Fremont v. Crippen, 10 Cal. 215.) In McCullough v. The Mayor of Brooklyn, 23 Wend. 461, it was said that although, as a general rule, a mandamus will not lie where the relator has another remedy, it is not universally true where the writ is sought against ministerial officers, notwithstanding they may be liable in an action on the case for a neglect of duty, they may be compelled by mandamus to exercise their functions according to law.

Peremptory mandamus allowed, with costs.

WILLIAM A. BIDLEMAN v. BENJAMIN S. BROOKS.

ASSESSMENT OF LAND FOR TAXES.—If the Assessor, in assessing a city lot owned and occupied by the owner as a single lot, arbitrarily divides the same, and assesses one part to the owner and another part to unknown owners, the assessment to the unknown owners is illegal, and a tax deed under a sale of the same for non-payment of the tax is void.

TAX DEED AS EVIDENCE OF TITLE.—The prima facie evidence of title furnished by the recitals of a tax deed is overthrown by showing that the assessment was illegal.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Henry B. Janes, for Appellant.

Brooks & Whitney, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to recover certain lands in San Francisco. The cause having been tried without a jury, the Court found for defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly. A new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings, was applied for by plaintiff, and denied. Plaintiff appeals from the order denying a new trial, and from the judgment.

The plaintiff's title depends solely upon tax deeds executed upon a sale for taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1862. The plaintiff introduced in evidence his tax deeds, proved a demand upon defendant for possession before the commencement of the suit, and rested.

It appeared from the evidence introduced by defendant, and further evidence in rebuttal on the part of plaintiff, that defendant, Brooks, was at the time of the assessment, and he had been since the summer of 1859, the owner in fee of the whole of fifty vara lot No. 835, and that his conveyance was on record; that the premises in question are parts of said fifty vara lot; that before and at the time of the assessment in question, there was a house and various outbuildings on said lot, actually occupied by his tenants; that the whole fifty vara lot was inclosed by one fence, and not divided; that it was used as one lot, the tenant of defendant with his family living in the house, and thus occupying the premises as one lot down to the time of the sale; that the lot was not assessed as an entire lot, but the larger part was assessed to defendant, Brooks, as owner, and the premises in controversy arbitrarily cut off by the Assessor, and separately assessed to unknown owners.

The principal question is whether the property was lawfully assessed. We do not think it was. The Assessor is nowhere authorized to arbitrarily divide up lots into strips to suit his caprice, and assess such several portions separately. If he may divide up a lot of well known boundaries into strips twenty feet wide, he may divide it into strips of one foot in width, or even smaller dimensions, and assess each separately, and thus render it not only greatly inconvenient and oppressive to the owner, but almost impossible for him to ascertain whether his taxes have all been paid or not. The law undoubtedly contemplates that each lot of well known dimensions and boundaries shall be assessed as one lot. In this instance, there was a lot of the ordinary dimensions—the smallest of the lots as originally officially surveyed and platted in that part of the city—which had not been subdivided by the owner. It was inclosed by a single fence, separating it distinctly from all other lands, and had a dwelling house and outbuildings upon it, the whole openly and notoriously occupied as a single lot or messuage by the defendant's tenant and his family. Yet it was arbitrarily sliced up into at least three parts, and each separately assessed as a distinct lot, the larger portion—more than half—being assessed to the real owner, the defendant, and the other two parcels to unknown owners. Such an assessment of a tract of land constituting one well known lot, and actually occupied as such—if it would not necessarily have such an effect — would be very likely to mislead the owner and result — as in this instance — in a sale of his property. The owner calls to pay his taxes. A list of all the taxes against him is furnished. Upon looking it over he finds a lot in a certain locality taxed to him, and, without scrutinizing the boundaries very closely, he naturally concludes that the whole lot is assessed to him — as it should be — pays his taxes and rests in security, till several years afterwards he finds that a small strip has been, in fact, assessed to unknown owners, and without his knowledge, or fault, sold. Such would be the inevitable result if such a system of assessment were tolerated. The object of levying taxes is to secure revenue for the purposes of the Government, and not, by deceptive assessments to entrap the unwary into the loss of their lands. In cases where it is difficult to ascertain whether a tract of land has been divided into smaller lots or not, it might not be proper to scrutinize the acts of the Assessor too rigidly, if it can be seen that no injury could result; but the assessment of a single lot notoriously occupied as this was, the greater part to the owner, and smaller portions to unknown owners, is a gross violation of both the letter and the spirit of the law, and if upheld would lead to great abuses and injustice. It is, to our minds, highly probable that the assessment in question did in fact mislead the defendant, and that the sale of the property was the result of this misapprehension. At all events, he was liable to be thus misled to his injury. The assessment being illegal, the prima facie case made by the tax deeds, conceding them to be sufficient in form, is overthrown. For these reasons we do not think that we should be justified in setting aside the findings on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain them.

This view renders it unnecessary to discuss the various other points made by the respondent, and we think there is nothing requiring notice in the other points made by the appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

Statement of Facts.

WILLIAM McGARRAHAN v. J. W. C. MAXWELL et al.

WHAT AN APPEAL FROM A JUDGMENT INCLUDES.—If, on the rendition of a final judgment the Court also grants a perpetual injunction, and an appeal is taken from the whole judgment, the injunction is included in the appeal.

INJUNCTION ON FINAL HEARING.—An injunction granted upon the rendition of final judgment is a part of the judgment.

DIMINUTION OF RECORD.—If a part of the judgment appealed from is omitted in the record, the Supreme Court, on being apprised of the omission, will, if it is material, require it to be supplied, even if the discovery is not made until an application for rehearing after a decision has been rendered.

EFFECT OF REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT ON INJUNCTION.—A reversal of a judgment, which judgment awards the plaintiff possession of a tract of land, and perpetually enjoins the defendant from committing waste on the land, also reverses the injunction decree, even if the decree is not included in the record sent to the appellate Court.

EFFECT OF AN APPEAL ON A JUDGMENT.—An appeal from a judgment of a United States Court, affirming a survey of a Mexican grant of land, destroys the value and effect of the judgment as evidence during the pendency of the appeal.

SURVEY OF MEXICAN GRANT OF LAND.—The Act of Congress, approved June 2, 1862, entitled "an Act for the survey of grants or claims of lands," does not make a survey, which has been approved by the Surveyor-General, of a Spanish or Mexican grant of land, prima facie evidence of title.

ACT OF 1862 CONCERNING SURVEY OF MEXICAN GRANTS.—The Act of Congress, approved June 2, 1862, entitled "an Act for the survey of grants or claims of lands," did not repeal by implication the Act of 1860, nor did it make any change in the law regulating the survey of land in California derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments, except in requiring the survey to be made on the application of the claimant, on his paying the expense of survey.

SURVEY OF MEXICAN GRANT AS EVIDENCE.—A survey of a confirmed Mexican or Spanish grant of land, which has been approved by the Surveyor-General, without the publication of the notice required by the Act of 1860, is of no effect as evidence.

CONSTRUCTION OF A LAW.—The meaning of an Act is to be ascertained, not from the debates which took place on its passage, but from the language of the Act.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Monterey County.

This action was brought to recover possession of the tract of land, lying partly in Fresno and partly in Monterey county, and in which are located the New Idria quicksilver mines. The plaintiff claimed title under a grant of the Mexican Government made in 1844 to Vicente Gomez, and to prove the issues on his part, offered in evidence the petition of Gomez for the confirmation of his grant to the United States Board of Land Commissioners, organized under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1851; a decree of confirmation of the grant by the United States District Court for the Southern District of California; a survey of the land confirmed, made by the United States Surveyor-General of California, and approved September 11, 1862; and mesne conveyances from Gomez to him.

To the introduction of the decree and the survey in evidence, the defendants, by their attorney, objected, because an appeal had been taken from the decree to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that such appeal suspended the force and effect of the decree so as to render it inadmissible in evidence; and that the survey was invalid, inasmuch as no publication thereof had been made agreeably to the Act of Congress of June 14, 1860, and that the same had not been confirmed by the Court. The Court below overruled the objections and admitted the evidence, to which ruling defendants excepted. Evidence was afterwards offered by defendants, tending to show that an appeal from the decree had been granted to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed both from an order denying a new trial and from the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Hoge & Wilson, for Appellant.

After an appeal taken, the Court below loses all power over the case, and the whole jurisdiction vests in the appellate Court. (Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 134.)

"Where a suit is pending in the Supreme Court on appeal, the judgment below is suspended for all purposes, and it is not evidence upon the questions at issue even between the parties." (Woodbury v. Bowman et al., 13 Cal. 635. See also Saunders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 89; Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 87, 118; Marshall v. Lester, N. Car. Law Rep., 100.)

But here, as to the effect of the appeal, is another thing of great importance to be considered:

Argument for Appellant.

The Surveyor-General can only make a survey after final confirmation by the Commissioners, or District Court, or the Supreme Court of the United States. (Brightly's Digest, p. 113, Sec. 46.) Now, after decree by the Land Commission, and pending an appeal to the District Court, no survey could be made, because the decree was not final; and likewise pending an appeal to the Supreme Court there could be no survey. The Act says, after final confirmation "by the said Commissioners, or by the District Court, or Supreme Court."

The Act of March 3d, 1853, (10 Statutes at Large, 245,) is to same effect. (See Ib. 91; Brightly's Digest, Note 113.) This very clear effect follows the appeal, that no survey could be made, and there being no other evidence of boundaries except the map and survey of the Surveyor-General, the action for that reason must fail, and the judgment be reversed.

We then confidently submit that there was an appeal from the decree of confirmation pending, and that two results followed from it, viz:

1st. The decree below was suspended for all purposes, and was not evidence upon the questions at issue, even between the parties. (Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 365; Saunders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 89, 90.)

2d. That the appeal operated as a bar to further proceedings on the decree, and the party could not proceed to execute it, or in other words, could not have a survey, which was the only thing to be done in execution of the decree. (United States v. Pacheco, 20 Howard, 263.)

If these views are correct, the respondent failed to present any evidence of title, and the judgment below must be reversed.

As to the survey — the grant, in this case, confirmed by the decree, was one requiring a survey. There were no definite boundaries. It was not a case of a certain amount within larger exterior boundaries, like that in Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552. No evidence was offered but a survey. It was like the grant spoken of in Stanford v. Tracy, 18 How. U. S. R. 412-13: "A public survey was required to attach the concession to any land." As stated in Johnson v. Van Dyke, 20 Cal. 228: "The survey was essential to give precision to the title and attach it to any particular law."

The survey offered in evidence was a map and plat by the Surveyor-General of the United States, under the Act of Congress of June 2d, 1862. (See 12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 410.) On making this survey the Surveyor-General made no publication, and took none of the proceedings required of him in the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860. (See 12 Stat. at Large, 33.)

It was contended by the respondent's counsel that the last named Act was repealed by the Act of June 2d, 1862, and that under this Act surveys were now alone to be made; that the Courts ceased to have any further jurisdiction over surveys, and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office alone could supervise the survey; that the survey under the Act of 1862 was "prima facie evidence of the true location of the land claimed or granted," as against the United States, but was conclusive against the defendants in this action.

Going back to the Fossatt case, (21 How. 448,) and before the Acts of 1860 and 1862, relative to surveys, we find the inquiry propounded as to what is involved before the Land Commission, or Court, in reference to land cases. "What are the questions involved in the inquiry into the validity of a claim to land?" After reasoning about the genuineness, power of the office, etc., the Court say: "But in addition to these questions upon the validity of the title, there may be questions of extent, quantity, location, boundary, and legal operation, that are equally essential in determining the validity of the claim." The Court then proceeds to show by direct authority and decisions the power of the Courts over the surveys, citing the Arredondo case, and various others where they directly controlled the survey in the Courts under similar Acts to this one, on the subject of California claims. The cases cited and the statutes referred to were in reference to Florida, and land claims there.

Under this Act of 1851 the Surveyor-General is held to be directly in the power of the Court, and must fulfill its decrees as to these surveys; and that the same system has existed under the Acts of 1824, 1828, and 1851.

The Fossatt case went twice to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is reported first in 20 How. Rep. 413, and next in 21 Id. 447. It was first reversed and remanded for further proceedings simply on the question of boundaries, the title being held good.

The decree, according to the opinion of the Supreme Court which was entered by Judge Hoffman, left one of the lines to be completed by a survey. From this the United States again appealed, and it was held that the appeal was premature and improvident, and it was dismissed, and the District Court ordered to proceed to ascertain the external lines and to enter a final decree.

Here, then, we may safely draw several corollaries, viz:

1st. The Surveyor-General had not the power of absolutely determining the boundaries and location of grants.

2d. That the District Court might reject the survey and location of the Surveyor-General, and absolutely control the location, and direct what the survey should be.

3d. Where the Court did not direct the location or control the survey, the Commissioner of the General Land Office might refuse the patent on it, and that he might supervise and control the Surveyor-General in these matters.

What, then, did the act of the Surveyor-General amount to? What was its effect? Did it amount to anything at all until it was "established" in one of two ways:

1st. By the Court; or,

2d. Adopted by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the patent granted?

Until then, was it not "only a preliminary proceeding amounting in effect to no more than a mere report of the action of the Surveyor?" Did it bind anybody?

But, last of all, comes the Act of 1862, June 2d, and with it, as claimed by respondent's counsel, a most radical change. They claim that it took away that part of the jurisdiction of the Courts which was exercised over surveys under the Act of 1851, and entirely repealed the Act of 1860. The Surveyor-General who, under the Act of 1860, could only in the first instance make "a preliminary proceeding, amounting in effect to no more than a mere report," as is said in Mahoney v. Van Winkle, suddenly became absolute and filled with a most dangerous power.

If the Commissioner of the General Land Office still has supervision, it must be to a very limited extent; such as pronouncing in the face of the proceedings, or, as said in Castro v. Hendricks, "to see that the survey is in accordance with the decree." How few such cases would occur? Most errors can be shown only by matters dehors the survey and plat. But the Commissioner's power to revise the action and survey of the Surveyor-General arose from Acts of Congress, and the Court's power of revision arose from Acts of Congress.

How then does the Act of 1862 take away by implication the power of the Court to revise the survey, but leave the power of the Commissioner remain to revise the survey?

The Act of June, 1862, only contemplates the action of the Surveyor-General on application by the claimant, and on his paying or securing the expense. Unless that application is made, or that payment is made or secured, the Surveyor-General cannot act.

"The exercise of the right of measurement and segregation was not only a duty to the grantee—it was necessary to enable the Government to ascertain the extent of property it had acquired by the cession of the country, to separate the public lands from those that are private." (Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 270. See also the Fossatt Case, and Castro v. Hendricks.) From this it becomes clear, as well as from the repugnance of a Court to declare a repeal by implication, that the Act of 1860 is not repealed, but is in full force and effect. The Act of 1860, as well as the Act of June, 1862, are both in force.

Argument for Respondent.

The reversal of the judgment will carry with it the reversal of this judgment of injunction. Injunctions are of two kinds: one, temporary or provisional, granted pending the litigation, and ancillary to it, until the decision of the main issue; the other, final, incorporated into the judgment, and forming a part of the relief demanded in the complaint. A provisional or temporary injunction expires with the entry of judgment; a final injunction is based upon the other parts of the judgment, that is to say, upon the facts judicially determined by the judgment. In this case the final judgment of injunction rests wholly upon the res judicata that the lands in controversy belong to the plaintiff. But the granting of a new trial overturns this res judicata, and reverses the judgment with all its incidents, and as a part of that judgment the injunction incorporated in it falls to the ground.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, and Sharp & Lloyd, and T. J. Bergen, for Respondent.

The decree of confirmation and the survey are conclusive, and appellants are not in condition to question them in this action. It is submitted, the uniform decisions of this Court place this proposition beyond cavil or dispute. (Clark v. Lockwood, 21 Cal. 222; Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 273; Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 419.)

If there was an appeal, it did not suspend the operation and effect of the decree. The claimant to maintain his rights is compelled, involuntarily, to sue the United States.

The law regulating the proceeding is the will of the United States, and the officers administering the law are the officers of the United States. The right of an humble claimant is the subject matter of the controversy against his great adversary, the sovereignty. He has no protection, no shield, except that of the Constitution and the treaties, the supreme law of the land. The Government engages in the contest as any other litigant. The United States has wisely and justly foreborne to make any distinction; the United States must contend according to the existing laws and rules of the Courts, or not at all. If aggrieved by the decree of the lower Court, and an appeal is sought so as to operate as a supersedeas, to obtain it the United States must conform to the law.

Here it is not claimed that there was any citation or bond on appeal, although expressly required by the Act of March 3d, 1857, and the general laws of 1803 and 1789. There is no law dispensing with the citation.

At the time of the alleged granting of the appeal, (25th August, 1862,) there was no law dispensing with the necessity of a bond on the part of the United States. The only law on the subject was passed 23d February, 1863, long after the alleged appeal. It will be found in supplement to Brightly's Digest, 1,182. This dispenses with the bond on the part of the Government, but still provides that the Government shall be liable for and shall pay any costs that may be awarded against it. The necessity for the enactment of this law clearly demonstrates that before its passage the United States were bound to give the bond on appeal. (Adams et al. v. Law, 6 How. 148; Wallen v. Williams, 7 Cranch, 278; Carr v. Hoxie, 13 Peters, 462.)

An appeal in equity does not operate as a supersedeas unless the appeal be taken and a good and sufficient bond be given within ten days after the pronouncement of the decree. (Stafford v. The Union Bank, La., 16 How. 135.) Appeal of itself is no supersedeas. (Carr v. Hoxie, 13 Pet. 460; U. S. v. Curry, 6 How. 113; Riggs v. Murry, 3 Johns. Ch. 160, and cases cited; Pell v. Ball, 1 Richardson, 366; Robertson v. Robertson, 7 Edw. Ch. 360; 2 Bac. Abr., Error, (H) 479; Enthwhistle v. Shepherd, 2 T. R. 78; Rose v. Bennett, H. Blackstone, 432; Miller v. Cousins, 4 Bos. & P. 307.)

Suppose the appeal had been perfectly regular, and taken within ten days from the pronouncement of the decree; then it would not operate as a supersedeas. (Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 574.)

The grant gave the claimant the right of possession, and required it. (Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569, and cases there cited, and also cases hereinbefore referred to.) The decree did not take away that right, nor is there anything in the Act of March 3d, 1851, or in any of the Acts of Congress, taking it away or in any way interfering with that right.

The survey is valid and conclusive in this action, and cannot be questioned by appellants. The survey having been regularly made by the duly authorized officers of the law, agreeably to the Act of June, 1862, (12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 410,) the question arises whether in this action it is conclusive? The Act last mentioned is clear in its terms, and the operation and effect thereof must be determined thereby. In the construction of statutes, it is well settled that resort cannot properly be had to nor can the construction thereof be influenced by the discussion thereon in the passage thereof in the legislative body. Resort cannot be had to the debates in Congress thereon. This is familiar and well settled law. (Forrest v. Forrest, 10 Barb. S. C. R. 48; Aldridge v. Williams, 3 How. 24; Barbat v. Allen, 10 Eng. Law and Eq. 601.)

Discarding, therefore, all aid from the uncertain light of legislative discussion, it is submitted that according to the plain language and manifest import of the Act, upon proper construction thereof, the survey thereunder is valid and conclusive. The words, "nothing in the law requiring the executive officers to survey land claimed or granted under any laws of the United States," do not operate as a limitation to exclude surveys made thereunder from the effect thereof. All lands in the United States derived from any foreign country or Government, or claimed or granted under any laws of the United States, must, where survey thereof is at all necessary, be surveyed by the officers who are by law required to survey lands claimed or granted under any laws of the United States. They are the proper officers to make admeasurement thereof whenever requisite. Private land claims are surveyed under the law requiring the executive officers to survey lands claimed or granted under any laws of the United States, though in particular classes of cases special provision in relation thereto is made in addition to the general law. "Nothing in the law requiring the executive officers to survey land claimed or granted, under any laws of the United States, shall be construed * * * to give any greater effect to the surveys made by them, than to make such surveys prima facie evidence of the true location of the land claimed or granted." The surveys made by them clearly embrace surveys under the Act. The surveys made by them shall be prima facie evidence of the true location—what of? Not land claimed or granted exclusively under any law of the United States, but land claimed or granted without restriction or qualification from whatever source derived. The connection, too, in which the words occur make this plain. They are in opposition to what had been declared in the preceding part of the Act to qualify the extent and operation of the same, and are introduced by the opposite word "but." Nor does the Act or any law require publication of notice of survey made thereunder. The law requiring such publication will be found in section one of the Act of June 14th, 1860, (12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 3.) This Act is repealed by the Act of 1862.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The complaint in this case, in addition to a cause of action in ejectment, states facts entitling the plaintiff to a provisional injunction pending the action, and a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants from the commission of waste on the premises in controversy. The judgment in ejectment was rendered August 10, 1863, and on the same day a decree of injunction, perpetually restraining the defendants from committing waste was signed and filed in the Clerk's office, and on the following day it was entered in the judgment book. It does not appear that a provisional injunction was ordered. In the notice of appeal, it is stated that the defendant's appeal "from the judgment therein made and entered in said District Court, on or about the 10th day of August, A. D. 1863, in favor of said plaintiff against said defendants, and from the whole thereof, and from the order of the Court refusing a new trial," etc. The record filed in this Court did not contain a copy of the decree of injunction. Upon the former hearing of the appeal, the judgment of the Court below was reversed and the cause remanded, and subsequently a rehearing was granted, upon the petitions of both parties, the plaintiff seeking an affirmance of the judgment of the Court below for the recovery of the possession of the premises; and the defendants desiring that a diminution of the record should be adjudged, and that the decree of injunction be ordered to be certified to this Court, in order that it might be reversed, together with the judgment for the recovery of the possession of the premises.

The first question is, what constitutes the whole of the judgment in the cause, from which the appeal is taken. A judgment, as defined in the Practice Act (Sec. 144), is a "final determination of the rights of the parties in the action or proceeding." No particular form for the judgment is prescribed in the Act, but it will be rendered by the Court in such mode that it will conform to the cause of action stated, and the proof adduced on the trial. The Court will grant the relief to which either party appears, from his allegations and proofs, to be entitled, and the relief adjudged by the Court, if it finally determines the rights of the parties respecting the matters alleged by them in their pleadings, constitutes the judgment. And it is immaterial whether the Court grants relief to each of the parties, or to one party only, or whether the relief is in its character legal or equitable, or both, for the decision of the Court, if it amounts to a final determination of the rights of the parties, touching the matters in controversy, is a judgment. The term "decree," although not found in the section of the Practice Act referred to, is frequently used by the Legislature and the Courts of the State, and is employed to distinguish a sentence or judgment of the Court in a suit in equity, or in respect to the equitable branch of an action or proceeding at law, from a judgment in an action or the branch of the action determined upon legal, as contradistinguished from equitable principles—the term being employed not as a designation of something different from a judgment, but rather a judgment of a particular character. In the same manner, we use the terms "feri facias," "order of sale," and "writ of restitution," not as indicating writs differing from an execution, but as descriptive of certain kinds of writs, all of which are included in the generic term "execution" — the writ issued for the enforcement of a judgment. Nor is it of any consequence whether the judgment consists of only one or of more than one entry. In ejectment, the plaintiff may be entitled to judgment for a part of the premises, and the defendant, who has stated an equitable defense, may be entitled to a judgment granting equitable relief for another part of the premises, but both determinations, taken together, constitute a judgment. A cause of action to restrain the commission of waste may, under our system of practice, be united with a cause of action in ejectment for the recovery of the possession of the premises threatened to be injured, and the two causes of action, together with the facts pleaded by the defendant, constitute the matters in controversy between the parties, and the final determination of the rights of the parties respecting those matters, whatever form it may assume, is the judgment. The judgment in ejectment and the "decree" of injunction, in this case, constitute one judgment, and the defendants having appealed from the whole judgment, the "decree" is necessarily included in the appeal.

The decree was not brought up to this Court in the record filed by the defendants, and on which the appeal was first heard, and it is now insisted by the plaintiff, that as the defendants were bound to take notice of the entry of the decree, and did, in fact, know that it was entered, they are not entitled to have it brought up for review at this stage of the case because they have not used due diligence in suggesting a diminution of the record, and procuring a certiorari to have the decree returned to this Court. If the the question related to an order intermediate the judgment, a bill of exceptions or a statement, or any matter that the appellant might, at his election, have presented to the appellate Court, in connection with his appeal from the judgment, the propriety of permitting the omitted matter to be incorporated into the record, after the appeal had once been passed on by the Court, would be very questionable; but in respect to the judgment or order appealed from, the question as to permitting an amendment incorporating it into the record if omitted therefrom in whole or in part, cannot be solved upon consideration of diligence.

The judgment, or the part of it appealed from, must of necessity be brought before the appellate Court, either in hæc verba, or by a statement of its substance, for it is the very foundation of the whole proceeding in the appellate Court, and its presence is as requisite to enable the Court to act in the cause, as is the complaint or answer when a Court of original jurisdiction passes upon a general demurrer to the whole pleading. Not only would it be the right of either party to have the omitted judgment or part of the judgment brought before the appellate Court, but the Court, on being apprised of the omission, may and would require it to be supplied, if it was deemed material and necessary to a proper decision of the appeal. In the absence from the record of the judgment appealed from, the matters in controversy between the parties on appeal are not before the appellate Court.

The question is not worthy, we think, of the laborious consideration bestowed upon it by counsel. The cause of action to restrain the commission of waste consists of the allegations that the plaintiff has title to the premises, that the defendants are in possession without title and threaten to commit the alleged waste, and are unable to respond in damages for the injury. The plaintiff's right to the equitable relief is dependent upon his title to the premises. The Court, having found that the title to the premises was in the plaintiff, and that the defendants were wrongfully in possession; and having found, as we may presume, the other facts which were necessary to entitle the plaintiff to the equitable relief prayed for, the Court was thereupon authorized to grant the injunction. The basis of the equitable relief was the title of the plaintiff to the lands in controversy, and if the Court had not adjudged that the title to the premises was in the plaintiff, the injunction could not have been ordered; and it inevitably follows, that if the cause is appealed and the decision of the Court below respecting the title is reversed, the injunction, like all other proceedings dependent upon that decision, must fall with it.

Counsel have again argued the two principal questions in the case—first, as to whether an appeal was taken by the United States to the Supreme Court of the United States, from the decree of confirmation rendered by the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, in the case of The United States v. Gomez; and second—as to the value and effect as evidence, of the survey of the rancho Panoche Grande, made by the United States Surveyor-General. The plaintiff's evidence relating to these questions consisted of the petition of Vicente Gomez, the alleged grantee of the Mexican Government, to the Board of Land Commissioners, for a confirmation of his claim to the rancho; a formal decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, confirming the claim of Gomez to the rancho, signed on the 5th day of February, 1858, and ordered to be entered nunc pro tunc, as of the 5th day of June, 1857, the date at which the decree was pronounced; also a certified copy of the official survey and map of the rancho, approved the 11th day of September, 1862, by E. F. Beale, United States Surveyor-General for California, together with the application of the plaintiff to the Surveyor-General for a survey, and the instructions of the Surveyor-General to his deputy concerning the survey. The plaintiff deraigned title from Gomez, and the defendants stipulated that they were in possession. The defendants introduced in evidence an application by the United States District Attorney, to set aside the decree of confirmation; the order of the Court made thereupon March 21st, 1861, setting aside the proceedings in said cause, and ordering the cause on the calendar for trial de novo; and the order of said Court, made August 25th, 1862, allowing an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, from the decree of confirmation; also an order of said Court, made December 4th, 1862, setting aside the last mentioned order; also an order made August 4th, 1862, vacating the order directing the cause to be placed on the calendar for trial de novo.

First—Was an appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decree of confirmation of the United States District Court? The plaintiff holds that there was no appeal taken, for the reason that more than five years had elapsed from the time when the decree was entered before the appeal was allowed, and that no citation was issued and served on the appellee. In our former opinion, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered at the December term, 1863, in the case of The United States v. Vicente P. Gomez, was relied on as a complete and conclusive solution of this question. The Court in that case held that the final decree of the District Court was entered on the 5th of February, 1858—the date of the signing of the decree that was ordered to be entered nunc pro tunc—and not on the 5th of June, 1857, the date of the entry in the Clerk's minutes of the order that a decree be entered up in conformity to the opinion of the Court—and consequently that the five years had not run before the allowance of the appeal. And the Court further held that a citation was not necessary, and in delivering the opinion they said: "Appeal, it is true, purports to be from the decision and decree of the Court confirming the claim, but it was taken from that decree not only after it had been vacated, but after the decree directing it to be vacated had itself been stricken out and the original decree restored. Admitting that the order restoring the original decree was one of any validity, then indeed no citation was necessary, because the appeal was taken in open Court and might well be regarded as taken at the same term the decree was entered. The Court also held citation in the case to be unnecessary, for other reasons based on facts that do not appear in the record in this Court."

But the plaintiff's counsel say that the record of the cause in the Supreme Court of the United States was not in evidence in this cause, in the Court below; that the decision was not rendered until after the trial of the cause, and that therefore it is improper to assume that the cause in the Supreme Court on appeal was the same cause that was determined by the United States District Court, portions of the record of which were introduced in evidence in this cause; and that the decision of the Supreme Court is devoid of all effect in this cause, except in so far as it may be regarded as authority upon questions of law involved in this cause; and counsel have cited many cases to show that the decision of the Supreme Court cannot be maintained as sound authority, either in respect to the event from which the time for taking the appeal begins to run, or the necessity of a citation.

It is not pretended by the defendants' counsel that the record in the Supreme Court of the United States was in evidence in this cause, and it is not denied by the plaintiff's counsel that that Court rendered the decision cited by the defendants' counsel in a cause entitled the "United States, appellants, vs. Vicente P. Gomez, appellee," which was an appeal from the decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, confirming the claim of Gomez, the petitioner, to the Rancho Panoche Grande. The identity of the names of the parties, of the land claimed by the petitioner, of the decree of confirmation of the District Court, and of the orders made by the Court in the cause, sufficiently show the identity of the action with that, the record of which was introduced in evidence in this cause.

Although the record in the Supreme Court of the United States was not offered in evidence and is not before us, yet the record in this Court contains the facts on which the decision on the points under consideration was based — at least if not the same facts, those that in all material respects are identical in substance — and we would be well justified in giving the same construction to those facts and matters of record, and drawing the same inferences and conclusions therefrom, as was done by the Supreme Court of the United States. The position of the plaintiff's counsel that the decision is not evidence in this case, is unquestionably true, but it has its value as an authority, emanating from the highest Court in the country, upon the precise points in question, founded on facts identical in substance, if not in every particular, with those before us.

But counsel attack the decision as not being in harmony with many earlier decisions of the same Court, and those of other Courts entitled to great consideration and weight. It is scarcely necessary to examine the cases cited, to ascertain whether they harmonize with the decision or are opposed to it, for confessedly that Court has authority to inquire into and determine all matters pertaining to its own jurisdictions of causes before it on appeal from inferior Courts of the United States, and when the question is, did that Court acquire jurisdiction of a certain cause upon a given state of facts, we are justified in following the decision, when the same question is presented to this Court, on the same state of facts.

The effect of the appeal was to suspend all proceedings in the Court below, and preclude the doing of any act for the purpose of carrying the decree into effect, it remaining inoperative for any purpose until the appeal was disposed of. The operation and effect of an appeal from the decree of the United States District Court, approving the survey of a confirmed grant, was considered by us in Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569, and we held that "the appeal having been perfected, all further proceedings upon the survey and the decree approving it became suspended," and that "while the appeal remained pending it was a bar to further proceedings in the Court below." The appeal in this case, as in that, operated as a supersedeas, neither an order to that effect nor an appeal bond being required. (See, also, United States v. Pacheco, 20 How. 263; Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634; Saunders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 89; Helm v. Boone, 6 J. J. Marsh, 353.)

Second — The survey of the rancho is claimed by the plaintiff to have been rightfully made under the Act of Congress of June 2d, 1862. (12 U. S. Statutes at Large, 410.) The Judge of the Court below held that the survey was made under that

Opinion of the Court.

Act; and while he considered it unnecessary to decide the point made by the plaintiff that the Act of 1862 divested the Courts of the United States of the jurisdiction to approve the surveys of private land claims conferred upon them by the Act of June 14th, 1860, (12 U. S. Statutes at Large, 33,) he held that the Act of 1862 constituted a survey of a private land claim, made and approved by the Surveyor-General, under that Act, prima facie evidence of the true location of the land confirmed, and that "the title of the confirmer adheres to that location and becomes perfect until the survey is set aside by proper authority and ejectment can be maintained on it in the State Courts."

We think the learned Judge was in error in his construction of the Act of 1862. The first part of the section—the Act consisting of one section—is as follows: "Be it enacted," etc., "that all claims or grants of land in any of the States or Territories of the United States, derived from any foreign country or government, shall be surveyed under the direction of the proper officers of the Government of the United States upon the application of the parties claiming or owning the same, and at their expense, which shall be paid or secured to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, before the work shall be performed." And that is the only part of the Act that has relation to a claim to land, or a grant of land, derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments. The remainder of the Act relates to "land claimed or granted under any laws of the United States," and its purpose seems to be to define and limit the operation of the laws regulating the survey of such lands. It is declared that "nothing in the law requiring the executive officers to survey land claimed or granted under any laws of the United States, shall be construed either to authorize such officers to pass upon the validity of the title granted by or under such laws, or to give any greater effect to the surveys made by them, than to make such surveys prima facie evidence of the true location of the land claimed or granted." The law, of which construction is given by the Act, is the law providing for surveys of lands, the title to which is derived under the laws of the United States; and the survey, the effect of which is declared, is obviously the survey of lands claimed or granted under the same laws. The limitation of the authority of the officers making the survey, and of the value and effect of the survey when made, bears upon the same class of lands. It would not be reasonable, unless the construction was imperative, to say that Congress intended to prohibit the executive officers from passing upon questions of title to lands in California, claimed by virtue of a right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government, when the laws then in force expressly conferred jurisdiction of those questions upon the Courts of the United States; nor would it be reasonable to say that Congress intended by the Act to declare that the surveys of "private land claims in the State of California" shall not amount to more than prima facie evidence of the true location of the land claimed, when under the Act of 1860, providing for the survey of those claims after their confirmation, the survey approved by the Surveyor-General is of no value as evidence, until certain proceedings are had, in the mode prescribed by that Act, and after those proceedings are had, and the survey stands or becomes confirmed in the manner provided in the Act, it is conclusive evidence of the true location of the lands granted. The last clause of the Act of 1862, providing that such grant shall not "be deemed incomplete for the want of a survey or patent, when the land granted may be ascertained without a survey or patent," can have no reference to a Spanish grant in California, for its completeness or incompleteness cannot possibly depend upon the fact that a survey or patent has or has not been made or issued by the United States.

The Act of 1862 did not repeal by implication the Act of 1860, and it made a change in the law regulating the survey of land in California claimed under title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments, only in this respect: the survey of the claim or grant was directed to be made upon the application of the claimant, and on his paying or securing the payment of the expense of the survey. Under the thirteenth section of the Act of 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California, it was the duty of the Surveyor-General to survey all private claims upon their being finally confirmed, and no application by the claimant was required, and by other Acts it was provided that the expenses of the surveys should be paid by the United States.

It cannot be said that the Act of 1860 repealed any part of the laws pertaining to the survey of private land claims in California, except in the respects just mentioned; for the Act provides neither in what manner, nor by what officers, the survey shall be made, or approved, or confirmed, nor what disposition shall be made of it when either or all of these proceedings are had; and as resort must be had to the laws then in force to ascertain the mode of procedure, and the authorities that are charged with the performance of duties in that respect, those laws must remain in force except in so far as they are inconsistent with the Act of 1860. Entertaining these views of the construction of the Act, we are warranted in holding, until a different construction is given by the Federal Courts, that the survey of the rancho, in pursuance of, and to carry into effect the decree of confirmation, was required to be made in accordance with the laws in force at the passage of that Act, except that the claimant was required—as was done by the plaintiff in this case—to make his application for, and pay or secure the payment of the expenses of, the survey; and we are of the opinion that the Surveyor-General, not having given notice by publication, that the survey and plat had been made and approved by him, as required by the Act of 1860, the survey and plat was entitled to no effect as evidence in this case. In arriving at this conclusion it is conceded, for the purposes of the argument, that the decree of confirmation of the United States District Court was in full force, and that no appeal therefrom had been taken; for if the appeal had been taken, no proceedings to carry the decree into effect, by means of a survey, or in any other manner, could lawfully have been had.

We have not felt warranted in resorting to the reports or debates in Congress, upon the passage of the Act of 1862, to ascertain its true meaning and construction, and we adopt the language of Mr. Chief Justice Taney, in Aldridge v. Williams, 3 How. 24, as clearly expressing the law in this respect. He says: "In expounding this law, judgment of the Court cannot, in any degree, be influenced by the construction placed upon it by individual members of Congress in the debate which took place on its passage, nor by the motives or reasons assigned by them for supporting or opposing amendments that were offered. The law, as it passed, is the will of the majority of both houses, and the only mode in which that will is spoken is in the Act itself, and we must gather their intention from the language there used, comparing it, when any ambiguity exists, with the laws upon the same subject, and looking, if necessary, to the public history of the time in which it was passed." (Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 425; Forrest v. Forrest, 10 Barb. 46.) The language of the Act is sufficiently plain and unambiguous to indicate the intention of Congress, and upon reading it by the aid of the ordinary rules for the construction of sentences, it is apparent that the Act speaks of two different classes of lands and makes different provisions respecting each class, as we have indicated.

The plaintiff's counsel contend that under the provisions of the Act of 1862, directing that "all claims or grants of land, etc., derived from any foreign country or government shall be surveyed, etc., upon the application of the parties claiming or owning the same," they were entitled to have the rancho surveyed; that such survey, when made by the duly authorized officers of the law, constituted an identification of the land granted, and the survey ex necessitate rei, upon general principles, became conclusive, unless otherwise expressly provided by law. It is unnecessary to express any opinion as to the conclusiveness or effect of a survey of a claim or grant of land in California, that has not been confirmed, and the Act itself is silent in that respect. The provision is that the claim or grant of land may be surveyed. In the Act of Congress of 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California, the word claim is used as comprehending every species of right, title or interest, legal or equitable, in or to lands derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government. The words claim and grant are not entirely synonymous, but a claim will include a grant, and also a right or interest that did not pass by grant, but is based upon some equity possessed by the claimant, entitling him to have his right perfected by the Government, by a conveyance of the legal title. A mere naked assertion of right or title does not constitute a claim within the meaning of the Acts to ascertain and settle private land claims, or of the Act of 1862; and we do not understand that the plaintiff relies upon anything else than his title, as constituting his claim to the land. The grant to Gomez, referred to in his petition for the confirmation of his claim, is the only claim derived from a foreign Government that appears in this case, even admitting that the recitals in the proceedings for confirmation are evidence in this cause of the existence of the grant — the grant itself not being in evidence. The only claim or grant of land that the plaintiff was authorized to have surveyed, under the Act of 1862, conceding that that Act is comprehensive enough to require a survey prior to the final confirmation of a claim that is in process of confirmation, and is required by law to be surveyed after confirmation, was the grant to Gomez, described in his petition to the Board of Commissioners for the confirmation of his claim. The decree of confirmation, conceding it to have been final, could no more form a constituent part of his claim derived from the Mexican Government, than would a patent issued by the executive officers of the United States. The plaintiff applied to the Surveyor-General for the survey of the rancho according to the decree of confirmation entered by the United States District Court, and the Surveyor-General instructed his deputy to survey the rancho according to that decree, and he approved the survey, as made in accordance with the decree. In the petition the land is described as a "certain tract of land called Panoche Grande, of the extent of four square leagues, (now lying and being in the County of San Joaquin,) bounded as follows: On the south by the lands of Francisco Aryas, on the north by the lands of Julian Urzua and the low hills, and to the east by the barren hills, as explained by the maps hereto annexed." And in the decree the land is described as "the tract of land situate in the County of Fresno, State of California, known by the name of Panoche Grande, bounded northerly by the lands of one Julian Ursua, southerly by the hills, easterly by the Valley of the Tulare, and westerly by the lands of Don Francisco Aryas, containing four square leagues of land and no more; * * * and for a more particular description of which said land, reference is hereby made to the maps and surveys in the transcript in this case." It is apparent that the two descriptions are essentially different. The survey was not applied for, nor made, nor approved as the survey of the plaintiff's claim or grant of land, but as the survey of land as finally confirmed by the decree of confirmation; and hence it was not admissible in evidence as an official survey of the plaintiff's claim or grant of land.

REMOVAL OF CAUSE TO FEDERAL COURT.—All the defendants in an action in a State Court must be aliens or citizens of another State, to authorize the removal of the cause to a Federal Court for trial.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

About the first of November, 1862, the defendants, Braly and Weeks, commenced an action in the District Court, Fourth

Opinion of the Court.

Judicial District, against plaintiff Calderwood, John K. Moore, and Patrick O'Brien, to recover possession of a tract of land in San Francisco. All the defendants were summoned. Plaintiff Calderwood, within the time required to answer, filed a petition in the case, setting forth that he was a bona fide resident of California, but was an alien; that plaintiffs were citizens of the United States and residents of this State; that defendant Moore was not in possession of the land, and had sold his interest therein to petitioner; that defendant O'Brien was on the premises merely as Calderwood's servant, and asked that the cause be transferred for trial to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California. Petitioner also tendered the undertaking required by law. The Court refused to transfer the cause, and in due time the default of the defendants was entered and judgment rendered against them. Upon this judgment execution was issued, and Braly and Weeks were placed in possession of the property. No appeal was taken from the judgment or order, but the present action was commenced by Calderwood to set aside the judgment and to be restored to the possession of the property. The complaint set up the above facts. The defendants demurred to the complaint, the demurrer was sustained, and final judgment rendered for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

and was properly made a defendant. There is no pretense that O'Brien was an alien or a citizen of another State, and it must be presumed he was a citizen of this State in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Though Calderwood may have been an alien, that fact, while it presumptively appeared that his co-defendant, O'Brien, was a citizen of this State, did not invest him with the right to a removal of the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States for trial. It is well settled as a general rule that all the defendants in an action brought against them in a State Court must be aliens or citizens of another State to authorize the removal of the cause to the Federal Court for trial. The exceptions to this general rule are stated in the various decisions of the Federal Courts, and need not be repeated here. We are satisfied that O'Brien was not a defendant of any character falling within the exceptions to the general rule. (Stroubridge et al. v. Curtis et al., 3 Cranch. 267; Ward v. Arredondo et al., 1 Paine's R. 410; Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, 4 Cranch. 306; Brown et al. v. Strode, 5 Cranch. 303; Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. 421; Conolly v. Taylor, 2 Peters, 556.)

EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT.—If the plaintiff in ejectment introduces in evidence to prove his title, a patent issued by the State for the demanded premises as swamp and overflowed land, the defendant is not entitled to prove that the land is dry and fit for cultivation without first showing that he is in possession under some right or title derived from the State or the United States.

ABANDONMENT OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—If the statement on motion for a new trial sets forth the grounds of the motion, and the motion is made and submitted, a refusal to argue the motion by the moving party is not an abandonment of the same.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

Opinion of the Court.

The cause was tried by the Court without a jury, June 23d, 1864, and on the same day the Court filed its findings and decision. June 29th, 1864, plaintiff's attorney served on defendants' attorney notice of motion for a new trial and a statement. Afterwards, plaintiff's attorney gave defendants' attorney notice that on the 13th day of August, 1865, at one o'clock P. M., he would apply to the Judge at his chambers, in Petaluma, to settle the statement on motion for a new trial, and would also bring on for hearing the motion for a new trial. On said 13th day of August the parties appeared by their attorneys before the Judge, and the statement was duly settled. Immediately thereafter the motion for new trial came on to be heard, and plaintiff's counsel refused to argue the motion. The Judge then denied a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Ejectment for about three acres of land situate in the City of Petaluma. The answers contain a general denial and set up the Statute of Limitations. The trial was by the Court—finding and judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff moved for a new trial—the motion was denied and the appeal is from the order of denial and from the judgment.

The plaintiff, to prove his title to the premises in controversy, gave in evidence a patent thereof issued by the State to N. L. Thompson, dated September 6th, 1860, granting the lands as swamp and overflowed. The evidence which the defendants were permitted to introduce to the effect that the larger part of the lands were dry and fit for cultivation, was improperly admitted, inasmuch as the defendants neither brought nor offered to bring themselves into relations either with the State or the United States.

The point is so well settled as to require no discussion.

Statement of Facts.

(Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 295; Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 610; People v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 242; Page v. Hobbs et al., 27 Cal. 483.)

But it is insisted for the respondents that the plaintiff abandoned his motion for a new trial by refusing to argue it in the Court below. This point is not well taken. The statement sets forth specifically the grounds of the motion — the motion was duly made and submitted — and this includes everything essential to a prosecution of the proceeding.

The objection urged by the respondents, that the lands covered by the patent are within the incorporated City of Petaluma, is of no avail; for the reason that the fact is not apparent on the face of the patent, nor are the respondents in a position to bring it forward by averment.

As to the defense of the Statute of Limitations, there was no evidence in the case tending to sustain it.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

THOMAS DENNIS, SHERIFF OF THE COUNTY OF SANTA BARBARA v. ALBERT PACKARD AND L. T. BURTON.

JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETIES ON AN INDEMNIFYING BOND.—If a Sheriff is indemnified for an act done by virtue of his office, and an action is brought against him to recover damages for the act, and judgment is recovered against him, the Sheriff cannot afterwards have judgment against the sureties on the indemnifying bond upon a notice of five days, unless he gave the sureties written notice of the action brought against him.

THE plaintiff, who was Sheriff of Santa Barbara County, by virtue of an attachment issued in the suit of Abadie & Brothers v. Zuinga, levied upon a quantity of corn and beans as the property of Zuinga. After the levy, one Curiacl claimed the property, and a Sheriff's jury was called, who found that the property belonged to the claimant. The plaintiff's Abadie & Brothers with the defendants here as sureties, then gave the Sheriff an indemnifying bond. Afterwards Curiacl brought an action against the Sheriff for the levy, and recovered judgment.

Opinion of the Court.

The Sheriff gave no written notice to the sureties of the pendency of the action, but after the judgment had been recovered by Curia moved for judgment against the sureties on the indemnity bond, under the six hundred and forty-fifth section of the Civil Practice Act. The motion, by consent, was referred to a referee to investigate the facts and report a judgment. The referee reported a judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendants moved the Court to set aside the judgment reported by the referee and substitute a judgment for the defendants for costs. The Court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

S. F. & J. Reynolds, for Appellant.

Eugene Lies, for Respondents.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The evidence upon which the motion was made is contained in the transcript, and agreed to by counsel. The plaintiff, upon the evidence introduced in support of the motion, was not entitled to a judgment against the sureties. Section six hundred and forty-five provides a summary remedy, of which a Sheriff cannot avail himself without showing a strict compliance with the terms of that section. It does not appear from the case made that the Sheriff ever gave the sureties the written notice of the action brought against him by Curia, for which that section calls. Such being the case, he cannot avail himself of this remedy, but is left to his action upon the indemnity bond.

PLEADING SPECIAL DAMAGES.—When damages are special and do not necessarily accrue from the act complained of, the facts out of which they arise must be specially averred in the complaint or they cannot be recovered.

Opinion of the Court.

SPECIAL DAMAGES FOR DETENTION OF A MARE.—If the plaintiff, in an action to recover possession of a mare and damages for her detention, claims damages because the animal has lost flesh in consequence of having been kept upon short pasturage, and because she was detained during the breeding season, these facts must be specially averred as a ground of damages.

REVIEW OF ORDER DENYING COSTS.—An error of the Court in refusing to allow a party costs cannot be reviewed on an appeal from an order denying a new trial.

APPEAL from the District Court, Second Judicial District, Tehama County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

W. S. Long, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to recover a mare and colt seized by the defendant (Sheriff of Tehama County) under an attachment, and damages for their detention. Plaintiff recovered the property. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground that certain special damages, claimed to have been proved, were not found for him. The motion was denied, and the plaintiff appeals from the order denying a new trial.

The appellant claims, that the evidence shows that the animals were placed by defendants in fields where the pasturage was poor, and that, in consequence of this act, they lost flesh and depreciated in value to the extent of five hundred dollars. Also, that the mare was a valuable brood mare, taken to Tehama County for the purpose of being bred to a particular horse, and that by reason of the taking and detention by defendants, the breeding season was lost, whereby a further damage was shown to have been sustained to the amount of five hundred dollars, and that the Court should upon the evidence have found these items of damage for plaintiff.

On examination of the pleadings, we find no averments in the complaint that would authorize the recovery of the items claimed. These damages are special, and the facts out of which they arise must be averred, or they cannot be recovered.

Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Chitty says: "Damages are either general or special. General damages are such as the law implies, or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of. Special damages are such as really took place and are not implied by law, and are either superadded to general damages arising from an act injurious in itself, as when some particular damage arises from the uttering of slanderous words actionable in themselves; or are such as arise from an act indifferent and not actionable in itself, but only injurious in its consequences," etc. (1 Ch. Pl. 395.)

Again: "It does not appear necessary to state the former description of the damages in the declaration, because presumptions of law are not in general to be pleaded or averred as facts, etc. * * * But when the law does not necessarily imply that the plaintiff sustained the damages by the act complained of, it is essential to the validity of the declaration that the resulting damage should be shown with particularity. * * * And whenever the damages sustained have not necessarily accrued from the act complained of, and consequently are not implied by law, then in order to prevent surprise on the defendant which might otherwise ensue at the trial, the plaintiff must in general state the particular damage which he has sustained, or he will not be permitted to give evidence of it. Thus in an action of trespass and false imprisonment, where the plaintiff offered to give in evidence that during the imprisonment he was stinted in his allowance of food, he was not permitted to do so, because the fact was not, as it should have been, stated in the declaration; and in a similar action it was held that the plaintiff could not give evidence of his health being injured, unless specially stated. So in trespass 'for taking a horse,' nothing can be given in evidence which is not expressed in the declaration, and if money was paid over in order to regain possession, such payment should be alleged as special damages." (Ib. 396.)

The complaint in this case only alleges the ownership of the animal, the value, the wrongful taking and detention, the demand and that plaintiff "has sustained damages by reason of such wrongful taking and detention of said chattels and property in the sum of one thousand dollars."

From these facts alone, the law does not imply either of the items of damages claimed to have been proved. The first item is not even consequential upon any of the facts alleged, but results from other acts of defendants while the animals were in his possession. And the second item of damages would not necessarily result from a mere taking and detention. These damages depend upon an extraordinary value of the animal for a particular purpose, and upon the special use to which she was capable of being applied. The facts out of which these items of special damages arise must be alleged in the complaint, or they cannot be recovered. They are not alleged, and are, therefore, not embraced within the issues to be tried. For this reason, if for no other, the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment for such items of damages. There was, then, no error in not finding for plaintiff on these points.

The only other point made by appellant is, that the Court erred in not giving plaintiff costs. There is no doubt in our minds that the plaintiff was entitled to costs. But this error in no way affects the finding and is not a ground for new trial. The error cannot, therefore, be corrected on appeal from an order denying a new trial. The proper mode of reviewing and correcting this error is on appeal from the judgment, but no such appeal has been taken in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

F. FARWELL v. A. P. JACKSON, JACOB L. FOSTER,
AND R. H. WATERMAN.

JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.—If a mortgage is assigned by the mortgagee to another party as a pledge for the payment of a debt due the other party by the mortgagee, it is not an improper joinder of several causes of action for the assignee to unite in the same action his claim against the mortgagor and mortgagee and persons having liens or encumbrances upon the mortgaged property and make them all parties.

Opinion of the Court.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—The party relying upon the Statute of Limitations by demurrer must specially point out the objection in his demurrer, or it will be disregarded.

JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER.—Where one only of several defendants appears and demurs and the demurrer is sustained, it is error for the Court to give judgment in favor of the defendant who does not appear.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellant.

Whitman & Wells, for Respondents.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This action was commenced against Jackson, Foster and Waterman, in August, 1863. It appears from the complaint that on the 26th of October, 1861, Jackson made and delivered to the plaintiff his promissory note for two hundred dollars, and to secure the payment of the note he assigned to the plaintiff a certain mortgage executed to him by Foster, November 29th, 1858, to secure and indemnify him against any loss that he might sustain in consequence of his having executed a promissory note as surety for Foster to M. A. Wheaton for the payment of five hundred dollars, three months after date, the note bearing even date with the mortgage. Suit was commenced on the note to Wheaton, and Foster having failed to pay the same, Jackson, on the 29th of November, 1859, paid the note, which then amounted to six hundred and nineteen and fifty-four one hundredths dollars. It is stated that Waterman claims to have some interest in or claim upon the mortgaged premises, which is subject and subsequent to the mortgage. The plaintiff seeks to foreclose the mortgage.

Foster was not served and he does not appear in the action, and Jackson neither demurred to nor answered the complaint. Waterman demurred to the complaint on the grounds: First—That several causes of action were improperly united—a cause of action against Jackson alone, with a cause of action wherein Waterman and Foster were necessary parties; Second—That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and Third—That the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible and uncertain. The demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was rendered against the plaintiff in favor of all the defendants. The plaintiff, and Jackson, one of the defendants who did not appear in the Court below, joined in the notice of appeal, and they unite in assigning for error, the order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

The first and third causes of demurrer are clearly not sustainable. We are not apprised of the point relied upon to sustain the second cause of demurrer, as no brief of the respondents is on file, but from the points of the appellants we presume that the Statute of Limitations was mainly relied upon. We held in Brown v. Martin, (25 Cal. 82,) that the party relying upon the Statute of Limitations, by demurrer, must specially point out the objection in his demurrer, otherwise the objection would be disregarded.

We may remark in explanation of our views of the case, that we regard the action as brought by the plaintiff, as the pledgee of the mortgage of Foster to Jackson, to foreclose the mortgage and recover the amount that became due to Jackson upon his payment of the note to Wheaton. The judgment in favor of the defendant, who was served, but did not appear in the action, cannot be sustained, whatever may be the nature of the action.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to the Court below to overrule the demurrer.

Assessor. The Board may require the Assessor to enter on the assessment roll other property which has not been assessed; but when entered by the Assessor, he and not the Board must give it a proper valuation.

CHANGING ASSESSED VALUE OF PROPERTY BY THE BOARD.—The Board for the equalization of taxes cannot under the Revenue Act of 1861 diminish or increase the assessed value of property as fixed by the Assessor, unless complaint has first been made to them, and reasonable notice has been given to the party assessed or interested of the day when they will act in the case.

ADDING TO THE ASSESSED VALUE OF PROPERTY.—The Board for the equalization of taxes cannot under the Revenue Act of 1861 add to the valuation of property, as fixed by the Assessor, without evidence authorizing them to do so.

POWER OF BOARD TO MAKE A NEW ASSESSMENT.—If the Assessor fixes the assessed value of the property of a person or firm, and the Board of Equalization afterwards, instead of adding to the valuation of the property so assessed, makes a new assessment, this new assessment is void, even if the party interested receives notice and appears and evidence is taken.

ORDER OF BOARD INCREASING ASSESSED VALUE OF PROPERTY.—An order of the Board of Equalization adding to the assessed valuation of a person's property, should show upon its face that it is merely increasing the valuation of the particular property placed on the assessment roll by the Assessor.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Yuba County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

W. C. Belcher, for Appellant.

Under the revenue laws in force in 1861 the Board of Equalization could not make an assessment, and could not even fix a value upon any specific item of property which had been listed and entered upon the assessment roll, but had not been assessed or valued by the Assessor. (Statutes of 1861, p. 427, Sec. 23; Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 633; Adams v. Justices, 21 Geo. 206; Hamilton v. The State, 3 Indiana, 452; Hays v. P. M. S. S. Co., 17 Howard, U. S., 596; People v. Pico, 20 Cal. 595. The powers of Boards of Equalization were at that time and are now limited to equalizing assessments already made by the Assessor; that is to say, adding to or deducting from the assessed valuation of specific property, and to requiring the Assessor to list and assess any property which had been omitted from the assessment roll. (See section of statute above cited.)

Before the Board of Equalization could take any action in regard to the valuation of property, it must have been listed and assessed by the Assessor; and a lumping assessment, under the head of "personal property," made by him, was not sufficient. (Faulkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 172.) All action of such a Board, outside of the authority conferred upon it by statute, is altogether void.

The action of the Board of Equalization of Yuba County, in changing the assessed value of the property of Reynolds Brothers, as shown by the records in this case, was making and not equalizing an assessment, and was without authority of law, and void.

George Rowe, for Respondent.

"The Board of Supervisors is a special tribunal, with mixed powers, administrative, legislative, and judicial. Its judgments or orders cannot be attacked in a collateral way any more than the judgments of Courts of record." (Waugh v. Shauncy, 13 Cal. 11, 12.)

The defendant had his day in Court before the Supervisors, after due notice. One of the firm was there as a witness. There is no evidence of unfairness. Their order or judgment still stands, and while it stands it is conclusive on the defendant as to the amount of tax which he should pay—nominally one thousand two hundred dollars. The delinquent list and the record of the Board of Equalization established the existence of all the facts found by the Court, and consequently the validity of the judgment.

It is the duty of the Board of Equalization to equalize the assessment of all the personal property in the county; and they had a right to add other property to the assessment list, as well as to increase or decrease the assessment on the property given in by the party or returned by the Assessor. And if a Board of Equalization add to the valuation returned by the Assessor, the law will presume it to be done upon sufficient evidence, unless the contrary appear. (Hambleton v. Dempsey & Co., 20 Ohio, 168.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was brought to recover one thousand two hundred dollars, alleged to be due from the defendant, as the survivor of the firm of Reynolds Brothers, for State and county taxes for the year 1861. From the case it appears that the Assessor of Yuba County assessed and set down upon the assessment roll as subject to taxation for said year, five hundred dollars, as the value of certain personal property of the firm of Reynolds Brothers, which list was furnished to the Assessor by one of the firm in a statement verified by affidavit. The property so assessed and placed on the roll was described as household furniture in the office of the firm. The assessment roll thus made up was afterwards duly submitted to the Board of Equalization, whereupon the Board, in the presence of a member of the firm, made an order assessing the property of the firm, without any specification of what it consisted, and without limitation of it to the property already assessed, at the value of fifty thousand dollars. To the action and decision of the Board, the firm, by the member thereof in attendance, objected. By the answer of the defendant, it is denied that the firm of Reynolds Brothers was worth or had, in the year 1861, in their possession in the County of Yuba personal property of any kind liable to taxation in said county for State or county purposes of the value of fifty thousand dollars, or of any greater value than five hundred dollars. It is then stated that the personal property of the firm was assessed in said year at the value of five hundred dollars, but it is denied that the Board of Equalization made or ordered any changes or corrections except as shown in the records of the proceedings of the Board, which are set forth in the answer. The defendant then averred a tender to the Tax Collector of the taxes upon the value of the property as originally assessed, and that he had always been ready and willing to pay the same; and with his answer he brought the money tendered into Court to be paid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's attorney admitted the truth of this averment on the trial, and agreed with the defendant that such tender had been kept good, and should be regarded as a sufficient tender, provided the plaintiff was not entitled to recover beyond the amount of tax on the property at the valuation of five hundred dollars.

The Court before whom the action was tried without a jury, rendered a judgment against the defendant for the amount claimed, together with the fees of the District Attorney and the costs of the action. A motion for a new trial was made by the defendant and denied by the Court, and this appeal brings the whole case before us for review.

The twenty-third section of the Revenue Act (Laws 1861, p. 427) confers on the Board of Equalization the power to determine all complaints made in regard to the alleged value of any property; and the power to change and correct any valuation either by adding thereto or deducting therefrom, if they deem the sum fixed in the assessment roll too small or too great. It also provides that if the Board find it necessary to add to the assessed valuation of any property on the assessment roll, then they shall cause a proper and reasonable notice to be given to the person interested, of the day when they will act in the case. This statute does not authorize the Board to add other property to that contained in the assessment roll, though they may require the Assessor to enter thereon any mortgage, lien or other property which has not been assessed; and when entered on the roll it is the office of the Assessor to fix upon it a proper valuation.

In matters relating to the assessment of property the Board of Equalization may hear and determine complaints respecting the same, and may correct errors in the assessment roll submitted to them, by diminishing or increasing the valuation fixed by the Assessor upon the property therein described; but they cannot increase the assessed value without complaint, nor then until the party interested has had reasonable notice of the day when they will act in the case. When the party interested appears in answer to the notice or summons he is entitled to be informed of the matters which he may be required to meet; and until a case be established authorizing an addition to be made to the assessed valuation of the property, he will have nothing to rebut, but may rest securely upon the assessed valuation. The Board have no more right to add to the assessed valuation of property without evidence authorizing them to do so, than a Court or jury have to find facts and determine the rights of litigants without evidence. If Boards of Equalization may arbitrarily, and of their own mere caprice, increase the assessed valuation of property, then they possess a power without prescribed limits, which may be used for the purposes of the grossest oppression and injustice.

It is claimed, on the part of the plaintiff, that the Board of Equalization had the right to add other property to the assessment list, as well as to increase or diminish the assessed valuation fixed upon the property by the Assessor in the original assessment roll. A sufficient answer to this is, that the statute does not warrant any such conclusion; and no intendment is to be made in support of the acts of officers of inferior or limited jurisdictions, where it appears that such acts were not authorized. Such acts are, in the nature of things, coram non judice and void; and the party who is sought to be affected by them, to his injury, is at liberty to resist their execution, when attempted to be enforced, in an action at law, or otherwise. (Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 683.)

The plaintiffs to make out their case produced in evidence the delinquent tax list of the County of Yuba for the year 1861, and read therefrom the following entry: "Reynolds Brothers, bankers—value of personal property, $50,000; total value, $50,000; total tax, $1,200." They also read in evidence entries made in the record of the Board of Equalization for the same year, from which it appeared that on the 16th of August, 1861, in the matter of the application of the County Assessor for an increase of the assessed value of the property of Reynolds Brothers, R. J. Reynolds, one of the firm, who had been summoned; and the Assessor, came before the Board, and that R. J. Reynolds and one Marchaud were sworn and examined as witnesses, and then the further hearing of the application was passed. On the next day the Board met again, and the entry of that day's proceedings, as produced in evidence, was in the following words: "In the matter of the citation of R. J. Reynolds.—The Board having duly considered the matter herein, doth order, after the testimony of R. J. Reynolds having been heard and considered, that the said Reynolds Brothers be and the total assessed value of their property is set at $50,000."

The forty-third section of the Act declares that the delinquent list, or a copy thereof duly certified, showing unpaid taxes against any person or property, shall be prima facie evidence in any Court to prove the assessment, the property assessed, the delinquency, the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the assessment and levy of such taxes have been complied with. The delinquent list, it will be observed, must show upon its face certain things, and these things are specified in the twentieth section of the Act. This twentieth section of the Act makes it the duty of the Assessor to prepare a tax list or assessment roll, in which shall be listed or assessed all the real estate, improvements on real estate, improvements on public lands, and other personal property within the limits of the county. When the owner of the property so listed and assessed is known, his name is to be set down in connection with it as the owner, and the cash value of the property, if it be personal property other than improvements on real estate or public lands, is also to be stated as the assessed value of the same. After the assessment roll shall have been submitted to the Board of Equalization and passed from them to the County Auditor, this officer is required to perform such things as are prescribed, in the correction and completion of the assessment roll, and then deliver a true copy of it, as corrected, to the Tax Collector. This corrected copy is styled in the statute, "Duplicate Assessment Roll" (Laws 1861, pp. 425, 428, Sections 20, 23, 24.). Having received the duplicate assessment roll, it is made the duty of the Tax Collector to proceed to collect the taxes; and at the close of his official business for the day, on the third Monday of November, he is required to enter upon the duplicate assessment roll a statement that he has made a levy upon all the property therein assessed, the taxes of which have not been paid; and immediately thereafter, to ascertain the amount of taxes then delinquent, and to file a verified statement thereof in the office of the Auditor; and within a prescribed period to make out and file in the Auditor's office a verified list of all persons and property then owing any taxes; which list it is declared shall be known as the "Delinquent List." (Same Act, Sections 32, 34.) Thus it is seen what must be the character of the delinquent list in order to constitute it prima facie evidence of the matters specified in the forty-third section of the Act.

As appears, the plaintiff produced in evidence the delinquent list in the form already set forth, showing that the personal property of Reynolds Brothers, in the County of Yuba, was assessed for the year 1861 at fifty thousand dollars, and that the amount of the taxes was twelve hundred dollars. But it also appears from the pleadings and evidence that the property of the firm was assessed in the first place by the Assessor at the value of five hundred dollars, and that the Board of Equalization changed the assessment, not by adding to the valuation of the property so assessed, but by making a new assessment. The order was, "that the said Reynolds Brothers be and the total assessed value of their property is set at fifty thousand dollars." The property thus valued at fifty thousand dollars, by the natural import of the words, comprehends all the property of the firm. If the Board intended to limit their action to increasing the valuation of the particular property placed on the assessment roll by the Assessor, it should have been made so to appear. But it is not pretended on the part of the respondent that such was the intention of the Board, and it cannot be presumed that such was the effect of the order in the entire absence of evidence thereof. As we have already observed, the statute does not authorize the Board to add other property to the list made by the Assessor. They may require the Assessor to enter on the assessment roll property which has not been assessed; and when entered on the roll the Assessor is to estimate and fix upon it a proper valuation. The action of the Board, as manifested by the record of its proceedings, was unauthorized, and therefore void.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded to the Court below with directions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for twelve dollars, the sum tendered, but without costs.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. JOHN STURGIS v. MARK SHEPARD, JUDGE OF THE COUNTY COURT OF CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

WANT OF JURISDICTION RENDERS A JUDGMENT VOID.—A judgment of a County Court discharging an insolvent from his debts, when the Court has no jurisdiction, is void in the extreme sense, and leaves the creditors at liberty to enforce the collection of their debts at discretion.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT IN INSOLVENT CASES.—The constitutional amendments have not withdrawn from the Supreme Court the jurisdiction to review on appeal judgments in insolvent proceedings.

REVIEW OF JUDGMENTS IN INSOLVENT CASES.—Proceedings in insolvent cases must be brought before the Supreme Court by appeal and not by certiorari.

WHEN CERTIORARI WILL LIE.—Certiorari does not lie where there is an appeal.

THIS was an original proceeding commenced in the Supreme Court. On the 7th day of July, 1856, relator recovered a judgment in the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Contra Costa County, against George F. Worth.

On the 21st day of January, 1858, the insolvent (Worth) filed his petition in the District Court of the Seventh District, in Contra Costa County, praying to be discharged from his debts, under the Insolvent Act of 1852. After publication of notice to creditors, and on the 2d day of March, 1858, (the day appointed in said order for the meeting of creditors,) no creditor having appeared, the Court made and signed a formal order by which the Sheriff was authorized to act as assignee, and by which, also, the assets, both real and personal, of the insolvent, appearing to be exempt by law from process, were set apart for his and his family's use. On the same day an entry was made by the Clerk upon the "minutes" of the Court to the effect that the insolvent was ordered to be discharged from his debts.

In January, 1863, relator, a judgment creditor described in insolvent's schedule, applied to the Court to dismiss the proceedings upon the alleged ground of want of diligence in prosecuting the same to final judgment. This was refused. In February, 1863, relator applied to the Court to have execution issued on his judgment described in insolvent's schedule, as one of the debts from which he sought discharge. This also was refused. On February 23d, 1863, relator's application for leave to bring action to revive his judgment was granted. Such action was brought, and in defense, and as a bar thereto, insolvent pleaded and on trial introduced the entire record of his insolvency proceedings as constituting and presenting a judgment of discharge from the debt sued on. The Court held the record to constitute no defense, that the order or decree of discharge was "void," in being made ten days prior to the time prescribed by the twentieth section of the Insolvent Act for opposition by creditors; and upon this ground rendered judgment, in January, 1864, for the plaintiff.

In July, 1864, under the amended Constitution, and by virtue of the Act for the "Transfer of Civil Cases," (See Laws 1863-4, p. 3, Sec. 3,) these proceedings in insolvency, as still "pending and undetermined," were transferred to the proper County Court, which thereupon taking jurisdiction as provided in such cases, at its next regular term in September, 1864, after appearance and opposition thereto made by relator, rendered in behalf of insolvent a full, formal, and final judgment or decree of discharge from (as by its terms expressed) all his debts contracted after the passage of the Act of 1852, and duly set forth and named in his schedules filed in 1858.

Certiorari, to review the proceedings of the County Court of Contra Costa County, in Worth v. His Creditors.

It appears that an order was made in the said proceeding, on the 23d day of July, 1864, restraining the relator from enforcing the collection of a judgment for six thousand nine hundred and thirty dollars, recovered by him against Worth in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, January 6th, 1864; and that a judgment was entered on the 7th of September, 1864, discharging Worth from his debts. The point is made that it is apparent on the face of the record that the County Court had no jurisdiction to make the order or to render the judgment of discharge; and for the alleged reason that the insolvency proceedings had, anterior to both the order and judgment, been ended by a final judgment in the District Court wherein it was originally instituted. Should this be conceded, it would follow that the supplementary action of the County Court was void in the extreme sense; leaving the plaintiff at liberty to enforce the collection of his judgment at discretion. But assuming that the petitioner as one of the creditors of Worth, has the right to call upon this Court to review the proceedings of the County Court and that our interposition is essential to his just relief, then the remedy of the defendant is by appeal and not by writ of review. The latter lies only when the former does not. It was decided in Kohlman v. Wright, 6 Cal. 281, and in Fisk v. His Creditors, 12 Cal. 281, not only that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction in error in insolvency cases, but that such cases might be brought up by appeal. The jurisdiction in error has not been withdrawn by the constitutional amendments; nor has the three hundred and thirty-sixth section of the Practice Act, JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.—Justices of the Peace have no jurisdiction of actions to recover possession of lands and tenements from those who detain the same after the termination of or contrary to the terms of the lease under which they entered into possession.

JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURTS.—County Courts are vested, by the amendments to the Constitution, with exclusive jurisdiction of actions of unlawful detainer, as well as for forcible entry and detainer.

ACT OF APRIL 27TH, 1863.—The Act of April 27th, 1863, entitled, "An Act concerning unlawful holding over of lands, tenements, and other possessions," is unconstitutional and void.

APPEAL from the County Court, Sacramento County.

On the 15th day of February, 1864, plaintiff, as landlord, commenced an action before a Justice of the Peace against defendant, his tenant, for holding over contrary to the terms of his lease.

The action was commenced under the provisions of the Act of April 27th, 1863, entitled "An Act concerning unlawful holding over of lands, tenements, and other possessions." The defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the Court. The objection was overruled, and a trial had which resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed to the County Court, where it was held that the Justice's Court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action, and accordingly the judgment was reversed and the case dismissed. From the judgment of the County Court the plaintiff appealed.

Robert Robinson, and P. Dunlap, for Appellant.

W. R. Cantwell, and George R. Moore, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The only question presented for our consideration relates to the constitutionality of the Act under which this suit was commenced, it being claimed upon the one hand, and denied upon the other, that it conflicts with the eighth and ninth sections of Article VI of the Constitution as amended in 1862.

The eighth section defines the jurisdiction of the County Courts, and among other things declares that they "shall have original jurisdiction of actions of forcible entry and detainer." The ninth section declares that "the Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each city and township of the State, and fix by law their powers, duties and responsibilities; provided such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several Courts of record. The Supreme Court, the District Courts, County Courts, the Probate Courts, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be Courts of record."

It is insisted on the part of the appellant that the words "forcible entry and detainer" contained in the eighth section embrace only cases of forcible entry into lands and tenements, and a forcible detainer after peaceable entry, and do not include cases like the present of unlawful holding over of lands, tenements, and other possessions after the termination of the demise or after a failure to pay rent according to the terms of the lease. This would doubtless be so if the reading of those words is to be confined to the language of strict definition; but we think the reading should give as broad a signification to the words in question as they have received in the nomenclature of modern legislation and in common professional parlance. Under the general head of "forcible entry and detainer," nearly every one if not all the States of the American Union have legislated, in the same Act, not only upon the subject of forcible entry and forcible detainer, but also upon the subject of unlawful detainer, thus treating all three as one general subject, sufficiently described by the words in question. If technical exactness is to be observed, a more full and complete statement of the subject of such legislation would find expression in the words "forcible entry and forcible and unlawful detainer." Yet this exactness of designation has not been observed in the legislation of the country nor in its legal parlance. We speak of such legislation as the Forcible Entry and Detainer Acts. We speak in general terms of this or that action as being brought under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, regardless of the minor fact whether it be for a forcible entry or a forcible detainer, or an unlawful detainer, thus using the words in a generic sense and as comprehending all three.

The Act in our own State upon this subject prior to the constitutional amendments of 1862 is entitled "An Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers." This title is quite as inexact as the one which we have been considering. Yet under it the Legislature proceeded to provide for a forcible detainer as well as a forcible entry and unlawful detainer. The title used in most of the other States is the same as that adopted in the amended Constitution, yet they proceed under that general head to provide for unlawful detainers.

Our construction is also sustained by the terms of the Judiciary Act organizing the Courts under the amended Constitution. (Statutes 1863, p. 336.) Unlawful detainer as a subject distinct from forcible entry and detainer is not mentioned in that Act. Jurisdiction of actions of forcible entry and detainer is given to County Courts in accordance with the Constitution. No jurisdiction in cases of unlawful detainer is given to Justices' Courts. Hence, so far as that Act is concerned, no provision is made for the latter cases unless they are included in the former. Yet it is generally understood that the principal author of the constitutional amendments, and of the Judiciary Act of 1863, was the same person. Had he intended to separate unlawful from forcible detainers by his constitutional amendments, giving jurisdiction over the latter to the County Courts, and leaving jurisdiction over the former to be conferred by the Legislature upon Justices' Courts, or such other inferior Courts as they might create, that intention would have doubtless been carried out in the Judiciary Act; but such is not the case, and the whole subject of forcible entries and forcible and unlawful detainers seems to have been considered as provided for under the general head of forcible entries and detainers, and jurisdiction over the same given to the County Courts.

Another view may be taken of this question, which is perhaps more conclusive than the one already considered.

It cannot be denied but that actions, either for a forcible entry or a forcible or unlawful detainer, involve the possession of real property. Their primary object is to obtain that possession of lands and tenements which has been forcibly taken or is forcibly or unlawfully detained. The recovery of rents and damages is incidental to the recovery of possession, and the former cannot be had without the latter. The possession of real property is therefore as much involved in these actions as in an action of ejectment. Such being the case, it follows that if the jurisdiction of the County Courts, as defined in the Constitution, in these cases is confined to forcible entries and forcible detainers, the jurisdiction of actions for unlawful detainers is vested by the Constitution in the District Courts. For the sixth section of Article VI provides, among other things, that the District Courts "shall have original jurisdiction in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property." The only exception to this rule is found in the eighth section, which confers upon the County Courts jurisdiction in cases of "forcible entry and detainer." Read the two together, and the Constitution imperatively declares that the "District Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all actions at law which involve the title or possession of real property, except actions of forcible entry and detainer, of which the County Courts shall have jurisdiction." That it was one purpose of the constitutional amendments to transfer the jurisdiction over cases of unlawful detainer from Justices' Courts to the District Courts, it is presumed no one will affirm.

In conclusion, we may add that the Legislature seem to have doubted the constitutionality of the Act under consideration at the time of its passage; for on the same day they passed "An Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers," in which they provide for the latter, and expressly declare that all actions for the recovery of the possession of lands or tenements, as specified in that Act, shall be prosecuted in the County Courts.

Statement of Facts.

Our conclusion is that the Act in question is in conflict with the Constitution. and therefore null and void.

VERDICT OF SHERIFF'S JURY ON CLAIM OF PROPERTY.—Where property is levied on by a Constable or Sheriff, by virtue of an attachment or execution, as the property of the defendant in the suit, and is claimed by a third party, and a jury is called to try the right of property under the claim, and the verdict of the jury is against the claimant, this verdict is no protection to the officer in a suit brought against him by the claimant, nor is it admissible in evidence as a defense.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The defendant was a constable in Solano County, and an attachment and execution were placed in his hands, issued in the suit of F. & M. Dinkenspiel v. J. D. Perkins. By virtue of the writs defendant levied on a quantity of personal property as the property of Perkins. Plaintiffs laid claim to the property. This suit was brought to recover possession of the same. Plaintiffs recovered judgment, and defendant appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to recover a quantity of lumber. Defendant justifies the taking and detention under an attachment and execution issued in the suit of Frank et al. v. Perkins. Defendant offered in evidence the proceedings before a constable's jury to try the right of property on a claim made by plaintiffs in pursuance of sections two hundred and eighteen and six hundred and two of the Practice Act, and the verdict of the constable's jury against the plaintiffs in that proceeding. The evidence was excluded on objection by plaintiffs, and defendant excepted. This verdict did not protect the constable, and was properly excluded. (Perkins v. Thornburgh, 10 Cal. 191.)

We see no error of law, and cannot say that the verdict is not supported by the evidence.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. E. R. BUDD v. WILLIAM HOLDEN.

ACT FOR CONTESTING ELECTIONS.—The Act conferring upon any elector the right to contest the election of any person who has been declared duly elected to a public office, does not deprive the people in their sovereign capacity, on complaint made, to inquire into the authority by which any person assumes to exercise the functions of a public office or franchise.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURT IN ELECTION CASES.—The District Court has jurisdiction in an action brought by the Attorney-General, either upon his own suggestion or upon the complaint of a private party, to inquire into the authority by which any person assumes to exercise the functions of a public office or franchise, and to remove him therefrom if it be made to appear that he is a usurper having no legal title thereto.

RECORD IN ACTION FOR USURPING AN OFFICE.—In an action brought in the District Court to try the right to an office, if the record shows in any manner that all the election returns were given in evidence, the judgment will not be reversed by the appellate Court even though there is no formal statement in the record that such returns were all in evidence.

BALLOTS RETURNED TO COUNTY CLERK AS EVIDENCE.—In an action brought in the District Court to try the right to an office, the list of ballots cast in any precinct, and returned with the poll list and tally paper to the County Clerk, is better evidence of the number of votes cast at the precinct and for whom cast, than the tally list made from them by the officers of the election.

Points decided.

NAME.—The presumption of law is that the ballots are all returned to the County Clerk, and that they have not been mutilated, and if such is not the case, it should be shown by evidence.

SAME PERSON VOTING TWICE.—If the same elector votes twice at the same election, his second vote should be excluded in the count.

WHERE AN ELECTOR SHOULD VOTE.—When an elector moves his family to a county with the intention of residing there, that is the county where he should vote while his family remains there, although he passes his time and works in an adjoining county.

THIRTY DAYS RESIDENCE IN A COUNTY.—The thirty days residence in a county to entitle an elector to vote must be ascertained by excluding the day of the election.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A BALLOT.—A ballot is a single piece of paper containing the names of the candidates and the offices for which they are designated.

BALLOT CONTAINING SAME NAME TWO OR MORE TIMES.—If a ballot contains the name of a person voted for, and the office for which he is designated, two or more times, it is not for that reason to be rejected, but should be counted as one vote for the person named.

SAME.—A ballot having written or printed on it the name of a person voted for, and his office, two or more times does not constitute two or more tickets folded together.

RESIDENCE WHILE IN THE SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.—The clause in the Constitution of this State, which declares that "no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States," does not prevent a person who removes to a county while in the service of the United States, from acquiring a residence in that county while in the said service, if it is his intention so to do.

STIPULATION IN AN ACTION.—If a stipulation entered into by the respective attorneys in an action in subsequent proceedings virtually disregarded by both parties, the Court will not, after it has been thus disregarded, enforce it.

SAME.—Query? Is a stipulation, made by the relator or his private attorney with the defendant in an action brought by the Attorney-General in the name of The People against a person for unlawfully usurping an office and to remove him therefrom, binding upon the people?

CONTINUANCE ON GROUND OF SURPRISE.—If a party is taken by surprise by an extension of time to take testimony before a referee, and by the testimony thereby introduced, he should apply for a continuance for that reason in order to procure further evidence on his side, or he cannot have the benefit of the point in the appellate Court.

COSTS OF PRINTING TRANSCRIPT.—If the printed transcript in the Supreme Court is unnecessarily long, the party responsible for this will be adjudged to pay the cost of printing thus unnecessarily incurred.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Mendocino County.

The relator and defendant were both voted for for the office of County Judge of Mendocino County, at the judicial election held in the fall of 1863. The defendant was declared electeby the Board of Canvassers, and was thereafter duly commissioned by the Governor. After the defendant had entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, the Attorney-General brought an action in the District Court, in the name of The People, upon the information of the relator against the defendant, charging him with having intruded into, usurped, and unlawfully exercised the office of County Judge of Mendocino County. The action was brought under the provisions of the Fifth Chapter of the Civil Practice Act. The complaint alleged that the relator received the largest number of legal votes, and the Court is asked to adjudge the defendant an usurper, and the relator entitled to the office.

An order was made by the Court on the 21st of March, 1864, by consent of parties, appointing James L. Broaddus a referee to take and report the evidence. The order further provided that plaintiff should close his testimony in forty days, and defendant should have forty days thereafter to close his testimony, and that each party should have fifteen days thereafter to take rebutting testimony. June 13th, on application of relator, another order was made that plaintiff have five days further time after June 24th, to take testimony.

June 23d, the attorneys for relator and defendant stipulated that plaintiff might take the testimony of S. M. Smith at any time before the 12th day of July.

On the 7th day of July the following stipulation was entered into:

William H. McGrew, attorney for the relator in the above entitled cause, and Thomas B. Bond, attorney for defendant therein, hereby stipulate and agree that the said cause may be tried at the next term of the District Court of Mendocino County, on the evidence already adduced before the referee, James L. Broaddus, subject to all legal objections, and that neither party will attempt to obtain or offer to produce on the trial any other evidence except that which is expressly herein stated, namely: the plaintiff shall have the right to take before the referee the deposition of Stephen M. Smith, and the defendant the right to take rebutting evidence of not more than one witness to that of said Stephen M. Smith, and also not more than one witness in rebuttal to Charles Shanbargen's deposition taken before said referee, and also that defendant be allowed to offer in evidence a certificate of the Adjutant-General, subject to like objections.

Argument for Appellant.

July 9th, an order was made, on application of relator, granting him five days from July 11th to take Smith's testimony.

July 8th, defendant's attorney served a notice that on the 18th of July he would move the Court for leave to file an amended answer. On the 18th of July the Court granted leave, and an amended answer was filed. The Court then, on application of plaintiff, continued the cause for the term, on the ground that plaintiff was taken by surprise in consequence of the amended answer.

The District Court rendered judgment excluding defendant from the office of County Judge, and awarding the same to the relator. The defendant appealed.

Bennett, Cook & Clarke, for Appellant.

It is insisted that the course provided by the election laws for a contest is merely cumulative to the rights to contest by information, in the nature of a quo warranto.

This we deny, for the reasons:

1. That both remedies are created by statute.
2. The right to hold the office, the manner in which it can be obtained, etc., is regulated wholly by the statute, which fixes and prescribes the mode of its exercise; which same statute provides, in case of contest, the mode and manner in which such contest shall be settled; consequently, the statute must be followed both in the election and contest.
3. Information in the nature of a quo warranto was intended to reach an entire different class of officers and persons; persons, for instance, appointed by the Governor, by the Board of Pilot Commissioners, or any other appointing power.

Stipulations have invariably been held binding by the Courts of this State. (Kalkman v. Bayliss, 23 Cal. 305; Doe on

We insist that Courts cannot set aside or disregard a stipulation of this kind, except after notice of motion for that purpose, and a showing that it was entered into by mistake or in ignorance of material circumstances; or, in other words, for the same causes that a Court of equity will set aside any other agreement. George Cadwalader, for Respondent.

The proceeding to contest an election is given to an elector, but an information in the nature of quo warranto is a prerogative writ, filed at the instance of the Attorney-General, and designed to protect the State against the exercise of its offices by unlawful tenants. There is no similarity in the proceedings, and the question has always been, not whether the District Court had jurisdiction, but whether the County Court had — the jurisdiction of the latter being supported alone on the theory that the proceeding provided for by the statute was special. (Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 152.)

The stipulation of July 7th is a very curious one — and more curious still in a suit brought by the State against the unlawful tenant of an office. In the introduction of evidence in a State case quasi criminal, the State, as well as the Court, from high motives of public policy, have some rights which are entitled to respect, and in this particular the rule is different from that of an ordinary civil case, where the parties are at perfect liberty to barter away their rights. Thus, in the election contest of Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 119, a judgment of ouster was rendered by default, of which Mr. Chief Justice Field observed that: "In this respect the ruling of the Court was clearly erroneous. The public is interested in a contest of this character; it is not a matter solely between the parties to the record, and the popular will is not to be set aside upon a mere failure of a party to respond to charges alleged against his right by an individual elector."

And so in this case, we can say that the State had an interest in having the office in dispute awarded to the person who was fairly elected thereto. Suppose, in a capital case, the defendant should rely upon the stipulation of a former District Attorney — during whose term of office he had been indicted — to the effect that only certain witnesses should be called and examined, would not a Court be justified in refusing to hold the State bound by it? We are not aware of a stipulation like this ever having made its appearance before a Court. The cases cited by appellant throw no light on the question, because they all were in cases between private parties, and affected rights of strictly a private nature.

It is claimed that Melindy, McGrew, and Whipple are disqualified on the ground of section four of Article XI of the Constitution of this State. This interpretation cannot for a moment be maintained, because it would make the residence of the elector compulsory — that is, the fact of his being an employé of the Government would continue his previous residence, although he might desire to change it, and manifest that desire by the most unequivocal acts. Appellant says Dr. Melindy, although he removed from Siskiyou in 1861, had been in Mendocino two years; was engaged in raising stock and practising medicine, and was a voter; yet because he had the appointment as physician to the Indians on the Reservation, that, by force of the constitutional provision, made him a resident of Siskiyou.

It is not necessary to say that such a construction of the fourth section of Article XI is absurd. Its words, "shall be deemed to have gained or lost his residence," mean that the Government employment shall not operate so as to give him a residence at the place where his duties are to be performed, nor to subtract from him his previous residence. In other words, it leaves the elector free to fix the place of his residence by appropriate acts; and this is just what People v. Riley, 15 Cal. 48, decides.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

It is first claimed by the appellant that the District Court had no jurisdiction in the premises, and that the only remedy in cases like the present is under the statute which prescribes the mode and manner of contesting elections. (Wood's Digest, p. 380, Sec. 51.) No proposition could be more untenable. It is true that the Act providing the mode of contesting elections confers upon any elector of the proper county the right to contest, at his option, the election of any person who has been declared duly elected to a public office, to be exercised in and for such county. But this grant of power to the elector can in no way impair the right of the people, in their sovereign capacity, to inquire into the authority by which any person assumes to exercise the functions of a public office or franchise, and to remove him therefrom if it be made to appear that he is a usurper having no legal title thereto. The two remedies are distinct, the one belonging to the elector in his individual capacity as a power granted, and the other to the people in the right of their sovereignty. Title to office comes from the will of the people as expressed through the ballot-box, and they have a prerogative right to enforce their will when it has been so expressed by excluding usurpers and putting in power such as have been chosen by themselves. To that end they have authorized an action to be brought in the name of the Attorney-General, either upon his own suggestion or upon the complaint of a private party against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise within this State. It matters not upon what number of individual persons a right analogous in its results when exercised may have been bestowed, for the power in question none the less remains in the people in their sovereign capacity. It has been shared with the elector, but not parted with altogether. Substantially the same point was made in the case of The People v. Jones, 20 Cal. 50, without success.

It is next claimed that it is nowhere shown by the record that all the election returns of the various precincts were given in evidence, and hence it is argued that neither the Court below nor this Court can determine which candidate received the most votes. It may be true, as claimed, that the record does not state in so many words that all the returns were given in evidence, yet it is apparent from a comparison of the allegations of the complaint, not controverted, as to the number of votes cast, with the number as shown by the returns contained in the record, that such was the case. A formal statement that they were all introduced was not indispensable. If it appear in any manner that such was the fact it is sufficient, and we are satisfied from an examination of the record that all the returns were before the Court. Thus it is stated in the complaint that according to the count of the Board of Canvassers the relator received four hundred and eighty-eight votes, and the defendant five hundred and thirty, which is not denied in the answer. It is also stated in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that the returns from Noyo Precinct, showing upon their face forty-eight votes for the relator and ten for the defendant, were rejected by the Board of Canvassers. These votes being added to the estimate of the Board, make the entire vote of the county stand for the relator five hundred and thirty-six, and for the defendant five hundred and forty—which is the exact vote as shown by the returns contained in the record. It is manifest, therefore, that all the returns were given in evidence, and that they are now before us.

Upon the face of the returns, as already stated, the defendant received five hundred and forty and the relator five hundred and thirty-six votes, giving a majority of four to the defendant. Upon the trial the Court found that the defendant received five hundred and thirty-five votes and no more, and the relator five hundred and thirty-seven, which was subsequently, at the hearing of the motion for a new trial, reduced to five hundred and thirty-six, giving the relator one majority. It is alleged on the part of the appellant that the Court erred in thus deducting from Holden's vote.

Two of these five votes so taken from Holden by the Court were deducted from the returns from Sanel Precinct, which shows thirty-one votes for Holden. The ballots cast at that precinct were introduced in evidence, having been obtained from the Clerk's office, where they are required to be kept at least six months by the Clerk (Statutes of 1863, p. 354, Sec. 35,) from which it appeared that thirty-one Democratic tickets were polled at that precinct. Holden's name was upon all of these tickets except two, from which, as appears on inspection, his name had been torn off. Whether his name was torn off from these ballots before they were cast by the parties casting them or afterwards does not appear. Upon that question no evidence was offered by either side, and no explanation attempted. Thus the question as to the number of votes received by Holden at the precinct in question had to be determined upon the evidence afforded by the certified returns of the officers of the election on the one hand and the ballots on the other. The Court below held that the ballots were the most reliable evidence, and we are of the opinion that its conclusion was not erroneous.

Prior to 1863 there was no rule of law requiring the preservation of ballots cast at an election for any purpose. On the contrary the Inspector of Elections was required to destroy them after the count and completion of the returns. (Wood's Digest, p. 378, Sec. 35.) But in 1863 the law was amended so as to require the Inspector to string the ballots on a cord or thread, and return them with the poll list and tally paper to the County Clerk, to be kept by him for at least six months. (Statutes of 1863, p. 354, Sec. 35.) And it was further enacted that any person might appear before the Board of Canvassers on the day appointed for opening the returns and demand a recount of the ballots if he had any reason to believe that they had not been correctly counted by the officers of the election.

Opinion of the Court.

The Legislature could have had no other design in thus providing for the preservation of the ballots than to make them evidence of their own contents and a test of the correctness of the returns made up from them by the officers of the election. They are in fact made a part of the returns, for it is expressly provided that they shall be sealed up with the poll list and tally paper, with the certificates of the officers attached, and indorsed "Election Returns." Thus they are recognized by the law not only as a part of the election returns, and therefore evidence of what transpired at the election, but as evidence of a higher and more satisfactory grade than the tally paper. Intrinsically considered, it must be conceded by all that the ballots themselves are more reliable, and therefore better evidence than a mere summary made from them. Into the latter errors may find their way, but with the former this cannot happen. The relation between the two is at least analogous to that of primary and secondary evidence. This we do not understand the learned counsel as controverting, but he insists that the use of the ballots as evidence is limited to a test of the correctness of the tally paper on the day appointed for the Board of Canvassers to open the returns, and that on that day they become and thereafter remain functus officio. That such was the intent of the Legislature we cannot admit. In no event can the Board of Canvassers postpone the opening of the returns beyond the second Monday after the election. (Statutes 1861, p. 529, Sec. 38.) If at that time it was intended that the ballots should become functus officio, and thereafter cease to be a part of the official returns of the election, why provide that they should be preserved and kept by the Clerk for at least six months? Why not direct that they should be destroyed by the Board of Canvassers, as was done by the Inspector under the law as it stood prior to the amendment of 1863? In the same section requiring the ballots to be preserved, we also find a provision requiring the Inspector to retain and preserve for at least six months a poll list and tally paper with the certificates of the officers attached. This provision was part of the law prior to the amendment of 1863, requiring the ballots to be preserved, and could have had no other object than to guard against the loss or fraudulent interference with those sent to the Clerk's office, and to furnish additional evidence of what transpired at the election. It is, therefore, manifest that the amendment of 1863, requiring the preservation of the ballots, had a like object, and was enacted for the purpose of further assurance.

Being, as we hold, competent, it is clear that the ballots are primary evidence, and therefore better evidence of the number of votes cast, and for whom, than the tally list made from them by the officers of the election. We must presume that the officers of the election honestly performed their duty in the premises; that they did not mutilate any of the ballots, but on the contrary strung them in the condition in which they were found in the ballot-box on a thread, and sent them in that condition to the Clerk's office. The same presumption exists in relation to their custody by the Clerk. In other words, in the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendant showing that the ballots in question were mutilated subsequent to their being deposited in the ballot-box, we are bound to presume that they were in the same condition when produced on the trial from the proper office and by the proper officer in which they were when deposited in the ballot-box. Any subsequent alteration or mutilation by any one intrusted by law with their custody would be a public crime of great enormity (Wood's Digest, p. 385, sec. 105;) and the commission of a crime cannot be presumed. (The United States v. Amedy, 11 Wheaton, 408.) If they were mutilated while in the Clerk's office it was the duty of the defendant to make proof of that fact. Not having been in the custody of the relator, but in that of the proper public functionary, he was not called upon to explain when or how the name of the defendant was torn off. The presumption, as we have already seen, was that his name was torn off by the voters themselves. Upon this presumption the relator could rely, and the labor of overthrowing it rested upon the defendant, who made no effort in that direction.

Opinion of the Court.

There is no force in the argument that the ballots are liable to become mutilated, and ought therefore to be considered of less weight as evidence than the tally list. The officers are required to string them on a cord or thread, and seal them up in a package, and deliver, or cause them to be delivered, to the County Clerk, whose duty it is to safely keep them for at least six months, and the presumption is that he has done so.

It is next claimed that the Court below erred in deducting from Holden's tally the vote of J. M. Neil, cast at Calpella Precinct. The Court found that Neil voted twice for Holden, and it is sufficient to say that, in our judgment, the finding is fully sustained by the evidence. According to the poll list the fourth vote cast at Calpella Precinct was cast by J. M. Neil, and the ninety-second and last vote was also cast by J. M. Neil. That these two votes were cast by the same person and not by two different persons of the same name, there can be no doubt. Neil himself testified that to the best of his recollection he voted in the afternoon, near sundown, for the defendant Holden. It further appears from his own testimony, and that of Mr. Cooley, one of the judges of the election, that on the evening of the election he asked to have his name erased, claiming that he was intoxicated and did not know at the time that he had voted before. There was also evidence tending to show that there was no other person of that name at that precinct, and none to the contrary. The first vote was legal, but the second was not, and the Court did not err in excluding it.

We are also of the opinion that the finding of the Court as to the residence of W. R. Robinson, who voted for Holden at Calpella Precinct, was correct. He left Mendocino County with his family in April, 1863, and went to Sonoma County with the declaration in effect that he was going there to reside. And from that time until and on the day of the election his family continued to reside in the latter county. The most that can be said on the side of the defendant is that the evidence as to Robinson's residence was conflicting. Such being the case, this Court will not disturb the finding. The fact of residence being found against him, Robinson's vote was properly rejected.

Nor did the Court err in rejecting the vote of John Carroll, cast at Gualalla Precinct. He came to the county on the 22d of September, and the election was held on the 21st of October following. In order to make thirty days, it would be necessary to count both of those days and the whole of each. The language of the Constitution and of the statute is that the voter must have resided in the county thirty days next preceding the election. In our judgment this language means that he must have resided in the county thirty days next preceding the day of the election. But conceding that it means next preceding the event of the election, such event cannot be said to have transpired until sundown on the day of the election, and a residence of thirty days in Carroll's case would not therefore have been complete until after the polls were closed.

We are satisfied that the foregoing five votes claimed by defendant were properly rejected by the Court, and that the finding that he received only five hundred and thirty-five legal votes was correct.

We now come to such of the votes, which were allowed and counted by the Court for the relator, as are claimed by the defendant to have been illegal.

It is first claimed that two votes at Sanel Precinct were improperly counted for the relator by the Court. It appears from the record that two ballots or pieces of paper with the name of the relator and the names of the other candidates of his party printed thereon three times were found in the ballot box and rejected by the officers of the election. At the trial the Court counted each of these ballots as one vote for the relator.

It is claimed that these pieces of paper were each three tickets folded together, within the meaning of the thirty-fourth section of the Act regulating elections, (Wood's Digest, p. 378,) which provides that where two tickets are found folded together, they shall both be rejected. In our judgment this point is not well made.

The twenty-fourth section defines a ballot to be "a paper ticket containing the names of the persons for whom the elector intends to vote, and designating the office to which each person so named is intended by him to be chosen." Thus a ballot, or a ticket, is a single piece of paper containing the names of the candidates and the offices for which they are running. If the elector were to write the names of the candidates upon his ticket twice or three or more times, he does not thereby make it more than one ticket. So long as there is but a single piece of paper there can be but one ticket, and if it can be discovered therefrom who are voted for and the offices for which each was intended to be chosen, it must be counted as one ballot, notwithstanding the voter may have, through inadvertence or otherwise, repeated the names and offices. Being but one piece of paper it can be but one ticket, and can only be counted as one vote. Cushing, in his work on the law and practice of legislative assemblies, at page 40, section 106, observes: "If a ballot happens to have the same name written or printed on it more than once, it is not therefore to be rejected, because as it is but one piece of paper it cannot be counted as more than one vote, and, though the same name is written on it several times, it is yet but one name. Thus, where ballots are prepared for distribution in the usual way practised in some of the States — that is, by the name of the candidate being written or printed several times on the same slip of paper, for the purpose of being cut into separate ballots, and being nearly cut apart, but so as to adhere together at one end — and an elector inadvertently puts two votes not entirely separated into the box, they will be counted as one ballot, unless there are circumstances present which afford a presumption of fraudulent intent, in which case they must either be rejected or the whole ballot set aside."

Nor did the Court err in allowing to the relator the votes of Melindy, Whipple and McGrew. The objection taken by the defendant to their votes is not well founded. They were not disqualified by reason of section four of Article Second of the Constitution. That section does not add to or take from the conditions upon which the fact of residence is made to depend. It merely declares that "no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States," which means simply that in determining the fact of residence, presence or absence in the service of the United States shall not be taken into account, or, in other words, neither presence nor absence in the service of the United States is a condition upon which the fact of residence can be affirmed or denied. Hence the mere fact that Melindy came to Mendocino County in the capacity of physician, McGrew in the capacity of Supervisor, and Whipple in the capacity of laborer to the Indian Reservation, did not deprive the first of his former residence in Siskiyou, nor the second of his former residence in Sutter, nor the last of his former residence in Contra Costa. Nor did it preclude them from acquiring a residence in Mendocino, if disposed to do so. That it was their intention to acquire a domicile in Mendocino County sufficiently appears from the evidence. Such being the case, there is nothing in the constitutional provision in question (which is merely declaratory of the common law) which stands in the way of their doing so.

The claim that the Court allowed to the relator two votes folded together and found in the ballot box at Round Valley Precinct is not sustained. Whether the two ballots in question were folded together or not was a question of fact for the Court below to find, and that Court found that the evidence failed to prove it. The affidavit of Eberlee, who was Inspector at that place, used on the motion for a new trial, fully explains the alleged irregularity, and shows that, in fact, the two ballots were not folded together. Upon comparing the number of ballots with the poll list, it appears that there were no more ballots cast than there were persons who voted, thereby showing that in all probability the two ballots in question were not cast by the same person.

Opinion of the Court.

So far as the vote of John Ward at Calpella Precinct is concerned, counsel for defendant is mistaken in supposing it was counted by the Court for the relator. The Court in effect found as a fact that Ward did not vote for the relator, but for the defendant; and we think the finding is sustained by the evidence. If Ward was a minor and he voted for the defendant, another vote ought to have been taken from him. The Court, however, so far as we are able to discover, allowed Ward's vote to stand. Of this action, at least, the defendant ought not to complain.

In regard to the points made by counsel for the defendant upon the stipulations of the 23d of June and the 7th of July, it is sufficient to say that in the progress of the case thereafter until the actual taking of the evidence to which they respectively relate, both parties seem to have virtually disregarded them. Thus, on the eighth day of July, the next day after the last stipulation was made, the defendant served notice of a motion for leave to file an amended answer, said motion to be heard on the 18th of the same month. The motion was allowed and the amended answer filed on that day. On the next day—the 19th—the plaintiff filed an amended complaint, and on the same day the Court made an order, on the motion of the defendant, directing that the amended answer be considered as the answer to the amended complaint. On the 9th of July—the next day after the notice of the defendant to the effect that he desired to amend his answer—the plaintiff obtained an order from the Judge of the Court allowing further time to take testimony, which was served on the opposite party.

What effect the amendments to the pleadings may have had upon the issues as they stood at the time these stipulations were made, we are unable to determine, for the original pleadings are not in the record. It may be that the relator could have safely gone to trial upon the issues as they then stood upon the evidence already taken at the time the stipulation was made, but could not if those issues were to be changed.

Moreover, it is very doubtful whether these stipulations were ever binding upon the people who were the real plaintiffs in the case. They were not made by the Attorney-General by whom the suit was instituted, but only by the private counsel of the relator. Theoretically the people alone are interested in the determination of the controversy involved in this case, and no Court would be justified in enforcing as against them a stipulation made by the relator or his counsel to their prejudice. The action is in no legal sense under the control of the relator. It was brought in the name of the people and to enforce their will as expressed through the ballot box and not merely to redress the wrongs or enforce the rights of the relator. (Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 119.) It is very evident that the case could not have been fairly tried or its merits reached upon the evidence taken prior to the 7th of July, for the evidence then in only disclosed about one third of the official vote of the county, and it would have been impossible to determine upon the real merits of the case whether the defendant or the relator had been elected. Under all the circumstances, we think the Court might, in its discretion, allow the additional evidence to come in. Then the only question remaining would be whether the defendant was surprised; if so, he would have been entitled to a postponement of the trial in order to procure further evidence on his side, if there was any within his reach. But although he knew that the evidence had been taken by the referee and would be reported to the Court and might be received, yet, when it was received he did not claim that he was thereby surprised, and therefore not ready to proceed with the trial. On the contrary, he was silent, and with full knowledge of all the facts, took the chances of a finding in his favor. It will not do to say, as he now does, that he did not ask for an adjournment because he was precluded from so doing by the stipulation in question. The stipulation having been disregarded by the other side and by the Court was no longer obligatory upon him. This must have been known to both him and his counsel.

The record in this case contains nearly three hundred printed pages. It is manifest that the whole case could have been fully and fairly presented in a record containing, at the outside, not more than fifty pages. For this we are satisfied that the respondent was, in a great measure, responsible. He must therefore be taxed with half the costs of making up and printing the transcript.

Judgment affirmed, with costs, except as above directed.

SHAFTER, J., dissenting.

The Court below found that the defendant received five hundred and thirty-five legal votes and the relator five hundred and thirty-seven, and that finding is regarded as correct by my brethren. For the purposes of the argument I shall make no question except upon the votes of Melindy, McGrew and Whipple, cast and counted for the relator. Deduct those votes from those thrown for the relator, and the majority will be with the defendant. Counsel agree that those three persons while living in the County of Mendocino, were in the service of the United States.

The fourth section of the Second Article of the Constitution is as follows: "For the purpose of voting no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while a student of any seminary of learning, nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense, nor while confined in any public prison."

Now, if the persons named acquired a residence in Mendocino County, how or by reason of what fact or facts did they acquire it? No reply can be given to this question which does not put the fact of their "presence" in that county as one of the grounds or "reasons" of the result. But that presence was "while they were employed in the service of the United States," and therefore "they shall not be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of it."

Opinion of Shafter, J., dissenting.

The opinion of my brethren goes upon the idea that if a citizen, having a residence in a given county, enters the military or civil service of the United States and goes to another county and lives there, partly for the reason that it is his duty so to do and partly for the reason that he wishes and intends to change his domicile; or goes solely on the score of duty, but being on the ground, concludes to make the new county his permanent home, and manifests this purpose by appropriate conduct, in that event, his presence in the new county may avail him notwithstanding he may continue in the public service. The difficulty in the way is, that the Constitution provides expressly that his presence while in the public service shall not avail him. The fallacy lies in striking out the words "while employed" and inserting the words "as employé." "While" goes to time, or duration. "As" goes to character or quality. Had the provision been that "no person shall be deemed to have acquired a residence by reason merely of his presence as employé of the Government," perhaps such employé might say: "My presence is not to be referred solely to my employment; I came here for an entirely distinct reason, moving me in my capacity as a citizen." But the constitutional inhibition has no reference to the man nor to his capacities or purposes as such. It goes, instead, upon the relation which the individual bears to the Government, and provides that "while" or during the time that the relation shall subsist, the "presence" of the party shall "for the purpose of voting," be as though it were not. In the treatment of the point now in question, no use whatever can be made of the "presence" of Melindy, McGrew and Whipple in the County of Mendocino. If each acquired a voting residence there, it must have been by force of the facts proved — less the fact of the personal "presence" or inhabitancy. But that is impossible.

Further -- It is clear that all the different classes of persons enumerated in the fourth section of the Second Article of the Constitution are subjected to a common rule. Whatever is true as to one, is applicable to all. Now, this being given, it follows, that a person who having his residence in a foreign county, should procure admission as a pauper to the almshouse in the City and County of San Francisco, and should be kept there thereafter at public expense, might claim, on the ground of the opinion from which I feel myself compelled to dissent, that he had "by reason of" his "presence" in the county "while kept in the almshouse at public expense," acquired a right to vote in the county, in the event he could show that he went to the county, or that after he got there, he remained for a double purpose, viz: to afflict the county by his "presence" as a pauper, and to distinguish it by his "presence" as a citizen, after the lapse of thirty days. And whatever is true as to a pensioner upon the public charities, is equally true as to convicts in the public prisons.

It is unnecessary to refer to the historical causes that induced the adoption of the constitutional provision under discussion, or to remark that the habits of mind developed under our system of government, leave little room for the operation of those causes here. But, however it may be now, it is apparent that the force of traditional opinions had neither been broken nor seriously impaired at the time the Constitution was adopted. If the views of the people have changed since it is clear that we cannot notice the change so long as the Constitution remains as it is.

Under the views I take of the case, the judgment should be reversed, and judgment be entered in favor of the defendant affirming his title to the office in dispute.

HOW TO ARRIVE AT MEANING OF LAWS.—The whole of a legislative Act must be construed together, and interpreted according to the intention of the Legislature apparent upon its face.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

On the 25th day of September, 1848, William C. Parker, presented a petition to T. M. Leavenworth, Alcalde of San Francisco, for a grant of the block of land then covered by water, bounded by Washington street on the north, west by a street now known as Front street, south by Clay street, and east by a street now known as Davis street, and numbered on a map of San Francisco as block No. 456, which block included the demanded premises. On the same day the Alcalde made and executed a grant of the premises to said Parker, and made a registry thereof in a book then kept by him and now in the possession of the County Recorder of the County of San Francisco, known as Book B of District Records, page 31. The grant was delivered by the Alcalde to Parker in January, 1849, and the same was presented for record and recorded in the Recorder's office, November 28th, 1849, in a book of records then kept by the Alcalde, and now in the possession of the County Recorder, and known as Book F of Deeds.

On the 11th day of October, 1848, the Ayuntamiento or Town Council of San Francisco ratified and confirmed all grants of land which had been made by Alcalde Leavenworth.

On the 1st day of April, 1850, the said Ayuntamiento again confirmed and ratified all grants of land made within the District of San Francisco by the Alcalde.

the title of said Parker to the demanded premises, and had also acquired the reversionary interest of the State in the property, under a sale made by the Board of California Land Commissioners.

On the 3d day of October, 1849, the Ayuntamiento or Town Council of San Francisco passed a resolution directing all the water lots belonging to the town to be sold at public auction, after public notice of the same being given for three months, and further directing that immediate public notice be given that the grants of water property heretofore made by Alcalde Leavenworth, without three months' previous notice of the making of such grant, are illegal, and that the property will be claimed and held by the town until sold at public auction.

January 3d, 1850, John W. Geary, then Alcalde, sold at public auction, in accordance with the resolution of October 3d, 1849, water lot No. 464, including the premises in controversy, to Thomas Sprague, for one thousand seven hundred dollars, and executed and delivered to him a deed therefor.

Plaintiffs at the time this action was commenced had acquired all of Sprague's title to the demanded premises. The complaint was in ejectment, in the usual form. The District Court gave judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

S. W. Holladay, for Appellants.

"The regularity of the respective grants is not contested." The following, then, are the positions assumed by the respective parties hereto.

The defendants claim superior title to the land, under the Water Lot Act, because:

1st. Their Alcalde grant is of a date prior to that of plaintiffs'; and,

2d. Because, as they are in possession, with title, plaintiffs cannot recover without showing better title.

On the other hand, plaintiffs claim:

1st. That, in a case like this, of two grants to the same land, (one of each sort mentioned in the statute,) the Water Lot Act gave the land to the purchasers at the Alcalde's auction sale, (plaintiffs' title) in preference to the Alcalde's grantees, on petition, (defendants' title.)

2d. In case plaintiffs are not sustained in that position, then, as there are two grants to the same land, both of which come within the terms of the statute, then the law gives the land to both of them, equally, and as both cannot take the whole, it follows that each takes one half, and the judgment should have been for plaintiff for an undivided half.

The decision of this case depends upon the construction of the Water Lot Act of March 26th, 1851, entitled "An Act to provide for the disposition of certain property of the State of California."

The Act does not "confirm" these various city titles or Alcalde grants or deeds; but, on the contrary, it contains express, positive, and apt words of grant in presenti. "The same (i. e. the lots of land) are hereby granted," is the language of the statute. These papers produced by the respective parties, such as an Alcalde grant, or a deed by the Alcalde at the auction sale, according to the Kearny grant, are useful only to designate the legislative grantees respectively—they are referred to as the earmarks, to identify the donees contemplated in the Act as descriptio personarum of the legislative grantees; but the papers themselves, or rather the transactions noted in them, are not confirmed by the statute in terms, nor by implication.

As between the purchasers at the auction sale and the grantees of the Alcalde, the Act "hereby" grants the land, first and in preference, to the purchasers at the auction sale, as distinguished from the Alcalde grantees; or in the absence of such purchaser, then it gives the land to any grantee of the Alcalde. This plain distinction runs clear through the second section of the Act. The lands "which have been sold" are first enumerated before those which have been "granted" by any Alcalde. Next, the lands are hereby granted and confirmed to the purchasers before the grantees; and, lastly, the State relinquishes the use and occupation of the land to the purchasers, or in the absence of such, to the grantees.

Haight & Pierson, for Respondents.

Upon what ground any paramount right can be asserted by a party out of possession, under a subsequent confirmed grant, against a claim against a party in possession under a prior confirmed grant, it would not be easy to discover.

The argument seems to be that as the purchasers are named first in the order of the words in the statute, when the language is "purchaser or purchasers or grantees," therefore, in case of a conflict between a purchaser and a grantee, the purchaser has the better title.

This idea, now advanced for the first time, does not seem to have been suggested to the Court in the case of Seabury v. Field, involving this same lot, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Howard, p. 324, and has therefore the merit of novelty. Where different classes of grants are named in a statute as the subject of confirmation, no one ever before supposed that the order of the words had anything to do with the question of priority.

If A. and B. each have a grant of the same lot, and both grants are confirmed, whether A. or B. is named first would be wholly immaterial. The confirmation would in each case relate back to the date of the grant, and the grant which was first made in fact must have precedence.

The word "confirm" is used, which indicates the nature of this legislative Act. (Sedgwick on Construction, 591.)

Burrill, in his Law Dictionary, defines confirmation as "a conveyance of an estate or right in esse whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased;" also as "an approbation of or assent to an estate already created by which the confirmation strengthens and gives validity to it as far as it is in his power." He says the most common and proper words are "ratified, approved, and confirmed;" and Blackstone says (Book 2d, marg. p. 325)

the most usual words are "given, granted, ratified, approved, and confirmed;" thus indicating the similarity of sense between ratification and confirmation, which are really equivalent words.

If, then, the Act of 1851 was in its essence and effect a confirmation of these grants, the same rule applies which is stated by the United States Supreme Court in Landes v. Brant, 10 Howard, 372, "that where there are divers acts concurrent to make a conveyance, estate, or other thing, the original act shall be preferred, and to this the other acts shall have relation." (Viner's Abr. Tit. Relation, 290; Jackson v. Ramsay, [printed McCall,] 3 Cowen, 79, 80; Crowley v. Wallace, 12 Mo. 147.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The lands in question constitute a portion of the "beach and water lots" of San Francisco, as defined by the Act of March 26th, 1851, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain property of the State of California." (Laws 1851, p. 307.) The defendants are in possession, claiming title under the provisions of said Act, and a grant to William C. Parker from Alcalde Leavenworth, dated September 25th, 1848, confirmed by resolutions of the Ayuntamiento or Town Council of the District of San Francisco, and registered and recorded before the 3d day of April, 1850, in the books of record then in the Alcalde's office, but afterwards turned over to, and now remaining in the custody of the Recorder of San Francisco, and also constituting a portion of the records of his office.

Plaintiffs seek to recover the lands, and rely upon the same Act and a grant to Thomas Sprague, executed by Alcalde Geary in pursuance of a sale at auction of the beach and water lots by direction of the Ayuntamiento, made on the 3d day of January, 1850. The question is, as to which party acquired the title.

Section two of the Act provides, that, "all the lands mentioned in the first section of this Act, which have been sold by the authority of the Ayuntamiento, etc., * * *; or which have been sold or granted by any Alcalde, etc., * * * [describing the lands in terms sufficiently broad to embrace both of said grants,] shall be and the same are hereby granted and confirmed to the purchaser or purchasers or grantees aforesaid, by the State relinquishing the use and occupation of the same and her interest therein to the said purchasers or grantees, their heirs and assigns, or any person or persons holding under them, for the term of ninety-nine years." * * * It then exempts the Government reservations, "except that any estate held by virtue of any lease or leases executed or confirmed by any officer of the United States on behalf of the same, shall be and the same are hereby granted and confirmed to the lessees thereof." * * *

Section three provides, that "the original deed or other written or printed instruments of conveyance, by which any of the lands mentioned in the first section of this Act were conveyed or granted by such Common Council, Ayuntamiento or Alcalde * * * may be read in evidence in any Court of justice in this State, * * * and shall be prima facie evidence of title and possession, to enable the plaintiff to recover the possession of the land so granted."

It is said that these provisions do not in terms purport to confirm the grants — the instruments executed by the Alcaldes — but, on the contrary, to make an original legislative grant without reference to any equitable rights of the parties claiming under the Alcalde grants; that those sales and grants were referred to, not because it was intended to validate and confirm them, but only to identify the individuals who were to be the recipients of the legislative bounty. It is true, the instruments in writing are not expressly mentioned as the objects to be confirmed. But the instruments are not the grants or things to be confirmed. They are but the evidence of the action of the municipal officers. But the Act does refer to lands "sold by authority of the Ayuntamiento," or "sold or granted by the Alcaldes," etc., and says that "the same are hereby granted and confirmed to the purchaser, or purchasers, or grantees aforesaid." The term "granted" is used, it is true, but the word "confirmed" is also used with reference to the prior sales and grants, and the purchasers and vendees under them, which shows that it was the intention to validate and give effect to the former sales and grants, which were invalid without such confirmation. When speaking in the same section of leases by the Government officers — which were equally invalid — the Legislature say, "that any estate held by virtue of any lease, etc., shall be and the same is hereby granted and confirmed to the lessees thereof." These leases did not purport to grant the land, and the Act did not grant or confirm any estate except that which the leases themselves purported to convey. It is evident from the whole object, scope and tenor of the Act, and the circumstances surrounding the subject matter about which the Legislature were then legislating, that there was something more intended by the language used than the identification of the objects of legislative bounty. Parties had procured grants and leases of lands from the only officers who assumed to act in such matters, upon the consideration usually demanded at that time, and had made valuable improvements on the faith of such contracts. It manifestly seemed to the Legislature that such parties had an equitable claim upon the State to have their grants confirmed, and in consideration of such supposed equitable rights these provisions were introduced into the Act, with the intent not only to grant these lands, but to grant and confirm them to the parties supposed to have the equitable title, and to no others; and to confirm the lands to such parties in the character of purchasers and grantees under the original grants, and not as the recipients of gratuitous favors. No other parties are referred to or provided for in the Act, and the word "confirmed" is an apt and proper one to express that intention. This intent appears the more clearly from the provisions of the third section, where the instruments executed by the Alcalde are mentioned in express terms, and it is provided "that the original deed or other written or printed instruments of conveyance by which any lands, etc., were conveyed by such Common Council, Ayuntamiento or Alcalde, etc., may be read in evidence, etc., and shall be prima facie evidence of title," etc. These very instruments are here expressly made the evidence of title. Why was this, if it was not intended to ratify, confirm and give them effect; if it was not designed that the legislative grant should relate to, confirm and give vitality to the grants purported to be evidenced by these instruments? We must not confine ourselves in the interpretation of this statute to the word "granted" alone, or adhere too strictly to the mere definition of words. A legislative Act is to be interpreted according to the intention of the Legislature apparent upon its face. Every technical rule as to the construction or force of particular terms must yield to the clear expression of the paramount will of the Legislature. (Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Peters, 662.) The whole Act must be construed together. And, looking to all its provisions, we can give it no other construction than that it was the intention to confirm and give effect to the grants referred to in the Act. The word "granted" was properly used, because the title was in fact then in the State, and it might be necessary—it was at least proper—to make the act of confirmation of the former sales effectual.

Such being the case, the confirmation has relation to the Alcalde grants—the first act in the series upon which the title depends—the consideration, so to speak, upon which the legislative grant and confirmation are based, and the title by relation will date from the date of said grants by the Alcalde. The title of the defendants is, therefore, the oldest, and must prevail.

In this case the equities also seem to be with the defendants, for at the sale at auction in 1850, when the lot in question was put up, notice of the prior grant to Parker, and that the parties claimed title under it, was publicly given, and Sprague purchased with actual notice. The last sale had no greater validity than the first; and it equally required the confirmatory grant of the Legislature to give it validity.

There does not appear to us to be any force in the argument based upon the order in which the various classes of titles confirmed are mentioned in the Act.

Appellants insist, that if they have not the prior right, the plaintiffs and defendants are, at least, both donees under the statute, standing æquali jure, each taking one half, and that they are entitled to recover to that extent.

Seabury before brought a suit against Field in the United States Circuit Court, to recover the lot now in controversy, and the cause went to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error. Both parties relied upon these same titles. Upon the trial in the Court below, the Judge, in his charge to the jury, among other things, said: "Both parties in the suit bringing themselves within the classes designated, the defendants being in possession, as has been ascertained by the evidence, would, on principles of law, be entitled to a verdict." And the Supreme Court of the United States, in reviewing this portion of the charge, said: "In this the Court was correct." (Field v. Seabury et al., 19 How. S. C. U. S. 330.) Admitting, then, that both parties are within the classes of grantees designated by the Act, under the law as here laid down, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover. There is certainly no intention manifested on the face of the Act to grant an estate in common to Parker and Sprague, or their respective grantees.

But, if the views before expressed are correct, although both are within the terms of the Act, the title of the defendants originated in a prior grant, and takes the precedence. It must therefore prevail.

ANTHONY RILEY, AND JAMES BURKE.

PARTIES TO MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—One of several parties against whom a judgment is rendered, who does not join in a motion for a new trial, cannot complain of alleged error in denying a new trial.

Points decided.

RESIDENCE OF DEFENDANT SERVED WITH SUMMONS.—If the affidavit of service of summons states the county in which service was made, and defendant makes default, it will be presumed that he was a resident of the county where service was made.

DESCRIPTION OF LAND SUED FOR IN A SUMMONS.—In ejectment, if the summons contains no description of the demanded premises, except to refer to the complaint for such description, and two or more of the defendants reside in the same county, and the summons is served on all defendants in that county, but a copy of the complaint on one only, the summons is sufficient to sustain a judgment by default against those not served with a copy of the complaint.

EVIDENCE OF SERVICE OF A NOTICE.—A statement on the back of a notice of motion for a new trial, signed by the attorney of the moving party, stating that the notice was served at a certain time, is not evidence of such service.

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—Unless the record contains evidence of the service of the notice of motion for a new trial, or it clearly appears from the record that service of the notice was waived, the Court has no jurisdiction of the motion.

WAIVER OF SERVICE OF NOTICE.—If the record does not show that the party resisting an application for new trial proposed any amendments to the statement, or participated in its settlement, it will not be presumed that he waived service of notice.

OBJECTION TO WANT OF FINDINGS.—If a party does not request the Court to file findings, or move the Court to amend its findings, and upon a refusal of the Court to do either, except thereto, he cannot complain of a want of or the insufficiency of the findings.

AGAINST WHOM A RECOVERY IN EJECTMENT IS EVIDENCE.—The recovery of a judgment in an action of ejectment is evidence that at the commencement of the action the plaintiff was entitled to the possession as against the defendant; but, in order to constitute it evidence against a third person, not claiming under the defendant, it must be shown that the third person bore such a relation to the defendant's title that it was his duty to have defended the action upon the requisite notice thereof being given, and that he had a proper opportunity to make a defense founded upon his title.

WAIVER OF FORFEITURE OF A LEASE.—The forfeiture of a lease is not waived by the lessor allowing the tenant to hold over without notice to quit, unless there are circumstances which show that a new term has been created between the parties.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District.
City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellant.

David Calderwood, in pro. per., for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This is an action of ejectment. The default of Riley and Burke, two of the defendants, was entered, and the action was tried by the Court as against Brooks, the remaining defendant, and judgment was rendered against all the defendants. Brooks moved for a new trial, and the motion having been denied, all the defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. Riley and Burke cannot complain of alleged errors of the Court in refusing the new trial, for they were not parties to the motion. They allege that the affidavit of service of the summons is insufficient, because it does not state that they resided in San Francisco. It states that they were served in that county, and it will be presumed, nothing to the contrary appearing, that they resided in the county in which they were served with process. It is also claimed that the summons does not warrant the default, because it does not contain a description of the land sued for. It appears that the three defendants were served with process in the same county, and that a copy of the complaint was served upon Brooks alone. The statute (Practice Act, Sec. 28) does not require the copy of the complaint to be served on more than one of the defendants residing in the county, and therefore the service upon the one, is deemed a service upon all the defendants within the county. In the summons the "cause and general nature of the action" is described in these words: "And said action is brought to recover the possession of certain land and premises, more particularly described in the complaint herein." The complaint is thus by reference made a part of the summons, and it affords a proper description of the premises. The summons and affidavit were sufficient to authorize the entry of the default.

The plaintiff insists that the order of the Court in denying the motion for a new trial cannot be considered, because the notice of the motion was not served upon him. The record must contain the evidence of the service of the notice, or it must clearly appear from the record that service of the notice was waived, (Munch v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 167; Bear River v. Bolles, Id. 354; Flateau v. Lubeck, Id. 364.) The following indorsement appears upon the notice of the defendant's motion for a new trial. "Service admitted of the within notice, November 17th, 1863, served D. Calderwood, November 17th, 1863, by sending notice in envelope (paying postage) directed to D. Calderwood, San Francisco. M. H. Furman." The notice was signed by "W. H. Furman, attorney for the defendant." The indorsement affords no evidence of the service, for it is not an admission by the plaintiff of service, and the service by mail is not verified by the certificate of an officer authorized to make service, nor by the affidavit of any person. Service upon a party may be personal, or by leaving the notice at his residence, or by mail if his residence is not known. (Prac. Act, Sec. 520.) It does not appear that the plaintiff's residence was unknown, and therefore the service by mail did not constitute a legal service.

It does not appear, either expressly or by implication, that service of the notice was waived. It appears, from a notice signed by the plaintiff, attached to the statement on motion for a new trial, that he offered to return the statement to the defendant's attorney, for the reason, among others, that the notice of the motion had not been served on him, and it does not appear that the plaintiff proposed any amendments to, or participated in the settlement of the statement. The minutes of the Court show that the plaintiff moved to strike out the motion for a new trial, and the statement. Under these circumstances he cannot be deemed to have waived the service of the notice of the motion.

The notice of the motion not having been served, the Court below had no jurisdiction of the motion; and the statement on the motion, including the grounds properly resting upon the statement for their support, must be disregarded by this Court on appeal. This leaves the case to stand upon the judgment roll, and we can notice only the errors appearing therein.

The defendant, among his points, assigns for error the order striking out a part of the answer of Brooks. We cannot find in the transcript a motion to strike out any part of the answer; the record fails to disclose what portion was stricken out; and it does not appear that the defendant took an exception to the order striking out a part of the answer; and we are therefore unable to understand why counsel should have presented the point.

The further points are made that the Court erred in overruling the defendant's exceptions for the want of a finding, and his motion to modify the same, and in ordering judgment without filing any findings. It appears from a paper copied into the transcript, but which forms no part of the judgment roll, or a statement or bill of exceptions, that the defendant, thirteen days after the Court ordered judgment for the plaintiff, and three days after the entry of judgment, excepted to the entry of the judgment for the reason that no findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed. But we find no motion that the Court amend the findings, nor any exception of the defendant to the refusal of the Court to file findings after objections made, as prescribed by the Act of 1861, to regulate appeals (Statutes 1861, p. 589); and the transcript shows that subsequently to the defendant's objections for the want of a finding, the Court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thus obviated the objection made. The points seem not only not well taken, but destitute of all support.

The only question in the case presenting any difficulty is whether the findings of fact support the judgment. It appears by the findings that the action of Edmond Brooks v. Ross et al., in which Calderwood and R. C. Brooks were also defendants, was commenced March 14th, 1861, and judgment therein against R. C. Brooks, but not against Calderwood — the action having been dismissed as to him — was rendered November 12th, 1862, and on the 8th day of May, 1863, R. C. Brooks was dispossessed by virtue of the writ issued upon the judgment. This action was commenced in April, 1863, and it is found that R. C. Brooks entered under a written lease, dated November 13th, 1861, for the term of one year, and that he and the other defendants were in possession at the commencement of this action. It is argued that the proceedings, judgment and writ in the case of Brooks v. Ross, and the fact that under the writ R. C. Brooks was evicted from the premises, prove that the title of Edmond Brooks is paramount to that of Calderwood. The judgment roll in that case which is inserted in the statement in this case cannot be looked into to determine the question, for the reasons already given, but we are confined to the findings. It is not stated in the findings that the title of Edmond Brooks was superior to that of Calderwood, nor that he had the right of possession as against Calderwood, nor what was the right or title of Edmond Brooks upon which he recovered the possession, nor that any right or title of, or derived from, Calderwood, was in issue in that action. It is not to be presumed that Calderwood's title was in issue, for the reason, if for none other, that at the commencement of that action no privity between him and R. C. Brooks appears, but it is found that Brooks entered as his tenant after the commencement of the action. The recovery in ejectment by the plaintiff is evidence that at the commencement of the action the plaintiff was entitled to the possession as against the defendant, but in order to constitute it evidence against a third person, not claiming under the defendant, it must be shown that the third person bore such a relation to the defendant's title, that it was his duty to have defended the action, upon the requisite notices thereof being given, and that he had a proper opportunity to make a defense founded upon his title. The findings do not show any privity between Calderwood and R. C. Brooks at or before the commencement of the action of Brooks v. Ross, and the judgment is not evidence of title in Edmond Brooks paramount to that of Calderwood. It appears from the findings that R. C. Brooks entered as Calderwood's tenant for one year, that the year had expired, and that the tenant had forfeited his lease before the commencement of this action. The plaintiff was thereupon entitled to recover the possession of the leased premises. The forfeiture was not waived, as the defendant argues, in consequence of the tenant's holding over and no notice to quit being given, for the mere holding over would not entitle him to notice to quit, nor would it amount to a waiver of the forfeiture, unless the holding over was under such circumstances that the Court would be justified in finding that a new term had been created between the parties. This matter is set at rest by the fact that the Court has not found that a further term, commencing at or after the expiration of the year, was created. In our opinion the finding supports the judgment.

The following is the deed under which respondent claimed title:

This indenture, made the second day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, between Henry P. Chase, attorney for Henry L. S. O. Houghton, for Appellant.

The deed is an indenture made "between Henry P. Chase, attorney for Henry L. Sheldon, of the first part," etc.; "and Richard M. Harmer," etc., "of the second part," whereby the said party of the first part, that is to say, Henry P. Chase, "grants and conveys unto the said party of the second part" the premises in question, and concludes as follows:

"In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal," etc.

"HENRY P. CHASE,

"Attorney for Henry L. Sheldon."

The party of the first part is Henry P. Chase, and the deed conveys the title of the party of the first part, and does not purport to convey anything more. The concluding clause runs thus: "In witness whereof, I," that is to say, Henry P. Chase, the said party of the first part, "have hereunto set my hand and seal, the day and year first above written;" then follows the signature of Henry P. Chase and his seal, under which it written, "Attorney for Henry L. Sheldon."

Passing the common law authorities cited by appellant, and granting for the sake of argument that he is correct as to the rule at common law, we claim that at the civil and Mexican law the rule was otherwise. The rule under the civil or Mexican law was, as we understand it, that a power executed by the attorney in his own name binds the principal when the agent acts in the business intrusted to him and within the scope of his power; the liability of the principal under that system depended on the act done, and not upon the form in which it had been executed; in this case there is no question as to the sufficiency of the power under which Chase acted, hence the execution is good. (See Hopkins v. Lacouture, 4 La. O. S. 64, and Story on Agency, Note 3 to Section 162.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This is an action of ejectment, commenced in December, 1863, to recover a lot of land in the City of San José. The defendant's answer is a traverse of each and every material allegation of the complaint. The action was tried before the Court without a jury and a finding was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant moved to set aside the conclusions of law stated in the finding, and instead to substitute that "the defendant is entitled to judgment for costs." The motion was denied and the defendant excepted. The defendant then moved the Court, upon the pleadings and facts found, to render judgment for the defendant. This motion was also denied and the defendant excepted, and thereupon judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

From the finding of facts it appears that both parties claim to derive title to the premises from a common source — Henry

L. Sheldon. The Court find that in 1849 Henry L. Sheldon made, executed, acknowledged and delivered to Henry P. Chase a full power of attorney for the sale of said land, which was duly recorded in the records of the Pueblo of San José in that year.

"That in the year 1849 the said Henry P. Chase, as attorney of Henry L. Sheldon, for a valuable consideration made, executed, acknowledged and delivered a deed of the premises to Richard Harmer, of all the right, title and interest of said Sheldon to said premises, which said deed was duly recorded in the year 1849, in the records of said Pueblo, at San José, which deed bears date 1849, and is hereby referred to and made a part hereof."

That in June, 1862, Richard Harmer, for a valuable consideration, conveyed by deed his right, title and interest in the premises to the plaintiff, which deed was duly acknowledged and recorded in the same month.

That in October, 1862, Henry L. Sheldon, for a valuable consideration made, executed, acknowledged and delivered his deed of said lands and premises to Davis Devine, the defendant's landlord, which deed was duly recorded before this action was commenced.

In the transcript is found a copy of the deed, which is the one referred to by the Court, purporting to have been executed on the 2d of November, 1849, "between Henry P. Chase, attorney for Henry L. Sheldon, of the Sandwich Islands, in the Pacific Ocean, of the first part, and Richard M. Harmer, of the Pueblo of San José, of the second part," by which the "party of the first part, in consideration of the sum of three hundred dollars, in hand duly paid, hath sold and by these presents doth grant and convey unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, forever," the premises in controversy. The testatum clause of the deed is as follows: "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and year first above written." It is signed "Henry P. Chase, attorney for Henry L. Sheldon," and opposite the name of Chase is affixed a seal. The deed is acknowledged by him as the person who executed it, and it was recorded in Book Five of Solars, in the Recorder's office of the County of Santa Clara. The Court finds that the deed executed by Chase was a deed of all Sheldon's right, title and interest in the premises, and was executed by him as the attorney of Sheldon. This finding was not sustained by the deed referred to by the Court. The deed does not purport to have been executed by Chase as Sheldon's attorney, nor to convey any right, title or interest of Sheldon in the premises described.

It is not pretended on the part of the respondent that the deed executed by Chase would be effectual to transfer and convey the title and interest of Sheldon in the premises according to the rules of the common law, but it is contended on his behalf that at the date of the deed the law of Mexico was the law of the land, and that by the Mexican law the power which Chase, the attorney for Sheldon, possessed, might be lawfully executed by the attorney in his own name so as to bind his principal, and that it was so executed in this instance. Escribiche defines a letter of attorney (procuracion) to be a deed by which one person empowers another to do some particular thing in the name of the constituent, and the same authority defines an attorney in fact (procurador) to be one who, by virtue of power derived from another, is authorized to perform some specified act in the name of the constituent of the power. By reference to the deed executed by Chase it will be seen that he did not profess to act for or in the name of Sheldon, nor to convey the premises in dispute as the property of Sheldon. The addition to his name of the words "Attorney of Henry L. Sheldon" was a mere descriptio personæ. The fact that in truth he was the attorney or procurador of Sheldon cannot, by the most liberal rule of interpretation, impart to the instrument executed by Chase the character of a conveyance by Sheldon. Chase might as well have described himself as of any other profession or occupation belonging to him as that of "Attorney of Sheldon."

Judgment reversed and a new trial ordered.

Statement of Facts.

JAMES B. HAGGIN et al. v. WILLIAM S. CLARK et als.
AND NATHAN ROGERS.

APPEAL FROM AN ORDER MADE ON AFFIDAVITS.—In an appeal taken from an order made after final judgment, upon affidavits filed, it is not necessary to make a statement, nor is it necessary to specify the grounds upon which the appellant will rely for a reversal of the order.

APPEAL FROM AN ORDER WHERE THERE IS A STATEMENT.—In an appeal from an order made after final judgment, if appellant makes a statement and relies upon it in the appellate Court, the statement must contain the grounds upon which the appellant intends to rely on appeal, or it will be disregarded.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

On the 9th day of February, 1863, James B. Haggin et al. recovered judgment in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco, against William S. Clark et al., for the possession of a lot of land in said city. Nathan Rogers was not one of the defendants by name in the judgment. On the 6th day of January, 1864, a writ was issued on the judgment and placed in the Sheriff's hands, by which he was commanded to place the plaintiffs in possession of the land described in the judgment. On the 22d day of June, 1864, the Sheriff returned the writ with an indorsement thereon dated February 7th, 1864, that he had placed the plaintiffs in possession of the premises.

On the 13th day of July, 1864, the plaintiffs presented affidavits to the Judge of said Court, stating that by virtue of the said writ Nathan Rogers was by the Sheriff dispossessed and put out of possession of a portion of the premises described in the writ and plaintiffs were put in possession, but that on the first day of July, 1864, said Rogers re-entered and by force excluded plaintiffs, and from thence had detained the same, in contempt of the Court and its process.

Plaintiffs asked for an order to show cause why Rogers should not be punished for contempt for re-entering without having any right so to do, after having been dispossessed. (See Laws of 1862, page 115.)

Opinion of the Court.

The Judge made an order requiring Rogers to show cause before him on the 18th day of July, 1864. Rogers at the hearing filed counter affidavits. Considerable record evidence was introduced by plaintiffs at the hearing. The Court discharged the order and plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Brooks & Whitney, for Appellants.

James M. Taylor, for Respondent.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an appeal from an order discharging an order requiring the respondent to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for a contempt of Court, within the provisions of an Act passed April 8, 1862, entitled "An Act for the punishment of contempts and trespasses."

There is a statement annexed to the record of the order appealed from and all the errors complained of arise upon the statement.

The respondent insists that there is no sufficient specification in the statement of the grounds upon which the appellant intended to rely in this Court, and that for the want of such specifications the order should be affirmed. The appellant, in reply to this objection, insists, in the first place, that in a case like the present, no specification of the grounds intended to be relied on is necessary; and in the second place, if mistaken in the first position, that the record shows a specification, and one as precise in its terms as the law requires.

First — We consider that a specification was necessary to entitle the plaintiff to a hearing upon the statement. True, section three hundred and forty-three of the Practice Act provides: "That the last five preceding sections (338, 339, 340, 341, 342) shall not apply to appeals taken from an order made upon affidavits filed, but such affidavits shall be annexed to the order in place of the statement mentioned in those sections." But the order appealed from here was not made upon affidavits alone. Had it been, it would not only have been unnecessary to specify the grounds of appeal, but a statement would have been unnecessary also. But the transcript contains a "statement" by designation, and the document is certified to by the Judge, at appellants' request, as a "correct statement for the purposes of the appeal." But the "statement," in addition to the affidavits used at the hearing on the order to show cause, contains the writ of restitution issued on the judgment recovered by the plaintiffs in Haggin et al v. Clark et als., together with the officer's return thereon, and a stipulation that the judgment is correctly described in the writ. It shows, further, that when these papers were offered in evidence the respondent objected to their admissibility, that the objection was overruled by the Court, and that the respondent excepted. It further appears from the "statement," that the appellant gave in evidence the judgment roll in Rogers v. Haggin et al., and Rogers' statement on motion for new trial therein, in which statement all the parol and documentary evidence introduced on the trial of that action was set forth, together with the order of the Court denying the motion. It further appears from the statement herein that the respondent objected to the admissibility of those records and files, and that he excepted to the decision of the Court overruling his objections. The "statement," then, is not only a statement in form, but it fulfils all the uses of a statement, and may be said to demonstrate its own necessity. The purpose of the appellants in putting the record and proceedings in Rogers v. Haggin et al. in evidence, was to estop the respondent from proving that he was not a party defendant in the ejectment suit of Haggin v. Clark et als., or rather to estop him generally from averring and proving that he was not bound by the judgment in that action. Had the appeal been taken from the order as related to the affidavits alone, there could have been no doubt as to the correctness of the decision of the Court below; but the appellant having, as he considered, established an estoppel as against the affidavits of the respondent, very properly concluded that he could not have the benefit of it in an error unless he embodied the materials upon which the estoppel was cast in a statement to be annexed to the record of the order. The record, then, not only contains a statement in form but a statement in substance also; that is, a statement made to meet the legal necessities of a case to be brought to this Court for review. It follows that the statement made, to entitle the appellants to be heard upon it, should conform to the provisions of the three hundred and thirty-eighth section of the Practice Act; and one of the provisions of that section requires that whenever a statement is made it "shall contain the grounds upon which the appellant intends to rely on appeal;" and "if it does not contain such specification the statement will not be noticed." (Barrett v. Tewksbury, 15 Cal. 358; Reynolds v. Lawrence, Ib. 359; Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

The record in this case contains a specification in the following language: "To which order and decision the said plaintiffs then and there duly excepted, and assign as error that said order and decision are against law." This specification is too general to subserve any useful purpose and might as well have been omitted. The objects intended to be secured by section three hundred and thirty-eight of the Practice Act are distinctly set forth in Hutton v. Reed and in the case of Barrett v. Tewksbury, and require no restatement here. This case is clearly within the rule established by those decisions. In Barrett v. Tewksbury the Court announced that it would forbear to apply the rule to cases then pending, but as to the future, parties and attorneys were distinctly told that the rule would be rigidly enforced; and this monition was reiterated, in effect, in Hutton v. Reed. The respondent does not waive the benefit of the rule, but claims that it should be enforced in his favor.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Statement of Facts.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. CHARLES B. POLHEMUS v. O.
C. PRATT, JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT COURT, TWELFTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

WHEN MANDAMUS DOES NOT LIE.—If the plaintiff in an action moves for a judgment of dismissal at his costs, and the motion is resisted by the defendant, and denied by the Court, a writ of mandate will not be issued commanding the Judge to enter a judgment of dismissal.

SAME.—In refusing to enter a judgment of dismissal in an action on plaintiff's motion, the Judge acts judicially, and a mandamus does not lie to compel him to reverse his decision and render a different one.

OBJECT OF WRIT OF MANDATE.—When the act to be done is judicial and discretionary, a writ of mandate cannot direct what judgment shall be rendered, nor can it be granted, after an inferior tribunal has acted, for the purpose of reviewing its decision.

REMEDY FOR JUDICIAL ERROR.—If in acting judicially the Court commits an error, the remedy is by appeal and not by mandamus.

On the 6th day of July, 1857, Charles B. Polhemus, the relator, and George W. P. Bissell commenced an action in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco, against William M. Carpenter, James P. Treadwell, and others, on a promissory note given by Carpenter, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the note. Treadwell was made a defendant under an allegation in the complaint that he claimed an interest in the mortgaged property which accrued subsequent to the lien of the mortgage. All the defendants except Treadwell made default—Treadwell answered. A judgment was rendered in the District Court, from which an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was reversed and a new trial granted. The remittitur was sent down, and the cause was placed on the calendar for trial at the October term, 1864. December 5th, 1864, plaintiffs' attorney filed the following paper in the cause:

I consent that this suit be dismissed, and request the Clerk to enter such dismissal in his register, and to enter judgment thereupon.

DELOS LAKE,

Attorney for Plaintiff.

Argument for Relator.

December 6th, plaintiff's attorney served on Treadwell notice of the dismissal. December 7th, Treadwell served on plaintiff's attorney a written notice that he should proceed to try the cause and disregard the dismissal. December 8th, plaintiff's attorney moved the Court to enter a judgment of dismissal, which motion was denied. Plaintiff then applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate commanding the Judge to enter a judgment of dismissal.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Delos Lake, for Relator.

The act which the statute required the Court below to perform, namely, to direct the entry of judgment of dismissal on the plaintiff's motion, was a ministerial and not a judicial act. The case contemplated by the statute having arisen, there was no room for the exercise of any discretion on the part of the Court. Its duty was plain, imperative, and absolute. Mandamus is in such cases the proper remedy. (Bacon's Abridgt., Vol. 6, p. 434, Mandamus D.; Rex v. Barber, 3 Burrows, 1,267.)

"Mandamus lies to all inferior tribunals, magistrates, and officers, and extends to all cases of neglect to perform a legal duty where there is no other adequate remedy. It applies to judicial as well as ministerial acts. If the duty be judicial, the mandate will be to the officers to exercise their official discretion or judgment without any direction as to the manner in which it shall be done. If it be ministerial, then the mandamus will direct the specific act to be performed." (Carpenter v. Co. Commissioners, 21 Pick. 259.)

There are many acts within the sphere of the duties of a Judge which are simply ministerial, such as receiving and recording the verdict of a jury, confirming referee's report, where there is no opposition, signing and sealing bills of exceptions, etc. As to signing and sealing bills of exceptions, see Delevan v. Boardman, 5 Wend. 132; People v. Judges of Westchester, 2 John. Cas. 118; People v. Judges of Washington, 1 Caines' R. 511.

Opinion of the Court.

A mandamus lies to compel the transfer of a cause from a State to a Federal Court, where the party has complied with the necessary conditions to entitle him to such removal. (4 H. & M. 173.)

In the case of People v. County Judge, 13 How. Pr. Reports, where it was contended that an appeal had been improperly dismissed, the Court awarded a mandamus, on the ground that the act of the Judge in dismissing the appeal was a ministerial and not a judicial act.

J. P. Treadwell, in pro. per., against the writ.

This writ lies to compel an inferior Court to proceed and render judgment, but not to retrace its steps, or to direct in advance its judicial action, or what particular judgment to render. The present application for the writ is clearly within the decisions under this head, and precluded by them. The doctrine is well illustrated in an opinion that seems to have had the unanimous concurrence of the Court of Errors in The Judges of the Oneida C. P. v. The People, 18 Wend. 92.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

This is an application for a mandamus to the Judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, commanding him to enter a judgment of dismissal in an action pending in his Court wherein the relator and another are plaintiffs and James P. Treadwell and others are defendants.

It appears that the plaintiffs in that action, upon notice, moved the Court to enter a judgment dismissing it at their costs, as provided in the first subdivision of section one hundred and forty-eight of the Civil Practice Act. This motion was contested by defendant Treadwell, upon the ground that he had made a counter claim; and hence the plaintiffs could not dismiss against his consent; and in support of his opposition to the motion Treadwell relied upon the pleadings, proceedings and a stipulation made in the action between the parties thereto and an affidavit made by himself. After hearing the argument of counsel the Court denied the motion, thereby sustaining the grounds of the objection to the motion interposed by the defendant.

We do not think a mandamus will lie in this case. The real and substantial question presented for the decision of the Court by the motion to dismiss was whether the defendant had set up a counter claim against the plaintiffs upon which he was seeking affirmative relief. If he had not, the plaintiffs were undoubtedly entitled to the judgment which they asked, otherwise not. The solution of that question depended upon the judicial reading and construction of the defendant's answer and the stipulation between the parties, and the effect of the latter upon the former. It was claimed on the part of the plaintiffs, first, that the counter claim made in the answer could not be legally made in the action; and, second, that the counter claim had been withdrawn by the force and effect of the stipulation. Both of these propositions were denied by the defendant, and in deciding them the Judge acted judicially, not ministerially; and, having decided them according to the best of his ability, a mandamus does not lie to compel him to reverse his decision and render a different one. (Chase v. Blackstone Canal Company, 10 Pick 244; The People ex rel. Doughty v. The Judges of Dutchess County, 20 Wend. 658.) This writ lies to compel a subordinate judicial tribunal to proceed and exercise its functions when it has neglected or refused to do so; but when the act to be done is judicial or discretionary the writ cannot direct what decision or judgment shall be rendered, nor can it be granted, after the inferior tribunal has acted, for the purpose of reviewing its decision. (The People v. Sexton, 24 Cal. 79.) If the Court has committed an error in denying the plaintiffs' motion the same can be reviewed on appeal, which is a speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law within the meaning of the four hundred and sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act. To review errors is not the office of the writ of mandamus.

The case of The People ex rel. Smith v. The Judge of the Twelfth District, 17 Cal. 548, was a much stronger case for the relator than this. There the Legislature by a special Act had directed the Court to make an order changing the venue in a certain action then pending before it. The language of the Act was clear, explicit and mandatory, leaving nothing to the discretion of the Court. The Court nevertheless refused to make the order, and it was held that a mandamus would not lie.

Mandamus denied.

Mr. Justice SHAFER, being disqualified, did not participate in the decision of this case.

T. WALLACE MORE, ALEXANDER P. MORE, AND HENRY H. MORE v. YGNACIO DEL VALLE *et al.

RULES OF PRACTICE ACT IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—The provisions of the Civil Practice Act, with regard to the denials of the allegations of the complaint by the answer, apply to actions of forcible entry and detainer instituted under the Act of 1863, and to said actions upon all other points not otherwise provided for in said Act.

ANSWER IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—If the answer in forcible entry and detainer under the Act of 1863 does not deny the material allegations of the complaint, and no material new matter is set up, no issue is raised, and plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

FORM OF DENIAL IN ANSWER.—If an allegation of a complaint consists of several clauses or propositions connected by the copulative conjunction "and," a denial of the entire allegation is evasive and insufficient. Each proposition should be separately denied.

GOLD COIN JUDGMENT FOR COSTS.—It is error for the Court to adjudge the costs in an action of forcible entry and detainer to be paid in gold coin.

DESCRIPTION OF LAND IN COMPLAINT.—The description of the premises in a complaint in forcible entry and detainer was as follows: "That tract or parcel of land situated in the County of Santa Barbara, and known as the Rancho Sespe, granted by the Mexican nation to Don Carlos Antonio Carrillo, by grant dated November 29th, 1833, and bounded and described as follows: bounded by the Misalons San Fernando and San Buenaventura, situated in the then jurisdiction of Santa Barbara, containing six square leagues * * * a little more or less." Held, that upon the face of the pleadings the description was sufficient.

AVERTMENT IN COMPLAINT OF LOCATION OF LAND.—If the complaint in forcible entry and detainer avers that the lands are in the county where the suit is brought, a failure to mention the State will not be a fatal defect.

AVERTMENT OF POSSESSION IN COMPLAINT.—If the complaint in forcible entry and detainer sufficiently shows an actual peaceable possession in plaintiff, Argument for Respondents.

It will be sufficient without the use of the word "actual;" but it is better to use the statutory term.

JUDGMENT OF APPELLATE COURT WHEN NO ISSUE IS RAISED.—If the answer does not deny the allegations of the complaint, and plaintiff moves for judgment on the pleadings, and the motion is denied, and on the trial defendant recovers judgment, on appeal the judgment will be reversed and a new trial awarded, with leave to defendant to amend.

EXCEPTIONS TO BE ATTACHED TO JUDGMENT ROLL.—Bills of exceptions made during the progress of a trial should, under sections one hundred eighty-eight, one hundred eighty-nine, and two hundred three of the Practice Act, be written down, settled, and signed by the Judge, filed in the case, and afterwards annexed to the judgment roll.

AVERMENT OF TITLE IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—If the complaint in forcible entry and detainer avers title in plaintiff the averment may be treated as surplusage.

APPEAL from the County Court, Santa Barbara County.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the Court.

S. F. & J. Reynolds, for Appellants.

The answers contain no denial of any material allegation in the complaint. There is no attempt to deny the damages alleged, nor that the plaintiffs were in the "quiet, peaceable and exclusive possession" of the premises, as averred. And the attempted denial that the defendants "did forcibly, unlawfully, and fraudulently enter into the possession," is entirely insufficient. The answers, in effect, admit the entry as averred. (Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 83; Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644; Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 127; Woodworth v. Knowlton, 21 Cal. 168.)

The rules of pleading and practice are the same in these as in other civil cases. (Stat. of 1863, p. 655, Sec. 14.)

Eugene Lies, for Respondents.

Actual possession should be alleged, being an essential fact necessary to the support of this action. The complaint neither sets forth the facts that would constitute actual possession, nor uses the statutory word.

As to what constitutes actual possession, see Preston v. Kehoe, 15 Cal. 315; House v. Keyser, 8 Cal. 499; City of San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 451.

Opinion of the Court.

A mere answer of not guilty would be sufficient. (Kinney v. Hartman, 4 Iowa, 154; Henderson v. Allen, 23 Cal. 519; Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.)

The assertion that the boundaries of the tract are uncertain puts at issue a material fact. And in the absence of a statement, we may freely assume that plaintiff failed to prove his boundaries.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This action was brought in the County Court of Santa Barbara County, under the Act of 1863, concerning forcible entries and detainers. A motion for judgment on the pleadings, on the ground that no material allegation of the complaint is denied by the answer, having been made and denied, a trial was had, and a verdict and judgment rendered in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

There is no attempt in the answer to deny several of the material allegations of the complaint, as the peaceable possession of the plaintiff, the damage, etc. There is an attempt to deny the allegations as to the forcible entry and the forcible detainer; but if the provisions of the Civil Practice Act on the subject are applicable to this action, the denials in the answer, under the repeated decisions of this Court and of our predecessors are insufficient. Portions of the allegations are denied conjunctively. An allegation consisting of several clauses or propositions connected by the copulative "and" may not be true, as a whole, and can therefore be safely denied in that form, while one material branch of it may be true, and cannot for that reason be separately denied. A denial of the entire proposition in such case is evasive and insufficient.

The party must specifically deny each allegation he desires to controvert, and when the allegation is complex, embracing several clauses or propositions, he must deny each branch of the proposition separately and disjunctively, or his denial will be insufficient. (Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 417.) We think also, that in this action the rules of pleading prescribed by the

Opinion of the Court.

Practice Act upon the point in question, and upon all other points not otherwise provided for in the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, are to govern. The only denial contained in the answer being defective, and no material new matter having been set up, the answer raised no material issue.

The Court also erred in adjudging the costs to be paid in gold coin.

The respondents insist that the complaint is insufficient in two particulars, viz:

Firstly — The complaint does not “describe the premises sought to be recovered with reasonable certainty,” as required by section eight of the Act. It is described as follows: “That certain tract or parcel of land situate in the County of Santa Barbara, and known as the Rancho Sespe, granted by the Mexican Nation to Don Carlos Antonio Carrillo by grant dated November 29, 1833, and bounded and described as follows: ‘Bounded by the Missions of San Fernando and San Buenaventura, situated in the then jurisdiction of Santa Barbara, containing six square leagues, or six sitios de ganado mayor, a little more or less.’”

We cannot say that this description appears upon the face of the pleadings to be insufficient. We cannot tell what the evidence may show in regard to it. It may be that there will be no difficulty in applying the description to the lands. The plaintiffs can only recover the lands of which they were in the actual peaceable possession, and upon which the forcible entry was made. And the precise lands sought to be recovered should be described “with reasonable certainty.” The suit is brought in the County of Santa Barbara, and the land is described as being in the County of Santa Barbara. We think the intendment must be, that the land is in the county where the suit is brought, and that a failure to mention the State in the description is not a fatal defect.

Secondly — The allegation of possession is insufficient because the word “actual” is omitted, that word being used in section two, which prescribes the particulars necessary to be proved to entitle plaintiff to recover. We think the objection not tenable. Taking the entire allegations of the complaint, an actual, peaceable possession is sufficiently alleged. It would be better, however, to use the word "actual" in those cases. The plaintiff alleges title, but this is unnecessary and may be regarded as surplusage.

As the Court below held the answer to be sufficient we think a new trial should be had. Had the ruling of the Court been otherwise, probably the defendants would have asked leave to amend. When the case goes back they can apply to the Court below for leave to amend their answers if they so desire.

In this case, as in many others, the entire minutes of the Court are copied into the transcript. This is not proper, as we have often held. See Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107, where we distinctly pointed out the proper practice.

Exceptions taken during the progress of a trial under sections one hundred eighty-eight and one hundred eighty-nine of the Practice Act, whether "delivered in writing to the Judge" by the counsel, or "written down by the Clerk," should be written upon sheets of paper, settled and signed by the Judge, and filed in the case; and when the judgment roll is made up, attached to the judgment roll. The proper place for these exceptions is not in the minutes of the Court, for they are to form a part of the judgment roll. (Section 203, second clause.) When an appeal from the judgment is taken, these bills of exceptions are certified up as a part of the judgment roll, and not as copies from the minutes of the Court.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

Mr. Justice SHAFER delivered the following opinion, concurring specially, in which Mr. Justice RHODES concurred:

I concur in the opinion, but still do not consider that the plaintiffs' allegation that they were peaceably possessed involves an averment that they were actually possessed. The complaint, however, states that the plaintiffs had the land "reduced to their absolute dominion and control," and that the defendants "drove and expelled the plaintiffs and their cattle from said lands." These statements presuppose an actual possession on the part of the plaintiffs. But as the fact of actual possession appears only by way of argument or inference, advantage can be taken of it only by special demurrer, and no such demurrer was interposed in the Court below.

EDWARD FRANKLIN v. THOMAS DORLAND.

ESTOPPEL BY DEED.—A deed of land executed by a defendant in an action of ejectment, to which the plaintiff in the action is an entire stranger, cannot operate in that action as an estoppel by deed upon the defendant who executed it.

ESTOPPEL IN PARS.—If it does not appear that the description of the land was inserted in a deed with a view to influence the plaintiff in the conduct of his own affairs, or that he was influenced by it in fact, the elements of an estoppel in parte are lacking also.

DISCREPANCY IN THE DESCRIPTIONS IN A DEED.—In case of a discrepancy between the monuments mentioned in a deed, and the courses and distances therein set forth, the monuments govern.

RECITALS IN A DEED AS EVIDENCE.—If a deed executed by one of the parties to an action, and to which the other party is an entire stranger, is used as evidence in that action, its recitals can only be used as simple admissions made by the party by whom it was executed.

WHEN THE VERDICT IS AGAINST EVIDENCE.—In a trial in an action of ejectment upon a question of boundary, the testimony of five unimpeached witnesses stood opposed to the description contained in a deed to which one of the parties was a stranger, the Court found the fact as recited in the deed. Held, that the finding was so far opposed to the evidence as to justify awarding a new trial.

DEFENSE IN EJECTMENT BY GRANTEE AGAINST THE GRANTOR.—If one who is not the owner of a lot of land executes a deed of it to another, and the grantor is afterwards placed in possession of the lot by the real owner, he may avail himself of this fact as a defense in ejectment brought against him by the grantee.

GRANTOR MAY DISSESS GRANTEE.—If the grantor in a deed takes adverse possession of the land granted subsequent to his deed, and holds continuous adverse possession for five years, he may set up the Statute of Limitations as a defense in an action of ejectment brought against him by his grantee.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Edward Tompkins, for Appellant.

Argument for Respondent.

It will hardly be pretended that a quitclaim in 1854 by a party who in 1863 is in possession adversely and making improvements, will exempt a purchaser of the interest of the first grantee from inquiring by what right the property is now held. If Dorland's deed had been bargain and sale, another rule might apply; but a mere quitclaim would not prevent his acquiring any other title the next day, and if it was better than the other, holding the property even against his own deed. (Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. and cases cited; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 547, 550; Landers v. Bolton, 27 Cal. 104; Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 593; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 675.)

It is claimed, however, that the recital in the Debus mortgage, that the Groat lot was two hundred and fifty feet from Coater's land, estops Dorland from denying it. But estoppels never apply except between parties and privies. Plaintiff is neither. They must be mutual to bind either. (2 Smith's L. Cases, 568; 2 Johnson's R. 383; 3 Johns. Cases, 303.)

Edward F. Head, for Respondent.

The words "remise, release and quitclaim," where an intent to convey the estate of the grantor is manifest, and a pecuniary consideration appears, are effectual as words of bargain and sale, though in a deed to one not in possession. (10 Johns. 456; 18 Johns. 60, 78; Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y., 2 Seld. 422; Lynch v. Livingston, 8 Barb. 468.)

In Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 613, this Court says: "Where it distinctly appears upon the face of the instrument, without the presence of the covenant of warranty, either by recital or otherwise, that the intent of the parties was to convey and receive respectively a certain estate, the grantor will be estopped from denying the operation of the deed according to that intent."

A grantor cannot set up the Statute of Limitations against his own deed. His deed explains his possession, and is a declaration that the title is in another. (McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 636.)

By the Court, SHAFTER, J.

This action was brought to recover the pieces or parcels of lands in San Francisco described in the complaint and referred to throughout the case as parcels 1, 2 and 3. The plaintiff had judgment for the first and third parcels and the defendant for the second. The defendant appeals from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the first and third parcels and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. No appeal has been taken by the plaintiff from the judgment against him for the second parcel.

The answer denies the right of the plaintiff to the several lots—sets up title in the defendant and adverse possession of the first parcel for more than thirteen years, and title in Samuel Crim and adverse possession of the third parcel for thirteen years, and that defendant is not and has not been in the possession thereof except as the tenant of said Samuel Crim.

The defendant quitclaimed the first parcel sued for, to Groat, June 12th, 1854; who quitclaimed to Robles in 1856, who, on the 20th of March, 1863, conveyed to the plaintiff. The north line of the parcel was described in the plaintiff's deed to Groat as follows: "Commencing at a point on the west line of Dolores street, in said city, where it is intersected by a post and rail fence designed for pickets, along which is planted a row of cottonwood trees." The location of this row of trees was one of the governing questions of fact controverted by the parties at the trial. The defendant introduced five witnesses all of whom placed the trees on the line claimed by him; and the one witness who located them in the first instance according to the views of the plaintiff by whom he was called, after hearing the witnesses for the defense, went voluntarily upon the stand and so corrected his first statement as to bring it into substantial agreement with the testimony given by them. All of these witnesses were acquainted with the locality; none of them were impeached, nor is there anything in the record reflecting in the slightest degree upon their trustworthiness. The only evidence relied upon in rebuttal, was found in a mortgage executed by the defendant Dorland to one Debus, in August, 1856. The premises covered by the mortgage are described therein as follows: "Commencing at a point on the western line of Dolores street, formed by the intersection of the southern line of lands owned by J. P. Coater with said Dolores street; thence running southerly on said line of Dolores street two hundred and fifty feet, to lands recently deeded by the party of the first part to R. V. Groat; thence at right angles," etc. It is conceded, if the northern line of the lot conveyed by the defendant to Groat in 1854—that is, the row of cottonwood trees—was in fact two hundred and fifty feet south of the starting point named in the mortgage, that the lot so conveyed to Groat in 1854 is the one described in the complaint.

It is insisted for the respondent that the defendant was estopped by the mortgage from saying that the northern line of the Groat lot was not in fact two hundred and fifty feet to the south of the point where Dolores street is intersected by Coater's south line. This position is not tenable. The plaintiff is an entire stranger to the mortgage and the mortgage right, and therefore there can be no estoppel by deed; and as it does not appear that the description was inserted in the mortgage with any view to influence the plaintiff in the conduct of his own affairs, and particularly as it does not appear that the plaintiff ever was influenced by it in fact, it is apparent that the elements of an estoppel in pais are lacking also. The description in the mortgage stands then as a simple admission. If it had been proved that the defendant, having his attention called to the point as a principal question, had deliberately stated that the north line of the Groat lot was to his knowledge two hundred and fifty feet south of the Coater corner, the statement would in our judgment have been entitled to much higher consideration than can be claimed for it as it stands in the mortgage. Nothing is more common than discrepancies between the monuments and the courses and distances set forth in deeds. In such cases the monuments govern; and for the reason that they are usually stated upon full knowledge and reflection, while as to courses and distances they are most frequently arrived at by estimate or guess in all those cases where visible monuments are named. For these reasons we consider that the admission contained in the mortgage to Debus does not detract materially from the weight of the testimony of the six witnesses referred to as to the location of the row of cottonwood trees named in the deed under which the plaintiff claims. We therefore hold that the finding of the Court on that point is so far opposed to the evidence as to justify the awarding of a new trial.

As to lot number three, there was no conflict in the evidence on the question of title. The plaintiff claimed under title derived from the defendant through a chain of quitclaim deeds. There was no evidence that the defendant from whom the title started was himself the owner of the lot, or that he, or the plaintiff, or any intermediate party in the chain, was ever in possession before or at the time when the deed was given. The defendant under proper allegations in his answer, introduced evidence tending to prove that he, after the execution of the deed under which the plaintiff claimed, was placed in the possession or custody of the lot as the agent of one Crim, who claimed to be, and, as the evidence tended to prove, was in fact the owner of the land. If Crim was the owner of the lot and put the defendant in custody of it after the date of the defendant's quitclaim, there can be no just pretense that the defendant could not avail himself of that state of facts to protect himself in that custody (assuming now that his custody amounted to a personal possession on his part), even though he had prior to his assuming such custody, quitclaimed the lot to Martel under whom the plaintiff claimed directly. We consider the findings in relation to this lot as opposed to all the evidence having to do with the rights of the parties with respect to it.

It appears from the record that the "defendant offered to prove by legal and competent testimony that he had been in the open, notorious and adverse possession of the Groat lot for more than five years next preceding the commencement of the action." The plaintiff objected to the evidence generally, and it was excluded by the Court. The counsel for the respondent seeks to justify this ruling on the broad ground that a "grantor cannot set up the Statute of Limitations against his own deed." We consider that a grantee can, under circumstances, be disseized by his own grantor as well as by another. In the matter of an adverse possession taken by a grantor subsequent to his deed, and continuously held thereafter, the possession is not the possession of the grantee's "predecessor," as that term is used in the sixth section of the Statute of Limitations. The effect of that section is to allow a grantee to tack to his own the possession of his grantor preceding the grant, for the purpose of working out a bar against him who has the legal title.

The terms of the offer in this case were of the broadest, and if the maker of a quitclaim deed can under any conceivable state of facts hold the premises quitclaimed adversely to the party to whom the deed is given, then the ruling was erroneous. We hold such adverse possession to be possible in law, and that is the only point raised upon the record for review.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT.—The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction, either on appeal or writ of error, where the amount in controversy in the Court below is less than three hundred dollars.

WRIT OF ERROR to the County Court of Solano County.

August 28th, 1863, plaintiff commenced an action against defendants in the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Solano County, to recover judgment for the sum of two hundred and sixty-eight dollars and seventy-seven cents, alleged to be due plaintiff for work and labor performed for defendants, and for money paid by plaintiff for their use. Defendant Hopkins alone answered. The answer was served and filed on the 28th day of January, 1864. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint, and raised the objection that the Court had no jurisdiction because the amount in controversy was less than three hundred dollars.

On the 16th of May, 1864, an order was made on motion of defendant, transferring the cause for trial to a Justice's Court in Solano County. Plaintiff had judgment in the Justice's Court, and defendant appealed to the County Court, where plaintiff recovered judgment for two hundred and sixty-eight dollars and seventy-seven cents, and six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and twenty-five cents, costs of suit, for taking care of cattle which had been attached when the suit was commenced. Defendant moved to retax the costs by striking out the costs for keeping attached property, because the Court had no jurisdiction to enter any judgment for such costs. The motion was denied, and defendant excepted. Defendant thereupon brought the case to the Supreme Court by writ of error, for the purpose of reversing the order refusing to strike out said costs.

Statement of Facts.

JOHN LUCAS, ADMINISTRATOR de bonis non OF THE ESTATE OF TIMOTHY MURPHY, DECEASED v. SAMUEL TODD, et al.

RESIGNATION OF AN ADMINISTRATOR OR EXECUTOR.—If the administrator or executor of an estate resigns his trust, and an order is made by the Probate Court accepting the resignation, and the resignation and order of acceptance are in proper form, when the proceeding is collaterally questioned in another Court, the presumption is, that the order accepting the resignation was properly made, and that the executor or administrator had settled his accounts and delivered up all the estate to some person appointed by the Court.

JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS OF PROBATE COURT.—When the Probate Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, all intendments are, under the statutes of California, in favor of the correctness of the action of the Court, the same as in other Courts of record.

SAME.—One attacking a judgment or order of a Probate Court made within the scope of its jurisdiction, must affirmatively show error.

COMPLAINT IN AN ACTION BROUGHT BY AN ADMINISTRATOR.—A complaint in an action brought by an administrator, who has been appointed after the resignation of a former administrator, is sufficient, if it avers the issue of letters to the former administrator, that he qualified and entered upon the discharge of the trust, that he resigned, and his resignation was accepted by the Probate Court, and that the plaintiff was afterwards appointed administrator, and qualified, and that letters were issued to him.

PETITION FOR LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.—A petition for letters of administration is sufficient, if it states facts showing that the petitioner is one of the persons entitled to administer.

APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR.—The amount and value of an estate are not jurisdictional facts in an application for letters of administration.

DEFENDANT CANNOT QUESTION HOW ADMINISTRATOR CAME BY NOTE.—When an administrator has qualified, and received letters, he is entitled to the assets of the estate wherever they may be; and if he has obtained possession of a note, no matter from whom, the defendant cannot, in action brought on it, object that it is not properly in his custody.

ORDERS OF PROBATE COURT NOT TO BE REVIEWED IN COLLATERAL ACTION.—The Supreme Court will not, in an action brought by an administrator, review the action of the Probate Court in ascertaining the value of the estate and fixing the amount of the administrator's bond.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Marin County.

The complaint averred that Timothy Murphy died in 1853. in Marin County, leaving a will, by which he appointed James Black and James Miller his executors, and that the will was probated; that in 1854 they qualified; that letters were issued to them, and they entered on the discharge of the duties of the trust, and continued to act until 1856, when they resigned, and their resignation was accepted by the Probate Court; that plaintiff was a nephew of deceased, and in 1858 was appointed by the Probate Court of Marin County administrator of the estate, and qualified, and letters were issued to him, and that he was still administrator.

The action was brought on a bond made by defendant Todd to the former executors, for money held by them belonging to the estate and loaned to Todd, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the bond.

Defendants first demurred, and after the demurrer had been overruled, answered. The answer denied that the former executors duly resigned or were discharged from their trust as executors, and also denied that letters were duly issued to plaintiff, or that he qualified, or that Black and Miller delivered the bond sued on to plaintiff, or that he was entitled to collect or receive the money due on the bond. The answer set up as new matter, that it appeared from the report of the executors that the bond was of the value of eight thousand dollars, and that when plaintiff was appointed no showing was made of the value of the bond, and that the administrator was required to give a bond in the sum of four thousand dollars only.

Plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

S. F. & J. Reynolds, for Appellants.

The demurrer was well taken, and should have been sustained.

Black and Miller were never legally discharged from their office and trust as executors, and were, at the time of the attempt to grant letters to Lucas, the executors of the will, and the only persons entitled to the possession of the estate, and to administer it and execute the trusts of the will.

Section one hundred of the Probate Act (Wood's Dig. p. 400) authorizes an executor, by writing filed in the Probate

Opinion of the Court.

Court, to resign his appointment, "provided he shall first settle his accounts and deliver up all the estate to such person as may be appointed by the Court."

It is very clear that before an executor can resign his trust, and before the Probate Court can accept the resignation, so as to relieve him from his duties and responsibilities as such executor, two things must plainly appear to have been done. First—A full settlement of the executor's accounts, showing the true condition of the estate, and how much and what part of it is unadministered. Second—That the Court has appointed some other person competent and qualified to receive the estate and finish the administration and execute the trusts. Without these the Court has no power or jurisdiction to discharge the executor, and any attempt to do so by the Probate Court would be void, and confer no power upon the appointee.

The complaint shows that the executors were discharged, if at all, in September, 1856. That discharge only appears as the result of the acceptance of the resignation on that day. The complaint does not show that they had rendered any account of their doings as such executors, or that any action was ever taken by the Probate Court as to their accounting; nor does it appear from this complaint how much, if any, property was in the hands of the executors at the time they undertook to resign, or when Lucas claims to have been appointed. This is manifestly necessary; for after they are discharged, the Court has no further power over them.

evidence to show that Lucas is the administrator of Murphy. The question is raised in various forms, as upon rulings of the Court admitting portions of proceedings in the Probate Court, and as to the effect of the evidence when admitted, but the substantial question is, as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain that issue.

Letters testamentary had been issued to James Miller and James Black upon the same estate. Miller filed his resignation September 13, 1856, and Black his, August 26, 1856. The resignation of the former was formally accepted by an order to that effect entered by the Probate Court, September 22, 1856, and of the latter, August 27, 1856. Both the resignations and the orders of acceptance are in proper form. It is insisted, however, that these orders are void, because it does not appear that the executors had settled their accounts, and delivered up all the estate to some person appointed by the Court. It does not appear that they had not performed these acts, and it is not shown that the entire proceedings of the Probate Court are in evidence. The Probate Court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and even conceding that the proceeding can be collaterally questioned, it is not to be presumed that the orders accepting the resignations of the executors were improperly made. All intendments must be in favor of the action of the Court, the same as in other Courts of record. (Wood's Dig. 912; Irwin v. Scriber, 18 Cal. 503.) But there is in the record a decree of final settlement of the accounts of Miller and Black as executors, entered July 30, 1856, in which it is adjudged that the debts of the estate and expenses of the administration have all been paid, and the property all distributed, except the bond and mortgage now in suit, and that there is a considerable sum due the executors for over payments. And there is other testimony that, on the resignation of the executors, Black delivered the bond and mortgage and all other papers to the Probate Court, and it is now found in the possession of plaintiff.

The petition of plaintiff for letters of administration de bonis non states all the jurisdictional facts and gave the Court jurisdiction of the case. The duty of ascertaining the value of the property of the estate, and fixing the amount of the administrator's bonds with reference thereto, is devolved upon the Probate Court, and we must presume that the Court discharged that duty properly, at least till the contrary is shown. We have no evidence that the value of the bond and mortgage in suit was more than half the amount of the bond fixed by the Probate Court. It may have been worthless. It is at least doubtful whether we can collaterally review the action of the Probate Court in this respect. The amount and value of the estate are not jurisdictional facts. We think the evidence shows that the plaintiff is the administrator de bonis non of Murphy, and as such entitled to maintain the action.

Judgment affirmed.

By the Court, SAWYER, J., on petition for rehearing.

The complaint is sufficient. We supposed our opinion was sufficiently indicated on this point in discussing, substantially, the same questions raised by counsel on the rulings made upon the trial.

The petition of Lucas for letters states, that the applicant is a nephew of the deceased, and a nephew is one of the persons entitled to letters. There may be others having preference, and if so, on application of a nephew for letters, the persons entitled to be preferred may appear, under section sixty-one of the Probate Act, and contest the application or assert their own rights on that ground. Even other persons, "not entitled," may be "competent," and letters may be granted to such person on "the request of the person entitled." "The request shall be in writing and shall be filed in the Court." (Sec. 66.) The Act does not say that the request shall be stated in the petition. It would be well to state in the petition all the facts upon which petitioner relies to entitle him to letters in preference to other parties. But we think the petition of Lucas states "all the facts essential to give the Court jurisdiction of the case."

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

It is unnecessary to determine, whether the Probate Court was the proper custodian of the bond from the time of the acceptance of the resignation of the former executors till the appointment of plaintiff, or not.

The resignations of the executors respectively were accepted by the Court, and there is nothing to affirmatively show that these proceedings are invalid. When Lucas was appointed administrator de bonis non, he became entitled, as such administrator, to the possession of the assets of the estate, wherever they might be, and he has obtained possession — no matter from whom — of the instrument in suit. He is now the proper custodian, and entitled to maintain this action.

This is not an appeal from an order, or judgment of the Probate Court, and it is not our province to collaterally determine in this case whether the Probate Court erred in ascertaining the value of the estate and fixing the amount of the administrator's bond. The Probate Court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and it determined the question of the value of the property and fixed the amount of the administrator's bond upon the evidence before it. If the Court erred, its action must be reviewed in some other mode.

Rehearing denied.

APPEAL from the County Court of Shasta County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

J. Chadbourne, for Respondents.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

In June, 1853, Meredith Meador, for the purpose of obtaining the right to hold and possess a certain tract of the public lands situated on the Sacramento River opposite the present town of Red Bluffs, under and in pursuance of the Act entitled "An Act prescribing the mode of maintaining and defending possessory actions on public lands in this State," (Laws 1852, p. 158,) made an affidavit, describing the land, the possession and enjoyment of which he desired to secure, and stating therein that the description given was not intended to embrace more than one hundred and sixty acres, and that he had not taken up any other claim under said Act, and also to the best of his knowledge and belief there was no existing title or claim to the same. This affidavit was filed in the office of the proper county. The land was surveyed at the time by his procurement by the County Surveyor, and was found to contain one hundred and fifty-four acres. Within ninety days thereafter, he put improvements on the land, partaking of the reality to the value of three hundred dollars, a part of which consisted of a dwelling house, which became occupied by himself and family within the ninety days. He continued to reside on the premises until in the latter part of October, 1855, during which time he put improvements on the land, amounting in value to about two thousand dollars, and used the property for the purposes of husbandry. In October, 1855, he removed to another place, after which the premises were occupied by his tenants, until he sold and conveyed the same to Pierce, Church and Comstock, by deed bearing date the 17th day of January, 1861, which was duly acknowledged and recorded in the same month. From the time of the execution of this conveyance to the time of the commencement of this action, Pierce, Church and Comstock were in the possession of the Meador tract, by the defendant, Keyes.

On the 29th of December, 1861, which was Sunday, the plaintiff and some four or five men in his employment went upon this tract of land at a point opposite Red Bluffs, taking with them a quantity of lumber, with which they constructed a fence on three sides of a piece of land of about an acre in extent. The fourth side of it was bounded by the Sacramento River. The plaintiff also commenced the erection of a house on the land, which he inclosed on one side, and partly on the other side. At the two ends it was left open, and it was also without a roof. This work was done between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon. One of the plaintiff's workmen, who was a witness on his behalf, testified that while the work was being performed the weather was wet and dismal, and another of them said it was a rainy day. Near sundown of the same day the defendants came upon the ground, and found one Jordan at the house, whose furniture and provisions, according to his own account, consisted of a bed and two bottles of whiskey. The whiskey, he said, was provided by the plaintiff, in whose employment he was at the time. Pierce asked Jordan what he was doing there, and one of the defendants told him he had come to knock the house down, and then commenced the work of demolition. Upon this Jordan told them not to tear down the house until he could get his things out. The defendants then proceeded to remove the fence, and finished their work by throwing a portion of it and a portion of the house into the river. Jordan said the reason he did not prevent them was because they were too strong for him. They made no threats, but Pierce said it was customary, when they tore down a house of that kind to throw the man into the river and the house on top of him; and that it was a good thing the plaintiff was not there; and he also said Comstock was armed. Keyes was in possession of the Meador tract at the time, under Church and the defendants Pierce and Comstock.

A few days afterward the plaintiff commenced an action under the Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers. His complaint contains the usual allegations in such cases, which are traversed by the defendants' answers. The cause was tried in the County Court of Shasta County, and a verdict was found for the defendants, on which judgment was rendered. A motion was made for a new trial, which was denied, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The transcript of the record and statement contains two hundred and thirty-five printed octavo pages, when all that is necessary to present the case might well have been embodied in one sixth the space; but notwithstanding the unnecessarily imposed labor we have examined it and the fifty-nine points of error assigned; all of which, in our view of the case, are immaterial or otherwise invalid.

There can be no doubt of the admissibility of the evidence relating to the taking up by Meador in 1853 of the land called the Meador tract, and of his occupation and improvement of it, even though it were admitted that he failed to so comply with the Act of 1852 as to entitle him in his own right to all the benefits which a complete compliance therewith would have invested him. His possession of the land, for nearly eight years claiming the same, and his sale and conveyance of it to Pierce, Church and Comstock, and their subsequent occupation of it, invested them with the right as against any mere intruder upon it to the possession of the land. Their deed from Meador, with their actual occupation of a considerable portion of the land, extended their possession as against persons having no right or title from a source of paramount proprietorship, to the whole of the Meador tract; and for the entry of the plaintiff and the ouster of them by him of the parcel of land particularly in controversy — had he remained in possession — might have had their action of ejectment. When the plaintiff entered upon the Meador tract, on the 29th of December, 1861, Pierce, Church and Comstock were in legal contemplation, in the actual possession of the land, within the doctrine of Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122, and the cases there cited, and the entry thereon by the plaintiff was a trespass.

The grantees of Meador being in possession of the premises on the day of the plaintiff's entry, it is proper next to inquire, did the plaintiff obtain such an actual peaceable possession of the parcel of land which he inclosed on that day as to give him a right to maintain this action against the defendants for retaking the possession and removing the fence and partly constructed house from the premises? If the possession of the plaintiff was not actual and of sufficiently long standing to become to a legal intent peaceable, then he was not in a condition to maintain his action. In Treat v. Stuart, 5 Cal. 113, the Court said: "The plaintiff, in an action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, must show an actual peaceable possession in himself at the time of the entry;" and in House v. Keiser, 8 Cal. 500, which was an action brought under the Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers, the Court said that "a party who desires to avail himself of the summary remedy provided by this Act must bring himself clearly within its provisions. He must show a possession, actual, peaceable and exclusive; a mere scrambling or interrupted possession, or the exercise of casual acts of ownership over the premises is not sufficient." By the ninth section of the Act it is provided that "on the trial the complainant shall only be required to show, in addition to the forcible entry or detainer complained of, that he was peaceably in the actual possession at the time of the forcible entry, or was entitled to the possession of the premises at the time of a forcible holding over." Before the plaintiff could be entitled to recover he was bound to establish a case from which it could at least be presumed that at the time of the alleged forcible entry and ouster he was peaceably in actual possession. This the statute requires. But instead of this the testimony of his witnesses showed that his own entry was tortious, and that his adverse holding had not yet become quiet and peaceable. He had not yet acquired a status affording him the right to resist the defendants' assertion by necessary force of their own right to the possession of the premises, when they came upon the ground and removed the structures erected there by the plaintiff during the same day. His acts of trespass were in fieri when the acts of the defendants of which he complains were committed. In such condition of things a mere intruder or trespasser is not entitled to the remedies provided by the statute. (People v. Reed, 11 Wend. 159.)

The evidence, which was properly introduced before the Court and jury, established beyond controversy the possession of Pierce, Church and Comstock of the parcel of land described in the complaint, and the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses alone showed that his entry was a trespass, which was resisted before his possession had become, in the sense of the Act, actual and peaceable. If a verdict and judgment had been rendered upon the evidence properly admitted in the case, in favor of the plaintiff, it would have been erroneous. There was no evidence improperly admitted or excluded that could have justly changed the result to which the jury came; so that if the Court committed any errors in admitting testimony, or in instructing the jury, they were of a character that could not by any possibility have harmed the plaintiff. It is only errors which may have injured the complaining party that will authorize this Court to reverse a judgment of the Court charged with having committed them. (Merle v. Matthews, 26 Cal. 455, and the cases there cited.)

We are of opinion the verdict was right, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Opinion of Shafter, J., dissenting.

SAWYER, J., concurring.

There was, doubtless, irrelevant testimony admitted on both sides, and the rulings of the Court are not free from errors; but it is clear to my mind that without any of the errors committed the verdict of the jury must have been the same. It is clearly apparent from the evidence properly admitted upon the question of possession—in which it can scarcely be said there was any conflict—that the plaintiff was in the act of attempting to acquire possession by an unjustifiable trespass upon an actual possession in the defendants of long standing; and that this attempt was immediately, upon the same day, interrupted and frustrated by defendants, in the manner stated by Mr. Justice Currey, before the acts of plaintiff had crystallized, so to speak, into that actual, peaceable possession contemplated by law, which constitutes the foundation of the right to maintain the action of forcible entry and detainer.

The Court expressly instructed the jury that the right to the possession could not be determined in this action, and substantially told them that the survey of Meador, and the conveyance to him by defendants, could only be considered with reference “to the extent and boundary of such possession.” For the purpose to which this testimony was thus limited, I think the evidence admissible. I am satisfied, from the testimony, that the plaintiff had acquired no such possession, as against the defendants, as would entitle him to maintain this action, and that on this ground the judgment should be affirmed.

SHAFTER, J., dissenting.

I am compelled to dissent from the opinion of my brethren. The only question is whether Hoag had succeeded in disposing the tenant of Pierce, Church and Comstock, to a legal intent at the time when the tenant, in company with his landlords, came upon the ground and demolished the house and fence and expelled Jordan, the plaintiff's servant. The building of the fence was not in fieri at the time the defendants came upon the premises, but was a fact accomplished; nor was the plaintiff in the act of going within the inclosure with a view to take possession, but was already within it, in the person of his servant. All the steps essential to an ouster by Hoag of the tenant in possession had been taken, and the fact could have had no additional force or meaning imparted to it by lapse of time. On the ground of the acts of Hoag performed upon the land, the tenant of Pierce, Church and Comstock could have maintained ejectment against him. By force of those acts the Statute of Limitations was set in motion in his favor, and he was placed in a position where he was amenable to taxation. The possession of Hoag was undoubtedly a hostile possession, but it was peaceable during the time it subsisted, and that is all that can be said of a possession of the longest duration.

AND THE VOLCANO WATER COMPANY.

ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.—A person in the possession of property is in a position to bring an action, under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the Practice Act, to quiet his title thereto, and on the trial no other evidence on his part than proof of possession is necessary in the first instance.

TITLE UNDER A SHERIFF'S DEED.—The title of a party acquired by a Sheriff's deed, executed under a Sheriff's sale made on an order of sale issued on a decree foreclosing a mortgage, relates back to the date of the mortgage.

EVIDENCE IN ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.—One claiming title to property under a Sheriff's deed, executed on the foreclosure of a mortgage, may, in an action brought by him to quiet his title against one who claims under a Sheriff's deed executed on the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, in which foreclosure he was not a party, go behind the decree foreclosing the mechanic's lien, and show that no lien in fact existed.

PURCHASER pendente lite ESTOPPED BY THE DECREE.—If an action is brought against a corporation to foreclose a mortgage purporting to have been executed by it, and a lis pendens is filed, and a decree is rendered enforcing the mortgage, a party who buys the mortgaged property, pendente lite, at Sheriff's sale, made on a judgment which does not enforce a lien older than the lis pendens, is estopped from saying that the mortgage was not the act of the corporation.

PARTIES TO FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE.—A party who has no interest in mortgaged property at the time an action is brought to foreclose the mortgage, and who buys, pendente lite, and after a lis pendens has been filed, is not a necessary party to the foreclosure.

WHEN SUIT MAY BE BROUGHT TO QUIET TITLE.—One in possession of property, claiming title under a Sheriff's deed executed on a mortgage foreclosure, may maintain an action to quiet his title against another who claims a title against him which would be good against the mortgagor, although void as against the plaintiff.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eleventh Judicial District, Amador County.

Plaintiff recovered a judgment in the Court below, and defendant Jones appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

P. L. Edwards, for Appellant.

Possession can be evidence or notice of no more than the title actually in the possessor. (Welsh v. Welsh, 5 Ohio, 425.) Here are all the facts in pais, all the record indicia, and all the averments of the complaint, show that the plaintiff has always claimed and now claims only under and in virtue of proceedings had under a void mortgage. From his complaint, from the evidence, and from the findings, no other claim of title on his part can be inferred. He cannot now rely upon simple possession under a claim of higher title, for he has shown that his possession is qualified and procured through proceedings in pais, and in Court, which, as against the defendant claiming under an older and better title, are wholly inoperative and void. (2 Sugden on Vendors, 558; Fagg v. Mann, 2 Sum. C. C. R. 555.)

If a person be simply in possession, the presumption is that he is the rightful owner; but when his own acts, averments, and deductions show a different estate, he is thereby bound. His possession cannot avail him when he himself shows that it is not rightful. Thus, "a person in possession of real estate is presumed to be seized in fee. This presumption, however, may be rebutted by a stronger presumption arising from circumstances." (1 Cow., Hill and Edwards' Phil. on Ev. 646.) The presumption arising from possession may always be rebut-

Argument for Appellant.

ted or qualified by its character, or other opposite evidence. (Jayne v. Price, 5 Taunton, 326.)

If the title relied upon either as a cause of action or ground of defense be a nullity, it results that the possession is wholly inoperative, at least as against a better title. (Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., 9 Wend. 511.) To the same effect are the notes 1 Cow., Hill and Edwards' Phil. on Ev. 646-7.

The effect of our statute was merely to abrogate the rule of the common law, that the simple pendency of an action should import notice, not to require or authorize the filing of a lis pendens where there was already notice in fact, or constructive under the recordation acts. (Samson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 200; Richardson et al. v. White et al., 18 Cal. 102.)

Section twenty-seven of the Practice Act provides that the filing of a lis pendens shall be notice of the plaintiff's right, but it does not say that it shall be notice of a right which he has not, nor that mortgages and other liens when properly recorded shall not import notice, but be dependent upon the filing of a lis pendens. The statute only gives effect to such notice when there would otherwise have been none. Even in New York, where a lis pendens is required to be filed in an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage, though of record, the recordation has been held to import notice. (Potter v. Rowland, 4 Seld. 448.)

To affect a party as a purchaser pendente lite, the holder of the legal title must be shown to have been impleaded before the purchase which is to be set aside. (Carr v. Callaghan, 3 Litt. 365.)

If the mortgage was the deed of the corporation, there is an end of our case, and if not, there is an end of the respondents'. If not such deed, then as already held by this Court in another case, the foreclosure could give it no force or effect as against the corporation or its grantees, whether voluntarily or in invitum. The Sheriff's deed in pursuance of such foreclosure could not vest any title in the respondent, and all the subsequent proceedings, including the decree, sale, and deed, were utterly void. All this is aptly and fully illustrated in (Branham et al. v. The Mayor, etc. of San José, et als., 24 Cal. 604.)

Argument for Respondent.

The foregoing proposition cannot be evaded by the assumption that a lis pendens had been filed by the respondent. He could not by filing such notice create title in himself. He could thus at most only give notice of the claim which he actually asserted. There is no room here for the doctrine of estoppel. Neither the corporation nor the appellant claiming under it can be estopped by force of a void mortgage. Does a lis pendens whose only legitimate function is to give notice of actualities have such potency? Concede that the appellant by virtue of this lis pendens had notice, still he had notice only of a false and void claim of title.

John W. Armstrong, for Respondent.

Jones was not a bona fide purchaser pendente lite. The lis pendens imparted notice to him of the object of the suit and the extent of the relief claimed, and therefore he is estopped by the force of the foreclosure decree, as it has the same conclusive effect as was given to judgments and decrees under the old common law and equity systems of practice.

This is so held after full and deliberate consideration of the twenty-seventh section of the Practice Act, in the case of Richardson v. White, 18 Cal. 107, where the Court sum up in the following clear and forcible language: "The object of the statute evidently was to add to the common rule a single term, to wit: to require for constructive notice not only a suit, but filing a notice of it; so that this rule is as if it read: The commencement of a suit and the filing of notice of it, are constructive notice of it to all the world of the action, and purchasers or assignees, afterwards becoming such, are mere volunteers, and bound by the judgment."

This doctrine was afterwards affirmed in Ault v. Gassaway, 18 Cal. 205, and Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 211.

But if the mortgage was not the deed of the corporation, the plaintiff is in possession under color of title, and this must prevail against the defendant who has no title. In Winans

Argument for Respondent.

et al. v. Christy et als., 4 Cal. 79, the Court said: "This is a much stronger case than the one of 'Hutchinson v. Perley,' referred to. It is not a mere prior possession, but possession coupled with color of title is shown in defendants." (See Adams on Ejectment, Sec. 77; Livingston v. Walker, 7 Cowen; Woods et als. v. Lane et als., 2 Sergeant; Raule ex dem. 53; Murry v. Denn, 5 Cowen 200; Ludlow et als. v. Myers, 3 John.; Doe ex dem. v. Hubert et als., Breese's Ill. Rep. 279.)

Neither were the plaintiffs, although they had alleged in their declaration a fee simple title, compelled to prove the same. They could properly rely upon prior possession, if they chose to do so. (See Adams on Ejectment, Sec. 275; Day v. Alerson, 9 Wendell, 110.)

The decree through which defendant claims did not become a lien, as against Horn, who had no notice of the suit.

No lis pendens was filed and the decree was not rendered until after Horn commenced his suit, as the facts show. It seems to us that this point is settled in the case of Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 151.

The proceeding which resulted in the rendition of that decree was in rem, not in personam.

This proposition is sustained to the fullest extent by the decision in the case of Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 421, 422, where the judgment considered was in the form of this one, the only difference being, that was the foreclosure of a mortgage, and this the enforcement of a mechanic's lien; but this we insist makes no difference, as the sections of the Practice Act referred to above, applies as well to the enforcement of liens as a foreclosure of a mortgage, by its express language; and, besides, upon general principles of law there is no difference—the analogy is complete between them. (Doughty v. Devlin, 1 E. D. Smith, 631.) The mechanic's lien being invalid, the foundation of the decree is sapped, and the effect of it, together with all the proceedings under it, destroyed. (Branham v. The City of San José, 24 Cal. 604, 605.)

Why is this so? Because it is a proceeding in rem. The rule is also well stated in 2 Hilliard on Mort., p. 47, Sec. 5, in these words: "If a foreclosure is void the fee still remains in the mortgagor, and no action can be maintained, either of ejectment or trespass, which affirms the title to be in the mortgagee."

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

It appears that both parties claim under the Volcano Water Company; the plaintiff through the foreclosure of a mortgage, and the defendant through the foreclosure of an alleged mechanic's lien; and the question is as to which of the parties has the better title under the common source. The facts bearing upon the case are substantially as follows:

On the 4th day of October, 1855, the defendant, J. G. Fordyce, entered into a written agreement with the Volcano Water Company to do and perform work upon, and to furnish material for the construction of the ditch set forth in plaintiff's complaint, known as the Volcano Water Company's ditch.

Said work was completed by said Fordyce on or before the 15th day of December, 1855, according to the terms of the aforesaid agreement.

On the 29th day of August, 1856, Fordyce filed in the office of the County Recorder of Amador County a verified copy of the amount due him for such work — said amount so claimed to be due being thirty thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight dollars and thirty-four cents — together with a description of the property to be charged with the lien, and a notice of his intention to hold a lien upon the said Volcano Water Company's ditch, etc., for the purpose of securing the payment of the sum so alleged to be due him for work and materials furnished upon the said property.

On the 25th day of February, 1857, Fordyce commenced an action in the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, in Amador County, against the Volcano Water Company, to recover of the company the said sum ($30,978.34), with interest from August 29th, 1856, and costs of suit, and to obtain a decree foreclosing and enforcing his lien claimed upon said property.

Such proceedings were afterwards had in said action that upon the written stipulation of the plaintiff and defendant herein, judgment was rendered therein in favor of Fordyce and against the Volcano Water Company for the sum of eight thousand dollars, and for the foreclosure of the lien claimed by Fordyce, and adjudging the lien to be good, and directing a sale of the property to satisfy such judgment and costs.

Thereafter Jones, a defendant herein, became the owner and holder of such judgment and decree and of all the right of Fordyce thereunder.

On or about the 19th day of November, 1858, execution and decree of sale were issued upon such judgment, and under and by virtue of the same the Sheriff of Amador County did, on the 11th of December, 1858, sell said property to the said defendant Jones, who was the highest bidder, for the sum of $——.

The certificate of sale was, by the Sheriff, given to Jones, as required by law.

The time for redemption of said property from such sale expired, and no redemption thereof was made.

After the time for redemption had expired, and on or about the 14th day of August, 1859, the Sheriff executed and delivered to said defendant, Jones, the usual Sheriff's deed of conveyance of all and singular the aforesaid property.

Under and by virtue of such deed, and the proceedings theretofore had, the defendant, Jones, at the time of the commencement of this action, claimed and now claims to be the owner, and entitled to the possession of all of said property.

On or about the 3d day of May, 1856, the said Volcano Water Company — one of the defendants — made, executed and delivered a mortgage to the plaintiff upon the whole of said ditch and other property, to secure the payment to the plaintiff of the sum of twenty-one thousand nine hundred and one dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per month from its date.

Opinion of the Court.

Said mortgage was duly acknowledged and recorded in the office of the County Recorder in and for Amador County, on the 10th day of May, 1856.

On or about the 29th day of September, 1857, C. D. Horn, the plaintiff, commenced an action in the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, in and for Amador County, against the Volcano Water Company, defendant, to recover the said sum of money, so secured by said mortgage, and for a decree foreclosing said mortgage, and for an order of sale of said property to satisfy said debt, judgment and costs of suit.

On the 29th day of September, 1857, the plaintiff also filed in the office of the County Recorder of Amador County a notice of the pendency and object of such action, together with a correct description of the property to be affected by the judgment prayed for in plaintiff's complaint.

Such proceedings were had in said action that, on the 6th day of June, 1859, a judgment and decree was rendered in said action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, the Volcano Water Company, for the sum of twenty-one-thousand nine hundred and one dollars, together with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per month from May 3, 1856. That the said mortgage be foreclosed, and the mortgaged property be sold to pay and satisfy such judgment and costs, etc.

On the 9th day of June, 1859, an order of sale and execution was issued upon and to enforce such judgment and decree in due form.

Under and by virtue of said execution and order of sale, the Sheriff of said county, having levied upon the property, did, on or about the 23d day of July, 1859, sell all and singular of said mortgaged property to the plaintiff, C. D. Horn, and one F. E. Barney, who were the highest bidders therefor, for the sum of eighteen thousand dollars.

A certificate of sale was by the Sheriff duly issued to them as purchasers.

The time for redemption from such sale expired, and no redemption of such property was made therefrom.

Opinion of the Court.

After the time for redemption had expired, and on or about the 24th day of January, 1860, the Sheriff made, executed, acknowledged and delivered to the plaintiff and F. E. Barney a deed of conveyance in the usual form, of all of said property; which deed was on the same day recorded in the office of the County Recorder of Amador County.

Afterward F. E. Barney, by deed in writing, bargained, sold and conveyed all his right, title and interest in said property to the plaintiff herein.

Thereafter the plaintiff, C. D. Horn, entered upon, took possession of, and at the time of the commencement of this action was and is now in the actual possession of all and singular of the aforesaid property.

First—It appears, by the record, that the plaintiff was in the possession of the ditch at the commencement of this action and that fact establishes, prima facie, that the plaintiff was the owner of the property. By the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the Practice Act a person in possession of real property by himself or by his tenant, is in a position to bring an action to quiet his title thereto; and it follows, if the allegation be proved at the trial, that no further evidence of title on the part of the plaintiff can be essential in the first instance. Possession, whether proved by the plaintiff in an action to quiet title or in an action of ejectment, is followed by the same consequences. (Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.)

Second—As to the title of the defendant under the proceedings in foreclosure of the mechanic's lien.

The decree in the suit brought by Fordyce against the company for the purpose of foreclosing his alleged lien was entered upon a stipulation of the parties. The decree is valid on its face, and is binding upon the company and upon all persons claiming under it, by title subsequent and with notice.

Assuming, for the present, the validity of the plaintiff's mortgage, it appears that it became a lien upon the ditch on the 3d of May, 1856, and the defendant had notice of the fact on the tenth of that month, the day the mortgage was recorded. The title of the plaintiff under his Sheriff's deed relates back to that date. (Sands v. Pfeiffer, 10 Cal. 265.) On that day Fordyce not only had no lien, but his right to acquire one had been lost by lapse of time, assuming that he once had the right. The ditch was completed, as the case finds, on the 15th of December, 1855, and no notice of intention to claim a lien was filed in the Recorder's office until August 29th, 1856. Whether the right to a lien be tested by the Act of 1855 or by the Act of 1856, can make no difference, for the Acts respectively require every person wishing to avail himself of "their benefits" to file in the Recorder's office of the county in which the building, etc., is situated, a just and true account of the demand due him, etc., within sixty days after the work shall have been completed. But further: It has been held (Ellison v. Jackson Water Company, 12 Cal. 543,) "that neither the mechanic's lien law of 1855 or 1856 gave a lien upon canals or ditches." The language of these Acts is "building, wharf or other superstructure." A ditch is not a building, nor is it a wharf, and in no sense can it be designated as a superstructure. And it was further held, that "flumes, constructed at different points of the line of a ditch, cannot change the general character of the work as an excavation. Such flumes are mere connecting links of the ditch over ravines and gulches; and the whole work must be regarded as a ditch." The plaintiff is at liberty to go behind the Fordyce decree, and show that no mechanic's lien in fact existed in his favor, for the action was brought, not only subsequent to the mortgage, but subsequent to its registration, and the plaintiff was not made a party. And further: There was no notice of lis pendens filed. (Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 314.)

It is insisted on the part of the appellant that Fordyce, in his suit against the company, recovered a personal judgment, and that the sale of the ditch was under a levy of execution issued on that judgment, and not under the order of sale issued upon the decree. In the first place, the fact claimed does not appear with any proper distinctness; and, in the second place, if such personal judgment was recovered in fact, the defendant should have made the judgment a lien by docketing it while he held it as assignee, and then redeemed the ditch from the prior lien of the plaintiff's mortgage; or else he should have redeemed as successor to the interest of the Volcano Company after he became a purchaser at his own sale.

It is further insisted, however, on the part of the appellant, that the Volcano Company, a corporation, never gave a mortgage to the plaintiff, and that the mortgage actually given was the deed of the individuals merely who signed it as Trustees.

The question has been ably argued by the respective counsel, but it is not necessary that we should pass upon it. The defendant Jones is estopped from saying that the mortgage was not executed by the company. The company against which the action to foreclose the mortgage was brought is estopped by the decree, and the defendant is estopped for the reason that a notice of lis pendens was filed in the action, and the defendant bought pendente lite, (Richardson v. White, 18 Cal. 107,) and neither he nor Fordyce had in fact any interest in the premises at the time when the action was brought by way of lien or otherwise. The defendant is therefore bound as effectually by the decree as he would have been had he purchased from the company pendente lite under a voluntary sale. It is of no moment that Fordyce was not a party to the action to foreclose the mortgage, for he had in fact no interest in the premises at the time when the action was brought. (10 Cal. 552.)

Third—It is further insisted by the appellant, that his title is not absolutely good as against the plaintiff, is absolutely void on the face of the record under which the title is claimed, and that the plaintiff has therefore no need of equitable relief.

The title of the defendant is, as we have already stated, a perfect one as against the Volcano Company; and the defendant claimed prior to the commencement of this action and to the plaintiff's damage that the title was perfect as to him also. It was held in Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 151, that a party "has the right to be quieted in his title whenever any claim is made to real estate of which he is in possession, the effect of which claim might be litigation or a loss to him of the property."

Statement of Facts.

We consider the case at bar to be clearly within the principle of that decision.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. AH WOO.

SUFFICIENCY OF AN INDICTMENT.—The sufficiency of an indictment in this State is to be determined by the rules prescribed in the "Act to regulate proceedings in criminal cases," and if an indictment, upon a fair reading, stands this test, it is sufficient, though not good at common law.

INSTRUMENT FORGED IN THE CHINESE LANGUAGE.—An indictment for forging an instrument in a foreign language is good if it set out a translation in the English language of the instrument charged to be forged, without containing a copy of the original in the foreign language.

MISNOMER OF FORGED INSTRUMENT.—Where the instrument charged to have been forged, or a translation of it, is set out in full in the indictment, a misnomer of its technical designation is immaterial.

PASSING A FORGED INSTRUMENT.—If a forged order is made payable to the defendant, it is sufficient to charge him in the indictment with uttering and passing the same to another with intent to defraud, without charging an indorsement. The manner in which the fraud was committed is matter of evidence.

USE OF TERMS IN INDICTMENT CONJUNCTIVELY.—Where the intent to defraud by a forgery is described in the statute by different terms stated disjunctively, the indictment may state these terms conjunctively.

WHAT IS FORGERY?—The uttering and passing, as well as the making of a forged instrument, is forgery.

APPEAL from the County Court, El Dorado County.

The following is a copy of the indictment in this case:

"The above named defendant, Ah Woo, alias Ma Yien Fang, is accused by the Grand Jury of said County of El Dorado by this indictment, of the crime of forgery, committed as follows: The said defendant, Ah Woo, alias Ma Yien Fang, on the—day of February, A. D. 1864, and before the finding of this indictment, at the County of El Dorado and State of California, did feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully, falsely utter and pass to one Ah You, a certain false, forged, and counterfeit order, as a true and genuine order of one Wang Ah Chung, for the payment of one hundred dollars, which aforesaid order then and there was written in the Chinese language, and of the tenor and effect following when translated into the English language, to wit:

'To Yet Wha's Store—Sirs: Please pay to Ma Yien Fang the one hundred dollars which I deposited at yours sometime ago, because I am sick now and need money to employ a doctor to attend me. Be sure to pay it to him, please.

'WANG AH CHUNG.

'February 28th, 1864.'

"With the intent then and there to prejudice, damage, and defraud the said Ah You, he, the said Ah Woo, alias Ma Yien Fang, then and there well knowing the said false, forged, and counterfeit order to be false, forged, and counterfeit, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the People of the State of California."

The defendant was convicted and sentenced, and appealed.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Appellant.

The indictment should have set forth the instrument. The indictment avers that the tenor of the instrument is set forth. Tenor means an exact copy. (1 East, P. C. 180; Barbour's Crim. Law, 122.) As to setting forth an exact copy, I refer to Barbour's Criminal Law, 121, 122; 2 Wharton's Crim. Law, Sec. 1,469; 3 Archibold's Crim. Pleadings, 536, 19; Wood's Digest, 289, Sec. 252.

The indictment charges the uttering and passing, and not forging the instrument. It is described as an order. The translation set forth is not an order but a direction to pay money deposited; it is a draft. It is alleged that the instrument was uttered to injure Ah You, who is neither the drawee or payee. Neither the words "bearer" or "order" are inserted. Ah You could not be injured by having the paper passed to him by Ah Woo.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for The People.

The objection that the indictment does not set forth the instrument in the original language as well as an English translation, whatever weight it might have had at the common law, if taken at any time subsequent to demurrer, is cured now in England by the provisions of the statute of 7 George IV, c. 64, sec. 21. Our Criminal Practice Act is more liberal than the English statute; and if there the objection must be taken by demurrer, here certainly it should also. (Rex v. Harris, 32 Eng. Com. Law R. 571; Rex v. Moses, 32 Eng. Com. Law R. 571; Rex v. Balls, 32 Eng. Com. Law, R. 571, and notes "a" and "b" appended thereto; 2 Russell on Crimes, *375; Rex v. Warshauer, R. and M. C. C. R. 466.)

But it is by no means sure, had the objection that the indictment does not set forth the instrument in its original language been raised at the proper time in the Court below and been overruled, that such a course would have worked any substantial injustice to the defendant. The object of setting out the instrument in full in the indictment is to furnish some information to the Court, and where no such information can be obtained by such a course, it is unnecessary that it should be set out. (Regina v. Coulson, 1 Eng. Law and Eq. 550.)

This indictment only purports to set out the "tenor and effect of the instrument when translated into the English language." Whether the translation is correct or not is a question to be tested by the evidence upon the trial. We take it that the instrument was sufficiently set forth to sustain an indictment for larceny, and we think that under our statute no greater strictness is required in indictments for forgery. An English translation of the instrument must be set out, but what good could have been accomplished by setting it out in the Chinese language. (Rex v. Goldstein, Russ. and Ry. 473.) But whatever may be the common law decision upon this point, under our statute we urge that this indictment is sufficient. The Criminal Practice Act prescribes the rules by which the sufficiency of pleadings is to be determined in this State; nor shall any indictment be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant. (People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 356; People v. Lloyd, 9 Cal. 55; Wood's Digest, 288, Secs. 235, 237, 246, 247; Wood's Digest, 318, Sec. 601; People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 169; People v. Ah Sing, 19 Cal. 599; People v. Gatewood, 20 Cal. 149; People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 403.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

I. The objection to the indictment upon the ground that it does not contain a copy in the Chinese language of the forged and counterfeit order therein mentioned is not well taken, even though it should be conceded that it would have been fatal at common law. As we have had frequent occasion to remark, the forms of pleading in criminal actions in this State are prescribed in the "Act to regulate proceedings in criminal cases," and the sufficiency thereof is to be determined by the rules or tests therein provided. Such is the express will of the Legislature, and we are not allowed to disregard it. (Section 235; People v. Ah Sing, 19 Cal. 598; People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 403; People v. King, 27 Cal. 507.) With much particularity that Act provides a series of tests by which to determine the sufficiency of an indictment. If an indictment upon a fair reading is found to stand these statutory tests it must be declared sufficient, notwithstanding a contrary result might follow when subjected to the tests of the common law. These tests are enumerated in section two hundred and forty-six. The sixth and seventh in order are the ones applicable to the question now before us. The first provides that the act or omission charged as the offense shall be clearly and distinctly set forth in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. The last requires that the act or omission charged as the offense shall be stated with such a degree of certainty as to enable the Court to pronounce judgment upon a conviction according to the rights of the case.

The question before us relates solely to the description of the forged instrument which, it is charged, the defendant uttered and passed; and under the foregoing tests we think the description given in the indictment is sufficient for all purposes which can be directly or remotely subserved by the record in this case. The instrument is described as purporting to be an order of one Wang Ah Chung for the payment of one hundred dollars, written in the Chinese language. An English translation is then given which, so far as the demurrer is concerned, must be assumed to be literally correct. (If the translation is not correct, the objection could be made by demurrer to the evidence when the instrument is offered at the trial.) In one sense an exact copy in the Chinese language would have been a more perfect description, yet for all practical legal purposes a correct translation would be far more useful to the Court and the jury. While the highest degree of certainty in point of description is desirable, it does not follow that a less degree is not sufficient for all legal purposes. A description which serves to establish the legal character of the instrument, to show that it is one of those enumerated in the statute against forgery, and to identify the offense sufficiently to protect the defendant against a second prosecution, answers every useful purpose, and more than that our forms of pleading do not require. A correct translation of the instrument in question is sufficient to enable the Court to determine its legal character, even if we assume that the Chinese language is as familiar to the Court as household words. It is equally as effectual to protect the defendant against a second prosecution. What useful purpose, then, can a copy in the Chinese language serve which is not as well served by a correct translation? If it be said that greater certainty would be attained, the answer is that where sufficient certainty is attained greater certainty is not needed. Not unfrequently a more certain and complete description of stolen goods might be given than is found in an indictment for larceny, but the indictment is not therefore vicious. The question is not, can a more certain description be given? On the contrary, it is, does the indictment contain a sufficient description? Doubtless in all cases of forgery, where the instrument is written in a foreign language, it would be better to set out the instrument in the language in which it is written, for by so doing greater certainty, which is always desirable in legal proceedings, would be attained; but it is not indispensable that this should be done, for in our judgment sufficient certainty may be otherwise obtained.

If a statement of the foreign language in which the instrument is written, accompanied by a correct translation, can serve all the useful purposes of a pleading, as we have attempted to show, or if a copy can be dispensed with where the instrument is not written in a foreign language, as at common law, because it has been lost or destroyed or is in possession of the defendant, (1 Wharton on Crim. Law, Sec. 311; 2 Wharton on Crim. Law, Sec. 1,468,) or if, in the latter case, a misdescription of the instrument is to be regarded as immaterial as prescribed in our statute, (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 252,) it follows that the question under consideration is one of form rather than substance; in which case it must be determined in accordance with the two hundred and forty-seventh section of the Criminal Practice Act, which declares that "no indictment shall be deemed insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matters of form, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant." In our judgment all the substantial rights of the defendant have and are as fully secured and protected under this indictment as they would have been had it contained a copy, in the Chinese language, of the forged instrument. It is true that a more perfect description would have been afforded by a fac simile, but we think one sufficiently certain for all purposes has been obtained by the course adopted. If no legal prejudice can result therefrom to the defendant, and we think there cannot, all the calls of the statute upon the subject of criminal pleading are satisfied by the indictment, so far as the present question is concerned. (People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 355; People v. Lloyd, 9 Cal. 55; People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 166.)

II. It is next claimed that the forged instrument is misnamed an "order." Admitting this to be so the indictment is not thereby made vicious. Where the instrument is set out in full as in the present case a technical designation of its legal character becomes immaterial for the obvious reason that the Court can determine from the face of the instrument whether it comes within the statute against forgery. (2 Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, Sec. 1,467.) But independent of this we think the word "order" a proper designation of the instrument within the meaning of the statute. (Evans v. The State, 8 Ohio State Rep. H. S. 196.)

III. It is next claimed, in effect, that the intent alleged in the indictment is an impossible one, and it is argued that inasmuch as the person intended to be prejudiced is neither the drawee nor the payee mentioned in the order, and the order is not drawn payable "to order" or "bearer," and is not transferred by indorsement, Ah You could not have been defrauded by the altering and passing in question. This position is untenable in our judgment. The order was payable to the defendant under the name of Ma Yien Fang, and he is directly charged by the defendant with uttering and passing the same to Ah You, with intent to defraud him. It was not necessary, in order to constitute an uttering within the meaning of the statute, that there should have been a formal indorsement. A delivery of the order with the intent to defraud would be sufficient; and a mere failure to comply strictly with the forms of law cannot be relied on to defeat the charge of criminal intent.

So far as it is claimed that the indictment fails to show in what manner Ah You was or could be defrauded by the transaction, it is sufficient to say that all that is matter of evidence. The charge is direct that the transfer was made with intent to defraud Ah You, which is sufficient so far as the indictment is concerned. It may have been passed as security for a loan. All this is to be proved, but need not be alleged.

IV. The objection to the indictment upon the ground that it reads "with intent to prejudice, damage and defraud," instead of using only one of those terms, is not tenable. It is true that the statute reads "with intent to prejudice, damage or defraud." The use of either of these terms in describing the criminal intent would have been sufficient; but where the intent is described in the statute by different terms stated disjunctively, it is well described in the indictment by the use of all stated conjunctively. (2 Wharton's Criminal Law, Sec. 1,466.)

V. Nor is the objection that the defendant could not be found guilty of forgery because the charge was for "uttering and passing a forged instrument" tenable. By the statute the uttering and passing, as well as the making, etc., of a forged instrument, is declared to be forgery.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT ON GOLD COIN NOTE.—In an action upon a note payable in gold coin, if the defendant suffers a default, the Clerk may enter a judgment against him payable in gold coin.

A JUDGMENT FIXED BY LAW.—When the law declares what the judgment shall be, a judgment entered on default is not the judgment of the Clerk.

expressly conferred upon him by statute. (See Wallace v. Eldridge, 27 Cal. 498.)

It requires the judgment of the Court to decide whether the plaintiff was entitled to a gold coin judgment.

There was a fact to be determined which required the interpretation of the contract and its character. This the Clerk could not do.

Section one hundred and fifty of the Practice Act "empowers the Clerk to enter judgment for the amount specified in the summons, including the costs;" but it goes no further than this. It does not constitute the Clerk a Court to determine any question which requires or may require judicial action, and the question whether a contract is payable in gold coin or not, may be, in certain cases, a question of very great doubt and difficulty, and requiring wise judicial discrimination.

E. W. F. Sloan, for Respondent.

The whole proceeding is in strict accordance with the requirements of the statute, vide Practice Act, §§ 26, 150, and 200, as amended in 1863. (Statutes of 1863, p. 687.)

In Wallace v. Eldridge, 27 Cal. 498, it did not appear from the facts stated in the complaint that the money mentioned in the contracts sued on was payable in a specified kind of money or currency, hence the judgment as there entered in the District Court was not the judgment of law. But here the complaint does show that the contract is payable in gold coin, and, consequently, the judgment as entered up conforms strictly to the provisions of section two hundred, and is the judgment of law.

dollars in gold coin, with interest thereon, was thereafter entered against them by the Clerk. The question is, whether the Clerk, as such, had power to enter the judgment without judicial direction.

The action was brought for the recovery of "money only" — (Practice Act, sec. 150,) — for a particular kind of money, but still a recovery of nothing but money was sought, and that fully liquidated in amount. The default admitted the facts stated in the complaint. Thereafter, no question could have been raised except by motion to set aside the default, or perhaps on motion in arrest. No such motion was made, and every point within the purview of a motion in arrest, is within the purview of this appeal. The plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for gold coin, and the statute pronounced the judgment of the law arising upon the facts stated in the complaint. As was held in Wallace v. Eldridge, 27 Cal. 498, "the Clerk adjudged nothing; he was merely the hand that entered the judgment of the law." The relief was sub modo special, but still "the action was for money only;" and the relief provided for the judgment is the relief dictated, identically, by the law. The judgment is in no just sense the judgment of the Clerk. His head did not conceive it; it was merely written out by his hand.

THE PEOPLE v. GEORGE THOMPSON.

INDICTMENT CONTAINING MORE THAN ONE COUNT.—If the indictment contains more than one count, it should appear clearly on its face that the matters set forth in the different counts are descriptive of one and the same transaction.

WHAT DIFFERENT COUNTS IN INDICTMENT SHOULD CHARGE.—An indictment charging the defendant with entering a dwelling house with intent to steal, may contain different counts, charging the ownership of the goods intended to be stolen in different persons, if each count charge the same entry into the same house and at the same time.

STATEMENT OF OFFENSE IN SECOND COUNT IN INDICTMENT.—The words "said," "aforesaid," or equivalent expressions in the second count of an indictment, are necessary to fix the identity of the offense therein stated with that stated in the first count, except as to facts, of which the Court will take judicial notice.

Statement of Facts.

NAME OF HOUSE IN DIFFERENT COUNTS OF INDICTMENT.—In an indictment for entering a dwelling house with intent to steal, if the second count give the name of the house entered the same as the first, the Court will presume that it is the same house without the word "said" or its equivalent.

ENTERING A HOUSE WITH INTENT TO STEAL.—The offense of entering a dwelling house in the daytime with intent to steal, created by the Act of February 27th, 1864, is complete, if the value of the property the defendant intended to steal is less than fifty dollars.

REVIEW OF INSTRUCTIONS IN A CRIMINAL CASE.—On an appeal in a criminal case, the appellate Court will not review alleged errors in instructions of the Court, unless embodied in a bill of exceptions, or there is an indorsement thereon, signed by the Judge, showing the action of the Court thereon.

APPEAL from the County Court, Sacramento County.

The defendant was indicted under the Act of the 27th of February, 1864, (Statutes of 1863-4, p. 104,) against breaking and entering, or wilfully and maliciously entering without breaking, in the daytime, any dwelling house, etc., with intent to steal or to commit any felony whatever therein. The indictment contains two counts. The first count charges him with feloniously entering, on the 21st day of July, 1864, in the daytime of that day, at, etc., a certain dwelling house, to wit: the hotel known as the Crescent City Hotel of one John McRaith, then and there situate, with intent the goods and chattels of the said John McRaith, then and there being, then and there feloniously to steal, etc.

The second count charges the defendant with "feloniously entering on the said 21st day of July, 1864, at, etc., the dwelling house of one John McRaith, known as the Crescent City Hotel, then and there situate, with intent to steal the goods and chattels of one James McGrath, then and there being," etc.

The indictment was demurred to upon the ground that more than one offense was charged. The demurrer was disallowed, and it is now claimed that such disallowance was error.

The first count in the indictment charged the value of the goods at sixteen dollars. Defendant was convicted and appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

A. Compte, Jr., for Appellant, referred to section two hundred and forty-one, Criminal Practice Act, and People v. Connor, 17 Cal. 361; and Wharton's A. Criminal Law, Secs. 565 and 1,903, on the question of the indictment charging two offenses.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for The People, in answer referred to Josslyn v. Commonwealth, 6 Metcalf, 236; People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

Under our practice an indictment must not charge more than one offense, but it may set forth that offense in different forms under different counts. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 241.) But this must be done in such a way as to show clearly upon the face of the indictment that the matters and things set forth in the different counts are descriptive of one and the same transactions. The object of allowing different counts is to provide against fatal variances between the material parts of the indictment and the proofs brought forward in their support. Where a material fact is doubtful, that is to say, where it is uncertain as to which of two or more conditions is the true one, and either is equally effectual in completing the offense, it is proper to frame a count embracing each, in order that there may be at the trial no fatal variance between the matters alleged and the matters proved. By way of illustration take a case of larceny. Suppose, from the evidence in the possession of the pleader, and upon which the indictment is to be framed, it is doubtful whether the stolen goods were the property of A. or B., and it is material for the purpose of identifying the larceny (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 243,) to allege the ownership of the goods with certainty. In such a case two counts, one alleging the ownership in A. and the other in B., is proper. But it must appear from the averments in the second count that the larceny therein set forth is the same as that charged and described in the first count, and unless this is done the indictment will be obnoxious to the objection that it charges more than one offense. Or, take the present case. The first count charges that the defendant intended to steal the goods of John McRaith. The second charges that he intended to steal the goods of James McGrath. Now, assuming that it was necessary to allege the ownership of the goods, which the defendant intended to steal, in order to make a statement of the offense which would be sufficient in law, the two counts are proper, and there is no legal objection to the indictment merely upon the ground that the ownership of the goods intended to be stolen is charged to be in two different persons, which seems to have been the principal ground relied upon by counsel for the defendant in the Court below.

The use of the words "said" or "aforesaid," or equivalent expressions in the second count of an indictment, will generally be found indispensable in order to fix the identity of the offense therein stated with that contained in the first count. It is a little remarkable that in the indictment before us those words are not used in a single instance where their presence would have been proper if not necessary for the purpose of identification, but are used where they were not needed. Thus the date of the transaction is preceded by the word "said," which was not necessary, since the Court must know that there can have been but one 21st day of July in the year 1864. But when we come to the dwelling house, the identity of which with that mentioned in the first count must be shown with certainty, neither the word "said" nor any equivalent expression is used. It is true that it is described, word for word, the same as in the first, but so far as the use of words is concerned there is nothing to show that the Crescent City Hotel of the second count is the Crescent City Hotel of the first, except that the name of the hotel and its proprietor is the same in both.

The dwelling house having been described in the first count, no further description in the second count was required. A simple reference to it as "the said dwelling house" or as "the dwelling house aforesaid," was all that was necessary in the execution of the deed to the plaintiff. The presumption of law was that his residence continued where it is shown to have been at the time of the conveyance to him. (Prather v. Palmer, 4 Pike, Ark. 486; 2 Stark. Ev. 937.)

This presumption, we think, was not overcome by its appearing that there was a person bearing the same name at Oroville, in the County of Butte, at the time the deeds to the plaintiff were executed.

But were we mistaken in this last proposition, and were it held that the presumption against identity, arising from difference of residence, was counterbalanced by the presumption in its favor, arising from similarity of name, even then the matter was left in equipoise, and, therefore, not proved. (Doe ex dem. Hanson v. Smith, 1 Camp. 196; Middleton v. Sandford, 4 Camp. 34; Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Starkie, 239; Buller's Nisi Prius, p. 171.)

W. W. Crane, Jr., for Respondents.

The exact similarity of the names in the two deeds raises, at least, the presumption of identity of the persons. Prima facie they are the same; and it was for the appellants to rebut this presumption by showing, if they could, that the persons were different. Ejectment to recover a portion of the lot No. 1,188 in the City of San Francisco. Both parties claimed under the prior possession of their respective grantors, and both claimed title under the "Van Ness Ordinance," and the statute ratifying and confirming the same, and the plaintiff also relied upon adverse possession for a period exceeding five years before the entry of defendants. The jury found for the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, and the grounds relied on are errors in law, committed by the Court and excepted to by them. Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict is stated as one of the grounds, but as they do not specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, that ground must be disregarded; and if the proper specifications had been made, the ground could not be maintained, for the evidence appears quite sufficient to sustain the verdict. Several of the specifications of errors in law committed by the Court do not amount to specifications within the meaning of section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act. The general statement that the Court erred in admitting illegal and incompetent evidence for the plaintiff or in excluding legal and competent evidence offered by the defendants, or in excluding evidence offered by them to show title in the defendants' grantor, amounts to but little, if anything, more than an allegation that the Court committed errors in law. The defendants have annexed to the judgment a statement on appeal, and the grounds therein contained will be examined so far as it may be necessary to a proper disposition of the case.

1. The plaintiff having introduced in evidence a deed executed to Benjamin T. Black, of San Francisco, in 1859, offered in evidence a deed of the same premises to the plaintiff, executed by Benjamin T. Black, of Oroville, in the County of Butte, in 1862, and the defendants objected to its admission without proof that the grantor was the same person as the grantee of the former deed. The question of the identity of the grantor of the last mentioned deed with the grantee of the previous deed, is a question of fact for the jury, and neither a question of law nor a preliminary question of fact, to be passed on by the Court, before the admission of the deed; and the party producing the deed must satisfy the jury upon this point by competent evidence, otherwise the deed will be disregarded, because it does not show a transmission of the title of the previous grantee. The general rule is that the identity of the name is prima facie evidence of the identity of the person. (2 Phil. Ev. C. H. and E. Notes, 606; Thompson v. Marrow, 1 Cal. 428; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 554; Jackson v. Boneham, 15 Johns. 226.) The name of the city or county, usually following the name of the grantor, forms no part of his name, but it simply indicates his residence at the date of the deed; and the recital of the residence of the grantor as in a different county from that of the grantee of the prior deed of the same name, would be presumptive evidence of a change of residence of the same person between the dates of two deeds; but in the absence of proof that there were two persons of the same name, it would not raise the presumption that the grantor was a different person from the previous grantee of the same name. The addition of the place of residence is in many respects of less significance than that of "junior," and it is said of "junior" that it forms no part of the name—that it is a casual and temporary designation that may exist one day and cease the next. (See Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige, 170; People v. Collins, 7 John. 549; Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. 522; Kincaid v. How, 10 Mass. 203.) In Hatcher v. Rocheleau, 18 N. Y. 86, which was an action on a judgment rendered in the State of Mississippi, it was held that the identity of the name of the defendant in the two actions was "presumptive evidence (and sufficient, no suspicious circumstances appearing) that the defendant is the person against whom the judgment was rendered."

2. The Court did not err in overruling the defendants' motion for a nonsuit as to either or both of said defendants, for there was evidence tending to show the prior possession of the plaintiff's grantor, and to connect both of the defendants with the alleged ouster.

3. The questions relating to a sale under execution of the interest of the City of San Francisco in the land that passed to the city, as the successor in interest of the former pueblo, were fully and satisfactorily passed upon in the case of Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530; and the conclusions announced in that case have been too frequently adopted and acted upon in subsequent cases to be now disturbed, except for the most cogent reasons.

4. The defendants insist with great zeal, and with a most abundant citation of authorities and legal principles, that the Court erred in excluding the preamble and resolutions, and an order of the Board of Supervisors, purporting to repeal the Van Ness Ordinance, passed a few days prior to the Act of the Legislature confirming the ordinance. The purpose of the evidence, was mainly to show that the ordinance was repealed before the passage of the confirmatory Act, and that the city did not consent to, but protested against its passage, and it is argued therefrom, that the Act was powerless and ineffectual to pass the title of the city in the premises. Questions arising upon the ordinance and the confirmatory Act, have been presented to this Court in almost every conceivable form, and the legality and validity of the ordinance and the Act, have uniformly been maintained by the Court. It has been steadily held, that they vested in possessors described in the ordinance, a title to the lands therein mentioned, as against the city, and those decisions have become a rule of property, lying at the foundation of a large portion of the titles to real estate in that city, and the rule is now upheld, not only upon principle, but upon consideration of policy, requiring certainty and stability in the rules constituting the landmarks of property. The doctrine of stare decisis does not find a more clear, forcible or necessary application in respect to any of the rules governing the transmission of the property of the city or of the former pueblo, than to this rule. (Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 612; Holladay v. Frisbie, Id. 630; San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 443; Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 Cal. 508; Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11; Wolf v. Baldwin, Id. 306; Hubbard v. Barry, 21 Cal. 321.)

But if the proposition of the defendants is conceded, that the title to the premises did not and could not pass from the city by virtue of the ordinance and confirmatory Act, their position is not materially strengthened, for the title still remains in the city, and they do not in any manner—other than through the ordinance and the Act—connect themselves with it; and they, as well as the plaintiff, can rely only upon the rights growing out of the possession of the premises by themselves and those under whom they respectively claim. If the defendants were not in possession at the commencement of the action, the plaintiff of course could not recover, and if they were then in possession they will be presumed to be rightfully in possession until the plaintiff shows a better right in himself, and until that is shown it would be idle for the defendants, even if permitted, to prove an outstanding title in the city. If the plaintiff shows possession in himself, or the better right to the possession as between him and the defendants, at the time of the entry of the defendants, as alleged in the complaint, they would not be permitted to overcome the presumption of title in the plaintiff, that the law raises upon such proof, by showing title in a stranger. They could not obviate the consequences of their own trespass, by showing that the entry of the plaintiff was a trespass upon the possession of a third person.

5. The remaining points in the case relate to the instructions given or refused by the Court, and in this respect the case is nearly identical with that of Greely v. Townsend, 25 Cal. 604, in which the rulings of the Court below were sustained. We think this case was fully and fairly presented to the jury by the Court, and that the instructions given to them declare the law applicable to the evidence in the cause with commendable clearness and precision.

RELATION OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.—If the tenant on the expiration of his lease delivers possession of the premises to the landlord, an intention on his part to afterwards re-enter, and a re-entry without the consent of the landlord, do not restore the relation of landlord and tenant.

APPEAL from the County Court, Solano County.

This case was before the Supreme Court at the April Term, 1864, and is reported in 25 Cal. 59. A new trial took place in the Court below in July, 1864, when defendant recovered judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

On the second trial below, the Court permitted the defendant to testify that he re-entered under a pre-emption right.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Whitman & Wells, for Appellant, argued that the relation of landlord and tenant being established by the lease, defendant was estopped from denying that it still subsisted, and referred to Frisbie v. Price, 27 Cal. 253, and Page v. Hobbs, Id. 483.

M. A. Wheaton, for Respondent, argued that the estoppel ceased when the lease expired and the possession acquired under it had been restored to the landlord, and referred to Jackson v. Whitford, 2 Caine's, 216; Anderson v. McLeod, 12 John. 183; and Wilde's Lessee v. Serpell, 10 Gratt. (Virginia) 415.

By the Court, SHAFTER, J.

This is an action to recover the possession of certain premises, under the thirteenth section of the Act concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers. The premises in question were leased to the defendant by the plaintiff's intestate for a term ending October 1st, 1863. The defense was put upon the ground that the respondent surrendered the possession of the premises to the plaintiff a few days after the term expired. The facts as shown by the record are substantially as follows: The defendant left the premises with his family about the 10th of October, 1863, and took with him everything that belonged to him; and on the same day he delivered the keys of the house to the plaintiff personally at his residence, saying to him, "there are the keys of the house and I give you the possession." The plaintiff replied "all right." It further appears that the house occupied by Walls was within the same general inclosure as the tract in question. In two or three days after the defendant so left the premises he entered upon and took possession of them anew.

This action is brought upon the assumption that the relation of landlord and tenant is now on foot between the parties; but we consider that the relation came to an end on the day the defendant evacuated the premises and surrendered the keys. It may be that the defendant, when he quit the possession, intended to re-enter, but as he quit in fact and within the plaintiff's knowledge, and in compliance, too, with a notice to quit which the plaintiff had previously given, and as the plaintiff was himself in possession of the premises for two or three days thereafter, the mere intention of the defendant when he left to re-enter at a future day cannot be regarded as a matter of any moment. There was no simulation about the defendant's surrender. Everything was just as it appeared to be. It was the defendant's duty to leave and he seems to have performed it. We cannot inquire into the motives by which he was governed nor as to his ulterior designs. If the right of possession is now in the plaintiff, he has, in our opinion, mistaken his remedy.

COMPLAINT IN ACTION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE.—In an action on a note and to enforce the lien of a mortgage given to secure its payment, where other parties beside the mortgagor are made defendants on the ground that they have or claim an interest in the mortgaged property, a general allegation in the complaint that such parties have or claim to have some interest in the property is all that is required.

Statement of Facts.

DEMURRER.—If the complaint shows that the plaintiff has a cause of action, and that he is entitled to some relief, the question as to what kind or how much relief shall be granted to him cannot be made on demurrer.

APPEAL from the District Court, First Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

The complaint contained the usual allegations on a promissory note, of which the following is a copy:

“SAN FRANCISCO, April 4, 1861.

“$15,000.

“Value received, I promise to pay to the order of J. H. Poett, twelve months after date, fifteen thousand dollars, with interest at the rate of one and one-fourth ($1\frac{1}{4}$) per cent per month until paid.

“ABEL STEARNS.”

“I agree to pay the above written sum of fifteen thousand dollars in gold coin of the United States.

“ABEL STEARNS.”

It then averred that on the 2d day of July, 1861, the defendant Stearns, to secure the payment of the note, executed to plaintiff a mortgage on certain property (describing it) in Los Angeles. A copy of the mortgage was attached to the complaint. The allegations concerning the mortgage were in the usual form. The complaint also alleged that the parties other than Stearns made defendants then had or claimed to have some interest in or claim upon the mortgaged premises, or some part thereof, as mortgagees, attaching creditors, or otherwise, which interest and claims were all subsequent and subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage.

The prayer was in the usual form in such cases, and for judgment in gold coin, and for such other and further relief as plaintiff might require and to the Court might seem proper.

The defendants, Stearns, Hellman, and Domec, demurred to the complaint, because it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and because there was a defect of parties defendant. The Court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the supplement to the note promising to pay in gold coin could not be enforced because it bore no date, and upon failure of the plaintiff to amend, gave judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

Robert F. Morrison, and S. M. Wilson, for Appellant.

Volney B. Howard, and Benjamin Hays, for Respondents.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

In sustaining the demurrers to the complaint the Court below manifestly erred. The complaint does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and upon the face of the complaint there does not appear to be any defect of parties defendant. The facts stated as to those defendants who were made parties because they had, or claimed to have, some interest in the mortgaged premises, are sufficient. The plaintiff was not bound to set forth their interests. The general allegation that they had, or claimed to have, some interest, is all that is required on the part of the plaintiff. And the defendants, if they have any interest, and desire to defend the suit, must set it out. The question as to what kind or how much relief the plaintiff is entitled to recover, cannot be made on the demurrer. The complaint shows that he has a cause of action and is entitled to relief of some kind—which is a complete answer to the demurrer, upon the general ground that sufficient facts are not stated. The demurrers ought to have been overruled.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

and to direct a warrant to be issued therefor, payable out of the county funds in the hands of the County Treasurer; and if they refuse to issue such warrant in a proper case, a writ of mandate will be issued commanding them to do so.

EXPENSES FOR VOLUNTEER COMPANIES PAID BY COUNTIES.—The sums paid by counties for expenses of volunteer companies are to be allowed and credited to such counties by the State Treasurer, in his annual settlements with the County Treasurers.

THIS was an original proceeding commenced in the Supreme Court.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. G. Cobb, in pro. per., for Relator.

John C. Byers, for the Defendant.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The relators are members of a military company in San Joaquin County, organized under the Act of 1862, in relation to the militia of this State, as amended by the Act of 1863. In pursuance of the provisions of the Act, the said military company, with the approbation of the Board of Supervisors, rented a room for a drill room and armory, and employed an armorer to take charge of the same. On the 6th of February, 1865, the rent of the building, wages of armorer and other necessary incidental expenses unpaid, had accumulated to the amount of seven hundred and fifty dollars. A bill for the amount was duly presented to the Board of Supervisors of said county, and the said Board requested by said company to allow the same, and direct it to be paid out of the funds of said county. The Board of Supervisors allowed said bill, and ordered a warrant to be issued therefor, payable out of the general State funds in the hands of the County Treasurer of said County of San Joaquin; but refused to order the same to be made payable out of the county funds of said county. At the time mentioned there were no funds belonging to the State in the hands of the County Treasurer. The relators now ask for a peremptory mandate directing the said Board of Supervisors to order the said warrant to be issued payable out of the county funds of said San Joaquin County. The question therefore is, whether the relators are entitled, under the law, to have the said sum paid out of funds belonging to the county, or whether they are confined to such funds as may be in the County Treasurer's hands belonging to the State—whether such State funds were raised by general taxation, or by a poll tax for military purposes.

The determination of the question depends upon the construction to be given to section twenty-two of the Act referred to, which is as follows, to wit:

“SEC. 22. It shall be the duty of the Board of Supervisors of each county in which there shall be one or more organized volunteer companies, upon application of the Captain or commanding officer of the same, to provide for each company in said county an armory, safe and suitable for the drill of squads in the School of the Soldier, and an armorer to take charge of the same; and it shall also be the duty of the Board of Supervisors of each county in which there shall be one or more organized regiments, upon application of the Colonel or commanding officer of the same, to provide for each regiment in said county a drill room, suitable for skeleton regimental drill; and said Board shall also, at each of its sessions, audit and allow, and cause to be paid, the necessary incidental expenses of said company or regiment previously incurred; provided, that the total amount for all the purposes above mentioned shall not exceed fifty dollars per month for each company, and one hundred dollars per month for each regiment; and for light batteries, not less than two hundred and fifty dollars per month; and, provided, further, that at the annual settlement of the several Treasurers of such counties with the State Treasurer, the amount so paid, or caused to be paid by the several Boards of Supervisors thereof, shall be allowed and credited to such counties.” (Laws of 1863, p. 442.)

It will be seen that this section makes it “the duty of the Board of Supervisors of each county in which there shall be one or more organized volunteer companies * * * to provide for each company in said county an armory * * * and an armorer to take charge of the same;" and that "said Board shall also, at each of its sessions, audit and allow and cause to be paid the necessary incidental expenses of said company or regiment, previously incurred." There is no limitation to any particular fund out of which these expenses are to be paid. No fund is specified in this or any other section. Nor does the Act appear to us to give the Board of Supervisors authority to deal with the funds of the State, as such. It provides, however, that, "at the annual settlement of the several Treasurers of such counties with the State Treasurer, the amounts so paid, or caused to be paid, by the several Boards of Supervisors thereof shall be allowed and credited to such counties." We think the only reasonable construction is that these expenses are primarily made a charge upon the county, and the charges paid are to be refunded by an allowance and credit in favor of such counties to be made by the State Treasurer in his annual settlements with the respective County Treasurers. The State fixes the rate of taxation for State purposes, which are assessed and collected at the same time with county taxes, and through the same officers. They pass through the hands of the County Treasurer, and are to be paid by him into the State Treasury at certain designated periods. The Board of Supervisors have no direct control over the funds of the State while in the hands of the County Treasurer, nor at any other stage of the proceedings. They can neither increase or diminish the amount except so far as it is incidentally affected by its acts as a Board of Equalization. There may, or may not be, at any given time, funds of the State in the hands of the County Treasurers; but whether there be or not does not depend upon the acts of the Boards of Supervisors. But the Board do have the management, control and disposition of the funds of the county within the limits prescribed by law, and can, within certain prescribed limits, increase or diminish the amount of its revenues. And it is out of these revenues, which are under the control of the Board of Supervisors, that they must make all appropriations for expenditures which are incurred under the exclusive direction of the Board, unless it is clearly manifest that their powers are extended to the funds of the State. It may be that it was supposed that, to make the county primarily liable for expenses which are incurred under the direction of the Board, would stimulate that body to practice more rigid economy. However that may be, we are of the opinion that such liability is directly thrown upon the county in the first instance, and that the relators are entitled to a peremptory mandate. And it is so ordered.

A. S. JEWELL AND J. R. JEWELL v. POLLY E. JEWELL, ADMINISTRATRIX OF THE ESTATE OF GEORGE C. JEWELL, DECEASED.

DECEASED HUSBAND'S HALF OF COMMON PROPERTY.—Upon the death of the husband intestate, leaving no descendants, the surviving wife and surviving father of the deceased each inherit one half of the husband's half of the common property.

DEFINITION OF "DESCENDANTS."—The "descendants" of a person are his children, grandchildren, and their children to the remotest degree.

SURVIVING WIFE.—The surviving wife inherits one half of the common property if the husband dies leaving descendants.

ONE HALF THE COMMON PROPERTY.—In this State, prior to April 4, 1864, if the husband died leaving a wife and descendants, the descendants inherited one half the common property, and it was not subject to the husband's testamentary disposition. But if the husband died, leaving a wife and no descendants, one-half the common property was subject to the husband's testamentary disposition.

APPEAL from the Probate Court, Sonoma County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

A. W. Thompson, for Appellants.

The only question now, therefore, to be considered is, who are the descendants, and whether that word can properly be used with reference to the father. Words must be regarded in the sense in which they are used by the Legislature rather than by their abstract meaning. "If he or she shall leave no issue, or husband, or wife, the estate shall go to his or her father." (Descents and Distributions, Statutes 1861, p. 570, latter part of second section.)

If such had been here the state of facts, would not the estate have fallen to the father, and would he not have then, as to the estate, been the descendant of the husband?

By the rule of estates held under strict feudal tenure, where from the nature of things the father could not have done military service, the estate might, at a very early period in the history of our laws, have even escheated for the want of a "descendant;" but, even at common law, the strict rule that descents (using the word in its technical sense) must always be downward, has been disregarded, and in tracing descents we must necessarily ascend in very many cases.

The word "descendant" means in the statute one who could properly take by descent, and in that sense is constantly used in the books. "Property of lands by descent is," says Lord Bacon, "where a man hath lands of inheritance, and dieth, not disposing of them, but leaving it to go (as the law casteth it) upon the heir. This is called a descent of law." (2 Washburn on Real Property, 401.)

"The rules of descent prescribed by the statutes of the several United States are as follows: In Alabama the real estate of an estate descends. * * * In California, I. * * * II. If there be no issue, then to the surviving husband or wife, and to the intestate's father in equal shares." (2 Washburn on Real Property. Note—Statute Rules of Descent, pp. 417, 418.)

"But in default of such brothers and sisters and their issue, the estate descends to the father in fee simple." (4 Kent Com. 393.)

E. D. Colton, for Respondent.

A brief examination of the statutes (Sec. 11 of the "Act defining the rights of husband and wife," Statutes 1862, p. 211, and Sec. 1 of the "Act to regulate descents and distributions," Statutes 1862, p. 569) will show that appellant's definition of the word "descendants" used in section 11 is incorrect, and that the word "descendants" is not synonymous with "kindred" and does not include father, etc. If we substitute the word kindred in the place of the word descendants in section 11, it will read as follows:

"Sec. 11. Upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband, one half of the common property shall go to the surviving wife, and the other half to the kindred of the deceased husband, the whole being subject to the payment of his debts. Upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife, the entire common property shall go to the surviving husband. In case of the death of the husband, if there be no kindred of the husband, one half of the common property may be subject to his testamentary disposition, and in the absence of any such disposition, shall be subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband."

Now the separate property of the husband (Statutes 1862, pp. 569, 570) is distributed to the kindred, (and husband and wife,) and in default of kindred (and husband and wife) it escheats to the State.

Putting these two statutes together, they would read in effect: "If there are no kindred of the husband, then one half of the common property shall be distributed among the kindred of the husband," which makes them absurd.

Again: by one statute, if there are no kindred, the property would be distributed; by the other, if there are no kindred, it would escheat to the State. There is no pretence that the one Act was intended to or did repeal the other.

*Taking section 11 alone as a full disposition of the whole common property, and appellant's definition of the word descendants would make the section absurd. It would provide: 1st. That the wife takes half and the kindred half. 2d. If no kindred, one half is to be distributed. Distributed to whom? To the world generally? But to get this other half of the common property into the father, appellants are compelled to resort to section one, subdivision second, of the Opinion of the Court.

"Act to regulate descents and distributions," Statutes 1862, p. 570, and that provides that it shall go, one half to the surviving wife and one half to the father.

If the word descendants in section eleven means kindred, then appellants have got too much already. Their ground is that they take by virtue of the first part of section eleven, that the husband died, leaving a surviving wife and descendants, that is, kindred, viz: a father, etc., and that therefore the surviving wife takes one half and the descendants take the other half. The word "kindred" includes all kin to the remotest degree—it would not be the next of kin who would take by virtue of section eleven, but all kindred, to the remotest degree. There are undoubtedly ten thousand persons who are kin to the intestate in some degree. By section eleven they would all take equally, and hence the judgment would give the appellants too much.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

George C. Jewell died intestate March 27th, 1863, leaving a widow (the respondent) and a father, but neither a child, nor the issue of a deceased child. The estate of the intestate was common property of the deceased husband and his wife. The father of the deceased conveyed his interest in the estate to seven of his children—the petitioners being two of the number. Upon their petition to the Probate Court for the distribution of the estate, it was ordered that one half of the estate be distributed to the widow, for her interest in the common property, as the survivor of the community, and that of the remaining half of the estate, one half thereof should go to the widow and the other half to purchasers from the father of the deceased.

The petitioners appeal. For convenience of designation one half of the common property may be called the husband's half, and the other the wife's half. It is not doubted that the widow, as the survivor of the community, is entitled to her half of the community property, and the only question presented on the appeal, is whether she takes any portion of the husband's half, under the Statute of Descents and Distributions, as amended in 1862.

The eleventh section of the Act of 1850, defining the right of husband and wife, as amended in 1861 (Statutes of 1861, p. 310) is as follows:

“SECTION 11. Upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband, one half of the common property shall go to the surviving wife and the other half to the descendants of the deceased husband, the whole being subject to the payment of his debts; upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife, the entire common property shall go to the surviving husband. In case of the death of the husband, if there be no descendants of the husband, one half of the common property may be subject to his testamentary disposition, and in the absence of any such disposition, shall be subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband.”

The question is to be solved by ascertaining the meaning of the word “descendants” as employed in that section. Bouvier defines descendants as “those who have issued from an individual, and includes his children, grandchildren and their children to the remotest degree. The descendants form what is called the direct descending line. The term is opposed to that of ascendants.” Those who are denominated descendants do not comprise all of those who come to the title by descent. It is apparent, upon inspection of section eleven, above cited, that the term descendants does not include the ascending line. It is provided in the last clause of the section, that the husband's testamentary disposition of his half of the common property, shall be valid, if the husband shall die leaving no descendants, and that if such testamentary disposition shall not have been made, then it shall be distributed in the same manner as the separate property of the husband; that is to say, according to the Statute of Descents and Distributions.

Opinion of the Court.

Previous to the amendment of 1861, it was provided, that upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband or the wife, one half of the common property should go to the survivor and the other half to the descendants of the deceased, and if there were no descendants of the deceased, then to the survivor. The amendment of 1861, not only gave the whole common property to the husband upon the death of the wife, whether she left descendants or not, but it limited the right of the surviving wife, growing out of the community relation, to her half, without regard to whether or not the deceased husband left descendants, and the husband's half, which would go to his descendants under the Act of 1850, would still go to them under the amendatory Act of 1861, but the amendatory Act, instead of giving the husband's half to the surviving wife upon the failure of descendants of the deceased husband, has in effect converted it into the separate estate of the husband, and as such has made it subject to his disposal by will, and in the absence of such disposition, directed it to be distributed according to the Statute of Descents and Distributions.

By adopting the construction of the appellants, that "descendants" are all those who may properly take by descent, we are led into this absurd construction of the section just cited. The husband would be authorized to make a testamentary disposition of his half of the common property, only in case there was no one entitled to take by descent; and if the husband has not made a testamentary disposition of it, and has left no descendants—that is, no persons entitled to take by descent—then it shall be distributed among his descendants.

We are clearly of the opinion that the husband's half of the common property, it not being disposed of by his will, and he leaving no descendants, must be distributed according to the provisions of the second clause of section one, of the Act to regulate descents and distributions, as amended in 1862, and that according to the rule in that clause, the surviving wife and the father of the deceased were each entitled to the one half of the husband's half of the common property. The purchasers from the father are of course entitled to his share.

WILLIAM BRYAN v. MATHEW MAUME AND JAMES B. McMINN.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL.—Neither the Court nor Judge has power to extend the time for appellant to make and file a statement on appeal from a judgment more than thirty days beyond the twenty days allowed by law, without the consent of the other party.

TIME TO FILE STATEMENT ON APPEAL.—An order extending the time for appellant to file a statement on appeal more than thirty days beyond the twenty days allowed by law, is good for the thirty days, without the consent of the other party.

WAIVER OF FAILURE TO MAKE STATEMENT IN TIME.—If a statement on appeal is not filed and served in time, the opposite party does not waive the default by not returning to appellant's attorney the copy of the statement served on him.

ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO MAKE STATEMENT.—If the appellant obtains an order extending the time to make a statement on appeal more than thirty days beyond the time allowed by law, the opposite party does not consent to such order by not making any objection thereto.

EVIDENCE AND PLEA OF TENDER.—In an action on a note and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure it, where the promisor and mortgagor is made defendant along with one claiming under the mortgagor by deed subsequent to the mortgage, the purchaser from the mortgagor cannot claim the benefit of nor offer testimony to show a tender of the amount due on the mortgage before suit brought, unless he pleads it. Such plea by the mortgagor will not avail the purchaser.

PLEA OF TENDER, AND KEEPING SAME GOOD.—It is a general rule that a defendant who pleads a tender to entitle himself to costs, must not only aver a tender, but that he has always been and is ready to pay the sum tendered and the money must be brought into Court.

NEW MATTER IN AN ANSWER.—Under the statute the affirmative allegations of an answer stand controverted by the plaintiff, and the burden is on the defendant to prove the truth of such allegations.

FINDINGS OF FACT—WHEN DEFICIENT.—If the findings of the Court are deficient, the appellant must except to them for that reason, or the presumption will be that the facts not found warranted the judgment.

MINGLING FINDINGS OF FACT WITH ARGUMENT.—The findings of fact should not be interblended with matter of argument or the conclusions of law: each should be embodied in a separate paper.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

The Courts have cheerfully extended the doctrine of acquiescence and waiver to great lengths. In the Georgia Lumber Co. v. Strong, 8 How. Pr. Rep. 246, the Court say: "The irregularity of the service of a paper is waived, if received and acted upon by the party upon whom it is served." In Williams v. Gregory et al., 9 Cal. 76, the Court say: "The filing of a counter statement is a waiver of objections to want of notice of intention to move for a new trial." Also in Dickinson v. Van Horn, Id. 207, the Court say: "Where a party appears and argues a motion for a new trial, he cannot afterward object that the statement was not agreed to by him, and that it was not settled by the Judge."

Edward Tompkins, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was commenced on the 14th of January, 1864, to recover the amount due from the defendant Maume, on a promissory note made in 1854, and which became due in 1855, and to foreclose a mortgage on certain real estate, executed to secure its payment. A judgment and decree was rendered in the case in favor of the plaintiff on the last day of May, 1864, and on the next day notice of the decision of the Court was served on the attorneys for the defendants. On the application of the defendant McMinn, the Court made an order on the 20th of June, 1864, that the time for preparing and filing the statement on appeal from judgment be extended twenty days. On the 7th of July, 1864, the same defendant filed his notice of appeal from the judgment to the Supreme Court, and served a copy of it on the plaintiff's attorney. This appeal was perfected on the eleventh of that month. On the ninth of the same month the Court, on the application of the defendant, McMinn, made another order of the same character, extending the time for twenty days more. The statement was prepared and filed on the 28th of the same July, and a copy of it was duly served. On the next day the plaintiff's attorney gave notice that he would move the Court on the 8th of August that this statement on appeal be stricken from the files of the Court, and that the same be disregarded, on the ground that it was not prepared and filed and a copy thereof served within the time allowed by law for such purpose, and on the same day the Court made an order granting to the plaintiff ten days after the decision of his motion within which to make amendments to the statement, in the event that the motion should be denied. The motion was made and denied, and amendments were accordingly prepared on behalf of the plaintiff to the statement, to which the defendant McMinn refused to agree, and therefore gave plaintiff notice of appearance before the Judge who tried the cause for settlement. The plaintiff's attorney admitted service of the notice, reserving at the same time the right to object that the statement was not filed in time and that the Judge had no right to settle the same. The statement was afterwards settled and filed.

The plaintiff, in due time after the cause was placed on the calendar of this Court for argument, objected to the transcript on the ground that the statement contained therein was not filed within the time allowed by law. This objection is first to be disposed of, and, if well taken, precludes an examination of the errors assigned, depending for determination upon the matters embodied in the statement.

The statute gives to the appellant twenty days after entry of judgment in which to prepare a statement of the case to be annexed to the record of the judgment. If he omits to do so within the time thus limited, he is deemed to have waived his right thereto. So the statute declares. (Practice Act, Sections 338, 339.) But the period prescribed may be extended, upon good cause shown, by the Court in which the action is pending, or the Judge thereof, or, in his absence, by the County Judge; but it is provided that such extension shall not exceed thirty days beyond the time prescribed by the sections of the Act referred to, without the consent of the adverse party. (Practice Act, Section 530.) Without the consent of the respondent, the appellant cannot have more than fifty days in which to prepare his statement of the case to be annexed to the record of the judgment. In this case the statement was not prepared and filed and a copy thereof served until more than fifty days had elapsed after the entry of the judgment and service of notice of the decision of the Court, and as a consequence the objection must prevail unless avoided by the consent of the respondent, or a waiver thereof on his part by some act equivalent to consent to an extension of time for performance beyond the fifty days.

It does not appear that the respondent's attorney consented in terms to extending the time prescribed by statute within which it was necessary to prepare the statement and to serve him with a copy of it. But it is claimed on behalf of appellant that no objection was interposed by respondent's attorney to the two orders extending the time, and his omission to do so was a waiver of any valid objection thereto, even if such an objection might properly have been made. The first order was clearly within the power granted to the Court by the statute, and the second was so to the extent of comprising the remainder of the thirty days which the Court was competent to grant, and hence, if objection had been made to either of such orders, it would have been unavailable. It is also claimed by the appellant that the failure of the plaintiff's attorney to return the copy of the statement served on him, and afterwards proposing amendments thereto, operated as a consent on his part to the extension granted by the Court. When the statement was filed, and a copy of it served, by judgment of the law, the appellant had waived his right to make it a matter of record, and a return of the copy could not have suggested to the appellant any course to be taken by him to rescue his case from the predicament of the waiver that already had accrued by his own laches. But it appears from the record that the plaintiff objected promptly, by giving notice on the following day of a motion for an order to strike the statement from the files of the Court, and that the same should be disregarded, because not prepared and filed in time; and though he obtained an order at the same time granting him ten days after an adverse decision upon his motion to reject the statement, in which to propose amendments thereto, and afterwards — his motion having been denied — did propose amendments to the statement, we do not think he thereby, notwithstanding his objection, can be deemed to have waived it. The objection was in its nature to the power of the Court to extend the time beyond the additional thirty days. This objection has been kept prominently on foot at every stage of the proceeding since it was made in the first instance. To hold that the plaintiff shall be deemed to have consented to an extension of time beyond the limit of the Court's jurisdiction in the premises is not warranted in our judgment by the circumstances of the case. We therefore hold the plaintiff's objection to be well taken. This excludes from consideration the statement improperly annexed to the judgment.

The appellant insists that upon the finding of the Court the judgment cannot be sustained. The Court found, first, that there was due from the defendant Maume, on the note described in the complaint, the principal sum of one thousand dollars, with interest thereon from the 7th of March, 1860, at the rate of two and one half per cent per month. Second, that at the commencement of the action, and when the same was tried, the plaintiff was the owner of the note and mortgage described in the complaint. Third, that at the time the defendant Maume mortgaged the premises described in the complaint, he was in the possession thereof, and on the 15th of January, 1859, conveyed the same to one Michael Dundon, who, on the 10th of May, 1861, conveyed the same to the defendant McMinn. Fourth, that the evidence did not support the plea of the Statute of Limitations pleaded.

The defendant, Maume, by his answer averred that on the 8th of November, 1861, McMinn tendered to the owner and holder of the note and mortgage the sum of eighteen hundred dollars in payment of the amount due, but that the money was not accepted, and he averred that the lien of the mortgage on the premises, by reason of the tender, became forever released and discharged; and following this he alleged that he was willing, and thereby offered, to allow judgment to be entered against him on the note for such amount. The Court found that testimony of the tender by McMinn was offered at the trial, but excluded on the ground that the tender was not kept good, and therefore the proposed testimony was immaterial. The defendant Maume, who sought thus to support his answer, has not appealed. He does not complain of this ruling of the Court, and we do not see how the appellant can avail himself of any objection to it, as he did not plead a tender of the money.

It is alleged in the complaint that after the note and mortgage were executed, and during the same year, Maume departed from the State, and had remained absent therefrom to the time the action was commenced. This allegation is not controverted by either of the defendants. It is also averred by plaintiff that McMinn has or claims to have some interest or claim to the mortgaged premises or some part thereof as purchaser, mortgagee, judgment creditor or otherwise, subsequent to and subject to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage. In his answer McMinn avers that on the 15th of January, 1859, the defendant Maume conveyed the premises by deed to Michael Dundon, and that such deed was duly recorded on the 20th of August of the same year; that Dundon went into the possession of the premises under this deed and continued in the occupation thereof to the 10th of May, 1861, when he conveyed the property to McMinn by deed of that date, which was duly recorded on the 21st of June of that year; that Dundon and McMinn respectively resided in the City and County of San Francisco from the 1st of May, 1859, to the time of the commencement of this action, and following this he pleaded that more than five years had elapsed since the conveyance executed by Maume to Dundon, and that the plaintiff's cause of action accrued as against the defendant McMinn's right, interest and estate in the premises described, more than four years next before the action was commenced, and he claims in substance that by reason of the conveyance by Maumé to Dundon and the lapse of four years therefrom before this action was commenced, the premises became discharged of the lien of the mortgage.

By the statute the affirmative allegations of the answer stood as controverted by the plaintiff without a replication (Practice Act, Sec. 65) and the burden was on the defendant to establish the truth of his defense, even if such defense would have availed anything, which it is unnecessary now to decide. But assuming it to be an available defense, it does not appear from the finding of the Court that Dundon and McMinn, or either of them, were in the State, as alleged in McMinn's answer. The Court states in the finding what each of the defendants sets up, but does not find whether the fact of the residence of Dundon and McMinn in the State during the time specified in McMinn's answer was true or otherwise. In this respect the finding was deficient, but the appellant omitted to take exception on account of it. It is therefore to be presumed the appellant failed to prove on the trial this allegation of his answer, or in case the fact stood as presumptively true, it does not appear but that it was overcome by evidence to the contrary. (Laws 1861, p. 589.)

The finding or decision of the Court consists in a great part of matter of discourse or argument, intermixed with a statement of what the respective defendants alleged in their answers. It would seem gratuitous, did not this case and many others before us indicate otherwise, to suggest the impropriety of interblending matter of argument with the finding of facts and conclusions of law upon which judgment is to be entered. If the Judge who may try and decide a cause desires to give his reasons for his judgment, they should be embodied in a separate opinion. A finding of what the defendant alleged in his answer, and what this or that witness testified to, and that, too, without stating whether or not such testimony was found to be true or untrue, can serve no useful purpose, but on the contrary encumbers the record with that which is properly no part of it. All that is required is a finding of the facts and a statement of the conclusions of law upon which final judgment must follow.

Even the want of a finding would not authorize the reversal of the judgment if no exception was taken for that reason at the proper time, and however defective the finding in this case nothing can be presumed against the judgment, but every reasonable intendment must be indulged in in order to uphold it. Judgment affirmed.

E. F. JONES AND H. H. HEWLETT v. JAMES FROST.

AVERMENT THAT NOTE HAS NOT BEEN PAID.—In an action on a promissory note an allegation in the complaint that "no part of said note, principal or interest, has been paid," is a sufficient averment of a breach.

WAIVER OF RIGHT TO HAVE A CHANGE OF VENUE.—If a defendant, sued in a county where he does not reside, demurs to the complaint, and the demurrer is sustained, and he then demurs to an amended complaint before giving notice of a motion for a change of venue, he waives the right to have the case tried in the county where he resides.

AMENDED COMPLAINT.—The filing of a new complaint after a demurrer has been sustained is not the commencement of a new action.

ERROR IN ALLOWING COSTS.—If the Court adds to the judgment the costs of the prevailing party after the time for filing the same has expired, and after an appeal has been perfected, the error can only be corrected by an appeal from the order.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The motion for a change of venue was based on affidavits. The Court overruled the motion and then overruled the second demurrer. No answer was filed. Plaintiffs recovered judgment, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John B. Hall, for Appellant.

The breach assigned is, "That no part of said note, principal or interest, has been paid." A traverse of this averment does not amount to a plea of payment of the whole debt, but only that some part has been paid. The allegation must be, "that the debt or the note has not been paid," so that when denied an issue is created by which payment is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other, and the defense made as broad as the alleged cause of action. (See Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71.)

Opinion of the Court.

Tyler & Cobb, for Respondents.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action on a promissory note.

First—The first error assigned is that the demurrer to the complaint was improperly overruled—the assignment of the breach being, as is contended, substantially defective. The breach assigned is: “That no part of said note, principal or interest, has been paid.” We consider that there is no defect in this averment, either substantial or formal.

Second—It is further insisted that the Court erred in refusing to transfer the case for trial to the county of defendant's residence.

It appears from the record that the defendant demurred to the original complaint; that the demurrer was argued, submitted and sustained; that the plaintiff, by leave given, filed an amended complaint, to which the defendant, on the 6th of May, 1864, also demurred; and that on the eighteenth of that month he gave notice of his intention to move for a change of venue. The proceedings prior to the notice amounted to a waiver, on the part of the defendant, of his right to have the action tried in the county where he resided. (Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 649.) The appellant is mistaken in supposing that the filing of the amended complaint was the commencement of a new action. The new complaint doubtless superseded the original and destroyed its effect as a pleading, as was held in Gilman & Co. v. Cosgrove, 22 Cal. 356, but it did not go to the identity of the action.

Third—The third specification of error is: “That the Court had no power to add to the amount of the judgment a sum for costs, after time for filing a memorandum had expired, and after appeal perfected.” The judgment was entered August

Statement of Facts.

6th, 1864, and the appeal therefrom was perfected on the tenth of that month, and on the twentieth the order for costs was applied for and granted. The order complained of was made ten days after the Court had lost jurisdiction of the case by the perfecting of the appeal, and the proper and only remedy for the defendants was by appeal from the order.

The judgment is affirmed.

IN THE MATTER OF EDWARD RING.

HABEAS CORPUS.—The doctrine of res adjudicata does not apply to proceedings on habeas corpus.

SECOND APPLICATION FOR HABEAS CORPUS.—The decision of one Court or Judge refusing to discharge a prisoner on habeas corpus is not a bar in another application for the same writ before another Judge or Court.

JUDGMENT IN A CRIMINAL CASE.—The judgment of the Court in a criminal case to be entered by the Clerk in the minutes of the Court is sufficient if it states of what offense the defendant was finally convicted, and the penalty imposed by the Court. Such judgment need not recite the facts contained in the other papers constituting the record in the action.

AUTHORITY TO DETAIN A PRISONER.—A certified copy of the judgment properly entered in a criminal action is sufficient authority in the hands of the Warden of the Prison for the detention of the defendant.

HEARING ON HABEAS CORPUS.—If, at the hearing on habeas corpus, the Warden of the Prison has not a certified copy of the judgment in a criminal action in his hands, and it appears that a judgment authorizing the detention of the defendant was entered, a copy of which can be procured, the Judge or Court will give a reasonable time to procure such copy, and if obtained, quash the writ.

THE petitioner, Edward Ring, was indicted in San Mateo County. The case was transferred to the District Court for trial. On the 23d of March, 1865, the defendant was found guilty by a jury of the crime of manslaughter. The next day he was sentenced by the Court to imprisonment in the State Prison for the term of three years. The Clerk entered in the minutes of the Court the judgment of the Court in the following form:

“The People v. Edward Ring, March term, 1865. The defendant, Edward Ring, having been convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and the hour having arrived for pronouncing judgment in this cause, and the defendant, with his counsel, being present in Court, and he having been informed by the Court of the nature of the indictment, of his plea thereto, and of the verdict, and the defendant having nothing further to say why judgment should not be pronounced, the Court proceeded to pronounce its judgment as follows: That the defendant, Edward Ring, be confined in the State Prison of the State of California for the term of three years, and ordered that judgment for costs be entered against him."

The Clerk also entered in the Civil Judgment Book the following judgment:

"The People of the State of California v. Edward Ring—No. 426. This cause came on regularly in its order for trial, upon an indictment found in the County Court of the County of San Mateo, for the crime of murder, and transmitted to this Court for trial.

"The defendant being present in person in Court was duly arraigned, and entered a plea of not guilty of the offense charged.

"Messrs. Scofield and Barnes appearing for plaintiff, and the defendant being present in person in Court, and being also represented by his attorneys, Messrs. Campbell, Fox & Campbell, the trial proceeded; a jury of twelve persons were regularly impanelled and sworn to try the cause; witnesses on the part of plaintiff and defendant were sworn and examined. After hearing the evidence, the arguments of counsel, and the instructions of the Court, the jury retired, and subsequently returned into Court, and being called, answered to their names and said that they found a verdict of guilty of manslaughter against the defendant; and subsequently, on the 24th day of March, A. D. 1865, the defendant being present in person in Court, with his counsel, and the Court having previously informed him of the nature of the indictment and of his plea, and of the verdict, and asking him if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, and said defendant answering and saying that he had nothing further to say — whereupon the Court rendered its judgment as follows:

“That he, the said defendant, Edward Ring, be confined in the State Prison of the State of California for the term of three years, and that a judgment for costs be entered against him.

“Wherefore, by reason of the law and the premises aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the defendant, Edward Ring, be confined in the State Prison of the State of California for the term of three years; and that said plaintiff do have and recover of and from the said defendant his costs of this suit, amounting to the sum of one hundred and thirty-two dollars and thirty cents ($132.30). Judgment rendered, March 24th, 1865.

“THOMAS H. NOBLE, Clerk.

“By John Ames, Deputy.”

A certified copy of the judgment entered in the Civil Judgment Book was delivered to the Sheriff who conveyed the prisoner to the Penitentiary, and handed the same to the Warden.

An application was then made to the District Judge for the discharge of the prisoner on habeas corpus. The Judge refused to grant the discharge.

Afterwards the prisoner applied to the Supreme Court to be discharged on habeas corpus. The Warden, by his return to the writ, stated that he held the petitioner in his custody in the State Prison by virtue of a judgment of the District Court in and for the County of San Mateo, at the March term, 1865, a certified copy of which judgment was attached to the return. The copy thus attached was a copy of the judgment entered in the Civil Judgment Book.

The Court holds that a certified copy of the judgment entered by the Clerk in his minutes would have been sufficient authority for the detention of the prisoner.

Argument for Petitioner.

Campbell, Fox & Campbell, for Petitioner.

The first objection to the alleged judgment is that it does not state "the offense for which the conviction has been had," as required by section four hundred and sixty-two, Criminal Practice Act. It is silent as to the party alleged to have been killed, as to the time, and as to the place. It merely states "that the jury said that they, the jury, found a verdict of manslaughter against the defendant." There is even no adjudication or judgment by the Court upon that verdict that he is so guilty.

It is claimed that there is a broad distinction between "the crime of which" and the offense for which (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 462) a conviction has been had; that while the former may be satisfied by the general allegation of "manslaughter," etc., the latter can only be satisfied by setting out the offense for which, etc., with sufficient particularity to designate the party killed, and the place, etc., so as to enable the Court to distinguish this particular offense on the judgment itself from any other offense, and to identify it in case the defendant should be again charged.

Sections two hundred thirty-eight and two hundred thirty-nine, Criminal Practice Act, show this distinction. By section two hundred thirty-eight, in the commencement of the indictment the defendant is "accused by the Grand Jury," etc., of the crime of "manslaughter," etc. By section two hundred thirty-nine, "the offense charged" has to be set out.

Should it be contended that the entry on the minutes is a judgment, and that the defendant should be remanded until a copy of that judgment can be delivered to the Warden, we reply, that the first elements of a judgment are wanting. It is the mere recital of those things which preceded the judgment, and is not an adjudication, consideration, or judgment of the Court on that recital. It is open to all the objections urged against the alleged return of the writ, and to the additional — and, we think, fatal one — that it contains no adjudication. It should have gone on to say, "wherefore it is by the Court here considered and adjudged that said Edward Ring is guilty," etc., and then the award of the punishment.

Opinion of the Court.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, against the discharge, argued that the principle of res adjudicata was applicable to this proceeding, and cited Lynde v. Noble, 20 Johnson, 80; Mercier v. The People, 25 Wend. 64; and De Costa's Case, 1 Parker's Crim. Cases, 129.

As to the sufficiency of the warrant of commitment, the Attorney-General referred to The People v. Cavanagh, 2 Abbott's Prac. R. 84. He also insisted, that if at common law the judgment was not sufficiently technical, yet it was good under our Practice Act, and referred to The People v. King, 27 Cal. 507.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

Two questions are presented: First, is the principle of res adjudicata applicable to proceedings on habeas corpus; and, second, is the process or judgment under which the petitioner is held in custody so defective in some matter of substance required by law as to render it void?

I. Under the old Constitution it was held in Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 429, that a decision upon a habeas corpus was not appealable or subject to review, and that the doctrine of res adjudicata has no application to such a case. The late amendments to the Constitution have made no change which affects this question, and the statute upon the subject of habeas corpus remains the same as it was at the time that decision was made. In that case it was held that a party in custody might apply in succession to every Judge of every Court of record in the State for his discharge on habeas corpus until the entire judicial power of the State was exhausted; but in this respect the new Constitution has made a change, and such party is now restricted to the Justices of this Court and the District and County Judges of the district or county in which he is restrained of his liberty.

Opinion of the Court.

II. The four hundred and sixty-second section of the Criminal Practice Act requires the Clerk to enter every judgment rendered upon a conviction in the minutes, "stating briefly the offense for which the conviction has been had," and within five days thereafter annex together and file certain specified papers, "which shall constitute the record of the action." The record so made up contains, among other papers, the indictment and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer, a copy of the minutes of the trial, and a copy of the minutes of the judgment. The several papers specified, when so annexed together and filed, are expressly declared to be the record of the action, and that is the record which would have to be produced in support of a plea of former conviction. That the several papers specified in the four hundred and sixty-second section enter into and become a part of the record must not be lost sight of when we come to determine what it is essential that the judgment itself should contain, for where several papers are thus united in chronological order and made one in legal intent, it cannot be claimed that the contents of one should be repeated in another. If they all, taken together, furnish facts sufficient to protect the defendant against another prosecution for the same offense, it cannot with any show of reason be claimed that the record is defective in any matter of substance. From the mere fact that these several papers are taken into and made a part of the record, it is clear that each one was intended merely to tell its own story—or rather, to relate its particular branch of the whole history. Thus the indictment states the jurisdictional facts, the nature of the offense and the facts and circumstances, so far as they are material. The other papers give the history of the trial, including the verdict; and the judgment, which constitutes the last chapter, merely finishes the account by stating of what offense the defendant was finally convicted, and the penalty imposed by the Court. The judgment need not, and it was not intended that it should, repeat anything contained in the papers which precede it, for in view of the fact that they go into the record and make a part of it, such repetition would be idle and serve no useful purpose.

Looking, then, at the judgment, as entered in the minutes, in the light of what has been already said, we think it is not defective in any matter of substance which the law, as we have expounded it, requires it to contain. The only material parts of a judgment, as we have seen, are the statement of the offense for which the defendant has been convicted, omitting therefrom all that is contained in the previous papers, and therefore not necessary to be repeated, and the sentence of the Court. These material parts are both found in the judgment under consideration. It states the fact that the defendant had been convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and that the Court had sentenced him to a confinement in the State Prison for a term of three years. These facts, in connection with those detailed in the preceding papers, complete the history and render the record full as to every fact necessary or material for the protection of the defendant against a second prosecution for the same offense. (People v. Cavanagh, 2 Parker's Crim. Rep. 660.) Such being the case, a certified copy of the judgment, as entered in the minutes, should have been delivered to the Sheriff, and by him delivered with the person of the defendant to the Warden of the State Prison, and the same would have been a sufficient warrant in his hands for the detention of the defendant until the expiration of his term of imprisonment. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 463.)

From what has been said, it follows that the defendant is not now in custody under the proper process, but he cannot for that reason be discharged, since it appears that a judgment of imprisonment, in the place where he is now confined, has been rendered against him in due form of law by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and that a certified copy thereof can be readily and speedily obtained. For this a reasonable time must be afforded. It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be remanded, and that fifteen days be allowed the Warden of the State Prison to obtain the proper process and make return thereof to this Court, whereupon this writ will be quashed; otherwise the prisoner will be discharged from custody.

THE PEOPLE v. THE SAN FRANCISCO AND SAN JOSE RAILROAD COMPANY.

REPEAL OF A LAW.—The repeal of a law by implication is not favored.

SPECIAL SCHOOL TAX IN SAN MATEO COUNTY.—The thirty-seventh section of the Act of April 6th, 1863, authorizing a special tax for school purposes to be levied in any school district in this State, is not repealed as to the County of San Mateo by section nine of "An Act to define and limit the compensation of officers and reduce public expenses in the County of San Mateo," passed February 6th, 1864, nor by section twelve of "An Act to provide for the continuance and election of a Board of Supervisors in the County of San Mateo," etc., approved March 24th, 1864.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, San Mateo County.

This was an action brought to recover judgment for the sum of six hundred and thirty-eight dollars and ninety-seven cents, being the amount of a special tax levied for school purposes on the property of the appellant, in District Number Four, in San Mateo County, in the summer of 1864.

The defendant demurred to the complaint, the demurrer was overruled, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff. The defendant appealed from the judgment.

Charles N. Fox, for Appellant.

By the provisions of section nine of the "Act to define and limit the compensation of officers, and reduce public expenses and taxation in the County of San Mateo," approved February 6th, 1864, (Statutes 1864, p. 51,) the power of fixing the rate of and levying all taxes, except State taxes, in the County of San Mateo, is conferred upon the Board of Supervisors of said county.

The Act of 1863 gives the people the right to determine whether or not the taxes shall be levied, and the Trustees the power to fix the rate and levy the tax. The later Act of 1864,

Opinion of the Court.

passed for the express purpose of reducing taxation in San Mateo County, confers all this power upon the Board of Supervisors, and upon no other body, officer, or organization whatever. Force and effect cannot be given to both these Acts in the County of San Mateo.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, and H. A. Schofield, District Attorney of San Mateo, for Respondent.

Section nine of the Act of February 6th, 1864, distinctly provides that the school laws then in force shall not be considered as coming within the provisions of that Act.

The title of the Act of March 24th, 1864, is as follows: "An Act to provide for the continuance and election of a Board of Supervisors in and for the County of San Mateo, and to define and limit the powers of said Board in certain cases." Section twelve of said Act simply authorizes the Board of Supervisors to levy such taxes each year as they shall deem necessary to provide for all lawful county expenditures, not exceeding certain rates therein specified, among which is a school tax, twenty cents.

This district school tax is not a county tax in any sense.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to recover taxes levied for school district purposes in the County of San Mateo, in pursuance of the provisions of section thirty-seven of "An Act to provide for the maintenance and supervision of common schools," passed April 6th, 1863. (Laws 1863, p. 203.) The question is, whether said section thirty-seven is repealed by section nine of "An Act to define and limit the compensation of officers, and reduce public expenses in the County of San Mateo," passed February 6th, 1864, and section twelve of "An Act to provide for the continuance and election of a Board of Supervisors in the County of San Mateo, and to define and limit the powers and duties of said Board in certain cases," approved March 24th, 1864. (Laws 1864, pp. 51, 240.)

Opinion of the Court.

There being no repeal in express terms, if any exists, it must result from an inconsistency in the provisions of the several Acts. Repeals by implication are not favored. The first Act relates to a particular subject, viz: the "maintenance and supervision of common schools." All of its provisions bear upon that subject.

Section thirty-seven of the Act of 1863 provides, that "the Board of Trustees of any school district may, when in their judgment it is advisable, call an election and submit to the qualified electors of the district the question whether a tax shall be raised to furnish additional school facilities for said district, or to keep any school or schools in such district open for a longer period than the ordinary funds will allow, or for building an additional school house or houses, or for any two or all of these purposes." It points out the mode of submitting the question to a vote of the people of the district, and in case the proposition is adopted, it further provides, that "The Trustees shall issue certificates of election, and the Assessor shall, on receiving his, forthwith ascertain and enroll, in the manner provided for County Assessors, all the taxable persons and property in the district, and within thirty days he shall return his roll, footed up, to the Trustees. The Trustees, upon receiving the roll, shall deduct fifteen per cent. therefrom for anticipated delinquencies, and then, by dividing the sum voted, together with the estimated cost of assessing and collecting added thereto, by the remainder of the roll, ascertain the rate per cent. required; and the rate so ascertained (using the full cent in place of any fraction) shall be and it is hereby levied and assessed to, on, or against the persons or property named or described in said roll, and it shall be a lien on all such property until the tax is paid; and said tax, if not paid within the time limited in the next succeeding section for its payment, shall be recovered by suit, in the same manner and with the same costs as delinquent State and county taxes." (Laws 1863, p. 203.)

This is a special local tax, levied not upon the property of the county at large, but confined to the school district, and depends upon the volition of a majority of the residents of the school district whether it shall be levied or not. When levied and collected, it does not go into the County School Fund, but belongs to the school district which raised it. The county, also, has a School Fund, separate and distinct from this, which is, or may be, derived from various sources. This Act provides for appropriating the School Fund in the State Treasury among the several counties, and for paying over to the Treasurer of each county the portion of funds so appropriated to it; which sum, when paid, goes into the County School Fund. In addition to the money thus received from the State, section sixty-three authorizes a special tax to be raised by each county for the benefit of the County School Fund. The section is as follows: "Sec. 63. Each and every county in this State is hereby empowered and authorized to raise annually, by special tax, (in the same manner that other county taxes shall be levied,) upon all the real estate and personal property within the county, an amount of money not exceeding twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars of valuation, for the support of public schools therein, and providing suitable houses and purchasing libraries and apparatus for such schools." (Ib. 210.) This fund belongs to the county and is under its control. But the fund authorized by section thirty-seven is — so far as the school district is concerned — in addition to the fund provided for in section sixty-three, and belongs to, and is under the control of, the school district, and neither the county or Board of Supervisors have anything to do with it. These two provisions are certainly not inconsistent with each other. They are embraced in the same Act, and operate upon different subdivisions of the State. The subsequent Acts of 1864 relate entirely to matters pertaining to the county. Section nine of the Act of February 6th, 1864, provides as follows: "The Board of Supervisors of the County of San Mateo are hereby empowered to fix the rate and levy all taxes in said county (State taxes excepted) at any time within thirty-five days after the completion of the assessment roll by the County Assessor;

the rates so fixed not to exceed the limits prescribed by law." (Laws 1864, p. 51.) This provision refers to county taxes, and is intended to modify the mode of assessing and collecting the taxes as prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1861 before applicable to the County of San Mateo. Section twelve of the Act of March 24th, 1864, provides that "The Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County shall have power to levy and collect, each year, to provide for all lawful county expenditures, such taxes as they may deem necessary, not exceeding the following rates on each one hundred dollars valuation of all property, real and personal, within the county not exempt from taxation, namely: For the School Fund, twenty cents; for the Hospital Fund, ten cents; for interest tax, forty cents; for the General Fund, twenty-five cents." This section also contains further provisions with reference to the management of the financial affairs of the county, and limits the amount of taxes to be raised "for all lawful county expenditures," and the limit for the School Fund is "twenty cents" on each one hundred dollars.

The Revenue Act of 1861, section one, before authorized the Board of Supervisors to levy "a tax for county expenditures not exceeding sixty cents on each one hundred dollars," and "such additional special taxes as the law of the State may authorize or require." One of those special taxes subsequently authorized by the Act of 1863 was the county school tax, provided for in section sixty-three, before referred to. But section twelve of the Act of 1864, just cited, has been substituted for all these provisions, and doubtless limits the tax for the County School Fund to twenty cents on the hundred dollars, instead of twenty-five, the limit prescribed by section sixty-three of the Act of 1863. It is inconsistent in this respect with said section sixty-three, and as that section refers to matters pertaining to the county under the control of the Supervisors, it is to that extent, doubtless, repealed. But with the special school district tax, authorized by section thirty-seven, the Board of Supervisors have nothing more to do now, than they had before the passage of the several Acts of

Statement of Facts.

1864. The latter Acts operate upon a different subject matter, and section thirty-seven is no more inconsistent with those provisions, than it is with section sixty-three of the Act of 1863. They can all stand and operate together. We think said section thirty-seven not repealed by the subsequent Acts.

The judgment for the taxes levied under it must therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

THOMAS JONES v. WELLS, FARGO & CO.

LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIER.—If a common carrier undertakes to carry and deliver a draft, he becomes charged on his contract as a common carrier immediately upon his failure to carry and deliver as agreed, and this liability is primary and not secondary to that of the drawer of the draft.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The Court charged the jury, at defendants' request, that the fact that the draft was lost did not destroy the drawer's liability for the money.

The Court, also, at its own instance, charged the jury that if they found that the draft was delivered to defendants to carry and deliver, and defendants knew of its value at the time, and they failed to deliver it, they should find for plaintiff.

To this the defendants excepted.

Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John H. Saunders, for Appellant, contended that the plaintiff should have applied to Jackson for a duplicate of the draft, and if Jackson had refused to give a duplicate, he should have sued him for money had and received.

Jo. Hamilton, for Respondent, argued that appellants were liable in the first instance, regardless of Jackson's liability.

By the Court, SHAFTEE, J.

The complaint alleges that defendants are common carriers. That the plaintiff delivered to them at their office in Auburn, on the 19th of October, 1861, a package containing a draft for seven hundred dollars, drawn by J. Q. Jackson on Wells, Fargo & Co. at San Francisco, and payable to William Williams or order. That the defendants had notice of the character and value of the contents of the package; that they were paid by the plaintiff to carry and deliver the same, with reasonable dispatch, to Williams at Camptonville to whom the package was directed, and that the defendants undertook and promised to do so. That the draft belonged to the plaintiff and was sent by him to pay for a mining claim which the plaintiff had purchased. That the defendants neglected to carry and deliver the package as agreed, and that they have converted it and its contents to their own use. That at the time the package was delivered to the defendants, Jackson, the drawer of the draft, had funds sufficient in the hands of the drawees to meet the same if it had been presented within a reasonable time. That Jackson was then solvent, and if the defendants had done as they agreed the draft would not have been lost to the plaintiff. That Jackson, since the neglect and conversion aforesaid, has withdrawn his funds from the hands of the drawees—has become wholly insolvent, and has left the country, and if said draft were now delivered or returned, the same would be utterly valueless to the plaintiff.

All the allegations of the complaint were denied, except the averments that the draft was the property of the plaintiff, and that the defendants were common carriers. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

First—It is insisted for the appellants that their motion for a nonsuit, made at the trial, after the plaintiff had rested, was improperly overruled, and on the ground that there was no evidence tending to prove that Jones was the owner of the draft.

It was distinctly alleged in the complaint that the draft was the property of Jones, and the averment was not denied in the answer. Aside from that, the plaintiff put in testimony upon the point before resting, fully explaining the grounds of his alleged ownership.

Second—It is further insisted that there is error in the charge.

We have considered the objection to the instructions on which the appellants rely in argument, and we are satisfied that the objection is not well taken. The liability of the defendants is primary, and not secondary to that of the drawer of the draft. The defendants undertook to carry and deliver the draft to Williams at Camptonville, and became charged on their contract as common carriers, immediately upon their failure to carry and deliver as agreed. But if the charge was erroneous in the particular complained of, the error would not be available to the defendants, inasmuch as it is not put in the statement on motion for new trial, as one of the "particular errors upon which the party will rely." (Practice Act, Section 195; Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

STATEMENT ON APPEAL TO BE SERVED.—If the statement on appeal from a judgment is not served on the respondent's attorney until more than twenty days after the rendition of judgment, and no extension of time is obtained, a statement is waived, and the appellate Court cannot review any alleged errors, except such as appear in the judgment roll.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL TO BE AUTHENTICATED.—If no amendments to a statement on appeal are served on the appellant, it may be settled by the Judge without notice to the respondent, but it should be authenticated either by the certificate of the Judge or by the stipulation of the parties.

'APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

Opinion of the Court.

Defendant had judgment in the Court below, and plaintiffs appealed from the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Jo. Hamilton, for Appellants.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The appeal being from the judgment, a statement is necessary to enable this Court to review any error not appearing upon the judgment roll. The cause was tried and judgment rendered February 8th, 1865. The document in the record relied on by appellant as a statement on appeal appears to have been served on respondent's attorney March 30th, 1865, fifty days after the rendition of the judgment; and it does not appear that any extension of time was obtained. The law allows but twenty days, unless an extension be granted, within which to prepare and serve a statement on appeal; and provides, that "if a party shall omit to make a statement within the time above limited, he shall be deemed to have waived his right thereto." (Prac. Act, Sections 338, 339.) It was, therefore, not served in time. (Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.)

No amendments appear to have been served. Section three hundred and thirty-eight, as amended in 1863, provides that "if no amendments are served, the statement may be presented to the Judge for settlement without notice to the respondent," and when settled, section three hundred and forty-one prescribes the mode of authenticating the statement by the Judge, or by the parties. In this case it does not appear that the proposed statement was ever presented to the Judge for settlement, nor is it in any manner authenticated either by the Judge or the parties. Nor does the stipulation certifying the transcript, in terms or by implication, embrace the statement. For all of these reasons respondent insists, and we think correctly, that there is no statement on appeal of which the Court can take notice. The only errors discussed arise upon rulings of the Court in the progress of the trial, excluding testimony, and as these rulings do not appear upon the judgment roll we cannot review them. Had the exceptions been settled during the progress of the trial, as provided in section one hundred eighty-eight, one hundred eighty-nine, and one hundred ninety, they would have been annexed to, and have formed a part of the judgment roll, and could thus have been reviewed on appeal from the judgment without a statement. But not having been so settled and filed, it was necessary to have them settled in a statement on motion for a new trial, or a statement on appeal. No error appearing on the judgment roll, the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

W. F. ZEIGLER v. WELLS, FARGO & CO.

IRRELEVANT TESTIMONY.—If there is uncontradicted testimony sufficient to warrant the verdict of a jury, the judgment will not be reversed because there was some irrelevant testimony admitted upon the point in issue.

COMMON CARRIER.—In an action against a common carrier for failure to comply with a contract to carry and deliver a draft, if the defendant knew of the draft when it was delivered to him, the admission of irrelevant testimony as to his being afterwards informed of the draft, will not reverse the judgment.

VARIANCE BETWEEN PROOF AND COMPLAINT.—In an action against a common carrier for not complying with a contract to carry and deliver a draft, the complaint alleged that it was signed "John Q. Jackson;" the proof showed that it was signed "John Q. Jackson, Agent." Held, that the variance was immaterial.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John H. Saunders, for Appellant.

When this case was in this Court before, it was decided that "the defendants were entitled to such a description as would identify the draft in question." (23 Cal. 180.) This is the law of this case. No averment could be more important in order to identify the draft than the one which stated who was the drawer.

Jo. Hamilton, for Respondent.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This action was brought to recover the value of a draft drawn on the defendants by John Q. Jackson in favor of Sloss & Co. and delivered by the plaintiff (to whom the draft in fact belonged) to the defendants at Auburn, to be carried and delivered by them, as common carriers, to the payees at Sacramento. All the allegations of the complaint are denied, save the averment that the draft was the property of the plaintiff, and the averment that the defendants are common carriers.

First—The plaintiff offered to prove at the trial that about one month after the delivery of the draft to the defendants at Auburn, he called at the office of the defendants in San Francisco, and was informed by a man who was acting apparently as one of the clerks, that “Wells, Fargo & Co. had been advised of the draft mentioned in the complaint.” The testimony was objected to, but the objection was overruled and the testimony went in. To this ruling the defendants excepted, and the question of the correctness of the ruling is therefore properly raised in the record.

We shall assume that the testimony was inadmissible, and on the ground of irrelevancy; but we consider that its admission could not have affected any substantial right of the defendants. The defendants were fully “advised” of the draft as common carriers when it was delivered to them as such at Auburn on the 21st of October, 1861. The fact of that delivery and advice was sworn to by the plaintiff directly, and there was no opposing evidence before the jury. The intendment is a fair one that the jury passed upon the question in the light of that testimony, and without appreciable reference to the clerk’s acknowledgment a month later, made at San Francisco.

Opinion of the Court.

Second — It is insisted that the Court erred in denying the defendants' motion for a nonsuit.

It was alleged in the complaint that the draft was signed "John Q. Jackson"—the proof was that it was signed "John Q. Jackson, Agent." This action is not founded upon the draft, with a view to charge the defendants as parties to it, but upon their contract as common carriers to carry it and deliver it to Sloss & Co. at Sacramento. The variance relied upon is an immaterial one, and would be so regarded in an action upon the draft against the drawer. That point is settled by Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 45. The variance goes merely to the identity of the paper or document which it is alleged the defendants undertook to carry. The draft alleged, and the draft proved, are identical in legal effect; and they were also circumstantially identical, except in the matter of the word "agent." We cannot consider that the absence of that particle in the allegations and its presence in the proof, could have affected any substantial rights of the defendants. (Prac. Act, Sec. 71.)

Third—As to "errors of the Court in its charge to the jury." There are none specified in the statement. (Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

Fourth—It is claimed that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. There was testimony tending to prove all of the plaintiff's averments, and this is very far from being one of the extreme cases in which we are permitted to go behind the verdict of the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON expressed no opinion.

PEOPLE v. CHARLES KING.

against him, a verdict and judgment against him will not be reversed because the Court directs a plea of not guilty to be entered and a trial to be had before a jury.

JUDGMENT IN CRIMINAL ACTION WHEN DEFENDANT DECLINES TO PLEAD.—If a demurrer to the indictment is overruled, and the defendant then refuses to plead is not a violation of defendant's constitutional right to a trial by jury for the Court to pronounce judgment against him as upon a plea of guilty, and this is the proper course for the Court to pursue.

A DEFENDANT MAY VOLUNTARILY TESTIFY BEFORE A GRAND JURY.—It is neither illegal nor a ground for setting aside the indictment for the defendant therein to voluntarily give his testimony before the Grand Jury when the case is examined before them.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE AN INDICTMENT.—A motion to set aside the indictment because the names of all the witnesses who testified before the Grand Jury are not indorsed upon it, must be made before demurrer or plea.

JUDGMENT IN A CRIMINAL ACTION.—A judgment "that the defendant be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of three years from the date of his incarceration" is not void for uncertainty.

ERRONEOUS REFERENCE IN AN ACT.—If a section in an amendatory or supplementary Act refers to a section of the Act amended or supplemented by number, and the section referred to does not express the legislative intent, but another section is found which does express that intent, the reference will be treated as being made to the latter section.

CRIMINAL PRACTICE ACT.—The fourteenth section of the Act of April 24, 1863, amendatory of and supplementary to the Criminal Practice Act, refers to the two hundred and ninety-sixth, instead of the two hundred and ninety-third section of the Criminal Practice Act.

APPEAL from the County Court of San Joaquin County.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Tyler & Cobb, for Appellant.

The Criminal Practice Act, section two hundred and thirty-five, provides that "all the forms of pleading in criminal actions shall be those prescribed by this Act." It will thus be seen that we cannot go to the common law for aid in this matter, for we are expressly prohibited so to do by the statute. Whether the Court could legally enter such a plea for defendant or not must be determined by the provisions of the Criminal Practice Act. Section two hundred and ninety-six of the Criminal Practice Act provides: "If the demurrer (of defendant) be disallowed, the Court shall permit the defendant, at his election, to plead, which he must do forthwith, or at such time as the Court may allow; if he do not plead, judgment shall be pronounced against him." The statute has provided what the Court must do in a case of this kind, and "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" ought to have as much force in a criminal as in a civil case. Section three hundred and eight provides the only way in which the Court is authorized to enter a plea for the defendant:

Argument for the People.

"SEC. 308. If the defendant refuse to answer the indictment by demurrer or plea, a plea of not guilty shall be entered."

But in this case the defendant did not refuse to answer the indictment. He answered it in one of the two ways pointed out by the statute, and it is only when he refuses to answer the indictment in one or the other—that is, by demurrer or plea—that the Court is allowed to have a plea of not guilty entered for defendant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The Court was right in ordering the plea of not guilty to be entered for the defendant.

Section three hundred and eight of the Criminal Practice Act authorizes this proceeding. The construction of it is that if the defendant refuse to answer the indictment by demurrer, and if that be overruled, by a plea, then the Court should enter a plea of not guilty.

If section two hundred and ninety-six be unconstitutional, as appellant's counsel seem to think, on the ground, doubtless, that the defendant is entitled to a trial by jury, and that standing mute is not a confession of guilt, (as to which point see the case of United States v. Hare, 2 Wheeler's Crim. Cases, 299,) then it is the duty of that Court to pass upon the question of constitutionality, and if it decided rightly, it is not making a law, but declaring what the law is. Suppose the Court below had passed judgment as on a plea of guilty upon the overruling of the demurrer, and the defendant had appealed, and the Supreme Court had decided that that section was unconstitutional in not giving the defendant a trial by jury, then upon a new trial of the case the defendant should still stand mute, is there no provision anywhere that he may be tried at all? The legitimate result of such a construction would be that every defendant who thought that the Commonwealth could show him to be guilty, would simply demur to the indictment on some frivolous ground, and the demurrer being overruled, would refuse to plead.

The Criminal Practice Act can receive no such absurd construction; and if the defendant is to be tried at all, he could not be tried upon a more favorable plea than that of not guilty, (see Sec. 303 of the Crim. Prac. Act,) and therefore the defendant could not have been prejudiced in any substantial right by the action of the Court below. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sections 247, 601.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

I. The defendant was indicted for the crime of grand larceny. A demurrer was interposed to the indictment which was overruled by the Court. Thereafter, when called upon to plead to the indictment the defendant, acting under the advice of his counsel, declined to do so, and refused to put in any plea whatever. Thereupon the Court, of its own motion, ordered the Clerk to enter a plea of not guilty, to which counsel for the defendant objected and demanded that the Court should proceed in the manner designated in the two hundred and ninety-sixth section of the Criminal Practice Act and pronounce judgment against the defendant. This the Court declined to do, and directed the plea of not guilty to be entered, upon which the defendant was thereafter tried and convicted. This action and ruling of the Court is assigned as error.

The two hundred and ninety-sixth section is in these words: "If the demurrer be disallowed the Court shall permit the defendant at his election to plead, which he must do forthwith, or at such times as the Court may allow; if he do not plead, judgment shall be pronounced against him."

It is presumed that the course taken by counsel was adopted under the notion that the foregoing section in some way interfered with the right of trial by jury guaranteed to the defendant by the Constitution, and was therefore void. Otherwise he would hardly have failed to have availed himself of the chances for his client's escape afforded by that uncertainty which is sometimes supposed to attend the verdict of a jury. The Court below seems to have come to the conclusion that the question was at least doubtful, and therefore gave the defendant the benefit of the doubt and afforded him an opportunity to enjoy his constitutional right of trial by jury, notwithstanding the earnest protest of counsel.

It is insisted on behalf of defendant that the constitutionality of section two hundred and ninety-six is not involved in this case, and counsel decline to argue it, claiming that it will be in time to discuss that question when we meet with a judgment which has been rendered in accordance with its provisions, and that the only question presented by the record in this case arises upon the power of the Court to enter a plea of not guilty, under section three hundred and eight. But the point made, in our judgment, does not involve a discussion of that section. The two hundred and ninety-sixth and the three hundred and eighth sections both relate to the same subject matter, and are to be read together. The latter section provides that: "If the defendant refuses to answer the indictment by demurrer or plea, a plea of not guilty shall be entered." Reading it, therefore, in connection with the former section, we have a complete rule for every case where the defendant when called upon to plead stands mute, or, as in the present case, orally refuses to plead. If, when arraigned, he stands mute or refuses to demur or plead to the indictment, a plea of not guilty is to be entered for him; but if he demurs and his demurrer is disallowed, he may plead or not, at his option, and if he stands mute or fail or refuse to plead, the Court is to proceed as upon a conviction or a plea of guilty and pronounce its judgment accordingly. Such is the plain rule of conduct as prescribed by the statute. Is there any constitutional objection to it? By such a rule is the defendant denied any constitutional right or privilege? If so, we have been unable to discover it, and counsel for appellant has failed to suggest wherein the statute conflicts with the Constitution. The only clause of the Constitution to which it can be claimed that the rule of the statute is repugnant is that which provides that "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever." This provision is designed for the protection and security of the citizen in his life, liberty and property, and to protect all three against the exercise of arbitrary power. Of the right thus solemnly secured to him he cannot be deprived by any power under the Government. He may claim his right at all times and under all circumstances. But while the Legislature cannot destroy or in any degree impair his right, that body may provide the mode and manner of its enjoyment so far as the same may be done without prejudice to a fair and impartial trial in the manner pointed out and secured to him by the Constitution. The criminal law of the land must be enforced, or civil government is a failure, and the law of force becomes the rule of conduct. The intent of the Constitution is to secure every person charged with crime a fair and impartial trial by jury, but not to place it in his power to evade a trial altogether by standing mute and refusing to participate in it. In order that there may be a trial there must be an issue. If, by refusing to join issue, the accused may avoid a trial, he is thereby enabled to pervert a constitutional provision solely designed to secure to him a fair trial by a particular mode, but not to enable him by his own act to obstruct the course of justice and escape a trial altogether, into a shield against punishment for any crime which he may have committed.

It is within the constitutional power of the Legislature to provide that the Court shall enter a plea for the defendant when he stands mute, or that such standing mute shall be taken as a confession of the truth of the indictment, and equivalent to a plea of guilty. Such a provision in no way deprives the defendant or tends to deprive him of his constitutional right to a trial by jury. If, in the case provided for in section two hundred and ninety-six, no trial takes place, and the defendant is adjudged guilty without the verdict of a jury to that effect, and punished, such result is not attributable to the law, but to the wilful obstinacy of the defendant. That section affords him an opportunity to be tried by jury, which is all that the Constitution exacts from the Legislature. If he chooses to stand upon his demurrer and fails or refuses to plead, he is no more entitled to a trial than he would be upon a plea of guilty; and it is presumed that no one will contend that the law providing for a plea of guilty is repugnant to the constitutional provision in question.

From what has been said it follows that the Court could have lawfully pronounced judgment in the case as provided in the two hundred and ninety-sixth section, and ought to have done so, and that the Court erred in adopting the course which it did. But the consequence for which counsel for the defendant contends does not follow. This Court is not allowed to reverse a judgment where it is manifest that the error alleged has in no manner operated to the legal prejudice of the defendant. The defendant has been deprived of no right, nor has he been placed in any worse position by the error of the Court in giving him a fair trial by jury notwithstanding his confession of guilt. The trial was a mere idle ceremony, which did him no legal harm, and therefore affords no ground for a reversal of the judgment.

II. When the case was called for trial and before the examination of the jurors was commenced, counsel for defendant asked leave to withdraw the plea and to move to quash the indictment, because the names of all the witnesses who were examined before the Grand Jury was not indorsed upon it, and upon the further ground that the defendant himself had been examined before the Grand Jury touching the offense therein charged. It appears from the affidavits offered in support of this motion, that the defendant and one Louis Bergler, jointly indicted with him, were examined before the Grand Jury and their names were not indorsed upon the indictment. The motion was denied, and it is claimed that such denial was error.

So far as the motion was based upon the ground that the defendant had testified against himself before the Grand Jury is concerned, it is only necessary to say that we know of no rule of law which made it illegal for him to testify if he felt inclined to do so, nor do we know of any rule of law which makes the voluntary testimony of the defendant before the Grand Jury a ground for setting aside the indictment.

So far as the other ground is concerned, the motion came too late, as has been repeatedly decided. A motion to set aside an indictment upon this ground must be made before demurrer or plea (Criminal Practice Act, Sections 277, 278), and if not so made, the defendant is precluded from afterwards taking the objection (Section 280.) (People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 98; People v. Lawrence, 21 Cal. 368; People v. Lopez, 26 Cal. 112.)

III. It is lastly contended that the judgment is void for uncertainty. The judgment is, "that the defendant be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of three years from the date of his incarceration," and it is claimed to be fatally uncertain as to the time when the term commences.

It is true, as contended by counsel, that the judgment ought to be certain, both as to the commencement of the term and as to its termination, but this rule does not require greater certainty than is possible under the circumstances, and we think the judgment in this case is quite as certain as it can be made. The punishment is imprisonment in the State Prison for the term of three years. It is very clear that the term cannot commence until the defendant arrives at that place, and that it cannot end until three years thereafter. When he will arrive at the State Prison is certainly more or less uncertain, but that is not the fault of the judgment, and as the Court has no means by which it can ascertain with certainty the precise moment at which that event will happen, it would be asking more than the Court could perform to require it to fix the exact day, and more than any rule of law to which our attention has been called makes necessary.

Petition for rehearing. The counsel for the defendant admits the constitutionality of the two hundred and ninety-sixth section of the Criminal Practice Act; and further admits that the conviction would be well supported by the provisions of that section were the section now on foot. But it is claimed, in effect, that section two hundred and ninety-six is repealed by the Act of 1863.

It is provided by that Act as follows: "No person can be convicted of a public offense unless by the verdict of a jury, accepted and recorded by the Court; or upon a plea of guilty; or upon judgment against him upon a demurrer to the indictment in the case mentioned in section two hundred and ninety-three."

It is insisted by counsel that this amendment to the Criminal Practice Act purports, on its face, to be a statement of the instances, and all of the instances, in which a person accused of crime can be said to have been "convicted;" and it must be admitted that the point is well taken. It is further urged that it follows from the views maintained in the opinion, that the judgment below is not supported upon the first ground named in the amendment, for the opinion holds the verdict to be null and void. It is further urged that the judgment cannot be supported on the second ground, for it appears that there was no plea of guilty entered in fact; and it is claimed, finally, that the judgment cannot be maintained upon the third and last ground named in the amendment, for the reason that section two hundred and ninety-three, to which the amendment refers, states a case where a judgment is to be entered for the accused, and not against him.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Section two hundred and ninety-three is as follows: "If the demurrer be allowed, the judgment shall be final upon the indictment demurred to, and shall be a bar to another prosecution of the same offense," etc. All the grounds of judgment, named in the amendment, failing, it is claimed that the judgment entered below must be held to be erroneous. We do not, however, consider the third ground named in the amendment to have failed.

The reference to section two hundred and ninety-three does not express the legislative intent. That intent finds expression only in section two hundred and ninety-six; and the amendment must be read as though the reference were to the latter section instead of the former. But it is urged that to strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six," would be to amend the amendment, and not to construe it; and the point, considered abstractly, must be admitted to be well taken; but when considered on what may be called the facts of the question, and in view of the settled rules of construction, it is manifest to us that the objection is fallacious.

First—It must be assumed that the Legislature, in undertaking to state a third method, or instance, of conviction, intended to do it; but if it used the number two hundred and ninety-three advisedly, it neither accomplished, nor intended to accomplish, the object stated, nor any other, and the last clause of the amendment is not only a nullity, but was intended to be a nullity. But we are forbidden so to hold. (Smith's Com., Sections 488, 527.)

Second—We have a voluminous Act upon the subject of Crimes and Punishments—and we have also Courts of criminal jurisdiction. From the constitutional and legislative provisions upon the subject of crimes and criminal Courts, there can be no doubt that it is and always has been the policy of the State, that the guilty should not go unpunished. But if it should be held that the reference to section two hundred and ninety-three expresses the true intent of the Legislature, then the whole of our criminal system is virtually overthrown, and every grade of crime may be committed with impunity;

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

so that, persons accused, shall have the art to put in demurrers to valid indictments, to begin with. The fallacious demurrer being overruled, the accused would refuse to plead. The Court could not direct a plea of not guilty to be entered, for the reasons stated in the opinion, nor could the Court, under the views of counsel, order judgment upon the demurrer, as provided in section two hundred and ninety-six; that is to say, judgment would be forever impossible. But all this is "absurd;" and, therefore, the views that lead to such result must be unsound, and must be discarded. (Smith's Com., Secs. 517, 575, 725, 726.)

Assuming, then, that the Legislature, by the last clause of the amendment, meant something, and something sensible—that is, something in harmony with the general purpose with a view to which our criminal system was got up and is now kept on foot, we are satisfied that it was intended to enact the third ground, or instance, of conviction set forth in section two hundred and ninety-six, but the Legislature applied to the section in which it is contained a wrong number. This view does not lie in assumption. It was the purpose of the amendment to state the cases in which a person, accused of crime, could be considered as "convicted" to a legal intent, and to limit them to three. The amendment states two, and, so far as expression goes, it states a third. We must presume, to start with, that a third has been efficiently enacted, and we cannot conclude to the contrary, until the whole of the written law upon the subject of crimes and punishments, and criminal practice, has been examined and exhausted. We look to section two hundred and ninety-three, directly referred to in the amendment, but that section does not state a case of "conviction," but of "acquittal" instead; but on looking through the whole body of the statutes we find one section, and but one, that is responsive to what may be called the governing call of the last clause of the amendment, to wit: a third instance in which a person accused shall be considered as convicted for the purposes of judgment; and we must, therefore, consider that to be the provision which the Legislature had in mind. Both the question and the reasoning are familiar. The question is one of "false demonstration," and the solution is the one commonly used in such cases. We have treated the question in the same manner, that we should have dealt with it, if the third clause of the amendment had set forth the third alternative conviction, in the language used in section two hundred and ninety-six, and then added: "As set forth in section two hundred and ninety-three." The questions are substantially the same.

LEGAL TENDER NOTES AND COIN.—In an action to recover the value of services rendered, when no price has been agreed upon by the parties, if the jury adopt Treasury notes, made by Act of Congress a legal tender in the payment of debts, as the standard of value, the verdict will not be set aside on that ground.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Defendant appealed from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

A. M. Heslep, for Appellant.

Seldon S. Wright, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The plaintiffs — being attorneys at law — sued Prindle for professional services. The services were admitted on the trial, and the only issue was as to their value. William H. Patterson, an attorney, having been asked the general question, as to the reasonable value of the services of plaintiffs, without any reference in the question to any particular kind of money to be taken as the standard of value, answered, "that the services were worth one thousand dollars in greenbacks, or five hundred dollars in coin." The other witnesses all made similar answers to similar questions. No objection being taken in any form to any portion of the testimony.

Opinion of the Court.

On this testimony the defendant asked the Court to give to the jury the following instruction:

"The jury, in assessing the damages, are not at liberty to take into consideration the difference in value of the currency of the country, but will find a verdict without reference thereto."

The Court refused to give the instruction, as asked, but did give it with the following addition, "except so far as testified to by witnesses and admitted to go to you as testimony in the case." Defendant excepted to the refusal and modification. A verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff for the sum of eight hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-five cents, the amount claimed in the complaint. No particular kind of money was specified in the verdict, or judgment. The ruling of the Court upon the foregoing charge is the error relied on, on the motion for new trial, and on appeal.

The term, "greenback," as used in the testimony, is of course, intended to designate treasury notes of the United States, made by Act of Congress a legal tender in payment of debts; and the term, "coin," to signify the coin of the United States, also made a legal tender. The plaintiff's instruction assumes, that, in legal contemplation, a dollar in one of these kinds of money is equivalent to a dollar in the other—that a dollar in gold is of no more value than a dollar in "greenbacks," and a dollar in "greenbacks" of no less value than a dollar in gold. Conceding this to be so, the most that the defendant can complain of is, that the jury found the value of the services in greenbacks. But this value is, upon the hypothesis assumed, equal to the same number of dollars in gold. The defendants, therefore, could not have been injured.

But conceding, that, while in legal contemplation there is no difference in value between the different kinds of lawful money, there is a difference, in fact, recognized in the commercial world, and in the ordinary business transactions of the country; how will it affect the question under consideration? We then have two kinds of lawful money, both a legal tender in payment of all debts, within the meaning of the term debts, as used in the various Acts of Congress upon the subject, and, therefore, in legal contemplation, of equal value, but, in fact, recognized in all commercial and business transactions as having different values. All business transactions between man and man would ordinarily be made with reference to this difference in value. If a contract is made, as for instance for a sale of goods, or for services to be performed, for a stipulated price, without naming any particular kind of money in which it is to be paid, the party to make the payment may, at his option pay it in any kind of money made a legal tender that suits his interest, convenience or caprice, and the other party must receive that or none. The presumption is, that the contract is made and the price fixed with reference to this right of the debtor. If the party who is to make the payment fails to meet his engagements, the other party may bring his suit to enforce the payment. In this case there are so many dollars due according to the sum stipulated. On the trial the Court can only ascertain the number of dollars due by the terms of the agreement, and render judgment for the amount, and there can be no inquiry as to whether a dollar of one kind is equivalent to a dollar of another. And the same would, doubtless, be true in case of a contract to pay in any specific kind of money. For the inquiry in such a case would be reduced to a comparison of values between two or more dollars of different kinds of money, which in contemplation of law are of equal value.

But in a contract for goods sold, or for services performed, without any stipulated price, a promise is implied to pay what they are reasonably worth. When this question comes to be litigated, the question is, not whether a dollar in greenbacks is worth more or less than a dollar in gold, but what are the goods, or services worth? The dollar is to be the unit of value, but the Court can no more say that the value of a gold dollar in the commercial world shall be taken as the standard of value, than that the value of a "greenback" dollar shall be the standard. The Court cannot say in which kind the payment shall be made—that is left to the option of the debtor; and for the same reason, it cannot say that the money of the greater value shall be taken as the measure of value. The debtor may pay whichever he chooses—and when there is any considerable difference in the value, it may safely be presumed that he will pay in that which will be most conducive to his interest; and that would of course be the kind which is of the least value. If he does not do so, it is simply because he does not choose to do it. He has the option if he chooses to exercise it. "Greenbacks" are lawful money—they are a legal tender for all debts—and are therefore necessarily a legal standard for the measurement of values—not of other lawful money, but of all commodities bought and sold, services rendered, etc. In all States of the Union—unless California is an exception—they actually are the standard by which values are estimated in legal investigations, as well as in business transactions. There must be some standard by which values must be determined. And we see no reason, why that kind of money may not be taken, which the law makes a standard, and which must be accepted in satisfaction of the judgment in case it should be tendered by the judgment debtor, whether the creditor is willing or not. If paid in that kind of money, the debtor pays no more than he ought—no more than the actual value of the property purchased, measured by lawful standard; and if he does not so pay it, he can blame no one but himself. In this case, had the instruction been given as asked, there would have been, in view of the evidence, no standard of value by which the jury could have been guided. For the testimony introduced without objection—as it necessarily, either tacitly or avowedly, must have done—all referred the value of the services either to coin or "greenbacks," and there would have been at least no greater propriety in taking coin as the measure than greenbacks. The instruction, as modified and given, does not submit any very distinct proposition to the jury; but the jurors were substantially told that they were to determine the value of the services upon the evidence before them. The instruction, if it meant anything, amounted to this. The worst view the jury could have taken for defendant, under the instruction, was to take "greenbacks" as the standard of value; and this, as we have seen, is a recognized legal standard. Admitting that they did so, the defendant could at once have paid the judgment in "greenbacks"—the standard by which the value was measured—and by so doing he would have paid no more than the actual value of the services. He was therefore not injured by the instruction as modified, or by the refusal of the instruction as asked.

We think the order denying a new trial should be affirmed. And it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice CURREY delivered the following dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Justice RHODES concurred:

The Court instructed the jury as follows: "The jury in assessing the damages are not at liberty to take into consideration the difference in the value of the currency of the country, but will find a verdict without reference thereto except so far as testified to by witnesses and admitted to go to you as testimony in the case."

This instruction assumes that at the time of the trial there was a difference in the value of the several kinds of money of the country; and the instruction is in effect that the jury could take into consideration the difference as far as and to the extent specified or indicated by the witnesses in their testimony. The testimony of several witnesses was given which was in exact agreement, and was in substance that the services for which the action was brought were, if estimated in United States notes, made lawful money and a legal tender in the payment of debts by Act of Congress, of the value of one thousand dollars; or, if estimated in gold coin of the United States, of the value of five hundred dollars. Thus the instruction was that the jury could consider and determine that one of the kinds of money mentioned was worth just double the other, and that they could, according to such estimate and determination, render their verdict.

We are of the opinion the instruction was erroneous and that the judgment should be reversed.

E. McCOMB AND ZACCHEUS BEATTY v. WILLIAM J. REED, SETH KINMAN, JOHN QUICK, J. P. ALBEE, R. M. WILLIAMS, AND WILLIAM TAYLOR.

ATTACHMENT — WHEN NOT VOID.— An attachment, regular upon its face, is not void because the complaint does not set up a cause of action which would warrant the issuance of an attachment.

WHEN A DEFENSE MUST BE SPECIALLY PLEADED.— In an action against a Sheriff for a violation of his duty in the service of an attachment, if he relies on matters occurring after its issuance and operating as a dissolution of the same, such matters must be specially pleaded.

JUDGMENT MUST FOLLOW ISSUES JOINED.— If a defense should be specially pleaded, the omission to plead it is not cured by the introduction without objection of evidence in support of it, and the finding of the facts in relation to it by the Court.

SHERIFF'S DUTY AS TO ATTACHMENTS.— A Sheriff who receives an attachment, regular upon its face, cannot pay over the money obtained by him from the sale of property levied on by virtue of the writ to a junior attaching creditor, because the complaint in the action on which the first attachment was issued did not set forth a cause of action upon which an attachment could issue.

HOW SHERIFF SHOULD APPLY MONEY ON ATTACHMENTS.— When a Sheriff receives money on execution sale of property levied on by virtue of attachments, it is his duty to apply the money in the order of the attachments. The Sheriff has no right to go back of the process and raise the question as to the validity of the attachments.

FIRST AND SECOND ATTACHING CREDITORS.— Query: Where two attachments have been levied on the same property, can the junior attaching creditor successfully attack the validity of the first on the ground that the complaint did not contain a cause of action upon a contract express or implied for the direct payment of money?

JUDGMENT PAYABLE IN GOLD COIN.— A party cannot recover against another a judgment payable in gold or silver coin, on the ground that the other received it for him, in trust, in that form, unless the kind of money received is specially averred in the complaint.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Opinion of the Court.

July 19th, 1856, the plaintiffs' attachment was issued out of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and on the 22d day of July, 1856, it was placed in the hands of the Sheriff and a levy made. The next day an attachment was issued out of the District Court in Humboldt County, against Ross & McLean, at the suit of Henry Fleishman, which was placed in the hands of the Sheriff and levied on the same property the day it was issued. The Sheriff paid the money realized from the sale of the property to Fleishman. The plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and the defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Delos Lake, and Robert F. Morrison, for Appellants, argued that the attachment at the suit of McComb & Co. was void as against the other attaching creditors, because the complaint contained a count which did not justify the issuing thereof, and referred to McGovern v. Payne, 23 Barbour, 90.

James C. Cary, for Respondents, argued that, admitting the attachment was improperly issued, the Sheriff could not question it: 1st. Because this defense was not pleaded. 2d. That even if pleaded, the Sheriff could not make this defense; and cited The People v. Dunning, 1 Wend. 17; Stever v. Sanberger, 24 Wend. 275, 276; Hagart v. Morgan, 1 Selden, 428, 459; Gregory v. Levy, 12 Barbour, 611, 612; and Dixey v. Polack, 8 Cal. 573.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action on a Sheriff's bond, given by defendant Reed, Sheriff of the County of Humboldt, and executed by the other defendants as his sureties.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs, in the year 1856, brought an action in the Superior Court of the City of San Francisco against Ross and McLean for three thousand dollars then due and owing from the defendants to the plaintiffs. That having filed an affidavit and given the necessary bonds, an attachment issued for the sum of sixteen hundred and thirty-two dollars and eight cents, directed to the Sheriff of the County of Humboldt, which writ was thereafter delivered to Reed as such Sheriff for service, and that he thereafter and by virtue of the process attached property of Ross and McLean more than sufficient to satisfy the attachment and the costs of serving the same. That the Sheriff thereafter sold the property under the attachment and that the proceeds were more than sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim and the Sheriff's fees and charges. That the plaintiffs thereafter recovered judgment in said action for the sum of sixteen hundred and thirty-two dollars and eight cents and fifty dollars and fifty cents costs, which judgment remains in full force and unsatisfied. That Reed thereafter, in derogation of the plaintiffs' rights, paid the money in his hands to junior attaching creditors of Ross and McLean under pretense that the attachment of the plaintiffs was a nullity. That the plaintiffs thereafter sued out an execution on their judgment and delivered it to the Sheriff, who returned it nulla bona. The complaint then proceeds to set forth the Sheriff's bond and to assign the breach on which the plaintiffs rely, viz: the misapplication of the funds as before stated.

Opinion of the Court.

The answer contains a general denial of all the plaintiffs' allegations, and a special defense that "the cause and causes of action stated and set forth in the complaint in the Superior Court in the City of San Francisco, by the said plaintiffs, against Charles S. Ross and Hector H. McLean, was not, and were not, as set forth in said complaint, upon contract or contracts, express or implied, for the direct payment of money; and that the attachment issued in said action was invalid, illegal and void." There are two other special defenses stated in the answer but no question is made upon either.

There were in fact two complaints filed in the action — one original and the other amended; and it does not appear, precisely, whether the complaint referred to in the first special answer named is the original or the amended complaint; nor does it make any difference, in the view that we take of the case, whether the reference is to the one or the other.

The case was tried by the Court. The findings are contained in the record, and the appeal is from the judgment entered thereon in favor of the plaintiffs.

First — The Court has found that the attachment issued, in fact, upon the original complaint; and that the complaint was thereafter amended by the introduction of new counts, which, as is apparent, set up causes of action not within the purview of the original complaint; and it is insisted that these amendments operated as a dissolution of the attachment. It appears, also, that the fourth count was demurred to specially, and that the count was adjudged to be insufficient; and it is claimed that the attachment was thereby dissolved. But the demurrer and the decision upon it — the fact of the amendments — the nature of them — and the fact that they were made subsequent to the attachment — are all new matter. They are reconcilable with the truth of every averment in the complaint, and if they could have any operation it would be by way of avoidance. The question of their legal effect cannot be gone into on this appeal, for they were not specially pleaded. The circumstance that the facts have been found by the Court, and upon evidence to the introduction of which it does not appear that the respondents objected, is of no avail. The case must be determined upon the facts as related to the issues joined. (Smith v. Owens, 21 Cal. 12.)

Second — The Court has found the allegations of the complaint to be true; and, under the issues taken on the first special answer, the finding is that the original complaint contained four counts: The first for goods sold and delivered; the second for money paid, laid out and expended; the third on an account stated, and the fourth on a special contract made between the parties on the 10th day of April, 1856, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to purchase and consign groceries to the amount of two thousand dollars, to Ross and McLean, for sale on joint account. The plaintiffs were to receive interest at the rate of one per cent per month, two and one half per cent commission for purchasing, and seven and one half per cent of the net profits. The defendants were to render an account quarterly. The goods when shipped, "were to be regarded and held as consignments from said McComb & Co." It was further averred: "That in pursuance of said contract, they (the plaintiffs) from time to time consigned to the defendants goods and merchandise to the value of thirty-five hundred dollars, at cost prices, for cash; which goods and merchandise were received by said defendants; under and in pursuance of said contract, to be held and accounted for by said defendants as consigned goods. And the plaintiffs aver that the said defendants have in no manner accounted to the plaintiffs for said merchandise, or the proceeds thereof, nor for any part of the same, but have converted and disposed thereof to their own use; and have wholly neglected and failed to render to the plaintiffs any account of sales of said goods notwithstanding more than three months have elapsed since the said goods and merchandise were consigned to and received by said defendants as aforesaid. And the plaintiffs aver, that although often requested, the defendants have not paid to the plaintiffs the several sums of money aforesaid or any part thereof. Wherefore they pray judgment for three thousand dollars."

(1.) It is claimed for the appellants, that the action, in so far as the fourth count is concerned, is not based "upon a contract expressed or implied, for the direct payment of money." The respondents controvert this proposition, but they insist, primarily, that neither the Sheriff nor his sureties can raise the question; and we think the point well taken.

Conceding for the purposes of argument, that the fourth count sounds in damages, still the attachment was not void. The writ was regular on its face, and therefore was good as a protection to the officer. The attachment would have held, as between the parties to the action, in the event of a failure on the part of the defendants to raise the objection. It was held in Bacon v. Cropsey, 3 Sel. 195, that where, under the provisions of a statute, an execution might issue thirty days after the entry of a judgment, "the fact that it was issued within a shorter period was not a defense to a Sheriff in an action against him for false return;" and "that an execution so issued was not void, but voidable." The Court, in the case at bar, had jurisdiction of the action, and therefore had jurisdiction over the question of the attachment. (Cruyt v. Philips, 7 Ab. 209.) And it appears, further, that the validity of the attachment was in fact passed upon by the Court, on a motion to dissolve made by the parties defendant, and that the motion was overruled. This decision, if objectionable at all, was erroneous at the worst and not coram non judice. No appeal was taken from the judgment subsequently rendered, and the interlocutory order is now res judicata as between the parties to the record. It follows that if no attachment but the plaintiffs' had been put upon the property, and the defendant had failed to pay over the proceeds on execution, the objection now urged to the validity of the attachment would not have availed the Sheriff as a defense. This conclusion is further sustained by 1 Cow. 309; 4 Cow. 158; 3 Barb. 17. Buffandeau v. Edmondson, 17 Cal. 441, was trespass against a Sheriff for five thousand dollars damages, for proceeding to sell the plaintiff's property under execution after service of an injunction restraining such sale. The defense went upon the ground, in part, that the plaintiff had no right to an injunction—that is, upon the ground that the Court erred in granting the injunction. The Court say: "It is unnecessary to consider whether the bill of complaint showed a proper case for an injunction or whether the injunction was regularly granted or not. It was enough for the Sheriff that a Court of competent jurisdiction had made the order, and then it became his duty to obey it. It is no part of the Sheriff's duty to sit in judgment upon official acts and reform the errors or revise the orders of a Judge." McGovern v. Payn, 32 Barb. 84, cited for the appellants, is not in point. There the order of arrest was examined on the motion of the defendant made by him in the action.

The subsequent attachment of Fleishman varied neither the rights nor the duties of the Sheriff, as above stated. He was but a ministerial officer before the second attachment was made, and the making of it did not vary the extent nor the quality of his powers. The plaintiff's attachment and execution were all final documents as to the Sheriff. He had no right when he received Fleishman's attachment to go back of that process and raise the question of its validity upon the pleadings in the action in which it was issued, nor was he at liberty to concern himself with that question when he received Fleishman's execution. The rule of official duty in the matter of the plaintiff's process was the same. When the Sheriff received the respective executions, it was his duty to apply the money in the order of the attachments as required by law. Had he done so, his ministerial duties would have been fulfilled, and he would have been protected against all attacks that might have been made upon him at the suit of Fleishman. If Fleishman had the better right, it was his business to move in the matter in person, and in one of the alternative modes pointed out in Speyer v. Ihmels, 21 Cal. 287. Or, if the execution creditors were respectively pushing the Sheriff at law, and he did not care to solve the question of his own duty, he might under proper proceedings have obtained judicial direction. But, as a Sheriff can under no circumstances go back on an execution and disobey its expressed mandate on the ground that the judgment upon which it issued was erroneous in fact or in his opinion, so he cannot under any circumstances, go back of a writ of attachment valid on its face, and adjudge the question of the party's right to it upon the pleadings, and certainly not in a case where the precise point has been raised and determined by the Court in advance. (Crocker on Sheriffs, Sec. 844; Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 573.)

Further, it may well be doubted whether Fleishman could have established a better right in himself to the funds in the Sheriff's hands by force of the alleged error if he had moved directly in the matter. (Patrick v. Montader et als., 13 Cal. 434; Fridenberg v. Pierson, 18 Cal. 152; Drake on Att., Chap.

Opinion of the Court.

39.) But that is a question which it is not necessary for us to decide.

The judgment, in so far as it provides for a recovery in United States coin, is erroneous. The complaint does not make a case within the Specific Contract Act. The allegation is that "the said Reed, Sheriff, as aforesaid, sold the said property and converted the same into cash, and received as the proceeds of such sale more money than was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' said demand, and all the lawful fees and charges of the said Reed in that behalf." The right to the relief given is peculiar and exceptional, and if a party would recover money in the form of gold or silver of one who received it for him in that form, the form or kind of money received should be specially averred. (Acts 1863, p. 687.) There are other grounds on which the validity of the judgment in this particular may be questioned, but inasmuch as it is not necessary to pass upon them we forbear to discuss them.

The Court below is directed to modify the judgment by striking out that portion of it which requires that the sum recovered should be paid in gold or silver coin of the United States. The judgment as so modified to stand as the judgment in the case.

E. LANE v. JOSEPH GLUCKAUF.

CASE AFFIRMED.—The case of Carpentier v. Atherton, 25 Cal. 564, affirmed.

CONTRACT TO PAY IN GOLD OR LEGAL TENDER NOTES AT GOLD VALUE.—A contract agreeing to pay a specific sum in gold coin, or, upon failure thereof, to pay such further sum as may be equal to the difference in value between gold coin and legal tender notes, belongs to the class of contracts provided for in the so-called Specific Contract Act, and may be enforced according to its meaning.

SAME.—CONSTRUCTION OF.—The meaning of such contract is that the maker will pay in gold coin, or, if he does not do so, in legal tender notes at their gold value.

JUDGMENT ON SUCH CONTRACT.—A judgment may be rendered on such contract payable in gold coin alone.

OBJECT OF SPECIFIC CONTRACT ACT.—The Specific Contract Act was not intended to legalize contracts which without it were illegal, but to provide a remedy for enforcing certain contracts, if held to be legal.

JUDGMENT ON NOTE PAYABLE IN GOLD OR GREENBACKS.—If a note is made payable in the alternative, either in gold or legal tender notes, a judgment rendered on it may also be in the alternative.

APPEAL from the District Court, Second Judicial District, Butte County.

This action was brought upon a written contract, of which the following is a copy:

“OROVILLE, August 4, 1863.

“$2,843.

“Six months after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of George C. Perkins the sum of $2,843 in gold coin of the standard value of 1860 of the United States of America, with interest at one and one half per cent per month till paid. And if said principal and interest is not paid in gold coin, as above stated, then, for value received I promise to pay to the order of said G. Perkins, in addition thereto, and as damages, such further amount and percentage as may be equal to the difference in value in the San Francisco market between such gold coin and paper evidence of indebtedness of the States or the United States, that are or may hereafter be made a legal tender in payment of debts by the laws of this State or the United States.

“JOSEPH GLUCKAUF.”

After setting out the contract, the complaint avers that the same has been assigned by the payee thereof to the plaintiff, and that there is due thereon a certain sum, to wit: two thousand eight hundred and fifty-six dollars and sixty-two cents in gold coin, or a certain other sum in legal tender notes, to be ascertained by adding to the former the difference in value between gold and legal tender notes in the San Francisco market, adding that at the date of the complaint the latter were worth in that market only fifty cents on the dollar in gold coin.

The complaint concludes with a prayer for a judgment for the sum of two thousand eight hundred and fifty-six dollars and sixty-two cents in gold coin of the United States, and in case the same is paid in legal tender notes, that the amount to be paid shall be made equal in value to that sum, to be ascertained at the time of payment from the prices current of the San Francisco market as to the value in gold of said notes.

The defendant first demurred, and then answered, his demurrer having been overruled. The Court found the facts substantially as stated in the complaint, and rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, payable in gold coin, for two thousand nine hundred and forty dollars and twenty-two cents, the amount of principal and interest found due on the contract, with a direction in the judgment that it bear the same rate of interest as the contract. The defendant appealed.

Jos. B. N. Lewis, for Appellant.

By the terms of the instrument this defendant had the right to make default in payment of the gold, which default annulled the contract as to the payment of gold, and plaintiff's pretended cause of action, if any, was upon the second contract.

The agreement to depreciate the currency of the United States, known as the treasury notes, by paying them on said demand at their supposed market value in San Francisco, is likewise null and void, for the reason that said agreement is wholly without any consideration and in contravention of the laws of Congress as applied to the currency of the United States. And in contemplation of law, as one dollar in coin is not of more value than one in United States treasury notes, by the nonpayment of coin, as contradistinguished from said notes, the plaintiff would sustain no damage.

It is a self-evident proposition that the maker of the instrument set forth by copy in the complaint, secured to himself the privilege of paying the amount due thereon in any one of the currencies contemplated by the instrument. The choice of the currency was with the maker, and not with the owner of the instrument.

The contract does not set forth an agreement to pay in any particular kind of money, but is an agreement to pay in one of two kinds of money, to wit: gold coin, or United States legal tender notes. An agreement to pay in one of two currencies is not an agreement to pay in any one specified currency, in the meaning of the Act, that would justify the Court in rendering a judgment directing its payment in one currency, as contradistinguished from the other currency designated by the contract set forth in the note. (Statutes of 1863, p. 687.)

Argument for Respondent.

George Cadwalader, for Respondent.

If words can ever be called the representatives of ideas—certainly in this note they express as the most prominent idea of both maker and taker that the note was to be paid in gold coin: “I promise (says Gluckauf) to pay to the order of George C. Perkins the sum of $2,843 in gold coin of the standard value of 1860 of the United States of America.”

The addenda to the note is surplusage, and may be stricken out, leaving the full contract to stand—and which is enforceable under the two hundredth section of the Practice Act. (Carpen v. Atherton, 25 Cal. 564.)

The last clause in the note, when considered in the light of the pleadings, shows that a performance of it would be as damaging to respondent as the judgment rendered—for by it he agrees to pay by way of damages the quantity of paper that it takes to buy the agreed value in gold coin. The effect of this clause is, however, considered by appellant to waive a liquidated claim in favor of an unliquidated one, and thus by reason of a violation of an agreement to pay a sum certain in a given time he would gain an advantage that a performance according to agreement would not have given. The law, however, confers no such reward as a breach of contract—no such immunity nor premium is given to a wrongdoer; but, on the contrary, the law strives by its machinery to give that which was promised, as well as costs by way of damages. The right of election is not given to the party in default. The last clause in the note gives damages as a penalty resulting from the non-observance of the first clause. To this penalty we are not necessarily obliged to have recourse, for the two hundredth section of the Practice Act gives us the right to have the contract specifically performed.

By the Court, SANDESON, C. J.

All the points made by counsel for appellant relating to the constitutionality of the so-called Specific Contract Act of 1863 we pass without further notice. So far as this Court is concerned, that question has been put at rest (Carpentier v. Ather-ton, 25 Cal. 564,) and contracts made under that Act must be held valid.

But it is claimed that the contract in this case is not within the meaning of that Act, and in support of that proposition the case of Lamping v. Hyatt et al., 27 Cal. 99, is cited. That case, however, does not sustain the proposition. We there held that the contract sued on was not a gold contract and did not therefore support the judgment, which required satisfaction in gold. There is an obvious difference between the terms of the contract in that case and the contract in this.

The Specific Contract Act (so called) did not propose to make contracts legal which otherwise were illegal, but to extend to certain contracts assumed to be legal the equitable remedy of specific performance. It was matter of doubt whether, assuming those contracts to be legal and not repugnant to the legislation of Congress upon the subject of legal tender, the Courts had the power to enforce their performance in such a manner as to secure all the benefits intended thereby, or, in other words, whether the Courts would or could, without the aid of legislation, extend to such contracts the remedy of specific performance. To remove that doubt, and for no other purpose, the Act in question was passed. If the Courts should determine that contracts of the character contemplated by the Act were illegal and void on account of some repugnancy to all or either of the laws of Congress providing what shall be legal tender in payment of debts, the Act would have no office to perform and become harmless because inoperative. If, on the contrary, such contracts should be held valid, a remedy in case of their nonperformance, about which there could be no controversy, would be provided, and any inconvenience which might result on account of any real or supposed uncertainty as to the remedy would be obviated. Such was the object of the Act in question, and it had no other purpose. It was not intended to operate in hostility to any of the laws of Congress, but to secure on the part of all citizens an honest observance of the terms of their contracts and to prevent them, so far as it could be lawfully done, from availing themselves of a legal measure of public necessity to work a moral and private wrong.

The contract in suit, in our judgment, belongs to the class mentioned in the Act in question. Counsel do not agree as to its meaning. We shall first assume for the purposes of this opinion the one adopted by counsel for the appellant. It is then an alternative contract and provides for payment in either of two kinds of money, at the election of defendant, both of which are therein specified. The precise amount to be paid, if paid in one kind is fixed; if paid in the other kind the mode by which the amount is to be ascertained is clearly defined, and by that mode can be readily determined with certainty. Such being the case the judgment by the terms of the Act in question ought ordinarily to follow the contract and fix the amount to be paid if paid in gold and the amount to be paid if paid in legal tender notes. The defendant could then have paid it off in either kind of money. If he did not pay voluntarily the execution would have followed the judgment and alternatively directed the Sheriff to collect in either kind of money. At the sale the defendant could have directed the Sheriff to sell for gold or legal tender notes at his option. If he did not so direct, the plaintiff or the Sheriff could have elected. So there is no good reason why this contract may not be held to be within the Act even when construed as contended for by counsel for the appellant.

But there is another interpretation of this contract which was adopted by the Court below and which we think is the right construction. To interpret a contract is to ascertain the true intent of the contracting parties, and when that has been done it is the duty of the Court (unless the intent be an illegal one) to carry it out and to render that form of judgment which will be most effectual for that purpose.

No one can read the contract in question without the conviction that it was made to take on its peculiar form solely for the purpose of affording security and protection to the payee and not to secure to the maker a privilege or an advantage. It is manifest that it was the first intention of the payee to secure a payment in gold if such payment could be lawfully enforced; and secondly, if that could not be done, payment in legal tender notes at their value in the San Francisco market when converted into gold. It was not the intention of the parties to the contract to give the maker the benefit of an alternative, but to compel payment in gold, which is especially evident from the fact that the alternative claimed to have been stipulated for could not possibly, if the contract should be performed in that way, secure any advantage or benefit to him, for in either way he agrees to pay the same value, and the Court in decreeing specific performance by exacting payment in gold has not gone beyond nor stopped short of the intention of the parties.

It is next claimed that the relief granted exceeds that prayed for in the complaint. This point is based upon the fact that the complaint does not ask for accruing interest, and that the judgment be made to draw interest at the same rate as the contract, whereas the Court allowed accruing interest and framed the judgment so as to make it draw the same rate of interest as the contract. In support of this point Lamping & Co. v. Hyatt et al., supra, is cited. But that was a case of default. Where judgment is by default, the Court cannot grant greater relief than is demanded in the complaint; but where there is a trial, the Court may grant any relief consistent with the case made in the complaint and embraced within the issue. (Prac. Act, Sec. 147.) The contract is set

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Delos Lake, and Robert F. Morrison, for Appellant.

The only ground which the record discloses for the action of the Court was the plaintiff's motion, and we are left to search in vain for any legal reason why the answer of the defendant should have been thus unceremoniously stricken out, and thereupon a judgment passed against him by default.

Opinion of the Court.

P. L. Edwards, for Respondent.

All legal intendments are in favor of the judgment. It is to be presumed that there was a proper inquiry of damages, if in fact any was necessary, and that the judgment for want of an answer was properly taken. (Johnson v. Sepulveda, 5 Cal. 149; Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 290.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action for false imprisonment. The defendant in his answer denies the allegations of the complaint seriatim, and states a special defense by way of justification. Both the complaint and the answer are verified. The defendant was defaulted, and thereupon judgment was rendered against him for three thousand dollars—the full amount claimed in the complaint.

There is a diversity of interlocutory orders and other entries in the transcript, showing in detail the movement of the cause in the Court below, and on which the appellant relies, in the main, to make out that the judgment is erroneous. But inasmuch as these entries are not embodied in a statement, they were, for that reason, improperly inserted in the transcript, and the respondent therefore very properly insists that the question of error is to be treated on the judgment roll alone. (Mages v. The Mokelumne Hill Company, 5 Cal. 258; Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

The judgment is as follows: "In this case witnesses were sworn and examined for plaintiff and defendants. The Court, after due consideration, and being fully advised in the premises, ordered that the answer of C. D. Douglass, one of the defendants herein, be, and the same is hereby, stricken out; and that thereupon the default of said Douglass be entered; and the plaintiff, H. J. Abbott, have judgment against said defendant C. D. Douglass for the sum of three thousand dollars and his costs of suit as prayed for in the complaint."

The judgment then was upon default; and it appears by the recitals that the case was prepared for an entry of a default by an order striking out the answer, actually filed. (Drum v. Whitney, 9 Cal. 422.) The question, then, comes upon the validity of that intermediate order. (Practice Act, Sec. 344.)

The grounds of the order are not disclosed in the judgment roll, nor do they appear anywhere in the miscellaneous matter contained in the transcript. But it appears from the recitals in the judgment: First, that witnesses were sworn and examined in the case for both parties, and that the Court after due consideration ordered the answer to be struck out. From the fact that witnesses were so sworn and examined, it is to be presumed that the case was being tried upon the merits; for under no possible state of facts would it be proper for a Court to permit witnesses to be sworn and examined in connection with a motion to strike out a pleading. Furthermore, the intendment that the question was raised on the trial of the action is fortified by the direct statement in the judgment that "witnesses were sworn and examined in the case." Now, upon what ground, if any, could the order have properly been made during the progress of the trial? If there be any, lying within the scope of legal conjecture, the order must be considered as having been properly made. It could not have been so made on the ground that the answer was not filed within the time limited by law, for if such was the fact, the plaintiff waived the objection by going to trial upon the merits. And, for the same reason, it could not have been properly made on the ground that the answer was not duly verified. And, furthermore, the verification appears to us to be free from objection. Neither can the order be vindicated on the ground that the answer was a "sham," or that it was frivolous, irrelevant, redundant or immaterial. The traverse which it contained of all the plaintiff's allegations is conclusive upon that question, and relieves us from the necessity of looking into the special defense. The grounds upon which an answer may be struck out are mainly defined in section fifty of the Practice Act, and we have already more than exhausted them.

Opinion of the Court.

It may be added, that if the Court in the course of the trial became satisfied that the order was fallacious as matter of law, or found, on the testimony adduced, that the allegations of the complaint were true and that the justification stated in the answer was false, the proper sequence, in either event, was not an order striking out the answer, but a judgment in chief for the plaintiff based upon a finding in his favor.

It is suggested for the respondent that the answer may have been stricken out on the ground that the plaintiff neglected to appear and testify in disobedience to a subpoena served upon him; or, that being called upon, he refused to be sworn; or, that being sworn, he refused to answer; or on the ground that being required to subscribe an affidavit or deposition, he refused to do so. (Practice Act, Sec. 409.) The answer is obvious. The statement in the judgment that "witnesses were sworn and examined in the case for both parties," and that "the Court, after due consideration and being fully advised in the premises, ordered," etc., excludes the idea that the order striking out the defendant's answer was made on the score of any personal neglect or any personal contumacy on his part. It appears by the record that the order was upon "consideration," and that the consideration was limited to the testimony adduced.

In discussing the question presented, we have referred familiarly to the answer. The answer, notwithstanding the order striking it out, is entitled to its position in the judgment roll. The phrase "struck out," as applied to a pleading, is figurative only. An order sustaining a demurrer to a pleading defeats or suspends for the time being its legal effect in the action, and a successful motion to strike out an answer does no more. In either event the pleading, as a document, remains in official custody, and, among others, for the purpose of ulterior proceedings in the Court that made the order, or for the purpose of handy review in the Court of errors. Further, the Practice Act requires peremptorily that whenever an answer has been put in that it shall constitute a part of the judgment roll, no matter how the Court may deal with it on demurrer or on motion to strike out, or find, on trial, as to the truth of its averments.

The conclusion is that the judgment is erroneous; and for the reason that the order striking out the answer of the appellant cannot be right by any known legal possibility.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

Mr. Justice SAWYER delivered the following dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON concurred.

The appeal is from the judgment. There is no statement on appeal, and none of the grounds relied on by appellant to reverse the judgment are disclosed by the judgment roll. The answer of defendant, Douglass, having been stricken out by the Court, the Judgment roll—in our opinion—consists of the complaint, the summons, proof of service, the entry of default, and a copy of the judgment. The other orders embraced in the transcript form no part of the judgment roll, and cannot be reviewed on this appeal. There is nothing to show upon what any of them were based, or the circumstances under which they were made. They properly constitute no part of the record on appeal. If the appellant desired to have any of these orders reviewed, he should have introduced them into the record on appeal by a statement, together with such other matters constituting a part of the proceedings as would enable this Court to determine whether there was error or not. (Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.) Had he made a statement, and omitted anything necessary to a full understanding of the grounds upon which the orders were made, the respondent would have had an opportunity to supply the defect by amendment. He has had no such opportunity. The order striking out the answer, and the grounds of the motion to strike out, should have been brought to the attention of the Court in the same manner. After the answer was stricken out, the document remained on the files as a part of the history of the case, but it was no longer, in legal contemplation, a pleading in the cause. There is nothing in the record which shows the grounds upon which the order was made, and we cannot tell whether it was properly made or not. It may be that it was struck out under section four hundred and twenty of the Practice Act, for a refusal by defendant to attend and testify at the trial. The presumptions are all in favor of the correct action of the Court. The striking out of the answer, default and judgment were entered by the order of the Court, and the judgment recites that "witnesses were sworn and examined by plaintiff and defendants;" so there must have been in fact some kind of trial. But this is not inconsistent with the idea that the answer was properly struck out. The course of proceedings on the trial may well have been as follows: The plaintiff may have introduced testimony proving his case and rested; the defendant have presented his evidence and rested; then plaintiff may have called the defendant as a witness on his behalf in rebuttal, and the defendant having failed, or refused to appear and testify, plaintiff may have produced his subpoena, proved due service, and upon the failure or refusal of defendant to appear and testify in pursuance of the command of the writ, have moved the Court to strike out his answer and enter judgment in his favor on that ground, which motion the Court may have granted. If this was in fact the course of proceeding, there was no error. And there is nothing in the recitals of the judgment, or in the judgment roll—whether the answer is regarded as a part of the roll or not—inconsistent with such a course of proceeding. If this was not the course of proceeding, or if there was in fact any error, there were three ways of bringing the error to the notice of this Court for review. The party might, at the time of the trial, have drawn up a bill of exceptions, stating that an answer had been filed; the proceedings on the trial; the circumstances attending, and the grounds of the motion; the ruling of the Court striking out the answer and his exception, and had it settled, signed by the Judge, and filed it in the cause. The bill of exceptions embracing the answer by reference or otherwise, would thus, under the provisions of the Practice Act, have become a part of the judgment roll, and would have presented the question. Or, after the trial, appellant might have set out the same matter in a statement on motion for new trial, or a statement on appeal. In either of these modes, the other party would have had an opportunity to introduce any matter favorable to himself, and had all the facts necessary to a correct adjudication of the question presented. But, as the case now stands, the respondent has had no opportunity whatever to show that there was no error. And the facts necessary to enable us to determine whether there was error or not, are not before us. In our opinion, the record — whether the answer is regarded as a part of the judgment roll or not — does not present the question sought to be raised, or affirmatively disclose error, and all presumptions are in favor of the ruling of the Court.

We see no error upon the judgment roll, and if there was any error in the proceedings, the appellant has failed to present it in such a form that we can review it.

There would seem to have been some negligence on the part of appellant. The order in the transcript — though not properly in the record — appears on its face to have been entered at the July term, 1864, and it expressly gave appellant leave to move to restore the answer upon good cause shown, and stayed all proceedings till the next term to enable him to do so. The next term was in November. No motion appears to have been made, no statement on appeal prepared, and no action of any kind taken till January 17th of the next year, when this appeal was taken.

We think the judgment should be affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Thomas M. Swan, for Appellant.

M. A. Wheaton, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This cause was before the late Supreme Court. The principles of law applicable to the case were then declared, and the cause remanded for a new trial. (21 Cal. 92.) The appellants insist, that, so far as anything is shown to the contrary by the record, on the second trial the Court and counsel proceeded on the theory that the facts as well as the law had been settled, and that only an account remained to be taken; that no evidence on the other issues in the case appears to have been introduced, and that the main issues formed by the pleadings do not appear to have been tried or determined. The respondent's counsel, on the contrary, avers, that all the issues were in fact tried, notwithstanding the fact that the record does not affirmatively show it. On the former appeal a new trial was ordered in general terms, and the case undoubtedly went back for trial upon all the issues of fact raised by the pleadings. It does not affirmatively appear in the record whether testimony was introduced on all of the issues referred to by counsel for appellant or not. The record does not purport to contain all the evidence. The statement on motion for new trial designates the grounds of the motion, and, as required by section one hundred ninety-five of the Practice Act, specifies certain particulars, in respect to which the appellant would claim the findings to be unsupported by the evidence, all of which relate to questions affecting the state of the account between the parties. The statute requires the testimony in the statement to be confined to those particulars. If any testimony in favor of plaintiff bearing upon the points specified was omitted by defendant, it was the duty of plaintiff's counsel to see that it was supplied by amendments. But he was not only not required to introduce any testimony not bearing upon other points, but it would have been improper for him to do so. The presumption, therefore, is, that the statement does not contain all of the testimony, or any testimony upon the points not specified. Under the statute, as it now stands, it must be presumed that the verdict or decision is sustained by the evidence in all respects, except in those particulars in which the statement specifies the evidence to be insufficient. For these reasons we can only consider the particulars thus specified.

Exceptions were taken to the findings as being defective in several particulars, in pursuance of the Act of 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 589), and defendant moved to vacate them on that ground. The facts were not so fully stated in the findings as is desirable in cases of the character under consideration. In most of the material particulars sufficiently designated in the exceptions, the defects were subsequently supplied by amendments filed by the Judge. In some of the exceptions the respondent not only designated the point upon which he desired a finding, but also designated how he desired the Court to find upon the point, and excepted to the refusal to find in the way designated. We have often seen similar exceptions in other cases. There seems to be on the part of many, a misapprehension as to the character of the exception to be taken under the Act of 1861. These exceptions are not—as seems to be supposed—to be taken to the finding, on the ground that a fact is erroneously found. Errors in the finding are not to be corrected in this mode. Nor is there any such practice provided for in this Act as vacating findings on the ground that they are defective. The design of the statute is to enable the Court, at the instance of the party, to supply defects, as where there is an omission to make any finding at all, or to find on any issue of fact essential to the determination of the rights of the parties. A party is entitled to a finding, and he is also entitled to have a finding upon every issue raised, which is essential to the determination of the case. If the Judge neglects to file his decision in writing, stating the facts found, and his conclusions of law, or if he omits to find upon any issue essential to the determination of the case, the party desiring a finding may except for the want of a finding in the former case, or for a defect in the latter; but when he excepts for defects, the “particular defects shall be specifically and particularly designated”—that is to say, he must specify, particularly, the point or issue upon which he requires the Court to state the fact found, but he is not authorized to dictate how the Court shall find. That question must be determined by the Court from the evidence in the case. If the Judge errs in his findings, the remedy for the error is by motion for a new trial. The exception as above stated is the only exception contemplated by the Act of 1861. But the exceptions contemplated by the Act must be filed within five days after the making of the finding or decision, and must be brought to the notice of the Judge, in order that he may have an opportunity to supply the defects complained of.

While on this subject—although the finding in this case is not objectionable on that ground—we desire to suggest to District Judges another fault of frequent occurrence in the cases appealed to this Court. In many instances the finding is an opinion rather than a finding of facts and conclusions of law. In it the facts found, a rehearsal of evidence, without stating the fact supposed to be proven by it, conclusions of law and argument, are all mixed up in such a way that it is difficult, if not impossible, to tell what the ascertained facts of the case are. The finding of facts and conclusions of law contemplated by the statute is something different from an opinion. The finding should consist of a concise, distinct, pointed and separate statement of each specific, essential fact established by the evidence, in its proper order, without any of the testimony by which the facts are proved, followed by a similar statement of the conclusions of law drawn from the facts thus found. This is the finding contemplated by the statute, which is to be annexed to and form a part of the judgment roll. If an opinion is written—and we are always glad to find one in the transcript—it should be entirely separate from the finding, and filed among the papers in the case. The Practice Act recognizes an opinion as something different from a finding. (Sections 180, 203, 346.)

Upon comparing the fourth original and very general finding, to the effect that the rents and profits have fully repaid to defendant the four thousand dollars and interest thereon, and all expenditures upon the land, with the several more specific findings in the amendments, we are unable to harmonize them. If a discrepancy exists, the more specific findings of particular facts must control. According to both the fourth original finding, and the first amendment the principal sum to be paid is four thousand dollars; and according to the said amendment the rate of interest is "two and a half per cent per month, payable monthly; and if not so paid, a new note was to be given therefor, itself drawing two per cent per month." And on January 4th, 1859, the amount of interest then unpaid was one thousand two hundred and fifty-eight dollars and eighty-six cents. According to the third amendment the full amount of interest then due had been at that time rendered and rejected, and the interest then due thereby ceased to draw interest. But the tender of four thousand dollars on the 4th was held — and we think correctly — not to be a good tender, because it was insufficient to pay the principal and interest. The one thousand five hundred dollars tendered on the 3d for interest undoubtedly formed a part of the four thousand dollars tendered for principal on the 4th, and was made to perform double duty, and the tender was evidently not made in good faith. The tender on the 4th being bad, the interest on the four thousand dollars continued to run against the plaintiff. The Court does not find, nor does the evidence show at what time in the fall of 1859 defendant realized his money from the products of the premises. But he rented them about the first of November, at which time a new farming year commenced, and, this being the end of the farming year, is probably, under the ordinary rules for making rests in such cases, the earliest moment at which the plaintiff would be entitled to charge the profits of the year against defendant. Charging them at this time, the four thousand dollars principal had run at interest, in round numbers, ten months, since the 4th of January, 1859, which at two and one half per cent on the principal, and two per cent on each monthly installment of one hundred dollars interest, from the date it fell due, would, on the 4th of November, 1859, amount to five thousand and ninety dollars. The Court also found that the defendant had paid six hundred and five dollars and sixty-four cents taxes, "a portion being paid each year," without stating what portion, and that, during the time he was in possession, he built stone wall fencing of the value of one thousand two hundred dollars, without stating in what years. As to the taxes, the several amounts, and the times at which they were paid, are admitted in the record. On the 1st of November, 1858, the amount of taxes paid was ninety-six dollars and thirty-nine cents; and on the 15th of October, 1859, the further sum of ninety-eight dollars and seventy cents was paid. Allowing one year's interest at the legal rates on the first sum, we have a credit for taxes in favor of defendant, in round numbers, of two hundred and four dollars, which, added to five thousand and ninety dollars, gives the sum of five thousand two hundred and ninety-four dollars due defendant, November 4th, 1859. The Court found the rents and profits of that year to be three thousand seven hundred and thirty-one dollars. Charging this sum against defendant on that day, and deducting it from the said amount due him, there would remain — if we have made no mistake in the computation — a balance in his favor of one thousand five hundred and sixty-three dollars. The Court found the yearly value of the rents and profits for the next three succeeding years at one thousand one hundred dollars, and that defendant received five hundred dollars for the year 1863. Regarding them as chargeable against the defendant at the end of each year, say on the 4th of November, and casting the interest on the above balance and accruing monthly interest to November, 1860, adding the taxes paid that year, and deducting the one thousand one hundred dollars profits of the year, taking this balance for a new principal, and so continuing to the end, regarding the five hundred dollars for 1863 as paid in November, 1862, and deducting it at the same time as the last one thousand one hundred dollars, it will be found that on the 4th of November, 1862, the four thousand dollars an interest accruing subsequent to January 4th, 1859, together with the taxes have been paid, and a balance left of something over seven hundred dollars in favor of the plaintiff. But the one thousand two hundred and fifty-eight dollars and eighty-six cents, interest, which accrued in favor of defendant prior to January 4th, 1859, upon which interest was stopped by the tender, has not yet been disposed of. Deducting the balance in favor of plaintiff at the close of 1862, after satisfying the principal, interest, and taxes accrued subsequent to January 4th, 1859, from said item of one thousand two hundred and fifty-eight dollars and eighty-six cents, interest accrued before that time, and all of the rents and profits found by the Court to be chargeable against defendant, will have been absorbed and a balance of more than four hundred dollars will be left in favor of defendant. To this balance the one thousand two hundred dollars paid for fencing, of which no account has yet been taken in our computation, is still to be added. The Court allowed this sum for fencing as one of the expenditures, and it must therefore be presumed that it was found to be necessary, there being no finding on that point, and no exception for defect in this particular. The mode suggested of computing the interest and stating the account upon the particular facts found, is the most favorable one to the respondent that can be adopted. If we are anywhere near right in our computations, it seems impossible to harmonize the specific findings in the amendments with the fourth original finding, for by the former there was really a very considerable balance still due the defendant. And if so the judgment is necessarily erroneous and a new accounting must be had.

Opinion of the Court.

Appellant insists that the Court erred in refusing to make an interlocutory order settling the principles upon which the accounting was to be had, and to refer it to a Commissioner or referee to state the account. The Judge is at liberty to state the account between the parties and determine all the questions in the case himself, if he chooses to do so. But in a case like this, where his time is limited, it would be very inconvenient, if not almost impossible, to do it. It would be singular, indeed; if, in the ordinary hurry of a trial by the Court, some error should not occur. Unquestionably, the better and safer practice would be, in such a case, to refer it to some competent person to state the account. But the Court can pursue such course as it may deem advisable.

Opinion of the Court.

A mortgagee in possession "will be accountable for the actual receipts of the net rents and profits, and nothing more, unless they were reduced or lost by his wilful default or gross negligence. By taking possession he imposes upon himself the duty of a provident owner, and he is bound to recover what such an owner would by reasonable diligence have received." (4 Kent's Com. 166.) This is the rule applicable to the present case. During the year 1859, when the defendant worked the premises himself, he is bound to account for the net proceeds of the farm after paying all the necessary expenses of carrying it on. He is entitled to deduct the taxes paid and necessary repairs. As a general rule, the cost of new and permanent improvements cannot be allowed. There may, however, be special circumstances which would justify a Judge in making the allowance. In this case the value of the fencing cannot be allowed unless the fence constructed was necessary to the protection of the crops. But if the value of the rents and profits were enhanced in consequence of the building of the fence, defendant cannot be charged with such enhanced value, unless an allowance is also made to him for the value of the fence. Although the defendant was chargeable for the actual net profits while he carried on the farm, he was not bound to work it himself, provided he could rent for the full yearly value of the premises to suitable parties, who would manage it in a husbandlike manner. And while he thus rented it at its full value, he was only chargeable for such value. Of course he would be chargeable for all the rents received, after deducting necessary expenses, during the years the premises were rented. The evidence, therefore, should be directed to the value of the premises and the rents received, and not to the actual amount of the products raised by the tenant, and the net amount such tenant was enabled to realize. The tenant took the risk of a favorable or unfavorable season. He might pay more as rents than he could actually realize in any given year, and he might pay less. As to the crops on the premises, when they were purchased they belonged to the real purchaser, and not the party standing in the position of mortgagee, and if they were turned over to the defendant for the purpose of making the last payment on the purchase money out of the net proceeds derived from them, or were taken by defendant and devoted to that purpose independent of any express agreement in regard to the crops between plaintiff and defendant, then they stand in the same position as other rents and profits, and a payment out of them upon the purchase money must inure to the benefit of the plaintiff, and be regarded as a payment by him. Of course, if they were purchased of plaintiff and paid for by defendant they belonged to the purchaser. The defendant is entitled to have the taxes and the ordinary necessary expenses and necessary repairs deducted from the receipts of the year in which they were respectively paid.

After an attentive examination of the transcript and briefs of counsel, we are forced to the conclusion that the judgment should be reversed, and that so much of the finding as relates to the accounting should be vacated, and to that extent a new trial and a re-accounting between the parties on the principles herein indicated be had. And it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice CURREY expressed no opinion.

By the Court, SAWYER, J., on petition for rehearing.

The conclusions announced in our opinion before filed were not adopted without an anxious and thorough investigation of the case presented by the record. There are, however, some portions of the opinion referred to in the petition for rehearing that require further explanation, and, perhaps, ought not to be applied to this case; and some new points presented that we do not feel at liberty to pass over without notice.

It is first insisted that in respect to the points wherein the evidence was held to be insufficient to sustain the findings, the Court applied a different rule from that followed in Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 376. In that case it was said, substantially, that where the record fails to negative the fact, that there was other proof upon the point in question, when it appears that there was other evidence in the case, the finding of the Court below would be presumed to have been supported by the evidence omitted. The portion complained of as being inconsistent with the rule thus stated, is the last paragraph of the following passage: "The statement on motion for a new trial designates the grounds of the motion, and as required by section one hundred ninety-five of the Practice Act, specifies certain particulars in respect to which the appellant would claim the findings to be unsupported by the evidence, all of which relate to questions affecting the state of the accounts between the parties. The statute requires the testimony in the statement to be confined to those particulars. If any testimony in favor of plaintiff bearing upon the points specified was omitted by defendant it was the duty of plaintiff's counsel to see that it was supplied by amendments." This was said arguendo in discussing a point decided by us in favor of the respondent, but it turns out to be applicable to other points decided against him. Neither the case of Owen v. Morton, nor any other upon this point, was called to our attention by counsel. Upon examination of the case, however, it is evident that the propositions announced in the two cases are inconsistent, and it becomes necessary to determine which is right, and to establish the rule upon the point by which we shall in all cases hereafter be governed. In the case of Owen v. Morton, the point was not made or discussed by counsel, and we followed, without questioning its correctness, the rule as announced in Dawley v. Hovious, 23 Cal. 104, and in some previous decisions, also, apparently adopted without discussion. And we may have followed the same rule in subsequent cases. But since the decision in Owen v. Morton, and since the submission of this cause, the question has been fully discussed by counsel in another case, in which it is claimed that, if the rule ever was correct under the provisions of our Practice Act, it ought not to be applied to statements prepared under the very specific provisions of section one hundred ninety-five as it now stands. And, after a careful examination of the question, we are satisfied that the rule as announced in the opinion in this case harmonizes with the general theory of the other provisions of the section as construed by us, and is the proper rule to be adopted. The section provides that, "When the notice designates as the ground upon which the motion will be made, the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, or other decision, the statement shall specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient." * * * "The statement shall contain so much of the evidence or reference thereto as may be necessary to explain the particular points thus specified and no more." The point wherein the defect of evidence is claimed to exist must, then, be specified, and so much of the evidence as is necessary to explain it must be introduced, and no more. The attention of the other party is thus directed to the weak point in his evidence, and if anything has been omitted which would tend to strengthen the case on that point, he has an opportunity afforded to supply it by amendment, and it is his duty to do so. And, in practice, we have no doubt that this is in all cases done. It is for this purpose, in part, that a party is authorized to have a defective or erroneous statement settled by the Judge. When the statement has been filed, and the opposite party has had an opportunity to suggest the necessary amendments, and the statement has been thereupon agreed to, or settled by the Judge, we think he must be regarded as being estopped from averring that there may be other testimony upon the point. As to all other points not specified in the statement the presumption would be that the evidence sustains the verdict, and no question can be made upon it. This view is sustained by the principles announced in the decision of Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 116. After stating instances in which the presumptions as to the sufficiency of the evidence would be in favor of the correct ruling of the

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Court, Mr. Justice Bennett says: "But it is not properly applicable to what is denominated a case, the very scope and object of which is to bring up the entire testimony and proceedings which may be deemed of importance to either party." The "case" referred to here we understand to be just such a case as is contemplated by our present statutes, denominated a "statement," or something analogous to it, and governed by the same principles. (See Grah. Pr. 290.) Without any expressed intention to overrule this decision, there seems to have been a subsequent, though perhaps inconsiderate departure from it. At all events, we think the rule as now stated by us should be applied to statements hereafter prepared under the Act as it now stands. When the rule is once understood, to require a certificate that the record contains all the evidence introduced on each point specified would only be to add so much useless matter. We shall, therefore, follow this rule in all cases where the statements are prepared after the publication of this opinion.

The statement in this case was made up since the decision in Owen v. Morton, and the parties may have relied upon that case and the others referred to. We should for this reason feel bound to grant a rehearing, if we deemed it necessary to determine the cause upon the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. But in our opinion it is not, as will be seen hereafter.

"Another question," says the petition, "which has not attracted the attention of the Court is this: Can Jordan, without express contract in writing, collect more than ten per cent per annum upon his four thousand dollars?" The question was not noticed by the Court because no such point was made by counsel. "Every question of law," says counsel, "was decided in the Court below as this Court decides it, and the computation made in the same way." Yet we hear no complaint as to the rate of interest allowed in the computation, either in the Court below or in this Court, until it is made in the petition for rehearing, after a decision against the respondent upon the points raised and discussed. We should not deem it necessary to refer to this point at all, raised as it is, for the first time, at this stage of the proceedings, were it not for the fact that the case goes back for a re-accounting, and the question may be made again on the further proceedings in the Court below. We shall also notice some other matters that we should not have thought it necessary to discuss had there been nothing else in the petition requiring further observation.

This is not a suit by Jordan to "collect" either principal or interest. It is a suit in equity by Hidden against Jordan to establish a contract, and then enforce it. The complaint was filed in November, 1858. It alleges substantially that plaintiff purchased certain tracts of land from third parties; that he borrowed from Jordan four thousand dollars with which to make payment in part; that he agreed to pay interest thereon monthly, at two and a half per cent per month, and if the interest should not be paid to pay interest on each instalment thereof from the time it should fall due, at two per cent per month and to give his notes therefor; that it was agreed between him and Jordan that the lands purchased should be conveyed by the vendor to Jordan, and that Jordan should hold the title in trust for the plaintiff, and to secure the amount loaned and interest, and upon payment thereof according to the terms of the agreement to convey to plaintiff; that the purchase was made, the money advanced, and the lands conveyed to Jordan in pursuance of this agreement, without the same having been reduced to writing; that afterward the plaintiff caused a contract to be drawn up in writing (a copy of which — Exhibit "B" — is attached to and made a part of the complaint) and presented to defendant for execution; that defendant suggested certain amendments of which he made a memorandum in writing (which is also annexed as Exhibit "C," and made a part of the complaint,) and directed them to be incorporated into the said draft of agreement, and that he approved of and agreed to the terms of the agreement as thus amended; and said defendant then and there agreed to sign.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

execute and deliver to said plaintiff the instrument thus completed; that he subsequently refused to execute the agreement as amended, and denied the contract altogether, at the same time claiming that he had purchased the land on his own account. Plaintiff prays that the conveyance to defendant may be adjudged to be a mortgage to secure the payment of said four thousand dollars "in accordance with the agreements contained in Exhibit 'B' and 'C;'" "that said defendant be decreed to enter into, execute, acknowledge and deliver to plaintiff his agreement in terms as expressed in said exhibit," and for general relief. In 1859, a supplemental complaint was filed in which plaintiff alleges, that since the commencement of the action, he has tendered to defendant the full amount due upon said contract for principal and interest, and demanded a conveyance in pursuance of said agreement, and that defendant refused to accept the money, or make the conveyance. He then asks to be permitted to pay the money into Court; that an account may be taken, and the amount due ascertained, and that defendant be decreed to convey in accordance with the terms of said contract. In 1863 plaintiff filed a second supplemental complaint in which he alleges that defendant entered into possession of the premises in 1858, in the manner stated in the original complaint, and that he has been in possession and taken the rents and profits ever since, and in so doing has made himself plaintiff's trustee for the same, and that he is bound to account for the proceeds, etc., and prays, among other things, that defendant be required to account for the same, "and for such other and further relief in addition to that prayed for in this and his former complaints as to the Court may seem just and proper." Upon issues joined, the Court found the contract to be as alleged, including the rate of interest, but found against the tender of the full amount due, and made the accounting upon that basis. Now this is the very contract which plaintiff alleges, and which he asks this Court to enforce according to its terms. He sets out the very contract in hæc verba drawn up in writing which, he says, was entered into and finally approved, and substantially asks, firstly, that it be established; secondly, that "defendant be decreed to enter into, execute, acknowledge and deliver to plaintiff his agreement in terms as expressed in said exhibits;" and lastly, after it shall be established and actually executed and delivered, that it be carried into execution by taking an account between the parties and decreeing a conveyance of the land, upon its appearing that the amount due has been paid. He has had the contract set up, established, and the trust arising under it enforced according to the terms alleged, and according to the prayer of the complaint. Can the plaintiff complain that his relief has been meted out to him by the standard which he himself has set up as the measure of his right? We think not. Should the contract in writing in fact be first executed under a decree of the Court, as prayed in the complaint—and on this point, for the purpose of the relief granted, the Court will consider that as done which ought to be done—the question now raised could not arise, for there would then be a contract in writing for interest at the prescribed rate to be enforced. We think upon the case presented by the record that interest should be allowed in the accounting at the rate agreed upon in the contract sought to be enforced, according to its terms. Had this been a suit at law by Jordan upon the parol agreement to recover the money due, the question would have been a very different one.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Another point made in the petition for the first time is the Statute of Limitations. It is sufficient on this point to say, without further discussion, that the record presents no case for the application of the bar of the statute.

In considering the question as to whether the amended and more specific findings of the District Court are in harmony with its general finding upon the state of the account between the parties, we assumed, in our opinion, that the District Judge allowed the item of twelve hundred dollars expended in the construction of a stone wall fence on the premises. It is now, for the first time, very positively asserted, that there was "no allowance made by the Court on account of the stone wall to Jordan." Upon this point there is, on the part of counsel, a palpable "change of base"—a course of proceedings too frequent in petitions for rehearing. In the brief filed in the case, respondent's counsel complained because it was allowed, and on the ground that there was no testimony to show "that it was necessary to the preservation of the estate or the crops, and without such proof the Court ought not to allow anything;" that "a trustee has no right to put improvements upon an estate, unless they are necessary to its preservation or to save the crops;" that the stone wall was an evident attempt to "improve the plaintiff out of the property." He also complained that, according to the evidence, the estimate adopted by the Court of the length of the wall was too great, and the price too high, and then adds: "Yet the Court allowed one thousand two hundred dollars for the wall—one hundred and twenty dollars more than the highest value of the wall—although about eighty rods of it was inside the line, causing a loss of a strip of land ten to fifteen feet wide," etc.; and again: "The allowance for the stone wall, one thousand two hundred dollars, and one half of the proceeds for eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, three thousand seven hundred and thirty-one dollars, making four thousand nine hundred and thirty-one dollars, was a clear gift to the defendant, to which he was not entitled." When counsel make in their printed arguments a formal admission of a fact, or a principle of law which bears against themselves, it cannot be expected that this Court will be very particular in ascertaining whether the admission is correct or not, and counsel, upon reflection, cannot well fail to perceive that to make such an admission, and then, after the Court has acted upon it as correct, without offering any sort of excuse for such action, apply for rehearing upon the ground that the decision is based upon an erroneous hypothesis, is—whether intended or not—but trifling with the Court. In this case, although the finding does not state in express terms that the item for the wall was allowed, yet we think the plain inference from the record is, that it was; and we cannot suppose that respondent's counsel would have made such strenuous efforts in his briefs to show that it was improperly allowed, or if not, that it was allowed at too great a sum, unless it had been understood by all parties that it was in fact allowed. It is still insisted in the petition, that, if allowed, it was erroneously done, for the reason, that there is no finding, and no evidence in the record to support such a finding, that the wall was necessary for the protection of the crops. There is no express finding on that point one way or the other, and, as there is no exception for defect in that particular, the item having been allowed, the presumption is, under the statute of 1861, in favor of its correct allowance; and as no point is specified in the statement as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding that the wall was necessary, we could not expect to find any evidence on the point in a statement properly prepared. The statute expressly forbids its introduction. These very principles were invoked by respondent upon other points made against him in this case, and enforced in his favor in our former opinion. Respondent certainly cannot expect us to apply one rule to his points, and another to the appellant's. We have admitted that, in view of the former action of the Court, we may have done the respondent injustice by applying to the statement the rule announced in this case, as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain findings, and, for this reason, we lay the sufficiency of the evidence out of the case, and it will be unnecessary to discuss it further. Our former opinion will also be modified by omitting that portion relating to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings.

This brings us to the question, whether the amended and specific findings are in harmony with the original and more general finding — the point upon which the decision was mainly rested before. Upon this branch of the case but one or two points besides those already noticed are made in the petition. It is claimed that, because a balance of twelve hundred and fifty-eight dollars and eighty-six cents interest was found to be due January 4th, 1859, in striking this balance, the Court must have included the item of ninety-six dollars and thirty-nine cents, taxes paid prior to that date, viz: November 1st,

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

1858. But we do not so understand the record. This tax was evidently regarded as an independent item, as no reference is made to any other item or payment allowed prior to that date. The finding simply gives us the balance of interest unpaid then ascertained, without any reference to the preceding state of the account. And this item of taxes is included in the finding with the several other items of taxes allowed, which were paid subsequent to the striking of the balance, in the gross sum of six hundred and five dollars and sixty-four cents, and it is only by reference to the admitted facts upon which the finding is based, that we ascertain the dates at which the several items of taxes which make up the gross amount were paid. We have no doubt, from the record, that this item was allowed to defendant in the computation, in addition to the balance of interest. Taxes paid are a part of the expenses of the year in which they are paid. To ascertain the net profits of the year, the taxes paid are properly deducted from the gross proceeds. This is simply what was done in our computation. For the purpose of the computation, we took the month of November, because that appeared to be the end of the year—the period ordinarily adopted for making rests in such cases—and the 4th, instead of the 1st, for the convenience of round numbers, this being sufficiently accurate for the purpose of our argument. But, taking October 1st—the precise time for making the rests adopted by respondent in his computation—and allowing interest at the agreed rate, it is not pretended, as we understand counsel, that the special findings can be made to harmonize with the general finding, or that upon the special findings the whole amount due has been paid by the rents and profits, unless we throw out of the account the first item of taxes and the item of one thousand two hundred dollars allowed for the wall. But these items, as we have shown, cannot be disregarded upon the case as now presented by the record. We cannot, of course, tell how the case may appear after the new accounting. But even if the one thousand two hundred dollars allowed for the wall be rejected, and the 1st of October taken as the time for making the resta, there would still be a balance due defendant, if we are not mistaken in our computation. We do not understand that the accuracy of our computation is questioned, provided the first item of taxes be allowed, and deducted from the gross proceeds of the year, and the agreed rate of interest be adopted.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

The specific findings must control; and, after a thorough examination of the case, we do not see how those findings can be made to support the judgment. The respondent's counsel insists, with no little warmth, that his client has been grievously wronged, and that a large balance ought in fact to have been found in his favor, but much that is said is based upon matter outside the record. If he is correct, upon a re-accounting he will doubtless be able to show it, and to recover the large balance due him. At all events, we are unable to find anything in the record, or the argument based on it, that would justify a rehearing.

APPEAL IN ACTION FOR PARTITION.—An appeal does not lie from an interlocutory judgment, rendered in an action for partition, determining the interest of the several parties and appointing a referee to make a partition and report the same to the Court.

RETROACTIVE EFFECT OF ACT ALLOWING APPEALS.—The Act of March 23d, 1864, allowing an appeal from a judgment in cases of partition, "which determines the right of the several parties and directs partition to be made," is not retroactive so as to apply to such judgments which had already been entered.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Statutes should not be so construed as to give them a retroactive operation unless it is clearly apparent that such was the intention.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

THE facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

F. D. Colton, for Appellants.

J. McM. Shafter, and N. Bennett, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an appeal from an interlocutory judgment, entered February 26th, 1864, determining the interest of the several parties, settling the principle upon which a partition is to be made, and appointing referees to make a partition, and report the same to the Court. There are two appeals. The first was taken March 30th, and the second May 27th, 1864. The respondents moved to dismiss the several appeals, on the ground that no appeal lies from the judgment. The question must be determined upon the provisions of the Practice Act. We have carefully examined the points made by the light of the arguments of counsel, and without discussing the questions here, we are satisfied that, under the provisions of the Practice Act relating to partitions, the judgment appealed from is not a "final judgment in an action or special proceeding," within the meaning of the provisions of section three hundred and forty-seven, prescribing the cases in which appeals to this Court may be taken. The judgment is merely interlocutory, and not final. After the report of the referees is made and confirmed, the Court renders its judgment thereon, and this becomes the final judgment from which an appeal can be taken by any party to the suit who is aggrieved; and on such appeal "any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment may be reviewed."

On the 23d of March, 1864 — about a month after the entry of the interlocutory judgment appealed from — the Legislature passed an Act authorizing an appeal to "be taken from a judgment or decree of the Court in cases of partition, which determines the right of the several parties and directs a partition to be made" — which Act took effect sixty days after its passage. Soon after this Act took effect, the appellants took the second appeal, for the purpose of availing themselves of its provisions in case it should be held that the first appeal would not lie. This Act contains no provision making it retroactive, so as to apply to such interlocutory judgments as had already been entered. To give it such an effect might produce great confusion and injustice. If it would apply to this case, it would also embrace all cases already in judgment, no matter how long since the judgment was entered; for there is no limitation as to time. Besides, a party entitled to appeal is entitled to annex a statement to the record, provided it is prepared within twenty days. But there is no provision for preparing statements in those cases wherein more than twenty days had elapsed since the entry of the judgment appealed from, and in such cases the parties might not be able, for this reason, to present the full merits of their case. This case itself would furnish an illustration of the inconvenience that might accrue. At the time the interlocutory judgment was entered, and for more than twenty days thereafter, no appeal could be taken, as we have just held. Until after the twenty days expired, therefore, the appellant was not entitled, under section three hundred and thirty-eight, to make any statement at all; for he was only entitled to annex a statement to an appealable order or judgment. In this case, however, the appellant, acting upon the hypothesis that an appeal would lie, prepared and served a statement, but only two or three out of the upwards of a hundred and sixty parties paid any attention to it, and it may be for that reason, that they regarded it as a nullity, as it undoubtedly was. If this statement could be used on an appeal authorized after the time for filing statement had elapsed, it might be greatly to the disadvantage of those parties who took no part in making it up. It is altogether probable that the Legislature, if it had intended to make the law operate upon past judgments, would have provided some mode for making up statements. We cannot think so important a provision would have been omitted, and this omission appears to us to afford a good illustration of the wisdom of the rules of construction which require statutes to be so construed, as not to give them retroactive operation unless it is clearly apparent that such was the intention. No such intention is manifest in this Act. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

We have come to this conclusion with great reluctance; for it is quite obvious, that the ends of justice would be greatly promoted by allowing appeals from these interlocutory orders, before great expense has been incurred in making partitions of large ranchos—like the one now in question—held by a great number of tenants in common. But we must administer the law as we find it, notwithstanding the fact, that this course, may, in some instances, result in great inconvenience. If, however, the partition is finally made in pursuance of the directions of the order appealed from, the appellants may, after all, obtain the lands they seek to have set off to them.

Appeal dismissed.

JULY TERM, 1865.

REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
JULY TERM, 1865.

E. C. BELL v. J. D. CRIPPEN.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS IN TAX CASES.—The District Courts have no jurisdiction of an action to recover judgment for a tax where the amount sued for is less than three hundred dollars, and the complaint contains no prayer for the foreclosure of the tax lien.

APPEAL from the District Court, Thirteenth Judicial District, Mariposa County.

On the 18th day of January, 1865, an action was commenced against plaintiff in the District Court for Mariposa County, to recover the sum of thirty dollars and sixty cents for taxes assessed against plaintiff's property in said county for the year 1864. The complaint contained the usual prayer for a money judgment. Judgment by default was rendered against defendant, February 17th, 1865, with a direction that the Sheriff sell the real property, or sufficient thereof to satisfy the judgment and costs. An order of sale was issued on the judgment, and the defendant, who was Sheriff of Mariposa County, was proceeding to sell under the order when this action was commenced to enjoin the sale on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment. An application was made to the District Judge for an injunction, and was by him denied. Plaintiff appealed from the order denying the injunction.

Alexander Deering, and R. McCaffrey, for Appellant.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

By stipulation between the parties the only question submitted to us relates to the jurisdiction of the District Court in the suit against the present plaintiff for taxes. In that case, the amount of the taxes sued for was less than three hundred dollars. There was no prayer for a foreclosure of the tax lien, and the judgment was by default.

In The People v. Mier, 24 Cal. 61, we held that in actions to recover taxes (under the somewhat anomalous condition in which the law now stands), the character of the action (as to whether it is a case at law or in equity) must be determined by the relief sought in the prayer of the complaint; and that where the amount of the taxes sued for is less than three hundred dollars, and there is no prayer for the foreclosure of the tax lien, order of sale, etc., the District Courts have no jurisdiction. We still adhere to the views expressed in that case.

Reversed and remanded.

PEOPLE v. JAMES CORBETT.

TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASE WITHOUT ARRAIGNMENT.—A verdict in a criminal case where there has been no arraignment nor plea is a nullity, and no valid judgment can be rendered thereon.

WAIVER OF ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEA.—The defendant in a criminal case does not waive an arraignment and plea by submitting to a trial, introducing witnesses on his behalf, and allowing the case to be argued on his behalf to the jury.

Opinion of the Court.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

The People appealed from an order of the County Court granting a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The State was put to the proof of the whole offense. (Wood's Digest, p. 293, Secs. 303, 304; People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 241.)

At common law the defendant might waive an arraignment, and it is hard to see under the liberal provisions of our statute why the formal plea may not also be waived. (See especially on Waiver, 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 672 a, and authorities.) The decision in 3 Wisconsin was doubtless made on common law principles. But sections two hundred and forty-seven and six hundred one of our Criminal Practice Act provide that no defect or imperfection in matters of form that does not tend to the prejudice of the defendant shall in any matter affect the trial, judgment, or other proceedings, and that no departure from the form or mode prescribed by the Act in respect to any pleadings or proceedings, and no error or mistake therein shall render the same invalid, unless it have prejudiced or tended to prejudice the defendant in respect to a substantial right. Now, what substantial right of the defendant was affected? If he had formally pleaded, he could not have obtained any greater latitude than he did in his defense.

Wm. M. Zabriskie, for Respondent.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The respondent was tried and convicted of the crime of grand larceny. A new trial was awarded on the ground that the defendant had never been arraigned, and had never pleaded, nor had an opportunity to plead to the indictment.

Opinion of the Court.

According to the record: "The defendant being present in Court (December 31st, 1864,) Thomas Bestop, Esq., appearing for the District Attorney, the defendant was called by name by the Clerk, for arraignment; when the defendant was informed that he was indicted for the crime of grand larceny, under the names of James Corbett, and was asked if that was his real name, to which he answered, yes; when the said James Corbett stated that he was not then prepared to plead, owing to the absence of his counsel, Mr. Zabriskie; and the Court thereupon suggested to the defendant that he could plead not guilty and if his counsel desired at any time before the trial to withdraw the plea, he would be allowed to do so; and the said James Corbett still asked for further time to plead; whereupon his case was continued until January 4th, 1865." It seems to be admitted that nothing was done on that day, and that the trial was the next step taken in the course of the proceedings. The trial occurred on the 16th of January. It appears that the defendant when brought into Court, accompanied by his counsel, moved for a separate trial, the indictment being against the defendant and two others. The motion was granted. Thereupon a jury was impanelled. Witnesses were introduced by the defendant. The case was argued by his counsel, and the jury, having been charged by the Court, after deliberation, returned a verdict of guilty.

On this statement there was manifestly no arraignment. The indictment was not read to the defendant; a copy of it, with the indorsements, was neither delivered nor tendered to him; nor was he either then, or thereafter, asked whether he would plead guilty or not guilty to the indictment. (Wood's Dig. p. 291, Sec. 272.) If the defendant had at any time, anterior to the trial, plead not guilty, the defects in the arraignment, or rather the omission to arraign, might have been cured, on the ground of waiver. But neither the motion of defendant for a separate trial, nor the introduction of witnesses by him, nor the fact that the case was argued on his behalf to the jury — nor did all of them combined — cure the want of a plea. There was not only no arraignment, but over and beyond that, there was no issue for the jury to try. Not only did the defendant not plead, but inasmuch as the statute opportunity for pleading was never extended to him he was never under any obligation to plead. A verdict, in a criminal case, where there has been neither arraignment nor plea, is a nullity, and no valid judgment can be rendered thereon. (Douglass v. State, 3 Wisconsin, 830; 1 Whar. Sec. 530.) And so is a verdict rendered upon a plea put in by the attorney of a party indicted for a felonious assault with intent to rob. (McQuillen v. State, 8 S. & M. 587.)

Section six hundred one of the Criminal Practice Act does not extend to the case of a verdict where there is a plea but no indictment, nor does it reach the case of a verdict where there is an indictment but no plea. Where either of the two are wanting, it is as fatal as though both were wanting. The presence of both is essential to an issue, and where there is no issue an oath administered to the jury would impose no obligation, nor would false swearing on the part of witnesses amount to perjury. That a trial so conducted "would tend to prejudice the defendant in respect to a substantial right" (Criminal Practice Act, Sec. 601) is too plain for argument.

Order affirmed.

C. W. LANDER, E. C. CLARK, HENRY T. ALLEN,
AND J. M. JOHNSON.

POSSESSION OF REAL ESTATE.—One in the actual possession of real estate may rely on his possession alone until the opposite party shows a better right.

POSSESSORY ACT OF 1852.—If there is a defect in the affidavit taken to claim land under the Possessory Act of the Legislature, passed in 1852, the defect cannot be cured by an affidavit subsequently taken under the same Act to correct the same. Such subsequent affidavit, if it amounts to anything, must be regarded as an original proceeding.

CLAIM UNDER POSSESSORY ACT AS AGAINST PRIOR POSSESSOR.—The survey of land, and making an affidavit and recording the same, in accordance with the Possessory Act of 1852, does not invest the claimant with the right to recover the possession of the land from one who was before them in the actual possession of it.

Opinion of the Court.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

Plaintiff appealed from an order granting a new trial.

The affidavit made by appellant in 1860, under the Possessory Act, described the boundaries of a tract of land commencing at a given point, and running thence west forty chains, thence north forty chains, thence east forty chains, and thence south forty chains to the place of beginning. Appellant was residing on the land, and continued to reside there, and made valuable improvements on the same.

The affidavit made in 1863 changed the boundaries of the land so as to include the twenty-seven acres in controversy. Appellant never lived on this twenty-seven acres.

Appellant claimed that there were certain stakes and monuments marking the boundary of the land he intended to claim by the affidavit of 1860, but that by mistake the lines therein described did not follow the monuments, and that the affidavit of 1863 corrected the mistake.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. S. Chase, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

Ejectment for a parcel of land in the coal district in Contra Costa County. The land in controversy consists of about twenty-seven acres. The plaintiff claims it by virtue of proceedings taken under the Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act prescribing the mode of maintaining and defending possessory actions on public lands in this State," passed in 1852. (Laws 1852, p. 158.) The cause was tried by the Court, a jury having been waived, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs, which was subsequently set aside, and a new trial granted. The Court is asked to reverse the order granting a new trial.

Opinion of the Court.

The defendants being in possession of the premises, demanded at the time this action was commenced, that possession must be presumed to have been rightful until overcome by evidence to the contrary. In Hill v. Draper, 10 Barb. 458, the Court say: "The defendants in possession of disputed premises are presumed to have a valid title thereto, and the plaintiffs, to entitle themselves to recover, must overcome that presumption by proving title out of the defendants and in themselves. They must recover, if at all, on the strength of their own title, and not on the defects in that of their adversary. The possession of real estate is prima facie evidence of the highest estate in the property, to wit: a seizin in fee." It is a well settled doctrine that a party in the actual possession of real estate is in the first instance to be deemed to hold the same by title or in subordination to the title, in whomsoever it may be. Therefore it is not necessary to inquire by what right the defendants have and hold possession of the disputed premises, until it is ascertained whether the plaintiffs have a better right.

On the 13th of August, 1860, Hawxhurst, one of the plaintiffs, made an affidavit with the view of securing a possessory right to a certain piece of land therein described. The parcel of land described consisted of one hundred and sixty acres. This affidavit was filed with the Recorder of the county on the same day, and was recorded. On the 7th of March, 1863, Hawxhurst made another affidavit, having for its object the securing of a possessory right to public land under the Act of 1852, which purports to be in aid of his first affidavit and to enable him to comply with the provisions of the statute, and "to make a claim to the land" therein described, "if the former one did not." This affidavit was filed for record, and recorded in the Recorder's office of the county on the day of its date. The particular piece of land in controversy was not included by the description contained in the affidavit first made by Hawxhurst. The statute provides the mode by which a right under the statute to the possession of public land may be acquired, and if the right sought to be acquired fails because of a substantial defect in the proceeding taken, we do not understand that the party himself can by a proceeding subsequent cure the defect. If the subsequent proceeding amounts to anything it must be as an original proceeding. So that, if Hawxhurst acquired any right to the land described in his second affidavit by the steps which he took in March, 1863, such right had its origin at that time. The plaintiff's counsel admit in argument that, upon the affidavit of March, 1863, the plaintiff's whole case rests. If the plaintiff's reliance is on this affidavit, he must be limited to its date, at least, as the commencement of his right under the statute.

From the evidence in the case it would seem that for some time before March, 1863, the defendants had been in possession of the particular premises in controversy, extracting from the same large quantities of coal, and were prosecuting the work of mining for coal when Hawxhurst made his second affidavit. It does not appear that at the time Hawxhurst was settled upon and occupying the land in controversy, or that he thereafter before this action was commenced, occupied or was settled upon it "for the purpose of cultivating or grazing the same," or for any other purpose. The mere making of an affidavit in conformity with the provisions of the statute, and procuring the same to be duly recorded, and causing the land described to be surveyed by the County Surveyor, would not invest the affiant with the right to recover the possession of the property, as against a person who was there, and before then, in the actual possession of it.

What may be the merits of plaintiff's claim to the possession of the twenty-seven acres in controversy we do not undertake to say, because the question is not in a condition to be fully passed on by this Court; but we are clear that the plaintiffs cannot depend for the right which they claim, on the proceeding taken by Hawxhurst in August, 1860, under the Act of the Legislature already referred to, and also on the proceeding taken by him in March, 1863, under the same Act. Without passing directly upon the particular points which induced the VACATION OF JUDGMENT AFTER ADJOURNMENT OF TERM.—Where a plaintiff fails to appear when a cause is regularly called for trial, and at defendant's request the trial proceeds, and judgment is rendered for defendant, the Court has no power to relieve the plaintiff from the judgment under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act, on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, on a motion made after the adjournment of the term at which the judgment was rendered.

CLERK MAY ENTER JUDGMENT IN VACATION.—If the judgment has been pronounced by the Court, drawn up in writing in the form intended to be entered, signed by the Judge, and filed with the Clerk before the adjournment of the term, it has become the judgment of the Court of the term at which it was rendered, and the Clerk may perform the ministerial act of entering it in the Judgment Book in vacation without further direction.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John Satterlee, for Appellant, argued that the judgment was not perfected at the term when pronounced, because not entered up by the Clerk until after the adjournment, and referred to Practice Act, Secs. 201, 203, 204, 205, 206; New York Code, Secs. 279, 280, 281, 282; Schenectady and Sar. Plank Road Company v. Thatcher, 6 Howard Pr. Rep. 226; Lentilhon v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 3 Sandford's Superior Court Rep. 72. He also contended that section sixty-eight of the Practice Act contained no limitation of the time within which application for relief might be made under its provisions, and that in England and New York, both before and since the code, such motions were allowed under a proper state of facts, without reference to lapse of time, and referred to Tidd's Practice, Inquisition, Inquiry, Chap. 38, Secs. 2, 3; Graham's Practice; Burrill's Practice; 6 Howard U. S. Rep. 39, and cases there cited; Thorpe v. Fowler, 5 Cowen, 446; Church v. Rhodes, 6 Howard's Pr. Rep. 285; 3 John. Ch. 415; 7 Paige, 509; 8 Paige, 176; and 3 Abbott's Pr. Rep. 446.

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Respondent, contended that it was a judgment of the term when pronounced by the Court, notwithstanding the failure of the Clerk to enter it in the Judgment Book and make up the judgment roll until after the adjournment of the term, and referred to 9 Howard's P. R. 86; 2 Sandford, 645; 2 Code Reporter, 125.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

When this cause was called for trial in the Court below, plaintiff's counsel was absent, and defendants' counsel insisted upon proceeding with the case. A trial having been had in the absence of the plaintiff, the Court found the facts and rendered judgment in favor of defendants. The Court soon after, on the same day, adjourned for the term. Within a few days, but not till after the adjournment of the term, the plaintiff's counsel filed affidavits showing, among other things, that the plaintiff was at the time of the trial absent from the State, and that her counsel, who had the entire charge of the case, was absent from Court in consequence of severe illness, by which he was confined to his bed, and utterly incapable of doing any business. Upon these affidavits he moved the Court to vacate the judgment, on the ground that it was obtained through accident, surprise and excusable neglect on her part.

The Court denied the motion on the ground that it had lost jurisdiction to grant the relief asked, in consequence of the adjournment of the term; and plaintiff appealed from the judgment and order.

Opinion of the Court.

Appellant insists that the Court has the jurisdiction to grant the relief, notwithstanding the adjournment of the term, under the provisions of section sixty-eight of the Practice Act authorizing the Court to relieve a party from a judgment, etc., "taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." And if the question were new much might be said in favor of this position. But unfortunately for the argument the decisions have been the other way almost from the organization of the State Government (beginning with Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 582,) down to the present time. The cases of Bidleman v. Kewen, 2 Cal. 248, and People v. Lafarge, 3 Cal. 133, supposed by appellant's counsel to support his view, and to be in conflict with the other cases are shown in Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 22, not to have involved the question, and this leaves the line of decisions unbroken. The question as to the power of Courts over their judgments after the adjournment of the term, has arisen in this State many times, and in various forms. In Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 406, as appears from an examination of the record, the question was presented in precisely the same form as in this case. A judgment had been rendered against defendant, Hart, a minor, through a mistake of his guardian ad litem. Upon a satisfactory showing made at the next term upon proceedings promptly taken after the discovery that judgment had been entered, the District Court vacated the judgment. On appeal, the order was reversed, the decision being put expressly on the ground that the District Court loses all power over its judgments after the adjournment of the term, unless its jurisdiction is saved by some motion or proceeding pending at the time. So also, in Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521, the question was presented in a similar manner. The suit had been commenced and summons served, after which the plaintiff and defendant therein had a settlement of all matters in difference, including the suit pending, the plaintiff agreeing to dismiss the suit. The defendant paid to plaintiff the sum of money agreed upon and took from him a written discharge, under seal, for all sums due, and all matters in dispute, whether in suit or otherwise. The defendant, relying upon this settlement and agreement, and supposing that the suit would in good faith be dismissed, paid no further attention to it. Nevertheless, the plaintiff, when the time for answering expired, entered judgment by default for a large amount, and as soon as the term was adjourned issued execution. The defendant first learned that judgment had been taken when the officer appeared to levy on his property. On application of defendant, promptly made, the Court vacated the judgment. One would suppose that this cause presented a pretty strong case of surprise or excusable neglect on the part of defendant. On appeal, the order vacating the judgment was reversed, the Court expressly putting its decision upon the ground that the District Court had no power to vacate its judgment upon proceedings instituted after the adjournment of the term at which the judgment was recovered. In Lattimer v. Ryan, 20 Cal. 632, the ground upon which the District Court set aside the judgment must also have been that it was taken through the inadvertence or excusable neglect of the defendant. The order was reversed on appeal. Mr. Justice Norton, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "According to the repeated decisions of this Court, jurisdiction to set aside the first judgment had been lost to the District Court upon the adjournment of the term at which it was rendered." (See, also, Morrison v. Dapman, 3 Cal. 255; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 280; Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 21; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 172; Swain v. Naglee, 19 Cal. 127; Bell v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 708; Lewis v. Rigney, 21 Cal. 273; De Castro v. Richardson, 25 Cal. 51.)

Opinion of the Court.

In Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 456, the motion to vacate was made before the adjournment of the term.

The result of the numerous decisions, therefore, is, that the party must take the initiatory steps to obtain the relief authorized by section sixty-eight of the Practice Act before the expiration of the term at which final judgment is rendered, in all cases except those in which the defendant has not been personally served with process; in which cases the Court may, on such terms as may be just, allow a defendant to answer to the merits at any time within six months after the rendition of the judgment. If any point can be considered as settled by judicial decision, it would seem that the question now made ought to be regarded as no longer open to doubt in this State. If erroneously settled, the remedy must now be sought in legislative action. The inconvenience of the rule is to some extent, though, perhaps, not entirely obviated by the third clause of section one hundred and ninety-three, which authorizes a new trial on the ground of "accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." This ground would probably ordinarily cover most of the cases of a judgment recovered through "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect," mentioned in section sixty-eight. And when the case is tried by the Court—as in this instance—the party has ten days after the judgment is brought to his attention by "receiving written notice of the rendering of the decision by the Judge," within which to give notice of his intention to move for a new trial on affidavits setting forth the accident or surprise.

The only remaining point is, that there was no judgment in fact entered until after the application to vacate was made, and for this reason the case is not within the principle established by the decisions. It appears from the record "that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed by the Judge and filed on the 24th day of September, 1864, and that formal judgment was signed by the Judge on said day, and that the same was filed with and by the Clerk "of the Court before the final adjournment, but that the Clerk did not enter the judgment in the judgment book or make up the judgment roll till after the adjournment, and till action to vacate the judgment had been taken. The proceedings, it is true, might not have been so far perfected as to authorize the issuing of execution, or to make the judgment a lien upon the lands; but the rights of the parties were fully ascertained and determined, the precise terms of the judgment settled, and the judgment not only finally pronounced from the Bench but actually formally drawn up as it was intended to be entered, signed by the Judge and filed by the Clerk in the case. It had become the final determination of the Court. Nothing remained to be done but the mere ministerial duty to be performed by the Clerk, of copying it into the Judgment Book; and this ministerial act might have been performed by him without further direction in vacation, after the adjournment of the term. Such seems to be the effect of the decisions in McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 467, and Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 52, with reference to the time of the performance of the ministerial duty of the Clerk. But whether copied into the Judgment Book during the term or in vacation it was a judgment of the term at which it was rendered. If the Clerk should neglect to enter the judgment rendered, the Court could undoubtedly direct him to do it. The record shows what the judgment was, and the Court could not modify or vacate it.

The judgment and order appealed from must therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NICHOLA FERREA v. MARK KNIPE.

RIGHTS OF RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS.—The riparian proprietor to whom water first comes has not the right to erect dams across the stream and spread out the water, so that it is lost by absorption and evaporation to an extent that prevents it from flowing to another riparian proprietor as it would have done but for the dams.

REASONABLE USE OF WATER.—It is not a reasonable use of water for a riparian proprietor, who desires to use the same for watering cattle and for domestic purposes, to erect dams across the stream, by which the water is spread out and lost by evaporation and absorption so as to injure another riparian proprietor below.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

Statement of Facts.

The plaintiff commenced his action on the 18th day of June, 1864, alleging that for eight years then immediately preceding he had been in the possession of a parcel of land consisting of twenty-five acres, through which runs the Sulphur Spring Creek in Solano County, which he had used during that time as a garden for raising vegetables for market. That in May, 1856, he constructed a dam upon his land across the creek, and since then had appropriated without hindrance to his own exclusive use for irrigating his garden, all the waters of the stream; and he claimed that by reason of his long continued exclusive use of the water he had acquired a right by prescription to the use thereof to the extent and for the purpose of its original appropriation, and then had the right to the flow of the entire water of the creek without obstruction, into the reservoir created by his dam, for the benefit of his land, as a right and privilege appurtenant thereto. He then claims that in 1863 the defendant erected a dam across the stream above the plaintiff's dam by which a part of the water was prevented from running down the course of the creek to the plaintiff's land. That in April, 1864, the defendant constructed other dams across the same stream, and that, by reason of the obstruction and diversion of the water by these dams the plaintiff was deprived of his accustomed use of it, to the great injury of his business and to his great damage, and he then alleges the insolvency of the defendant, and also that if the wrongs of which he complains are continued his business and trade will be wholly ruined.

The object of the action was, first, to recover damages for the injury already sustained; second, to abate the defendant's dams; and third, to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing, diminishing, or diverting the waters of the creek from flowing to the plaintiff's dam.

The defendant answered the complaint. The issue joined was referred to a Court Commissioner, with directions "to report the facts and law." Testimony was taken in the case, and the referee found and reported the facts and his conclusions of law in favor of the defendant. This report, as to the facts, was set aside by the Court on the plaintiff's motion, and a finding of facts, prepared in part by the plaintiff's counsel, and in part by the defendant's counsel, was substituted, which, with the conclusions of law drawn by the referee, was adopted by the Court, and judgment was thereupon entered in the defendant's favor. The plaintiff moved for a new trial. The motion was denied. From this decision and the judgment the plaintiff appealed.

Wm. S. Wells, for Appellant.

The cases in this State have fully settled and affirmed the doctrine of appropriation of water by the erection of a dam and its subsequent use, as establishing a prior right. (Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476; Yankee Jim Water Company v. Crary 25 Cal. 504.)

It is certainly immaterial what was the purpose or object with which defendant invaded our right. It is no answer to say, as he does really say, that though he injured us in May, yet when the suit was tried no water was running. It must be obvious from the facts in the complaint the injury for an entire year might be done within the term of a few weeks. Our right was to have the water flow, if flow it would, unobstructed at any and all times. Diversion or obstruction, if wilful, imports damage, and against actual, threatened, or possible injury this action lies. (Angell on Watercourses, Section 135, and cases cited; same, Sections 449, 450.)

M. A. Wheaton, for Respondent.

Merely using the water of a stream for irrigation by a riparian proprietor is but the exercise of a natural right, and the plaintiff in so doing could not affect the natural rights of other riparian proprietors either above or below him. (Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 590.)

Washburn on Easements and Servitudes, 235; ibid, 271. 216, 217, 250, 251, 252, and 253, the last referring to the case of Thurber v. Martin, 2 Gray, 394, where it was held that sixty years use of a stream for mill purposes did not affect the natural right of an upper riparian proprietor to erect another mill. In this case Ferrea did not use the water adversely to any one, because he did not infringe upon the rights of any one. His right to so use the water came, not by prior occupancy, but as an incident to his land through which the stream run. The defendant, as an upper riparian proprietor, had a right to stop and use the whole of the stream, if necessary, for watering his stock (Washburn on Easements, 223, 224.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

In 1863, as appears by the finding, the defendant erected a dam across the creek above the plaintiff's dam, by which the natural flow of the stream was obstructed. In April, 1864, he erected two other dams across the same creek above the plaintiff's dam, by means of which several dams the water of the stream was entirely obstructed and prevented from flowing to the dam of the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff was wholly deprived of the waters of the stream, and his vegetables and fruit growing at the time of the erection and continuance of these dams were injured to his damage in the sum of two hundred dollars. It further appears by the finding that the object of the defendant in erecting his dams was only to detain sufficient water for his stock, and that he used the same for no other purpose, and that when the action was brought there was not water enough in the creek to flow to the plaintiff's reservoir if no dams had been erected above it.

The evidence in the case shows that the last named year was one of extreme drought, and that at the time this action was commenced the water of the creek was so reduced in quantity at the place where the defendant had erected his dams (which were more than a mile from the plaintiff's land) as to be insufficient to flow over such dams. Every proprietor of lands through or adjoining which a watercourse passes has a right to a reasonable use of the water; but he has no right to so appropriate it as to unnecessarily diminish the quantity in its natural flow. The use of the water of a stream for domestic purposes and for watering cattle necessarily diminishes the volume of the stream. This is unavoidable, and though by reason of such diminution a proprietor on the stream below fails to receive a supply commensurate with his wants, he is without remedy, because his right subsists subject to the rightful use of the water by his neighbor on the stream above him. But while admitting that a riparian owner to whom the water first comes in its flow, has the right to use it for domestic purposes, and for watering his cattle, it is proper to observe that he has not the right to so obstruct the stream as to prevent the running of water substantially as in a state of nature it was accustomed to run. The maxim of the law which he is bound to respect while availing himself of his right is, sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas. (3 Kent, 440; Angell on Watercourses, Section 195; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 440.)

The Court found that by reason of the dams erected by the defendant "the flow of the stream was wholly obstructed, and the waters detained were prevented from flowing to the dam of the plaintiff, and that he was thereby deprived of the use of the same, prior to the commencement of this suit," and "that the plaintiff has sustained damages, by reason of said acts of defendant, in the sum of two hundred dollars." The Court also found that the defendant was insolvent and unable to respond to any judgment that might be recovered against him. The Court further found that the defendant erected the dams "only to gather sufficient water for watering his stock, and used it for no other purpose," and "that at the time his suit was commenced there was not water enough to flow to the plaintiff's pond, had no dams been built."

The fact that the water was so reduced in quantity at the time the action was commenced as to be insufficient to flow to the plaintiff's premises, had the same been unobstructed, was not a circumstance decisive of the case. If before then the creek was wholly obstructed by the defendant, and the water of the stream was prevented by him from flowing to the plaintiff's land, by reason whereof he was deprived of the use of the water, and thus suffered damages, he had just cause of complaint, and was entitled to relief and to the remedy which he sought to prevent the continuance of the injury. Though the defendant had the right to use the stream for watering his cattle and for household purposes, he had not the right under the circumstances to dam up the creek and spread out the water over a large surface, by which it would become lost by absorption and evaporation to an extent to prevent the stream from flowing to the plaintiff's premises, as it would have done had it not been for the defendant's dams. It cannot be held in this case that the obstruction and diversion of the water of the creek was necessary to the proper and beneficial use of the stream by the defendant, and that as a consequence the injury sustained by the plaintiff was damnum absque injuria. The facts found by the Court preclude such a conclusion. From the facts found the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, on the ground that he had the right to the water of the creek in the natural flow, subject only to the use thereof by the defendant in a reasonable manner, without unnecessary obstruction or diminution. (Angell on Watercourses, Chapter 4, and the authorities therein cited.)

The judgment must be and is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the Court below with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Neither Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON nor Mr. Justice SAWYER expressed an opinion.

J. S. EMERY v. THE SAN FRANCISCO GAS COMPANY.

PROPERTY SUBJECT TO RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN.—The property referred to in that clause of the Constitution which declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, is other kinds of property than money, and the compensation referred to is a compensation to be made in money.

Statement of Facts.

ASSESSMENT ON LOTS TO GRADE STREET, A TAX.—An assessment upon the different lots fronting on a street in a city in proportion to the number of feet frontage of each, for the purpose of raising money to pay the expenses of grading the street, is an exercise of the sovereign right of taxation, and not of the power to appropriate private property to public use under the right of eminent domain.

MEANING OF TAXATION.—The words "taxation" and "taxed," in section thirteen of Article XI of the Constitution, relates to such general taxes upon all property as are levied to defray the ordinary expenses of the State, county, town, and municipal governments, and not to assessments levied on the lots fronting on a street in a city to pay the expenses of their improvements.

ASSESSMENTS ON LOTS FOR IMPROVING STREETS.—The Constitution does not prohibit the Legislature, or municipal authorities acting under authority of law, from imposing assessments upon lots in a city fronting on a street to defray the expenses of improvements of the street in the nature of grading and planking.

APPORTIONMENT OF SUCH ASSESSMENTS.—It rests in the discretion of the Legislature to say upon what principle the assessment on lots fronting on a street, to pay for improvements on the street, shall be apportioned among the lots.

IMPROVING STREETS IN SAN FRANCISCO.—A resolution of the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco, declaring an intention to improve a street, may include a declaration of intention to both grade and macadamise. Such resolution sufficiently describes the work to be done if it declares that the street will be graded and macadamized from one designated point to another.

CONTRACT TO GRADE A STREET IN SAN FRANCISCO.—A contract to macadamise a street in San Francisco, made with the Superintendent of Streets, binds the party to use such materials as are required by the Superintendent if it provides that the work shall be performed according to specifications annexed and such specifications made by the Superintendent name the material to be used.

VARIANCE BETWEEN RESOLUTION AND CONTRACT.—A resolution declaring an intention to improve a street in San Francisco is not vitiated because it states an intention to grade and macadamise from Mission to Howard street, while the contract executed under the resolution calls for grading and macadamising that portion of the street "except where done."

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The respondent, Emery, entered into a contract with the Superintendent of Streets in San Francisco on the 25th day of September, 1862, to grade and macadamize Fremont street from Howard to Mission. The contract was completed January 17th, 1863. The appellant was the owner of a lot fronting on Fremont street, between Mission and Howard. This action was brought to recover the amount assessed on appellant's lot for the work. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Argument for Appellant.

Wm. M. Pierson, for appellant, argued that the Board of Supervisors had no power under the statute of 1862 to declare their intention to grade and also to macadamize a street in the same notice or resolution; and that the resolution did not describe the work to be done, as required by statute. He contended that the resolution of intention was the primary step in the whole proceeding; the one on which all the subsequent proceedings rested. It was jurisdictional in its nature, declared so by the fourth section of the statute, and if all the requirements of the law were not strictly complied with, it was a vain act, endowing the subsequent proceedings with no vitality, and creating no obligation on the part of the property owner.

He referred to the third section of the Act, and argued that the Board might order either the grading or the macadamizing of a street, but could not order the two conjunctively, and referred to Blackwell on Tax Titles, 64. He also insisted that the contract was void, because it varied from the resolution declaratory of intention to do the work and order to do it, as the resolution and order gave notice and required Fremont street to be graded and macadamized from Mission to Howard, while the contract was for grading and macadamizing except where done.

H. H. Haight, also for appellant, argued that the facts stated in the complaint were not sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reason that the Act of 1862, under which the proceedings were taken, was unconstitutional and void, and referred to Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613. He contended that as the Act could not be sustained as an exercise of the taxing power, and as it contained no provision for compensation under the exercise of the right of eminent domain, it must fall.

D. P. & A. Barstow, for respondent, confined their argument to the technical objections to the proceedings made by Mr. Pierson.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action brought in pursuance of the Act of 1862, relating to the City of San Francisco, to recover a sum of money assessed upon property fronting on a certain street in that city, in proportion to its frontage, to pay the expenses of grading said street. It presents some of the much vexed questions arising under statutes relating to this class of burden imposed upon property holders in towns and cities. As usual in such cases, it is claimed, firstly, that the law under which the assessment is made is unconstitutional; secondly, if constitutional, that there are such irregularities in the proceedings as to vitiate the assessment. The recent case of Creighton v. Manson, decided by this Court (27 Cal. 614) is relied on by appellant as settling the principles that must govern this case. In that case, although all the Justices concurred in the judgment, there was not an entire concurrence in all the views expressed in the opinion, or in the grounds upon which the decision rested. Constitutional questions were discussed in the case, but the only points decided were—firstly, that the defendant was not personally liable, for the reason that no personal liability was imposed by the Act of 1859; and secondly, that there was no lien on the defendant's lot, for the reason that the work had never been ordered by the Board of Supervisors in the mode prescribed by law. It is but just to the Court to say, that neither in that case, nor in this, nor in either of the other cases now before us involving the same questions, have we received any aid from counsel, whose interest it was to support the constitutionality of the law, and not only was there no argument upon this important point on that side, but there was no reference to more than one or two decisions bearing upon it. Since the decision of Creighton v. Manson, notwithstanding the pressure of the business of the Court, we have assumed the duties of counsel, as well as of the Court, and explored the numerous volumes of reports of decisions in our sister States for authorities upon the point, and as the result of these labors have found many recent well considered cases, in which the provisions of the several State Constitutions bearing upon the subject have been analyzed with great severity, and the questions arising discussed and illustrated with marked ability. After a more thorough investigation of the question, and a full consideration of the recent cases, we are free to confess that our own views have been somewhat modified. For these reasons, among others, we shall proceed to the discussion of the subject as if the questions were new in this State, without further reference to Creighton v. Manson.

The improvement of a public street in a city, to be thereafter used and controlled by the public, is undoubtedly a public work. But it is equally clear, as a general proposition, that the improvement of a street is more beneficial to the local public, or the immediate district in which it is located, than to the whole city, as the improvement of the streets of a city is more beneficial to the city in which they are located than to the State at large. But this fact renders the work no less one of a public character. The work of improving streets being one of a public character, it is insisted by appellant, that the power of the Legislature to pass a law imposing the burden of paying the expenses of the improvement upon the property of the citizen, if it exists at all, must be deduced from one of two sources.

Firstly—The right of eminent domain under which private property may be taken for public use; or,

Secondly—The sovereign right of taxation. And in this he is undoubtedly correct. It is further insisted, that if the power is referable to the former—the right of eminent domain—the law in question directing the assessment to be made according to frontage—by the front foot—is repugnant to section eight of Article I of the Constitution, which contains the provision, “nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.” If referable to the latter—the sovereign right of taxation—that the assessment is unequal, and not levied in proportion to the value of the property, and that the law, for this reason, is repugnant to the provisions of section thirteen, Article XI of the Constitution, which says, that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained by law."

It is plain that a determination, at the threshold of the discussion, of the question, as to which of these sources of sovereign power, the authority of the Legislature over the subject must be referred, is essential to an intelligent consideration of the propositions submitted. Were it not for the fact, that, in some of the earlier cases, there are some loose expressions and dicta which give countenance to the opposite opinion, it would seem to be clear, that assessments for improvements, upon whatever principle distributed, are not taking private property for public use, within the meaning of these terms as used in the Constitution. In these cases money, and money only is taken. In a certain sense money is property. But it might just as well be said, that money taken by general taxation for the ordinary purposes of State revenue is property within the meaning of the Constitution, and cannot be taken without compensation. The theory of all taxation is, doubtless, in a general sense, that there is compensation for the taxes taken in the protection and security to life, liberty and property afforded by the Government supported by the money raised. But this, manifestly, is not the compensation to be made for property taken for public use, within the meaning of the terms as used in the section of the Constitution cited. The property referred to in the Constitution for which special compensation must be made, is something other than money, as where land is taken to be used as a street, and the like, and the compensation referred to, doubtless, means a compensation in money, the only medium by which special compensation can be accurately measured and adjusted; and to make such compensation in the case of assessments to raise money for the purpose of paying for grading streets, would be to take the money from the property holder with one hand and return it with the other; and this would leave nothing for the purposes required.

The difference in the operation of these two sovereign powers is stated with great clearness and precision in the very able and satisfactory opinion of Mr. Justice Ruggles, in The People v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 Comst. 420. He says (pp. 423, 424:) "I perceive no great difficulty in pointing out the distinction between these two powers. Taxation exacts money or services from individuals as, and for, their respective shares of contribution to any public burden. Private property taken for public use by right of eminent domain is taken not as the owner's share of contribution to a public burden, but as so much beyond his share. Special compensation is therefore to be made in the latter case, because the Government is a debtor for the property so taken; but not in the former, because the payment of taxes is a duty and creates no obligation to repay otherwise than in the proper application of the tax. Taxation operates upon a community or upon a class of persons in a community and by some rule of apportionment. The exercise of the right of eminent domain operates upon an individual, and without reference to the amount or value exacted from any other individual or class of individuals. Keeping these distinctions in mind, it will never be difficult to determine which of the two powers is exerted in any given case."

"It may be proper here, although not strictly necessary, to express the opinion that money cannot be exacted by the Government by the right of eminent domain, excepting, perhaps, for the direct use of the State at large, and when the State at large is to make the compensation. The exigencies of a State Government can seldom require the taking of money by virtue of this power, even in time of war, and never in time of peace. The framers of the Constitution could not have intended to delegate to municipal corporations the right of taking money under this power, because it is entirely unnecessary. Money can always be had by taxation; lands cannot; and therefore lands may be taken by right of eminent domain, but money may not. The seventh section of Article I of the Constitution confirms this construction of the power. It directs the compensation for private property so taken to be ascertained by a jury or by commissioners. This is an appropriate mode when lands or goods are taken, because their value is uncertain; but not when money is taken, because its value is already fixed. The validity of the assessment in question, therefore, cannot be maintained as an exercise of the power of eminent domain; and it cannot be maintained at all unless it be a legitimate mode of taxation."

Whatever uncertainty there may have been found in the prior decisions as to the true source of the power of the Legislature to impose this class of burdens upon the citizen, there has been no doubt upon that point expressed since the promulgation of the decision in People v. Mayor of Brooklyn. In every decision we have met within our researches rendered since that time, the opinion in that case has been recognized as a correct exposition of the law upon this point. (Brewster v. City of Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 118; Scoville v. City of Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. R. 135; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. R. 245; N. I. R. R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. R. 162; Malony v. City of Marietta, 11 Ohio St. R. 638; Reeves v. Treasurer of Wood County, 8 Ohio St. R. 335; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 256; Garrett v. City of St. Louis, 25 Mo. 508; Newby v. Platte County, Ib. 259; Williams v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 222; Williams v. Mayor of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Municipality No. 2 v. White, 9 Lou. Ann. 452; Mayor of Baltimore v. Green Mount Cemetery Co. 7 Md. 536; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 206; State v. City of Newark, 3 Dutcher, 191, 193.) This point was so ruled by the late Supreme Court in Burnett v. Mayor of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 82, and Hart v. Gaven, Ib. 477. And were it not for the fact that this question has been much discussed, and that it is continually raised and pressed upon our notice, whenever there is a slight variation of circumstances or a change in the principle of apportionment, we should not have thought it necessary to do more than refer to the last two cases as settling the question in this State. Some confusion of ideas may formerly have arisen from a supposition that an apportionment according to benefits involved the principle of specific compensation for property taken, and still more from not separating and keeping distinctly in view the operation of the two powers in that class of cases involving both; as, where land had been taken for a new street, and at the same time an assessment made upon the owners of the property in the district embracing the new street, including the owner of the land taken, to pay for the land thus appropriated. There are such cases, and in these instances both powers may be called into action. Compensation must be made for the land appropriated under the power to take private property for public use, and a sum must also be levied under the right of taxation to make the compensation. The owner of the land in such cases would be liable to pay his share of such tax, and thus the amount ultimately received would only be the balance after deducting the amount of the assessment from the amount of compensation. But, if these distinctions are kept in view, it will be found in all cases of assessments for improvements, whether the sum to be raised is apportioned according to benefits, according to value, upon the front foot, square foot, square acre, or where each party is required to pay for the improvement in front of his own land, the assessment must be referred to the taxing power, and these different modes are only different modes of making the apportionment and not the exercise of different sovereign powers. In the language of Mr. Justice Ruggles, "They all operate upon a community, or upon a class of persons in a community and by some rule of apportionment," and not "upon an individual, without reference to the amount or value exacted from any other individual or class of individuals." And they exact—in theory at least—money or services from individuals, as and for their respective shares of contribution to the local public burden, and not as so much beyond their share; and these various modes of apportionment are only the means by which the law endeavors to ascertain that share.

The assessment in this case was made upon the front foot, and, as we have seen, was an attempt to exercise the sovereign right of taxation, and not to appropriate private property to public use under the right of eminent domain.

Opinion of the Court.

In the expressive language of Mr. Justice Ruggles, which we again adopt: "If there be any sound objection to the assessment as a tax, it must be an objection which applies to the principle on which the tax is apportioned; because the object for which the money was to be raised is, without dispute, one for which taxation by a different rule of apportionment would have been lawful. It remains to be seen whether anything can be found in the Constitution; in legal adjudication; in the practice of the Government, or in the nature of things, by which taxation upon this principle of apportionment can be judicially annulled. For the purpose of ascertaining what has been deemed on high authority, the nature and extent of the power of taxation vested in the Legislatures of the State Governments, I refer to the opinion of the late Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of The Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Peters, 514, 561, 563.

"The power of legislation, and consequently of taxation, operates on all the persons and property belonging to the body politic. This is an original principle, which has its foundation in society itself. It is granted by all for the benefit of all. It resides in the Government as part of itself, and need not be reserved where property of any description or the right to use it in any manner is granted to individuals or corporate bodies. However absolute the right of an individual may be, it is still in the nature of that right that it must bear a portion of the public burdens; and that portion must be determined by the Legislature. This vital power may be abused, but the interest, wisdom and justice of the representative body, and its relations with its constituents, furnish the only security against unjust and excessive taxation, as well as against unwise legislation.' And again, in McCullock v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428, the following observations are found, coming from the same high authority: 'It is admitted that the power of taxing the people and their property is essential to the very existence of government, and may be legitimately exercised on the object to which it is applicable, to the utmost extent to which the Government may choose to carry it. The only security against the abuse of this power is found in the structure of the Government itself. In imposing a tax the Government acts upon its constituents. This is, in general, a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation. The people of a State therefore give to their Government a right of taxing themselves and their property; and as the exigencies of the Government cannot be limited, they prescribe no limits to the exercise of this right, resting confidently on the interest of the Legislature and the influence of the constituents over their representatives to guard them against its abuse.' And again, at page 430, he speaks of it as 'unfit for the judicial department to inquire what degree of taxation is the legitimate use, and what degree may amount to the abuse of the power.'"

"Assuming this, as we safely may, to be sound doctrine, it must be conceded that the power of taxation, and of apportioning taxation, or of assigning to each individual his share of the burden, is vested exclusively in the Legislature, unless this power is limited or restrained by some constitutional provision. The power of taxing and the power of apportioning taxation are identical and inseparable. Taxes cannot be laid without apportionment; and the power of apportionment is therefore unlimited, unless it be restrained as a part of the power of taxation."

This doctrine is sustained by a uniform line of decisions in our own and our sister States. (See People ex rel. Attorney-General v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 209, and cases cited.)

Is the principle upon which this assessment is made repugnant to the provisions of section thirteen of Article XI? If not, then, there is no provision that limits the power of the Legislature with respect to the principle upon which the apportionment of such burdens shall be made. The section reads:

"Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; but Assessors and Collectors of town, county and State taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county or town in which the property taxed for State, county or town purposes is situated."

If the term taxation is here used in a sense co-extensive with the sovereign power under which the right is exercised, or, if it is to be considered abstractly, without reference to the long and well established meaning of the words taxes and assessments, as used in the statutes and ordinary language of the several States, to indicate different classes of public burdens—the one imposed for general revenue for the purposes of the ordinary expenses of the State, county and town government, and the other to raise a special fund to defray the expenses of public improvements mainly locally beneficial—then, the term is broad enough to embrace assessments of the kind in question. But terms often, by general use, acquire, when employed in certain relations, a more limited signification. And this is true with reference to the signification in which words are used in statutes and Constitutions, as well as in common parlance. The use of the terms taxes, taxation and assessments affords, perhaps, as striking illustrations of this principle as any to be found in the language. The term taxation, both in common parlance and in the laws of the several States, has been ordinarily used, not to express the idea of the sovereign power which is exercised, but the exercise of that power for a particular purpose, viz: to raise a revenue for the general and ordinary expenses of the government, whether it be the State, county, town or city government. But there is another class of expenses, also of a public nature, necessary to be provided for, peculiar to the local governments of counties, cities, towns and even smaller subdivisions, such as opening, grading, improving in various ways, and repairing highways and streets, and constructing sewers in cities, and canals and ditches for the purpose of drainage in the country. They are generally of peculiar local benefit. These burdens have always, in every State, from its first settlement, been charged upon the localities benefited, and have been apportioned upon various principles; but whatever principle of apportionment has been adopted they have been known, both in the legislation and ordinary speech of the country, by the name of assessments. Assessments have also, very generally, if not always, been apportioned upon principles different from those adopted in taxation, in the ordinary sense of that term; and any one can see, upon a moment's reflection, that the apportionment, to bear equally, and do substantial justice to all parties, must be made upon a different principle from that adopted in taxation, so called. This will be manifest upon considering the following passage from the opinion of Mr. Justice Ruggles, in the case before cited:

"A property tax (we will add, according to value) for the general purposes of the government, either of the State at large or of a county, city or other district, is regarded as a just and equitable tax. The reason is obvious. It apportions the burdens according to the benefit more nearly than any other inflexible rule of general taxation. A rich man derives more benefit from taxation in the protection and improvement of his property than a poor man, and ought, therefore, to pay more. But the amount of each man's benefit in general taxation cannot be ascertained and estimated with any degree of certainty, and for that reason a property tax is adopted instead of an estimate of benefits. In local taxation, however, for special purposes, the local benefits may in many cases be seen, traced and estimated to a reasonable certainty. At least, this has been supposed and assumed to be true by the Legislature, whose duty it is to prescribe the rules on which taxation is to be apportioned, and whose determination of this matter, being within the scope of its lawful power, is conclusive."

The different significations of the terms taxes and assessments, before referred to, will be found, upon examination, to be well established in the legal language of the several States, and to run through the statutes, and to have been recognized and enforced by the various judicial tribunals of the country; and, as we shall see, have found their way into the Constitutions of many of the States, our own among the number. Thus, In the matter of Mayor of New York for improving Nassau street, a church which had been assessed for the improvement, claimed exemption under the statute, which provided that "no real estate belonging to any church shall be taxed by any law of this State." The Court held that the provisions referred to general or public taxes to be levied and collected for the benefit of the town, county or State at large, and that a street assessment was not such a tax as the Act contemplated. (11 John. 77; 4 Comst. 433.) In The State v. City of Newark, 3 Dutcher, 187, the city had levied an assessment to a large amount for improving Market street, upon the property of the New Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company. The railroad company claimed exemption under their charter, which provides that the company "shall pay a tax of one half of one per cent upon their capital stock, and that no other or further tax or impositions shall be levied, or imposed upon the company." This assessment was held not to be a tax within the meaning of this provision of the charter. Yet it is expressly held that "the assessment in this case is a clear exercise of the taxing power. It is made for a public purpose, and confers no special benefits upon the property of the company." (Page 191.) There are other decisions in the same State to the effect that such assessments are not taxes within the meaning of that term as used in the various statutes. So also in The Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. The Proprietors of Green Mount Cemetery, 7 Maryland, 517, the charter of the company provided that the land appropriated as a cemetery should "not be liable to any tax or public imposition whatever." An assessment was made for improving the street in front of the premises of the company, and the payment was resisted on the ground of exemption under this provision of the law. The Court, "on the fullest consideration," hold the assessment valid, and say: "We think the Legislature intended nothing more than to exempt the property of the proprietors from all taxes or impositions levied or imposed for the purpose of revenue, and not to relieve it from such charges as are inseparably incident to its location in regard to other property." (Page 533.) And there are other decisions in the State to the same effect. Yet, in the same case, the Court also say: "That the imposition of a paving tax is an exercise of the taxing power, and not of the right of eminent domain, we entertain no doubt, nor did we understand the counsel for the appellant to suggest any." So also in Missouri, church property was by law exempt from taxation, yet an assessment upon a church for the construction of a sewer was held not to be within the exemption. (Lockwood v. City of St. Louis, 24 Mo. 21.) So in Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 18 Pa. St. R., where churches were by statute exempt from "all county, borough and city taxes," it was held that the church was not exempt from an assessment levied to defray the expense of laying pipe in the street upon which the church lot fronted for the introduction of pure water. The Court, after stating the specific difference between the two classes of burdens, and the different established significations of the terms taxes, and assessments, say: "It is evident from the face of all the Acts of Assembly in relation to this incorporated district, that the Legislature had in view the difference between taxes, properly so denominated, and charges or assessments for improvement of particular streets as the population required such improvements." (Page 107.) So also in Canal Trustees v. City of Chicago, 12 Ill. 405, the same principle was sustained. An assessment was made upon certain lands belonging to the Illinois and Michigan Canal, for enlarging and improving an alley, bounded in part by the lands. The thirteenth section of the Act by which the lands were granted to the Trustees provides, that "the lands and lots shall be exempt from taxation of every description, by and under the laws of this State, until after the same shall have been sold and conveyed by the said Trustees, as aforesaid." The Court held the assessment not to be taxation within the meaning of this provision. Mr. Chief Justice Treat said: "In our opinion, the exemption must be held to apply to taxes levied for State, county and municipal purposes." (Page 406.) These are some of the numerous cases, that go to establish the fact, that, when not used for the purpose of designating the source or extent of the power itself, but only with reference to its exercise, the terms taxation and assessments, though both are an exercise of the same sovereign power have, in the legislative, judicial and general language of the country, acquired peculiar and more limited significations expressing different specific ideas. Indeed, taxation itself, in its ordinary sense, is, perhaps, not the exercise of a distinct, independent sovereign power, but only one form of exercising the right of eminent domain. Yet the terms, the right of taxation, and the right of eminent domain are ordinarily used to express different specific ideas, although both are, doubtless, grounded in the same ultimate sovereign power.

We will now consider the signification of these terms as used in the various State Constitutions, including our own, and in doing so, it must be borne in mind that these terms, also, as used in the several Constitutions, have reference to the exercise of the power. Constitutions are only laws of superior and paramount authority. And when the statesmen who frame, and the people who adopt them, employ terms in relation to any particular subject, which have, in that relation, in the legislative, judicial and general language of the country, acquired an established, well known and more limited signification than the word in other relations might indicate, it must be presumed that they intend to use those terms in such established, more limited sense, unless it clearly appears to the contrary by the context. And in Section 13, of Article XI we think the words "taxation" and "taxed" were used in the same sense as in the various statutes of the States before referred to, and others of a similar character, to signify such general taxation upon all property as is in use in all the States to raise a general revenue for the purposes of defraying the ordinary expenses of State, county and municipal governments. In the language of Mr. Justice Bennett, in People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 252: "Our Constitution was framed by intelligent and practical men, who were well acquainted with the organization and operation of the system of State Governments in all portions of the Union; and when they declared that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State, they must have referred to such general taxation as in the other States is commonly imposed alike upon all property, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Government of the State, or of some local municipal corporation." This clause in the Constitution was construed in the same way—all the Justices concurring—in Burnett v. Mayor, etc., of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 83. Mr. Justice Field said: "The thirteenth section of Article XI of the Constitution does not cover the case. That section provides for equality and uniformity of taxation upon property, but applies, in our judgment, only to that charge or imposition upon property which it is necessary to levy to raise funds to defray the expenses of the Government of the State, or of some county or town. We do not think it has any reference to special assessments for local improvements, by which individual parties are chiefly benefited in the increased value of the property, and in which the public is only to a limited extent interested. For the expense of such improvements, it is competent for the Legislature to provide, either by general taxation upon the property of all the inhabitants of the county or town in which they are made, or upon the property adjacent thereto and specially benefited thereby." The assessment in that case was made upon the adjacent property, according to value, and was, therefore, in accordance with the second clause of the section of the Constitution under consideration; whereas in the present case it is upon the front foot. In this respect the two cases differ. But the question was, whether the term "taxation," as used in that section, is applicable to assessments for street improvements. If the term taxation in the first clause—"taxation shall be equal and uniform"—is inapplicable to a street assessment, of course the term, as used in the second clause of the same section—"all property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value"—must also be inapplicable, and the point decided is the same in both cases. In Hart v. Gaven, 12 Cal. 487, under a law requiring the owners of property in San Francisco to repair the streets in front of their property, and in case of default on their part authorizing the Superintendent of Streets to make the repairs, and recover the expense against the owner, an action against the owner for such repairs was sustained. It does not appear, however, from the report of the case, that any question was raised on the constitutionality of the law on the ground that the apportionment was not according to value.

The construction thus given finds further support from an examination of other clauses of the Constitution. The same section further provides: "But Assessors and Collectors of town, county and State taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county or town in which the property taxed for State, county or town purposes is situated." This form of expression would seem to have reference only to taxes for general revenue purposes. The State, county and town are coupled together without any reference to minor subdivisions for local improvements, etc. By no reasonable construction can the clause be regarded as pointing to anything other than revenue for general ordinary purposes of governmental expenses; and this clause undoubtedly refers to the same taxes mentioned in the preceding clause, wherein uniform and ad valorem taxation are provided for.

Again, there is another material provision of the Constitution, not hitherto noticed in the discussions in this State, relating especially to the local governments, in which the different forms of exercising the taxing power under different names and circumstances, is expressly recognized. Section thirty-seven of Article IV provides as follows: "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages, and to restrict their power of taxation, assessments, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, so as to prevent abuses in assessments and in contracting debts by such municipal corporations."

Taxation and assessments are here spoken of and recognized as legitimate modes of exercising power. The framers of the Opinion of the Court.

Constitution could not have intended to convey the same specific idea by these two terms. If so, they are guilty of unmeaning tautology, and might just as well have said, "taxation and taxation." They must have meant something by the use of the word assessments specifically different from taxation, as that term was understood by them. They must have contemplated that there is some form of exercising a power different from the ordinary form of taxation, and they assumed that that form was proper, and would actually exist under the Constitution of California. We know, also, that a particular system of imposing charges, with some variation in the principle upon which they were apportioned, for local improvements at that time, and for a long period prior thereto, existed in nearly every State in the Union from which the people of California emigrated, known under the name of assessments. And we know that this section of our Constitution is a verbatim copy of a section of the Constitution of the State of New York, where this system had been in use, according to the statement of Mr. Justice Ruggles, in one form or another, for one hundred and fifty years. And we know that substantially the same provision is contained in the Constitutions of several other States where the same system prevails. We may reasonably presume, then, that the terms taxation and assessments were intended to be understood in the sense in which they were used in the State from which the provision was borrowed, and consequently that taxation, as used in our Constitution in relation to a similar subject matter, is not to be regarded as including assessments. The history of the provision, and the mode of its introduction into the Constitution of New York, will be found in the case before cited from 4 Comst. 440. As this system of assessments had no relation to the State at large, or to the general financial affairs of the State, county, or city governments, there was no occasion to refer to it in the general provision relating to taxation, properly so called, for such purposes as were contemplated in Section thirteen of Article XI. But as these local matters are under the control of cities and towns, it was peculiarly proper to refer to them in a provision relating to such subordinate communities. This constitutional provision upon this particular subject matter now under consideration, has not itself imposed any restrictions whatever upon the power to authorize these assessments, but it has simply enjoined the duty of restricting the power upon the Legislature, leaving to its discretion the measure of the restriction. As the framers of the Constitution understood these terms to have different significations, and when they intended to include both systems in a provision, actually employed both terms to express that intention, it is fair to presume that, had they intended to include assessments in the limitation imposed by Section thirteen, Article XI, they would have said, "Taxation and assessments shall be equal and uniform throughout the State." From these considerations it seems impossible, upon the reason of the thing, to reach any other conclusion than that Section thirteen, Article XI, is inapplicable to assessments of the class in question.

Besides, we are not without authority upon this question in our sister States, having similar constitutional provisions, where the subject has been examined and illustrated by eminent Judges with signal ability. We shall now refer to some of the decisions; and, as we propose to discuss the question in this case for the last time, we shall not hesitate to quote largely from some of the first of these opinions, that the grounds upon which they rest may be fully appreciated.

The case of Scoville v. City of Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. R. 184, arose under the Constitution of 1802, which contained no provision similar to ours. There being no restriction in the Constitution upon the subject an assessment according to benefits was held to be constitutional. The new Constitution of Ohio contained provisions similar to those in the Constitution of California upon the same subject, but not couched in precisely the same language. Under those provisions an assessment per front foot was levied upon property bordering upon a public street to pay the expenses of re-grading and paving the same. The case was, therefore, precisely like the one now under consideration. In Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. R. 246, the Supreme Court of Ohio held the law under which the assessment was made to be constitutional and the assessment valid. In delivering the opinion of the Court, Mr. Chief Justice Ranney said: "By the positive terms of the second section of that Article 'laws shall be passed taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, etc., and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money.' In the case of The City of Zanesville v. Richards, decided at the present term, we have held that this section is equally applicable to and furnishes the governing principles for all laws levying taxes for general revenue, whether for State, county, township or corporation purposes; and it requires a uniform rate per cent to be levied upon all property, according to its value in money, within the limits of the State or the local subdivision for which the revenue is collected. The General Assembly is no longer invested with the discretion to apportion the tax, and to determine upon what property and in what proportion the burden shall be laid. A uniform rate per cent must be levied upon all property subject to taxation, 'according to its true value in money,' so that all may bear an equal burden. If laws of the character of those now under investigation are controlled by this section, it is evident they cannot be sustained. They do not impose the tax upon all the property of the city or village, nor is it apportioned according to the true value in money of the property upon which it is laid. As the mode prescribed in this section is sufficient to enable municipal corporations to raise a revenue for the accomplishment of all their legitimate purposes, had the Constitution contained nothing further to evince the intention of its framers, it might be argued (and, I think, conclusively) that any other mode of levying taxes for any purpose was necessarily excluded. But it does contain a further provision, which every sound rule of construction binds us to regard, and which seems utterly inconsistent with such a conclusion. By the sixth section of the thirteenth Article the General Assembly is required to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages by general laws, and so restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power. It is very clearly our duty to give effect to the natural and obvious import of the language of this section. It relates to the organization of cities and villages, and imposes upon the General Assembly the very important duty of so restricting the powers it was supposed they would possess as to prevent their abuse. Amongst these is the power of 'assessment.' This power had for many years been in constant and active exercise in every part of the State and was perfectly understood by every member of the Convention. The popular as well as legal signification of this term, had always indicated those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of an improved street, which were necessary to pay for the improvement, and laid with reference to the special benefit which such property derived from the expenditure of the money. They had always differed widely from the ordinary levies made for the purpose of general revenue. To confound them now, in giving a construction to the second section of the twelfth Article, is to make not only unmeaning but utterly absurd, a material part of the sixth section of the thirteenth Article. To restrict or regulate the exercise of a power, furnishes the strongest possible implication of its existence, and to impose upon the General Assembly the duty to do this, in respect to a power which did not exist, or which had been expressly prohibited, would be nothing better than nonsense.

"It is our duty to give such a construction to the Constitution as will make it consistent with itself, and will harmonize and give effect to all its various provisions. To do this, we have only to suppose that the Convention used language with reference to its popular and received signification; and applied it as it had been practically applied for a long series of years. That where taxation is spoken of in the second section of the twelfth Article, reference is made to the general burdens imposed for the purpose of supporting the Government, and the revenue raised expended for the equal benefit of the public at large; while the power of assessment, referred to in the sixth section of the thirteenth Article, although resting upon the taxing power, was intended to describe a distinct and well known mode of laying a local burden upon particular property, with reference to the peculiar and special benefit derived to such property from the expenditure of the money. The general language of the first of these sections is thus only so far restricted as to give effect to the specific provision contained in the last. By the first, as the money is raised and expended for the equal benefit of all, no discretion is left with the General Assembly; but the tax must be levied equally upon all property, and according to its true value. But in the exercise of the power of assessment, legislative discretion in apportioning the burden according to benefits is left as broad and unfettered as under the Constitution of 1802. The last of these sections contemplates a delegation of the power to municipal corporations, and imposes upon the Legislature the duty (as yet very imperfectly performed) of so restricting its exercise as to prevent abuse. A failure to perform this duty may be of very serious import, but lays no foundation for judicial correction.

“The language of this section furnishes very strong evidence that the Convention carefully discriminated between taxation and assessment, and regarded them as distinct modes of raising money for different purposes, and upon different principles, from the fact that both terms are employed, and both are required to be restricted when used by cities and villages. The origin and history of the section lead to the same conclusion. It is almost a literal copy of the ninth section of the eighth Article of the Constitution of New York. From the case of The People v. The Mayor, etc., of Brooklyn, 4 Com. 440, it appears that this mode of taxation had been much complained of in that State, and that an attempt was made in the Convention of 1846 to effect its abolition. To this end the subject was referred to a committee, who reported a section for that purpose. But the Convention refused to adopt it, and finally incorporated the provision as it now stands in the Constitution of that State, and as it is found in ours. Upon this provision Judge Ruggles remarks: 'Instead of abolishing the system of assessments, this section of the Constitution refers it to the Legislature for the correction of its abuses. The direction given to restrict the power of cities and villages to make assessments, presupposes and admits the existence of a power to be restricted. The Constitution, therefore, in this section recognizes and affirms the validity of the legislation by which city and village assessments for local purposes, like that now in controversy, are authorized, and seems to remove all doubt in relation to the legislative power in question.'

"It cannot be supposed that those who borrowed this provision from the New York Constitution were ignorant of the objects and purposes for which it was there adopted; and it is but fair to presume that it was intended to effect the same purposes and objects here. In our present Constitution, as well as in the former, the general grant of legislative authority includes the power of taxation in all its forms. Restrictions upon its exercise are to be looked for in other parts of the instrument. The second section of the twelfth Article has established the principle upon which all taxes for general revenue purposes must be levied; but it does not extend to what was then and is still well known as special assessments, because the sixth section of the thirteenth Article shows that they were not intended to be included. Dealing with them under the name of 'assessments,' the people have contented themselves with enjoining upon the Legislature the duty of preventing abuses by restricting the power of the cities and villages to impose them."

This decision was affirmed in Reeves v. Treasurer of Wood County, 8 Ohio St. R. 337, in a case arising out of assessments made for the purpose of draining farming lands in the lowlands of northwestern Ohio. The assessment in this case was according to benefits. Again, in Northern Indiana R. R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. R. 162, the constitutionality of a similar Act relating to street improvements was upheld. And the Court say: "That such assessment may be made in proportion to the front foot as well as upon the value of the lands, as assessed for taxation." And again in Malony v. City of Marietta, 11 Ohio St. R. 637.

The Constitution of Wisconsin contains provisions similar to our own upon the subject under consideration. And the section corresponding to Section thirty-seven of Article IV is in nearly the same language. Notwithstanding these provisions it was held, in Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 259, that a law which "requires every lot owner to build whatever improvements the public may require, on the street in front of his lot, without reference to inequalities in the value of the lots, in the expense of constructing the improvements, or of the question whether the lot is injured or benefited by their construction," is constitutional. After discussing the point at some length and presenting some further views, which we will not take up further space in quoting, the case of Hill v. Higdon is cited with approbation, and Mr. Justice Payne says: "The reasoning of Mr. Chief Justice Ranney upon the question I think it impossible to answer." (P. 261.)

The Constitution of Michigan also contains similar provisions, though not identical in language, and the term assessment is omitted in the provision corresponding to Section thirty-seven of Article IV, in ours. In Williams v. The City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 564, a law authorizing assessments for street improvements upon the lots fronting upon the street improved, was held to be constitutional. It would seem that the law in this case required the expense of the improvement in front of the lot to be assessed upon the lot, like the law of Wisconsin in the case just cited. At all events, this was the case in Woodbridge v. The City of Detroit, 8 Mich. 276, in which case all the Judges concurred in holding that a law apportioning the assessment per front foot would be constitutional, and approved of Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio. But, while two of the four Judges held the law in question in the case then under consideration to embody the same principle, and to be constitutional, the other two Judges thought, that, because a single lot was required to bear the entire expense of an improvement in front, there was no apportionment at all, and that this element of a tax, viz: apportionment, was wanting, and for this reason that the law could not be sustained. They concurred with the other Judges, however, as we understand them, on the proposition that whenever there is an apportionment, no matter upon what principle made, the law can be sustained under the Constitution of Michigan.

Similar laws have also been repeatedly sustained in Missouri under a Constitution which contains the provision, "That all property subject to taxation in this State, shall be taxed in proportion to its value," but does not contain a provision corresponding to Section thirty-seven, Article IV of the Constitution of California. In the Egyptian Levee Company v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, the question arose under an Act authorizing a corporation formed to reclaim lands in a certain designated district subject to inundation by constructing levees and digging canals, to raise the funds necessary for the work by assessing the sum of one dollar per acre upon the owners of the lands within the district embraced within the charter. The law was sustained. The Court say: "That provision of our State Constitution which requires taxation to be proportioned to the value of the property on which it is laid, is only applicable to taxation in its usual, ordinary and received sense, and is therefore limited to taxation for general purposes alone, where the money raised by the tax goes into the State Treasury, County Treasury, or the General Fund of some city or town, and is applicable to any purpose to which the legislative body of such State, county or town may choose to apply it; and is not intended to apply to local assessment where the money raised is to be expended on the property taxed. These local assessments are not necessarily, under our Constitution, apportioned by reference to the value of the property assessed, but may be regulated by the value of the benefit which the improvements to which the money is devoted is expected to confer on the proprietor."

Opinion of the Court.

This conclusion seems to have been attained by reasoning upon principle, without the aid of any of the cases before cited in this opinion arising under similar constitutional provisions in other States, as none of them are referred to by the Court. Various cases were however cited construing the term taxation, as used in statutes. This case was affirmed in City of St. Joseph v. Anthony, 30 Mo. 541, where a street was macadamized, and the cost of the work "borne by the owners of the adjoining property, and apportioned and charged on the adjoining lots in proportion to their front." The principle had been recognized in the earlier case of Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 509, 510, but the decision in that case was not put squarely upon this ground. This view was also foreshadowed in Newby v. Platte County, Ib. 272. And in Inhabitants of Palmyra v. Morton, Ib. 594, an assessment upon a lot of the entire cost of paving the street in front of the lot was held to be constitutional, but in this instance the decision was put upon the police powers. When these last cited but earlier cases were decided, the Court, although it had caught a view of the true ground, does not appear to have settled down upon the true and solid basis of construction.

We shall notice but one other decision upon this point, that in Municipality No. 2 v. White, 9 La. Ann. R. 450, arising under the following provision in the new Constitution: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property on which taxes may be levied in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law." An assessment for improvements, apportioned according to benefits, was held by three of the Justices to be repugnant to the provision of the Constitution just cited. Two Justices dissented. This was comparatively an early decision under these recent provisions in Constitutions, and the Court did not have the benefit of the discussions on the subject found in the cases before cited. After having determined that the power of enforcing assessments for improvements must be referred to the sovereign right of taxation, the Court seem to have taken it for granted that the term taxation, as used in the Constitution, must be interpreted as covering the entire field embraced by the power. Its attention does not seem to have been directed to the more limited sense which the term taxation has acquired in the legal and general language of the country. Besides, we do not find any provision in the Constitution of Louisiana corresponding to Section thirty-seven of Article IV of our own, and the grounds of the argument based upon that provision were wanting. So, also, the civil law is the basis of the code of that State, and we cannot undertake to say in what respect their system of making local improvements may have differed from that prevailing in the other States, and if it materially differed, to what extent the practice under that system may have operated to modify the views of the Judges. Nor whether the term taxation, in its legal and ordinary use in that State, had acquired a more comprehensive signification than in other States.

Opinion of the Court.

The result of our investigation is, that there is no restriction in our Constitution upon the power of the Legislature to impose assessments to defray the expenses of public improvement in the nature of grading and planking streets, upon the property supposed to be benefited thereby in any district designated by the Legislature, or the proper officers of municipal governments acting under the authority of law. And that it is authorized to apportion the amount to be raised according to value, according to the benefits received, in proportion to frontage or the superficial contents, or to adopt any principle of apportionment that can be referred to the general sovereign right of taxation as defined by Mr. Justice Ruggles, in People v. Brooklyn. We think this construction of the provisions of the Constitution in question based upon solid reasons; and that the arguments in support of it in the cases cited are impregnable. The chain of authorities in support of this view, also, so far as we have been able to find them, is unbroken, unless the case in Louisiana can be considered an exception.

The matter rests, then, in the discretion of the Legislature. But it is difficult to say which principle of apportionment would, upon the whole, most nearly approximate equality, and do exact justice to all. It would not be difficult to show that the ad valorem principle might in many instances work monstrous injustice; and it may be questionable whether, upon the whole, it is not more unequal and unjust in its operation than the front foot, or any other mode of apportionment. In many cases either principle of apportionment would, doubtless, approximate equality and uniformity sufficiently near to answer all the purposes of justice. In some cases an apportionment according to benefits, and in others an ad valorem or front foot apportionment might better answer the ends of justice. But every principle upon which these burdens have been apportioned has been in turn attacked as unequal and unjust. And such, from the nature of things, must continue to be the case where one uniform system is inflexibly followed. In the language of Mr. Justice Napton, 27 Mo. 498: "In every form of taxation, whether general or local, it is certainly desirable and proper that the burden should be distributed as near as may be in proportion to the benefit derived; and constitutional injunctions and restrictions, where they have been attempted on this subject at all, are designed to promote this end. But where there is an absence of constitutional provisions, it is not in the power of the Courts to enforce any fancied scheme of equality seeming to them more just than the one adopted by the Legislature. The latter department of government is wisely intrusted with the entire control of this subject; and if practical injustice is done, the remedy is in the hands of the people. Equality of taxation may, however, be regarded as one of those utopian visions which neither philosopher nor legislator has ever yet realized. Approximation may be arrived at, and ought to be, and to a reasonable extent attained; but such is the infinite variety and complexity which human transactions assume, that it surpasses the ingenuity of the political economist and practical politician to foresee exactly where and how the pressure of a proposed tax will fall."

Possibly it might tend to promote equality and justice to leave to the local communities, which have the supervision of this class of improvements, the discretion to adopt that principle of apportionment which the exigencies of each particular district designated for improvement may require. In this State, particularly with reference to the City of San Francisco, nearly, if not quite all the various modes of apportionment have been tried, and among them the ad valorem principle was for several years pursued. Each was in turn attacked as unjust, and abandoned. Under the first charter of San Francisco one third of the expense was paid out of the City Treasury, and two thirds "paid in equal proportions by the land on both sides of the street," etc., but the principle of apportionment is not indicated. Under the charters of 1851 and 1855 the apportionment was according to benefits. The great reform charter—the Consolidation Act of 1856—adopted the front foot principle, and this continued in force till 1859, when it was amended and an ad valorem apportionment adopted. After trying this system two years, and after having given each principle a fair trial, in 1861 the Legislature again returned to the front foot principle, which had been in force from 1856 to 1859, the only instance of a return to a principle once tried and abandoned. And finally in 1862—after twelve years experience—the present principle of assessing upon the front foot was continued, and for reasons which must be presumed to have been satisfactory to the Legislature. But whether the principle is a wise one or not is no concern of ours. The question of power having been determined in favor of the action of the Legislature, the duty of determining the proper principle to be adopted is devolved upon that body, and its determination is conclusive. The fact that the ad valorem principle has been after a thorough trial abandoned, and that there has been a return to the front foot principle is, however, some evidence that the former operates unjustly and the latter more equally. It must be manifest to any one who will reflect upon the subject that any constitutional restriction upon the legislative discretion as to the principle upon which the apportionment shall be made would have been unwise in the extreme, not to say absolutely absurd.

Opinion of the Court.

With these observations we leave the matter, and those who desire to pursue the discussion further can do so by consulting the cases cited.

The further defense consists of various alleged defects and irregularities in the proceedings, through which the defendant is sought to be charged.

The proceedings in question were initiated by the Board of Supervisors on the 4th of August, 1862, by passing the following resolution, declaratory of their intention in the premises, pursuant to the provisions of Section three, Article IV of the Consolidation Act, as amended in 1862:

“Resolved, That it is the intention of this Board to order the following street work: That Fremont street, from Mission to Howard streets, be graded and macadamized.”

The defendant urges two objections to this resolution: Firstly, that the Board had no power under the statute to declare their intention to grade and also to macadamize a street in the same notice or resolution; secondly, that the resolution does not sufficiently describe the work intended to be done.

We do not think either of these objections is well founded. We find no provision in the Act which in terms or by necessary implication requires the Board to pass a separate resolution for each kind of work which they are empowered to order to be done under the provisions of the third section of Article IV. Nor can we perceive in reason or policy why such a course should be required. The sole purpose of the resolution and its publication, as required in section four, is to notify property holders that the Board are about to improve a given street, or some part thereof, by causing certain kind or kinds of improvements to be made, in order that they may have an opportunity to oppose the improvements in the manner prescribed in the Act, if they desire to do so. Suppose the Board intended to order all the different kinds of work requisite to the full improvement of a street upon a given plan to be done, what sense or reason, in the absence of an express and clear provision to that effect, is there in requiring them to pass and publish a separate resolution for each kind of work when, as to all parties concerned, it can be as well if not better done in a single resolution setting forth in connected detail all the improvements intended to be made? Such, it seems to us, would be the more orderly and systematic method, and therefore most advisable.

But it is contended that the Board cannot be allowed to join two or more kinds of work in the same notice, because by so doing the property holder may be debarred of his right of protest, as provided in the fourth section in case there should be one or more kinds included as against which he is not allowed to protest. There is no force in this reasoning for the conclusion attempted to be drawn does not follow. Assuming that the property holder can protest against grading, but cannot against macadamizing, it does not follow that he cannot protest against the former because the latter is included in the notice. If he has the right to protest against a particular kind of work the proceedings can take on no form by which he can be deprived of that right, nor is he deprived thereof by a notice like the present, nor is the exercise of the right, in any way which we can perceive, thereby impeded or impaired.

Construing the resolution (as it is construed by counsel for the defendant) as declaring an intent to both grade and macadamize (which, however, is not the sense in which we read it, as will appear hereafter,) we also think that it satisfies the statute upon the question of description. The kind of work is sufficiently described by the use of the terms "graded and macadamized." The description of the work which the fourth section of the Act calls for is given in the third section, in which each kind of work which the Board is authorized to order is set forth as described. The Board are not required to describe the work with any more exactness than it is described by law itself. When the Board say they intend to grade a certain street, they have said all that is needed by way of description. No property holder can be in doubt as to what is to be done. He knows that the street is to be so filled in or excavated, as the case may be, as to make it conform to the official grade of the city; all of which the word grade itself imports, and the description of the work would have been no better or more complete had this definition of the term been employed instead of the term itself. The notice is to be read to the property holder in the light of the law which confers the power upon the Board, for that law is, so to speak, a part of the notice. By that law he is informed that the Board can only grade a street to the official grade of the city, and he is therefore fully informed as to what the Board intended to do, and he has no right to assume that they intend to make a grade not authorized by law and use the assumption as a foundation upon which to ground an objection to the notice.

The next objection to these proceedings is that the contract contains no provision to the effect that the material to be used shall be such as may be required by the Superintendent of Public Streets as directed by law. Upon this subject the statute provides that "the materials used shall be such as are required by the said Superintendent, and all contracts made therefore must contain this provision."

The contract, which was duly executed by the plaintiff and Superintendent of Streets, provides that the plaintiff "will do and perform, under the direction and to the satisfaction of the Superintendent, and with materials to be furnished by the said Joseph S. Emery, all the work, etc., according to the specifications hereto annexed." Among the specifications thus made a part of the contract is found the following: "The above named portion of Fremont street is to be macadamized with rock from Goat Island," etc. So it would seem that the Superintendent required that the material used should be Goat Island rock, and the contract was accordingly so drawn as to make it obligatory upon the contractor to furnish the material so required by the Superintendent. We think this not merely a sufficient but a most substantial compliance with the provision of the statute above quoted. The contractor is made to furnish and agrees to furnish a specified kind or quality of material, which is the kind for which the Superintendent has expressly stipulated, and thereby required within the meaning of the law. The object of the law was to secure the use of such materials as the Superintendent might select. It cannot be denied but that this object was most effectually attained under the contract in this case.

The next and last objection urged is that the contract varies from the terms of the resolution of intention and subsequent order in pursuance thereof, because the latter require Fremont street to be graded and macadamized from Mission to Howard, while the former calls for grading and macadamizing that block "except where done."

In considering this point it is important to determine in the first place what is the true intent and meaning of the resolution of intention and subsequent order of the Board. They, like all other instruments, are to be read in the light of surrounding circumstances. It appears that at the time the resolution was passed the street in question was already graded to the official grade of the city—there could, therefore, be no sense in requiring that to be done which was already done. Upon the subject of grading, it would seem, the Board had either previously exercised its power or there had been no occasion for its exercise. It further appears that when a street, which is about to be macadamized, is already graded to the official grade, it is necessary, in order to preserve the official grade, to remove the surface to a depth equal to the thickness of the rock and other materials used in macadamizing. It is also necessary to round up the street toward the centre. This excavating and rounding up may, in one sense, be called grading, but it is not what is meant by that term as used in the third section of the Act in question. Thus there is a certain amount of grading always required as incidental to the macadamizing process, but such grading is regarded as a part of that process and not as constituting a distinct and separate kind or class of street work. In view of these circumstances, therefore, we understand the Board as using the term with reference to this latter grading which is incidental to the work of macadamizing, and, out of an abundance of caution for the purpose of guarding against any claim for the grading in question as something apart from that work. The same form of expression was carried into the contract, yet it was understood as referring only to the macadamizing, for no bid or charge was made for grading as such, although the contractor performed all of the work of that character which was required in order to macadamize the street.

By the same process of reasoning the objection that the contract excepts a part of the block, whereas the resolution and order of the Board directs the whole to be macadamized, is met and answered. The Board do not in terms propose to re-macadamize any part of the block, and if a portion was already macadamized their declaration must be read in the light of that fact, and construed as embracing only such portions as were not macadamized. But independent of this the notice is not thereby vitiated because it calls for more work than the contract does. It is nevertheless a good notice for that part which the contract does call for, which is all that is required.

In order to charge the property holder it was necessary to show that the Board had duly declared their intention to have the identical work done for which he is sought to be charged and thereafter ordered it to be done. This appearing, his liability to pay his share of the cost is established, and he cannot excuse himself by showing that other work called for by the declaration of intention was not done or was not included in the contract under which the work for which he is called upon to pay was done. All that he can demand is, that it shall appear that the work for which he pays has been specified in the resolution and order. Whether they specify more or other work is a matter of no consequence, for they are none the less a notice and order as to him for the work which has been done. The question is not what work is included and what has been done under the notice. On the contrary, the question is, does the notice include this particular work which has been done and for which the defendant is called upon to pay.

Opinion of the Court.

If so, the law has been satisfied, and the defendant is charged so far as the question under consideration is concerned.

We are of the opinion that the work in question is specified and described in the resolution and order of the Board within the strict meaning of the statute, and that the contract follows and carries out their true intent and meaning, and that all the steps have been taken which are necessary under the law to charge the defendant.

WHAT CONSTITUTES LARCENY.—The felonious and fraudulent taking of property with intent to deprive the owner thereof is larceny, even if the defendant did not intend to convert the same to his own use.

INSTRUCTIONS MUST APPLY TO THE TESTIMONY.—It is not error for the Court to refuse to give instructions asked for in a criminal case, which are not required by or founded on any part of the testimony in the case.

The defendant was convicted and sentenced, and appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

beyond a reasonable doubt, first, that the defendant took and carried away, or removed, the property of Robert Majors, as charged in said indictment; second, that the said defendant so took said property with the intention of converting the same to his own use." The Court refused the instruction, on the ground that it tended to mislead the jury, and that the matters to which the instruction related had been fully explained in the charge of the Court. The Court had charged the jury that: "Every person who shall feloniously steal, take and carry away, lead or drive away the personal goods or property of another, of the value of fifty dollars or more, shall be deemed guilty of grand larceny. If from all the testimony you believe the prisoner took and carried, or rode away the horse and saddle, knowing them to be the property of another, and done so with a felonious intent, that is, with intent to steal, or fraudulently and feloniously deprive the owner thereof, the prisoner is guilty of larceny." The defendant assigns as error the refusal of the Court to give the instruction as requested, and contends that in order to a conviction it was necessary to show that the property was taken lucri causa, and that it is not enough to show that the intent was feloniously and fraudulently to deprive the owner thereof, as charged by the Court.

It is said by Wharton in his treatise on American Criminal Law (Vol. 2, Sec. 1,781): "If the taking be fraudulent, however, it is not necessary that it should be lucri causa and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property;" and he cites the case of Rex v. Cabbage, Rus. and Ry. 292, which was an indictment for larceny in stealing a horse, which the prisoner, to screen an accomplice, took from the prosecutor's stable and backed into a coal pit and killed; and it being objected that this was not larceny, because the taking was not with an intention to convert the property to his own use, a majority of the Judges held that it was larceny. ated in The State v. Hawkins, 8 Porter, 461, we think the cases in the English Courts place the matter on the true basis, and that proof of the felonious and fraudulent taking, with intent to deprive the owner of the property, is sufficient to charge the defendant, without proof that he intended to convert the property to his own use.

The second and third instructions asked for by the defendant were properly refused for the reason stated by the Court—that they were not required by or founded on any part of the testimony in the cause.

JEROME MADDEN v. WILLIAM C. STRATTON.

PLEADINGS IN QUO WARRANTO.—The defendant in an action to try the right to an office may set forth in his answer more than one defense.

LIMITATION OF DURATION OF AN OFFICE.—The Constitution does not prohibit an office created by the Legislature from continuing over four years, but merely limits the incumbent's term which he holds by election or appointment to four years.

RIGHT OF INCUMBENT TO HOLD AN OFFICE AFTER EXPIRATION OF HIS TERM.—The incumbent of an office created by the Legislature, who has been elected or appointed to the same, notwithstanding the expiration of the term for which he was elected or appointed, continues to hold the office until a successor has been duly elected or appointed.

VACANCY IN OFFICE.—When a mode of filling a vacancy in an office is provided by law, other than by the appointment of the Governor, the Governor has no power to fill such vacancy by his appointment.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

On the 8th day of March, 1865, four of the Trustees of the State Library held a meeting and balloted for a Librarian, but failed to elect, their votes being equally divided between two candidates. The Board adjourned without any change in the vote, and made no further effort to elect. The Governor, assuming that the expiration of Stratton's term and the failure of the Board to elect had created a vacancy in the office, on the 22d day of April, 1865, appointed the relator to fill the supposed vacancy. Relator then demanded that Stratton surrender up the office, and upon his refusal to do so, commenced the present action.

The law organizing the State Library made the Board of Trustees to consist of five members. The Governor and Chief Justice were ex officio members of the Board. The Chief Justice did not meet with the Board on the 8th of March, 1865. The Governor and one other Trustee voted for J. L. Perkins, and the other two voted for defendant.

Defendant immediately qualified, and in his answer as a separate defense set up that by Section twelve of Article V of the Constitution, the Governor was disqualified from acting as Trustee, and that as the three legal Trustees who voted constituted a quorum of the Board, and he received two votes, a majority of the three, he was re-elected for a new term of four years.

The Court below gave judgment that the defendant was guilty of usurping the office and that he be excluded from it, and that relator was entitled to the office.

Defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. W. F. Sloan, for Appellant.

The office of Librarian had not become vacant, upon the supposition that the Trustees failed to elect a successor, on the 8th of March, 1865. The right of the incumbent to hold the office until the election and qualification of a successor results from a rule of the common law founded on public necessity. (State v. Lusk, 18 Miss. 336, 339; Commonwealth v. Hawley, 9 Barr, 516, 518.) The wisdom of the rule has been recognized in the organic law of this State by incorporating the rule itself into its own structure. (People v. Oulton, ante 44.)

It remains to be seen whether the relator is a duly elected and qualified successor. He claims title to the office solely by executive appointment. It is provided by the Constitution, Article V, Section eight:

Argument for Respondent.

“When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people.”

The lawful exercise of the power depends upon the concurrence of two circumstances: First, the office must have become vacant; second, there must be no other lawful mode of filling the vacancy. Neither of these existed.

First—There was no vacancy in the office of Librarian. Section twenty-three of the Act of 1863, “concerning offices,” provides that: “Every office shall become vacant upon the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term of such office: First, the death or resignation of the incumbent,” etc.

A failure to elect is not one of the events mentioned in the section.

George Cadwalader, for Respondent.

Conceding that Stratton might hold over, he could only do so up to the time the Attorney-General filed this information. A State might never see fit to fill an office, or the property of the office might be destroyed, still the original appointee could not claim that the contract of the State was to keep him until his successor was appointed. The contract of the State is for the term expressed in the commission—no longer. Hence Stratton must yield his office, though the relator has no title to it. It is the primary duty of the Court under section three hundred and twelve, to determine the right of the defendant to the office. This suit is between the people of the State and the defendant. The relator is only an adjunct. The defendant can gain nothing from the weakness of the relator's title. (People v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 358.)

In Gano v. The State, 10 Ohio, N. S. 237, it was declared competent for the Court to oust the usurper without determining the right of the claimant. Our Constitution has given to the Governor the power to fill all vacancies in office until such a time as the original appointing power acts, and this has been the uniform construction placed by this Court upon Section eight of Article V.

The words in the section, "and no mode is provided in the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy," have been construed to mean that the appointing authority have failed or neglected to fill such vacancy; and this interpretation is not an unjust one, because it is a safeguard to the State and insures the performance of all State functions, and the operation of all laws. Divest the Governor of such authority, and if the incumbent of an office retires at the end of his term, there would be an office without an officer.

The first case is that of The People v. Mott, decided by the first Chief Justice of this State. The report thereof appears in the appendix to the third volume of California Reports. (People v. Baine, 3 Cal. 510; People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 288; People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 523; Brooks v. Meloney, 15 Cal. 58.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This is an information in the nature of a quo warranto, having for its object — first, the exclusion of the defendant from the office of Librarian of the State Library; and second, the investiture of the relator with the rights, privileges and franchises thereof.

The defendant was appointed to the office on the 16th of March, 1861, for the term of four years, and became duly qualified two days thereafter. Since that time, until issue was joined in this proceeding, he has exercised such office and been in the enjoyment of its privileges, franchises and emoluments.

On the 22d of April of the present year, the Governor of the State, assuming that the office was vacant, by reason of the failure of the Board of Trustees of the State Library to elect a successor to the defendant, appointed and commissioned the relator to hold the office of Librarian of the State Library until the Board of Trustees should elect his successor. On the day of his appointment, the relator took the constitutional oath, filed his official bond, and thereupon demanded of the defendant a surrender of the office. The defendant refused to comply with the demand, whereupon this action was brought.

The case was submitted to the District Court upon the pleadings, and on the 12th of May judgment was rendered, ousting and excluding the defendant from the office, its franchises and privileges, and it was further adjudged that the relator was entitled to said office, and to all its rights, privileges and franchises, and he was declared to be "the legal and rightful occupant of said office of Librarian of the State Library."

This judgment the defendant, who has appealed, insists is erroneous on the following grounds:

1. Because there was no vacancy in the office of Librarian to be filled by Executive appointment.

2. Because the appellant, at the time of the relator's appointment, was, and still is, lawfully holding said office, and is justly entitled to all its rights, privileges and franchises.

The first duty which the Court has to perform is to determine as to the right of the defendant to the office under the circumstances disclosed by the pleadings of the parties. (Practice Act, Sec. 312.) By the information, it is alleged in terms that during all the time since the 18th of March last, the defendant has usurped, intruded into, and unlawfully held the office of State Librarian, and during all such time has exercised the liberties, privileges and franchises thereof against the dignity of the State and to the damage and prejudice of the relator.

The information sets forth that the defendant was duly appointed on the 16th of March, 1861, to fill the office of State Librarian for the period of four years, and that he became duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of its duties on the 18th of the same month. The defendant admits in his answer this averment, and immediately thereupon avers that ever since the last mentioned day he has "continued to fill said office and exercise the functions thereof, under the laws of said State, of his own proper right. That at no time has there been a vacancy in said office of Librarian since defendant so entered upon the same." He then further answers, claiming that since the 18th of March last he has lawfully exercised the office of Librarian by virtue of his appointment to it by the Board of Trustees of the State Library, on the 8th of March, 1865. In reference to this branch of the answer, the facts stated and the position of the parties are in substance the same as appear in the case of Stratton v. Oulton, ante 44, and therefore need not be repeated in this place.

The counsel for the people and relator insist that the defendant's right to the office can be maintained under the pleadings in this case only on the ground that he was duly elected or appointed Librarian by the Board of Trustees in March last. In our opinion the defendant may also rely upon the facts which are admitted by the pleadings. That if he has a right in fact to exercise the office under the circumstances stated in the complaint and admitted by the answer, he is not precluded from relying on the circumstances so alleged and admitted, though he claims title to the office by virtue of an alleged appointment thereto by the Board of Trustees, in March, 1865. In short, in pleading he was at liberty to set forth by answer as many defenses as he had. (Practice Act, Sec. 49.)

In considering the case we shall dispense with any further reference to the appointment of defendant as Librarian, assumed by him to have been made by the Trustees in March, 1865.

I. The ground on which it is claimed the defendant is a usurper of and intruder into the office is, that the term for which he was appointed in March, 1861, had expired when this action was commenced, and that under the Constitution his lawful continuance in the office and in the exercise of the functions belonging to it beyond the term of four years was and still is an impossibility.

Section seven of Article XI of the Constitution is as follows:

Opinion of the Court.

"When the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law, and if not so declared such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; nor shall the duration of any office not fixed by this Constitution ever exceed four years."

In the abstract, "office" signifies a place of trust. In legal idea, an office is an entity, and may exist in fact, though it be without an incumbent. In this sense the word "office" is used in a number of instances in the Constitution and also in the statutes. An office is also defined to be a right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. (Miller v. Supervisors, etc., 25 Cal. 98.) The section of the Constitution quoted declares that the duration of any office not fixed by the Constitution shall never exceed four years. This does not mean that the office shall cease to exist after the constitutional limit declared has expired; but the word "duration" evidently means the term which may be fixed by the constituting authority as the limit beyond which the incumbent's right by election or appointment to the office shall not extend. The constitutional inhibition operates as a total restraint to the creation of a term of office by election or appointment of longer duration than four years. So when, by an Act of the Legislature, an office is created and provision is made for filling it with a person who shall be invested with the right and authority to perform the functions belonging to it, for the period, for instance, of two years, the term thus prescribed is limited by a law of as binding obligation as the Constitution itself, provided it is in no sense repugnant to the organic law; and the incumbent's term is complete and at an end upon the expiration of the time prescribed for its duration. But notwithstanding the incumbent's term in such case be at an end by lapse of time, it is not to be gainsaid that he may remain in the exercise of the duties of the office as its locum tenens until his successor is elected or appointed. In such case he holds the position not as the incumbent by election or appointment, but because the public necessities require that the office shall not be without a person in its possession having authority to perform the duties appertaining to it. This continuance in office is not an extension of the term where the term is expressly limited, though it is an incumbency by sufferance for the public convenience, subject to be determined whenever the proper authority may act effectively. Now whether the term of office be two years or four years we apprehend can make no difference. In the latter case, as well as in the former, he who was the incumbent of the term expired is permitted to remain in office, invested with it as its locum tenens, until a successor is authorized to enter into and upon the discharge of its functions, because the public necessities demand that the duties of the office should be duly administered. (Stratton v. Oulton, ante 44, and the cases therein cited.) The views above expressed in our judgment are in no sense opposed to the letter or spirit of the seventh section of the eleventh Article of the Constitution, but in harmony with it.

II. In the next place was the office of Librarian vacant to a legal intent when the relator was appointed to it by the Governor, or when this action was commenced? And if it was so vacant was there no mode provided by the Constitution or any law of the State for filling the vacancy otherwise than by executive appointment?

Section eight of Article V of the Constitution reads as follows: "When any office shall from any cause become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people."

The defendant, as the occupant of the office of Librarian of the State Library, held the position provisionally—that is, subject to be superseded by the appointment by the proper authority of another person to the office. In a restricted and technical sense, perhaps it may be said the office was vacant—that is, without an incumbent whose tenure was by lawful appointment and subject to no condition or qualifications.

Opinion of the Court.

Then, if in the sense suggested, the office of Librarian was vacant at the time the relator was appointed to it, it must be ascertained that there was no other mode than by executive appointment provided by the Constitution or by the law for filling such vacancy before it can be admitted that the Governor had the power to grant a commission to the relator or to any other person. By the Act of 1861, entitled "An Act prescribing rules for the government of the State Library," (Laws 1861, p. 45,) a mode was and still is provided for appointing a successor to the defendant. The power of appointment in this instance was conferred by the statute upon the Board of Trustees of the State Library. This duty was cast upon them for the reason, we may suppose, that the library was placed by the law under their direction and control, and they must be deemed the best judges of the qualifications and fitness of the person to whom should be intrusted the important and delicate duties of Librarian. Thus it appears that a mode for filling the office of Librarian was provided by law otherwise than by executive appointment.

The condition on which the exercise of the power of the Governor to appoint a successor to the defendant is made to depend by the Constitution did not exist, and therefore the commission granted to the relator was without authority and void.

At the time of the commencement of this action the defendant was in fact holding the office of Librarian, and performing the functions appertaining to it. In Stratton v. Oulton, ante 44, we held that he was Librarian de jure, notwithstanding the term for which he was appointed had expired. The reasons for the conclusion to which we came on the subject are stated in full in the opinion of the Court, and seem to us strongly fortified by the authorities, both English and American, therein referred to. It is said in that case that "the rule of the common law, as settled by the case cited, conserves the public good by conserving the methods and instrumentalities by which alone public business can be transacted; while the opposite rule, when pushed to its consequences, it might result in a suspension of business in every department of the public service." We may say, at the risk of repeating what has been said in substance already, that the rule which continues an incumbent in office until his successor is duly elected and qualified, is to prevent any interregnum in the office, and to have some person always authorized to discharge its duties. The incumbent's right in such case results from a rule of the common law founded on public necessity; therefore, it is the defendant's right to hold the office until all has been done which is required by law to give another title to it.

The defendant came into the office by lawful authority, and by the terms of his appointment held the place for four years. To his appointment and incumbency, and to the failure of an election and qualification of a successor, and to the rule of the common law to which reference is made, must be referred the defendant's right to continue in the exercise of the office and the performance of its duties until his successor shall be appointed and qualified as provided by law. When a successor shall be thus appointed and qualified, and the defendant shall be called upon to give place to him, then his tenure de jure will cease to exist.

The judgment of the District Court must be and is hereby reversed; and, further, the District Court is directed to enter judgment in favor of the defendant, dismissing the information and the complaint of the relator, with costs, etc.

Mr. Chief Justice SANDERSON expressed no opinion.

SAWYER, J., concurring specially.

I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice Currey, and add a suggestion upon one point. The relator claims the position under an appointment from the Governor, who assumed to act under Section eight, Article V, of the Constitution, which authorizes the Governor to make an appointment, "when any office shall become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy."

Opinion of Sawyer, J., concurring specially.

But the Act of 1861 gives the appointing power to the Board of Trustees; hence there is a mode provided by law for filling any vacancy that may exist. This Board could at all times, and still can, at its own pleasure, meet and appoint a Librarian. This body is still in existence, and nothing but the volition of the members can for a moment delay an appointment. It matters not that it does not adjourn from day to day, for it can meet at any time irrespective of adjournments. Had the Board met and failed to elect, and then adjourned for an hour to consider the matter, or for any other purpose, I apprehend that no one would claim that the Governor could, during the recess, fill the vacancy, and thus take the appointment out of the hands of the regularly authorized appointing power. Yet the functions of the body authorized by law to fill the vacancy are no more suspended now than they would be during the recess of an hour, because they can meet at any moment when it suits their convenience or pleasure to do so. The case might be otherwise, where the body, when once dissolved, could not be re-organized except at the will or call of another not a member — such as the Legislature. Such were the cases of People v. Baine, 6 Cal. 510; People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 289; People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 522. The reason in that instance is, that the body when once adjourned sine die, so far as its own volition is concerned, is incapable of performing any further functions. There was then a mode of filling the vacancy provided by law in existence at the time the appointment of the relator was made, and the conditions upon which the Governor was authorized to act did not exist.

These views are supported by the cases of People v. Fitch, 1 Cal. 536; People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 523.

A. B. CHAPMAN v. J. L. MORRIS AND OTHERS, COMPOSING THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, AND CRISTOBAL AQUILAR, TREASURER OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

FUNDING COUNTY WARRANTS DRAWING NO INTEREST.—A law authorizing a county to fund its outstanding warrants which were not to draw interest, and to make the bonds given in exchange therefor bear interest, is not unconstitutional.

APPEAL from the District Court, First Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

The Act of April 5th, 1861, to fund the indebtedness of Los Angeles County, then outstanding in the form of county warrants, provided that the county should not pay any interest on any warrants issued after July 1st, 1861.

In 1864 the county had outstanding a large amount of warrants unpaid, which had been issued under the Act of 1861, and did not draw interest. The Act of April 4th, 1864, authorized the county to fund these outstanding warrants with bonds running twenty years, and bearing interest at seven per cent per annum. The plaintiff, who was District Attorney of the county, had issued to him a warrant for his salary on the 8th day of February, 1864, for six hundred and seventy dollars. The county officers were proceeding to fund the warrants under the Act of 1864, with interest bearing bonds, when he commenced this action to enjoin the Board of Supervisors and Treasurer from issuing the bonds.

Defendants demurred to the complaint, the demurrer was sustained, and the Court gave judgment for defendants.

Plaintiff appealed.

Crockett & Whiting, for Appellant.

Could the Legislature modify the Act of April 5th, 1861, as was attempted to be done, in respect to interest, by the tenth section of the Act of April 4th, 1864?

By section ten of the first named Act, the claims authorized to be funded could be paid in no other manner. Creditors

Opinion of the Court.

were forced to fund their claims or get nothing. They were to accept bonds bearing a low rate of interest and payable at a distant period. And as an inducement to the creditors to accept these hard terms, and as an assurance to the taxpayers that they were thereafter to be oppressed with no payment of interest, except that to be paid on the bonds, the Legislature, in section eighteen, declared that no interest should be paid on warrants to be issued after July 1st, 1861. On the faith of this enactment the debt was funded; and subsequently to July 1st, 1861, other warrants were issued by the Auditor, which bore no interest, and could bear none as the law stood. The holders of these warrants knew, when they accepted them, that they were to receive no interest. It was, to all intents and purposes, a contract between the county and the holders of the warrants, that no interest was to be paid. A contract made by a municipal corporation is as much within the protection of the Constitution as the contract of a private person. (Benson v. The Mayor of New York, 10 Barb. 223; Bayley v. The Mayor, etc., 3 Hill, 531; Angell & Ames on Corporations, § 33.)

V. E. Howard, for Respondents.

The claim for interest was equitable, as the county could not pay, according to the face of the warrant, but deferred payment. If not legal, still as the interest was a good, equitable claim, the Legislature might authorize the payment. (People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 351.)

The power of the Legislature to authorize a county to fund its indebtedness and postpone creditors, does not appear to be an open question. (Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290; McDonald v. Maddux, 11 Cal. 187.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

Section eighteen of the Act of 1861, authorizing Los Angeles County to fund its indebtedness, provides that no interest shall be paid on any warrant drawn on the County Treasurer after July 1st, 1861.

In 1864 another Act was passed authorizing the further funding of the indebtedness of the county, which should accrue prior to July 1st, 1864; and the Act provides, that, on all indebtedness entitled to be funded on that day, interest shall be allowed at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the date of the protest of the same by the County Treasurer, to said July 1st, 1864. This provision embraces warrants that were not to bear interest under the Act of 1861.

The only question made by the appellants is, that the provision authorizing interest to be allowed on those warrants, which, by the Act of 1861, bore no interest when the indebtedness was incurred, and the warrants drawn, is unconstitutional and void. The bonds to be issued were made payable in twenty years, with interest at only seven per cent. The county being unable to pay its warrants as they were issued, the postponement of the payment for a period of twenty years, at the low rate of seven per cent per annum interest, would seem to be a sufficient consideration for allowing interest from the time of protest for non-payment till the time of funding. At all events, the postponement gave the holders an equitable claim to the allowance of interest which it was competent for the Legislature to recognize, and authorize to be paid. The principles announced in Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 349; Contra Costa County v. Board of Supervisors of Alameda County, 26 Cal. 649; and People v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 176, are applicable to this case. Upon the authority of these cases the provisions of the Act complained of must be held to be constitutional.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. THOMAS J. STEWART.

EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER IN CRIMINAL CASE.—On a trial for the crime of murder the defendant is entitled to introduce testimony for the purpose of proving his character for peace and quiet to be good. To that extent his character is involved in the issue of not guilty.

Opinion of the Court.

CASES OVERRULED.—The cases of People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 120, and People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316, as to evidence of good character in doubtful cases, overruled.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

The defendant was indicted for the crime of murder, and convicted of murder in the second degree, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. Cook, for Appellant.

The Court erred in refusing evidence of good character of the defendant. (Wharton, 5 Ed. Sec. 636, and authorities cited; Ib. 824; 2 Russell on Crimes, 784; People v. White, 24 Wend. 583; People v. Van, 12 Wend. 83.)

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The Court below erred in excluding the testimony offered by the defendant for the purpose of proving his character for peace and quiet to be good. To that extent his character was involved in the issue of not guilty, and it was competent for him, if he could, to prove it to be good. (3 Greenleaf on Evidence, Sec. 25, et sequens.)

The cases of The People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 120, and The People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316, so far as they may seem to hold a contrary doctrine, are not law. It is not for the Court to determine whether the case is doubtful or not, and if doubtful exclude evidence as to character. That question, like all other questions arising upon the evidence, is for the jury. It is the duty of the Court to admit all evidence which is relevant to the issue, and leave the jury to determine its weight. After the evidence is all in the Court may, as a matter of law, instruct the jury that evidence as to previous good character is not entitled to any weight except in doubtful cases.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

Mr. Justice RHODES expressed no opinion.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. B. F. ALEXANDER v. CHARLES H. SWIFT, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY.

WATERWORKS FUND OF SACRAMENTO.—The President of the Board of Trustees of the City of Sacramento has no authority to sign a warrant drawn by the Auditor on the Treasurer, payable out of the "Waterworks Fund," for sitting up the Police Court Room, though the room is in the waterworks building.

WARRANTS DRAWN BY AUDITOR OF SACRAMENTO.—If the Auditor of the City of Sacramento, in drawing a warrant on the Treasurer, incorrectly designates the fund out of which the demand should be paid, it is not the duty of the President of the Board of Trustees to sign it.

This was an original proceeding commenced in the Supreme Court.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George R. Moore, for Relator.

The Auditor has the power, and he is the only officer upon whom such authority is conferred, to designate the fund out of which a demand shall be paid. In this, too, he has a discretion which he is bound by his oath and his bond to exercise legally and honestly, and to the best of his knowledge and ability. If in this matter he fails or neglects to do his duty properly, the injured party has his remedy: It seems to us that no proposition can be clearer than the one under discussion, that in the performance of these duties the Auditor acts entirely independent of the President, and that the President can in no manner control or dictate to him. If the President had the power to veto the acts of the Auditor as well as the Board of Trustees, his authority would be almost unlimited and absolute; but such is not the letter or meaning of the law. When a claim is presented to the Board it is acted upon, and either allowed or rejected; if allowed, it then goes to the Auditor, who also carefully examines it, and either allows or rejects it. If he allows it he determines the fund out of which it must be paid. This frequently is no easy matter, as often a demand may almost as properly be paid out of one fund as another. But some one must perform this duty, and the law has designated the Auditor.

Opinion of the Court.

Charles H. Swift, in pro per.

The account could not legally be allowed, as it was based on and referred to an ordinance that was void in law. (Laws 1863, p. 421, Sec. 9; Ib. 1863, p. 426, Sec. 27.) The President cannot sign a warrant drawn on the Waterworks Fund excepting for the purposes described in section twenty-seven, and this claim is not of that character. (Laws 1863, p. 426, Sec. 27.) The President is prohibited signing warrants for accounts approved by the Auditor, unless he finds all the proceedings legal. (Laws 1864, p. 484, Sec. 1.)

Admitting the claim itself to be legal and just, and for "materials furnished in finishing Police Court room," the Auditor committed an error in certifying that the same was payable from the Waterworks Fund, and drawing his warrant thereon. The only class of claims payable from said fund being set forth in Laws of 1863, p. 426, Sec. 27.

It is not the duty of the Auditor to designate the fund out of which a claim is payable, but to "satisfy himself out of what fund it is payable" according to law.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The relator has applied for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to sign a warrant drawn by the Auditor of the City of Sacramento on the Treasurer of the city, directing him to pay to the relator five hundred and seventy-four dollars and thirty-eight cents out of the money in the Waterworks Fund. The amount for which the warrant was drawn was due the relator on the 2d of January, 1865, for materials furnished and work performed by him in fitting up the Police Court room in the waterworks building in Sacramento, of which he rendered an account to the Trustees, which on the 9th of January, they examined and allowed as correct. The account was then examined and approved by the City Auditor, who indorsed on it his approval, and designated the same as payable out of the Waterworks Fund. (Laws 1863, p. 415.)

Opinion of the Court.

The warrant thus drawn was presented to the President of the Board of Trustees for his signature. He refused to sign it, and hence this application.

On the 2d of January, 1865, the Trustees passed an ordinance providing that: "The sum of six hundred dollars is hereby appropriated from the Waterworks Fund to pay B. F. Alexander for work done finishing Police Court room in waterworks building."

The respondent justifies his refusal to sign the warrant on two grounds. The first is, that the Board of Trustees had no power to pass the ordinance appropriating the money of the Waterworks Fund for the payment of the demand of the relator; and the second is, that the Auditor had no authority to designate the Waterworks Fund as that from which the warrant should be paid.

The Act to incorporate the City of Sacramento (Laws 1863, p. 415) confers the power in general terms upon the Board of Trustees to make by-laws and ordinances not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or of the State of California. Then follows a particular enumeration of the powers of the Board of Trustees. Among these is the authority to make contracts in behalf of the city, and to examine and liquidate all accounts against the city. The same Act specifies in detail the duties of the principal officers of the corporation. It is made the duty of the President of the Board of Trustees to sign all warrants drawn upon the City Treasurer; but before he shall sign any warrant, he shall ascertain from the books of the Auditor that there is sufficient money in the proper fund to pay the same. (Laws 1864, p. 484.)

The revenues of the city are derived, under the Act, from various sources, viz: Taxes, licenses, harbor dues, water rents and fines, and these revenues are directed to be apportioned and distributed in a particular manner. The revenues derived from the waterworks it is declared shall be paid into a fund to be known as the "Waterworks Fund," which fund is primarily devoted to the payment of all necessary expenses to carry on and keep in order the waterworks, and it is made the duty of the Auditor at the end of every three months to apportion the residue of this fund, if there be any after such payment, as other funds of the city are required to be apportioned. (Act of 1863, p. 426, Sec. 27.) The twenty-sixth section of the Act provides that the revenues derived from taxes, licenses, harbor dues, net water rents, and fines collected in the Police Court or otherwise, except as provided in section twenty-seven, when paid into the Treasury shall be appropriated and divided as follows: Fifty-five per centum to an Interest and Sinking Fund, which shall be applied to the payment of the annual interest upon the bonds legally issued for city indebtedness, issued under the Act of 1858; the excess of said fund, after the payment of said interest, shall be applied to the redemption of said bonds, in such manner as the Board of Trustees may determine; eight per cent to a School Fund, to be applied to the support of schools within the limits of said city; seven per cent to a Fire Department Fund, and the residue to a fund to be called the General Fund, to be used for all such necessary municipal expenses, including salaries, as not otherwise provided for in this Act. Then follows a proviso which requires no special notice.

The Waterworks Fund eo nomine cannot be apportioned by ordinance nor can it be reached by the designation of the Auditor, except in accordance with section twenty-seven of the Act. If the relator's demand had been for necessary expenses to carry on and keep in order the waterworks, there could not have existed any objection to the ordinance, nor would the respondent have been justified in withholding his signature from the warrant. But the work of fitting up the Police Court room, though it was in the waterworks building, did not pertain to carrying on or keeping in order the waterworks, and hence the expenses of such work could not be charged to the Waterworks Fund. As we have already seen, this fund can be reached directly only for the objects of the waterworks. Whatever may remain after the necessary expenses mentioned in the Act have been paid, is to be appropriated and distributed to other purposes, that is to say, fifty-five per cent of this surplus or "net water rents" to an Interest and Sinking Fund; eight per cent to a School Fund; seven per cent to a Fire Department Fund, and the residue — thirty per cent — to the General Fund. These several funds, except the last, are apportioned to particular uses. The holders of the bonds mentioned have an interest in the fifty-five per cent named. Those who have children to educate are particularly concerned in the just application of the eight per cent assigned to the School Fund; and those having property to be preserved from destruction by fire, are interested in the Fire Department Fund. The Act has appointed the General Fund for the payment of such municipal expenses as are not otherwise provided for.

It is urged on behalf of the relator that it is the province of the Auditor to designate the fund out of which the demand shall be paid. It is undoubtedly his duty to so designate, but at the same time he must designate correctly, otherwise it is not the duty of the President of the Board to sign the warrant. If the Auditor had certified that the relator's demand should be paid out of the interest and Sinking Fund or out of the Fire Department Fund, would that designation have been binding and conclusive on the President of the Board of Trustees? Is the relator in any better condition because the Waterworks Fund was designated by the Auditor as the source from which the demand should be paid? These questions can only be answered in the negative. The President of the Board of Trustees is the chief officer of the corporation whose duty it is to supervise the conduct and acts of its subordinate officers. It is his duty to sign warrants properly drawn on the City Treasury, provided he shall ascertain from the proper source, before signing any warrant, that there is sufficient money in the proper fund to pay the same. Here is an important condition which must precede rightful action on his part. He must ascertain that there is in the proper fund money enough to pay the amount of the warrant before he signs it. When the warrant in question was presented to him he must be presumed to have known that any money in the Waterworks Fund could not be properly applied to the payment of it, and therefore he was in duty bound to refuse it his signature.

Argument for Appellant.

We are of the opinion the respondent was justified in refusing to sign the warrant, for the reasons stated by him in his answer.

The application must be denied, and it is accordingly so ordered.

JOSEPH KILE AND REESE B. THOMPSON v. SILAS TUBBS.

PRE-EMPTOR AND PRIOR POSSESSOR.—One who is in possession of public land, and has secured a right of pre-emption thereto under the laws of the United States, stands in such relation to the United States Government as entitles him to retain the possession as against a prior possessor who is as a mere trespasser.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

The other facts not stated in the opinion of the Court will be found in 23 Cal. 442, in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Crocker.

J. H. Budd, for Appellant.

Defendant founded his defense not only on the defects of plaintiffs' title, but by showing a right of possession through the pre-emption laws of the United States.

Defendant was a qualified pre-emptor under the laws of the United States. He had complied with the pre-emption laws so far as in his power. He had a right, as a pre-emptor, to occupy unsurveyed land of the United States. (Laws of U. S., Vol. 12, 410, Vol. 10, 305, 309, 310, 576.) He had acquired rights under the pre-emption laws that the Courts will regard and protect. (McAfee v. Kein, 7 Smede and Marshall, 780; Little et al. v. The State of Arkansas, 9 Howard, 333-5.) He had so connected himself with the title of the United States as to be able to attack a patent for the land from the State. (Kile v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 442.)

Yet the Court, in effect, instructed the jury that this claim under the pre-emption laws was not available as a defense against a right acquired by prior possession.

P. L. Edwards, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action to recover lands. Plaintiff relies for a recovery, firstly, upon a patent from the State issued under the Act providing for the sale of swamp lands; secondly, upon prior possession.

The defendant claims that the lands are not swamp lands, and attacks the patent on the ground that it is void, as having been issued without authority. He claims to be lawfully in possession, claiming in good faith a right of pre-emption under the laws of the United States. There was conflicting evidence upon the question as to whether the lands are swamp lands within the meaning of the Act. Also testimony as to the possession of the respective parties, and testimony tending to show that defendant is a person authorized to acquire a pre-emption right, and that he had taken the proper steps to acquire it. It was held in this case when it was before the late Supreme Court, that a person who has secured a right of pre-emption stands in such a relation to the United States Government—the source of title—as entitles him to attack the patent collaterally, as being void for want of power to grant the land covered by it. (23 Cal. 441.) A similar ruling was made in Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609.

The instructions of the Court make no reference to the patent, but seem to have been addressed solely to the question of prior possession. The fourth instruction, given under exception on the part of defendant, is as follows: "That if the jury believe from the evidence that the land claimed by the plaintiffs in controversy was in the possession of Stayton, through whom plaintiffs claim, prior to the possession of the defendant, it was sufficient for plaintiffs to maintain the action, unless that possession was abandoned; that the question of abandonment was one of intention, of which they were to judge exclusively; that in order to do so they must take into consideration all the facts and circumstances before them in evidence."

The instruction is erroneous, because it wholly ignores any rights that might have been acquired by the defendant under the pre-emption laws. There was testimony bearing upon the question, and this testimony is an element which should have been considered in the instruction.

For this error the judgment must be reversed and a new trial granted, and it is so ordered.

THE PEOPLE v. U. S. GASSAWAY.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT.—One indicted for the crime of robbery as principal, cannot be convicted of the offense charged in the indictment if the evidence shows that he was only an accessory after the fact.

SAME.—Upon a trial for robbery, if the evidence is circumstantial and involves the inquiry whether the defendant was guilty, if guilty at all, as principal or as an accessory after the fact, the Court should instruct the jury, if requested, that the defendant cannot be convicted if he was only an accessory after the fact.

APPEAL from the County Court, Butte County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Coffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted with four other persons for the crime of robbery, charged to have been committed on the 25th of June, 1864, in the County of Butte. He pleaded not guilty. He was tried and found guilty and then sentenced to be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of six years.

It was proved on the trial that a robbery was committed on the day named, near Bidwell, in the County of Butte, by several persons who were disguised. The defendant was encamped at the time with his family near the scene of the robbery, and it was sought to implicate him as an accessory before the fact, with the commission of the crime, by proof of circumstances tending to establish his connection with it. All the evidence in the case, so far as this defendant was concerned, was of a circumstantial nature.

When the case was finally submitted at the trial, the defendant's counsel requested the Court to instruct the jury that, "whilst knowledge of the commission of a crime, acquired after the same had been perpetrated, connected with the act of concealing the same or harboring or protecting the person charged, would constitute the offense of accessory after the fact, yet such knowledge and acts do not constitute, nor are they of the offense of which the defendant is indicted." The Court refused to so instruct the jury, and the defendant excepted.

The evidence in the case was of a character involving the inquiry whether the defendant was guilty, if guilty at all, of the offense charged in the indictment, or as an accessory after the fact. The charge requested appears to have been designed to instruct the jury that in the event the evidence satisfied them the defendant acquired a knowledge of the commission of the crime after its perpetration and concealed it, or harbored and protected the persons charged with its commission then he was only an accessory after the fact, and could not be found guilty as an accessory before the fact, or, in other words, as a principal.

By the eleventh section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments an accessory before the fact is to be deemed and considered as a principal, and punished accordingly. The twelfth section of the same Act defines an accessory after the fact to be a person who, after full knowledge that a crime has been committed, conceals it from the magistrate, or harbors and protects the person charged with or found guilty of the crime. There is an important and material difference between an accessory before the fact and an accessory after the fact. The former is a principal, and is to be punished as a principal. If found guilty as an accessory to the commission of a robbery before the act of robbery is perpetrated, he may be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison for any length of time between one year and the time of his death. But if a person be found guilty as an accessory after the fact, the statute provides that he shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, and fined in a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, according to the circumstances of the case and the enormity of the crime.

If the jury had been instructed as requested, or so substantially, it may be they would have found a different verdict. We think, considering the nature of the evidence, the defendant was entitled to the benefit of the instruction requested, and that he may have been injured by its refusal.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GEORGE W. TYLER v. L. D. GREEN.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT TO PUBLIC LAND—PROOF OF.—In an action to recover possession of public land, where the plaintiff claims to recover by reason of prior possession, and the defendant claims as a pre-emptor under the laws of the United States, he is entitled to prove the necessary facts to establish his pre-emption right.

SAME.—Where a defendant has not been called upon to state whether he expected to prove all the facts essential to his defense, his testimony should not be rejected, because his offer does not embrace every fact necessary to establish it.

IMMATERIAL ERROR.—A judgment will not be reversed for an error that could not affect the rights of the parties.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

Argument for Appellant.

Previous to 1863, J. D. Able had been for four or five years in possession of a tract of land in San Joaquin County, and was residing on the same, and had it inclosed. In 1862, Frank Stewart recovered a judgment against him for over two thousand dollars. An execution was issued on the judgment, and the land was sold by the Sheriff to the plaintiff in this action, who in due time received a Sheriff's deed. In the spring of 1863, Able left the land, and Green, the appellant, went into possession. Tyler, the respondent, brought this action to recover possession, claiming to recover on his Sheriff's deed and Able's prior possession.

It appeared that the day before the trial the Sheriff had amended his return on the execution by inserting a more particular description of the land levied on. The defendant objected to the amended return being received in evidence. The Court overruled the objection. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. H. Budd, for Appellant.

The amended return of the Sheriff was not competent evidence against defendant, Green—Green not having been a party to the attachment suit. (Newhall v. Provost, 6 Cal. 85; Webster v. Hayworth, 8 Cal. 41; Emerson v. Upton, 9 Pick. 167; Freeman v. Paul, 3 Greenl. 260; Putnam v. Hall, 3 Pick. 445.)

Defendant Green had a right to occupy unsurveyed lands of the United States in California, if a qualified pre-emptor. (Laws of the United States, Vol. 12, p. 410, Sec. 7; Ib. Vol. 10, p. 305; Ib. Vol. 10, pp. 309, 310, Secs. 10 and 12; Ib. Vol. 10, p. 576, Chap. CXXIX.)

Green, by his settlement on the land sued for, if a competent pre-emptor, acquired rights that the Courts must recognize and respect. He is not a wrongdoer. (McAfee v. Kein, 7 Smedes & Marshall, 780; Little et al. v. The State of Arkansas, 9 Howard, 333-5; Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609.)

In this case Green, the defendant, has connected himself with the title of the United States as the owner, (Kile v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 442,) and one connecting himself with the title of the owner can always successfully defend against one who claims merely as prior possessor. (Moore v. Moore, 8 Shepl. 350; 1 Leon, 301; 2 Green. Ev. Sec. 625.)

Opinion of the Court.

Tyler & Cobb, for Respondent.

A party in possession of public lands may mortgage his interest, and his right may be taken and sold upon execution. (Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 536. See, also, 3 Cal. 263; 4 Cal. 247; 12 Cal. 290.)

Is it necessary that defendant should retain possession of any portion of the land in controversy, to give him the benefit of his pre-emption right, if he has one, when the lands are surveyed and the plats returned to the Land Office? We say no. His pre-emption claim is just as perfect now, and he can enforce it just as well when the land is surveyed, if he is now ousted by the action of this Court, as he could if he was to remain in possession of the whole land up to that time.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This case differs from Page v. Hobbs. In that case the declarations of intantion filed in the Land Office were not admissible, because they were made for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right to lands which, at the time, were not subject to pre-emption. They were of no validity, and therefore irrelevant. In this case the defendant sets up in his answer that the lands in question are public lands of the United States, subject to pre-emption, and alleges that he is in possession claiming a pre-emption right; also averring the necessary facts to constitute that relation. On the trial he offered to prove by competent witnesses several of the facts averred, and necessary to establish his pre-emption right. The plaintiff objected on the ground that the evidence was "improper and irrelevant." The objection was sustained and the testimony excluded. The evidence was certainly relevant to the issues raised by the pleadings, and necessary to sustain the defense of lawful possession giving a pre-emption right. It is now contended, however, by respondent that the evidence was inadmissible because the offer did not embrace every fact necessary to establish the defense. It was relevant as far as it went. The defendant may not have been able to prove all the facts by the witnesses then under examination. It may be that he intended to prove other facts by other witnesses, who did not know the facts now offered. It does not appear that he was called upon to state whether he intended to follow the testimony offered by other testimony or not. As this essential evidence was excluded, it would have been useless to offer testimony as to the other facts necessary to sustain this defense, because without the testimony offered and excluded he must necessarily have failed on that defense. It does not appear that the evidence was excluded, because the defendant did not propose to prove the other facts essential to his defense. If this was the point of the objection it should have been so stated. The objection was general that it was improper and irrelevant. The Act of Congress of 1862 (12 Stats. at Large, 410, Sec. 7) extended the right of pre-emption to unsurveyed lands in California. We think the exclusion of the testimony was error.

If there was error in allowing the Sheriff to amend his return to the execution, it in no way affected the defendant, for he claimed no title under the defendant in the execution. No rights were acquired under the defendant in the execution, between the times of making and amending the return.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

LOUIS VILHAC v. WILLIAM BIVEN AND ISABELLA BIVEN.

TIME TO FILE AMENDMENTS TO STATEMENT.—The time within which proposed amendments to a statement on motion for a new trial are to be made and filed is left for the regulation of the Court.

Opinion of the Court.

NOTICE OF SETTLEMENT OF STATEMENT.— If notice of the time and place of the settlement of a statement before a Judge on motion for a new trial is given to the appellant, and he does not attend, he cannot afterwards complain of the statement as settled.

SERVICE OF AMENDMENTS TO STATEMENT.— The statute makes no provision for the service of amendments to a statement or a copy thereof upon the adverse party, and if notice is given of the time and place of the settlement of a statement before the Judge, the engrossed statement as settled will not be stricken out because the amendments were not served on the opposite party.

CERTIFICATE TO STATEMENT.— A statement on motion for new trial which is not certified as correct by the parties or by the Judge will not be regarded in the appellate Court.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS IN STATEMENT.— A statement on motion for new trial must specify the particulars wherein it is alleged the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict and the errors upon which the appellant will rely.

TENDER OF MONEY.— A tender of legal tender notes in payment of a note payable in gold coin is not a discharge of the debt.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

A. M. Heslep, for Appellant.

Tyler & Cobb, for Respondent.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was brought to recover the amount due on a promissory note and to foreclose a mortgage of certain real property executed by the defendants to secure the payment of the note. The note, a copy of which is set forth in the complaint, bears date the 5th of October, 1863, and is made payable six months after date, with interest at one and a half per cent per month, in current gold coin of the United States. The mortgage was executed on the day of the date of the note and was duly recorded on that day. The action was commenced on the 18th of July, 1864. On the 6th of August the defendants filed their answer, in which they admit the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage to the plaintiff, and they state that on the 3d of August there was due by reason thereof for the debt and costs incurred, the sum of thirty-two hundred and fifty dollars; but they aver that the sum due on the note and mortgage on the day last mentioned, including the costs then incurred, was paid by one of the defendants to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the amount due him. That such payment was made "in the currency of the United States, known as legal tender notes, commonly called greenbacks."

From the statement of the evidence in the case, it appears that on the 3d of August the defendant William Biven obtained from an officer of the United States Government certain United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks," amounting to the sum of thirty-two hundred and fifty dollars. This money belonged to the United States, and was obtained for the purpose of being used as a tender to the plaintiff in payment of the amount due him.

William Biven was sworn as a witness for the defendants, and testified that to induce the officer to let him have these United States notes, he told him he did not expect the plaintiff would receive them, and that if plaintiff offered to take them, he (Biven) would not let him do so. Another witness testified that when Biven applied for the money the officer told him he could have it to use in making the tender if he would take his (the officer's) brother along to witness it; and the officer at the same time told his brother and the defendant to be sure not to let the plaintiff have the money if he offered to accept it, assigning as a reason therefor that if the plaintiff was allowed to take the money it would ruin him (the officer).

The officer's brother testified that he and Biven then called on the plaintiff, when Biven handed him four bundles of United States notes, three of which contained one thousand dollars each, and one two hundred and fifty dollars, saying to him: "Louis, here is the money I owe you for the mortgage." The plaintiff took the notes, and while counting them, Biven said to him: "I give them to you at par;" to which the plaintiff made no reply, but continued counting. After having counted the money, he handed the package back to the witness, who was near by, and who took possession of them and carried them away with him. The witness further testified as follows: "After I received the money from Vilhac, and just as we had started to go away, he called us back, and said to me he supposed I was a witness to the transaction, and he wished to say he would take the greenbacks at their market value in coin. Biven then said to him: 'No; you cannot have them in that way; if you take them, you must take them at par.' Vilhac then shook his head and turned away, when we left." In answer to an inquiry made by the Court, this witness stated that he went to the plaintiff's place of business to witness the tender and bring back the money.

The Court below, after having heard the evidence, rendered a finding and judgment for the plaintiff. The defendants gave notice of a motion for a new trial, and filed a statement, to which the plaintiff proposed amendments. The statement was settled and engrossed. The application for a new trial was in due time overruled. From the judgment and the order denying a new trial the defendants have appealed.

The statement to be used on the motion for a new trial was filed on the 30th of August, to which the respondent proposed amendments and filed the same on the 30th of September. The appellants moved to strike the proposed amendments from the files of the Court, on the ground that the same were not duly filed nor submitted to the appellants or their counsel. This motion was made after the Court had settled the statement, and it had been engrossed and filed, and also after the appellants' motion for a new trial had been denied. The motion to strike from the files of the Court the proposed amendments, and with it, as a consequence, the engrossed statement, was denied. This ruling of the Court is assigned as erroneous.

The statute does not specify the time within which proposed amendments to a statement prepared and filed to be used on motion for a new trial shall be made or filed. As the statute is silent on the subject, the practice in such cases must necessarily be regulated by the Court. In respect to the service of proposed amendments or a copy thereof, the statute makes no provision. The statute provides that when the moving party's statement is not agreed to by the adverse party, it shall be settled by the Judge upon notice. The appellants do not show that the statement was not settled by the Judge upon notice, but they say the engrossed statement was never submitted to them or their counsel, and that they, as well as their counsel, were wholly ignorant of its existence. It is to be presumed the Judge was judicially satisfied that defendants' counsel had notice of the time and place when and where the statement would be settled. If, after having had notice, the defendants' counsel neglected for any cause to attend before the Judge upon the settlement of the statement, or afterward remained ignorant of the existence of the engrossed statement, they have no cause of complaint. They must bear the consequences of their own negligence.

By the statement as settled, the judgment, in our opinion, was eminently just and should be affirmed. The same result would follow if the settled and engrossed statement was rejected, and the statement prepared and filed on the part of the defendants was substituted in its place. The statute provides that when the statement shall be agreed to, "it shall be accompanied by the certificate of the parties or their attorneys that the same has been agreed upon and is correct." And "when settled by the Judge, the same shall be accompanied with his certificate that the same has been allowed by him and is correct."

The statement prepared and filed by defendants was not accompanied by any certificate of its correctness, and therefore could not be regarded even if the engrossed statement was rejected. Besides this, the statement does not specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to justify the judgment, nor the errors upon which the defendants relied for a new trial. The statute declares that if no such specifications be made the statement shall be disregarded. (Practice Act, Sec. 195; Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.)

The case and points made by defendants are, in our judgment, wholly destitute of merit. The pretended payment was a reprehensible attempt to obtain an unjust advantage of the plaintiff without paying him his due or any part of it.

The judgment is affirmed with ten per cent damages.

Ex Parte H. KELLY on Habeas Corpus.

SENTENCE FOR ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON, ETC.—Upon conviction for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict upon the person of another a bodily injury, the Court may lawfully sentence the offender to pay a fine of five thousand dollars, and direct that he be imprisoned in the County Jail at the rate of two dollars per day until the same is paid.

SAME — PAYMENT OF THE FINE.—In case of such sentence the prisoner is entitled to a credit of two dollars per day for each day he remains in prison, and he may at any time pay the sum then remaining unsatisfied and claim his discharge from custody.

THE defendant was indicted in Sacramento County for an assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to commit bodily injury upon the person of Anton Taylor, committed on the 30th day of April, 1864, and was convicted, and on the 25th day of November, 1864, sentenced by the County Court. August 15th, 1865, the prisoner applied to the Supreme Court to be discharged on habeas corpus.

The judgment is in harmony with the law of the case. Section fifty of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, and section four hundred and sixty of the Act concerning criminal practice are in pari materia and must be read together. There is no conflict between them, and when read together the intent and meaning is obvious. Upon conviction for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict upon the person of another a bodily injury, the Court may lawfully sentence the offender to imprisonment in the State Prison for any term not exceeding two years, or to pay a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or both; and in case a fine is imposed, may further direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, such imprisonment not to exceed one day for every two dollars of the fine. The judgment in this case does not violate any of the foregoing provisions, but on the contrary is in keeping therewith. It imposes a fine of five thousand dollars, and directs "that the defendant be imprisoned in the County Jail at the rate of two dollars per day, until the same be paid." That it is fully authorized by the statute in question there can be no doubt.

The mere fact that by its operation the defendant may be imprisoned in the County Jail, by way of enforcing payment or satisfaction of his fine, for a longer period than he could be lawfully imprisoned in the State Prison by way of punishment, is entitled to no weight. The latter imprisonment is the punishment or a part of it; but the former is no part of the punishment per se, but is merely one of the modes by which the law enforces the satisfaction of the fine which is in itself the punishment or a part of it. The punishment fixed by the statute is imprisonment in the State Prison, or fine, or both; all beyond is mere mode and manner of enforcement. The first is to be satisfied by serving out the prescribed term in the State Prison, and in that way only; but the latter may be satisfied in either of three ways, by voluntary payment of the amount of the fine, or by its collection under execution as in the case of a judgment in a civil action (Crim. Prac. Sec. 461); or by imprisonment in the County Jail not exceeding one day for every two dollars of the fine. The alleged incongruity is apparent only when the mere mode and manner of enforcing the punishment is confounded with the punishment itself and regarded as a part of it, but it wholly disappears when the obvious distinction between the two is kept in view.

There is no force in the point that the defendant is bound to satisfy the whole fine by imprisonment and cannot be allowed to pay the unsatisfied portion of his fine and be thereupon discharged from custody. For each day which he has or may hereafter pass in prison he is entitled to a credit of two dollars upon his fine and he may at any time pay the sum then remaining unsatisfied and claim his discharge from custody.

Let the prisoner be remanded to the custody from whence he came.

WHEN JUDGMENT BECOMES FINAL.—When an order for judgment has been made and regularly entered by the Clerk in the minutes of the Court, and the judgment has been drawn up in form, signed by the Judge, and filed with the Clerk, final judgment has been rendered within the meaning of the terms "rendition of the judgment," as used in section three hundred and thirty-six of the Practice Act, and the time for taking an appeal commences to run.

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT BY CLERK.—The entry of such judgment in the Judgment Book is a mere ministerial duty to be performed by the Clerk.

TIME WITHIN WHICH APPEAL MUST BE TAKEN.—An appeal from a judgment must be taken within one year from the time of its rendition. The failure of the Clerk to enter the judgment in the Judgment Book at the time it is rendered, cannot extend the time within which to appeal.

SAME.—The question whether an appeal from a judgment should not be taken within one year from the time when the order for judgment is made and entered in the minutes of the Court, discussed.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS.—The questions discussed in the opinion as to the time within which appeals must be taken from various orders.

WHEN EXECUTION MAY BE ISSUED.—The question discussed in the opinion as to the time when an execution can be issued on a judgment.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The appeal in this cause was dismissed by the late Supreme Court, on the ground that it was not taken in time. Upon application of appellant's counsel, in which, in view of the supposed importance of the question decided, a large number of the attorneys of this Court not of counsel in the case united, the same Court granted a rehearing.

Upon a former appeal the judgment of the District Court had been reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. The remittitur having been filed in the District Court, the defendant's counsel moved to dismiss the suit on the ground, that the decision of the Supreme Court was a final adjudication against the plaintiff of all the matters in litigation in the cause, and that such judgment of dismissal would be in pursuance of the mandate of that Court. After consideration the District Court sustained the motion, and on the 6th of April, 1861, by its direction an order was entered in the minutes of the Court dismissing the action, and directing a judgment to be entered accordingly. On the same day a bill of exceptions was prepared by appellant's counsel, settled by the Judge, and filed. On the 9th of April, 1861, a formal judgment was drawn up in pursuance of the order entered in the minutes on the sixth, signed by the Judge, and filed in the case. On the 17th of June, 1861, and not before, the judgment thus signed and filed on the 9th of April, was entered by the Clerk in the "Judgment Book." On the 14th of June, 1862, this appeal was taken.

Section three hundred thirty-six of the Practice Act authorizes an appeal to be taken from a final judgment "within one year after the rendition of the judgment." If the judgment is to be regarded as having been rendered on the 17th of June—the time when it was entered in the Judgment Book—within the meaning of the Act, the appeal is in time. But if the 6th of April—when the order for judgment was announced and entered on the minutes of the Court—or the 9th of April—when a formal judgment was signed and filed in the case—is to be regarded as the date of the rendition of the judgment, then the appeal was too late, and it must be dismissed.

The decision must turn upon the construction to be given to the statute. The words, "rendered," and "rendition," and the word "entered," are frequently used in the Practice Act, and in no instance does the latter word appear to us to be used in the same sense as either of the former. Thus, in section one hundred seventy-five, it is provided that the jury, in certain cases, "may render a general or special verdict," and that "the special verdict or finding shall be filed with the Clerk and entered upon the minutes." Of course the rendition of the verdict is something different from the filing or the entry, and must precede both. So in section one hundred ninety-five, notice of intention to move for a new trial must be given "within five days after the rendition of the verdict," or "ten days after receiving written notice of the rendering of the decision of the Judge"—not the entry of the decision. So section one hundred ninety-seven provides that "judgment shall be entered by the Clerk within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict, unless," etc. Section two hundred and one requires the Clerk to keep a "book for the entry of judgments, to be called the 'Judgment Book,' in which each judgment shall be entered," etc. But the entry of a judgment in the Judgment Book presupposes the existence of a judgment rendered, or pronounced, to be entered. The Court renders the judgment, and the Clerk enters it. "After the entry of the judgment," the Clerk is to make up a judgment roll (Section 203,) and "after filing the judgment roll" he is to docket the judgment, and from the time of docketing the judgment becomes a lien upon real estate.

"The party in whose favor judgment is given may at any time within five years after the entry thereof issue a writ of execution," etc. (Sec. 209.) Although judgment may have been given or rendered, execution cannot issue until it is entered, and although so far perfected as to authorize execution, it does not even then become a lien upon real estate until docketed. We now come to section three hundred thirty-six, which provides that "an appeal may be taken:

"First — From a final judgment in an action, or special proceeding commenced in the Court in which the judgment is rendered within one year after the rendition of the judgment.

"Second — From a judgment rendered on an appeal from an inferior Court within ninety days after the rendition of the judgment."

Third — From certain orders specified. "within sixty days after the order is made and entered in the minutes of the Court." In this last class of cases there is a marked change in the language. In the case of appeal from an order the time commences to run, not from the making of the order, but from the time when it is "entered in the minutes of the Court." If the construction claimed by appellant for the word rendition is to prevail, the third clause of section three hundred thirty-six might just as well have ended with the word "made," and the phrase "entered in the minutes of the Court" has no office to perform, and means nothing. But we are not to presume that the Legislature intended nothing by this change of phraseology. It evidently was designed to add something to the idea already expressed by the word "made." Section three hundred thirty-eight authorizes a party who desires "a statement of the case to be annexed to the record of the judgment or order," to prepare such statement "within twenty days after the entry of such judgment or order." After a careful review of these and other sections of the Practice Act we cannot resist the conclusion that the terms "rendition" and "entry," are used in different senses, and to express the idea appropriate to those words respectively; and that there is a rendition of a judgment before it is actually entered in the Judgment Book. Different stages of the proceeding are recognized by the statute as initial points from which other proceedings may be taken, or other rights acquired. Thus the right of appeal attaches, and time for taking it commences to run from the rendition of the judgment by the Court; the right to issue execution from the time of the entry of the judgment rendered; and the judgment lien upon real estate attaches from the docketing of the judgment rendered and entered.

We do not perceive that any argument can be drawn against this construction from the provisions of sections five hundred ten and five hundred eleven. Section five hundred ten simply allows two days to the prevailing party to file his bill of costs. Section five hundred eleven directs the Clerk to "include in the judgment entered up by him any interest on the verdict or decision of the Court from the time it (the verdict or decision, not the judgment) was rendered or made, and the costs, if the same have been taxed or ascertained." (If—as appellant seems to suppose—the words, "it was rendered," refer to the judgment, then we have in this section an express recognition of the distinction between the rendition and the entry of a judgment; for the Clerk is to "include in the judgment entered up by him any interest * * * from the time it was rendered." Of course, if the judgment is not to be regarded as rendered till it is entered, no interest could accrue between the rendition and the entry of the judgment.) In case the costs are not taxed, or ascertained, it directs the Clerk, within two days after they are taxed or ascertained, to "insert the same in a blank, left in the judgment for that purpose." The judgment is not always rendered immediately after the rendition of the verdict, or even after the finding of facts by the Judge or referee has been filed. A special verdict is sometimes returned in pursuance of section one hundred seventy-five. In such case, it not unfrequently happens, that the question as to what judgment shall be rendered on the verdict is reserved for argument, or for further consideration, as provided in sections one hundred seventy-eight, one hundred ninety-seven and one hundred ninety-eight. So, after the facts have been found by the Court or referee, the same course may often be pursued. It thus not unfrequently happens, that the judgment is not rendered for several months after the rendition of the verdict, or filing of the findings of facts. Doubtless such cases were intended to be provided for by section five hundred eleven, which authorizes the interest to be included down to the rendition of the judgment. The argument of appellant, based upon this section, is just as cogent against considering the time for taking the appeal to commence from the entry as from the rendition of the judgment, as that term is construed by us. For the costs are to be inserted in a blank left for the purpose in the judgment actually entered. And when there is a contest in the taxation of costs, the contest may not be settled and the costs ascertained for months after the entry of the judgment, and of course the amount could not be known, and the appellant could not determine whether he wished to review that part of the judgment until these facts are ascertained.

Upon the construction given by us there are not two final judgments—as is argued by appellant. The Clerk enters the judgment rendered by the Court. The Court pronounces the judgment, and the Clerk performs the ministerial duty of entering it. The judgment rendered is the judgment entered.

We have thus far endeavored to solve the question by a careful examination and comparison of the various provisions of the statute, under the test of the ordinary rules of construction.

Upon examination of such decisions as we have been able to discover upon similar language in other statutes, we find that our construction is also sustained by authority. Section twenty-one, Chapter nine, of the Revised Statutes of New York (Ed. of 1836), marg. p. five hundred ninety-four, is as follows:

Sec. 21. "All writs of error upon any judgment or final determination rendered in any cause, in any Court of law and of record in this State, shall be brought within two years after the rendering of such judgment or final determination, and not after; except in the cases specified in the next two sections."

In Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. 527, there was a motion to dismiss the writ of error. The second ground of the motion was, in the language of the Chancellor: "The omission to bring the writ of error within two years after the actual rendition of the judgment in the Supreme Court;" and the solution of the question depended upon the signification to be given to the words, "rendering of such judgment." In deciding the point the Chancellor said (527): "By the English Statute of Limitations as to writs of error, the plaintiff was required to sue out his writ within twenty years after the judgment was signed or entered of record, with the usual saving in favor of infants, etc. But in the former revision of the laws in this State, the language of the statute, as well as the time of the limitation, was changed. The period of limitation was reduced to five years, without any exception in favor of infants, femme coverts, etc.; and the statute required the writ of error to be brought within five years after the rendition of the judgment, instead of directing the time for suing out the writ of error to commence from the signing or entering the judgment on record as in the English statute. The language of the statute, as contained in the recent revisions, is, that the writ of error shall be brought within two years after the rendering of the judgment or final determination of the Court, and not after; with an exception in favor of infants, lunatics, etc., for a further time, not exceeding five years from the time of rendering the judgment. I am at a loss to account for this change in language from the English statute, except upon the supposition that the Legislature intended the statute should commence running from the time the judgment was actually given, which seems to be the natural meaning of the expression—within two years after the rendering of such judgment or final determination."

Senator Tracy also said (528): "It strikes me that the more obvious and natural import of the expression 'rendering of such judgment,' is the annunciation or declaring the decision of the Court indicated by the rule for judgment; and this construction is fortified by the fact that our statute varies in its expression from the English statute which refers in terms to the filing of the judgment record."

A similar question arose upon the same statutory provision in Lee v. Tillotson, 4 Hill, 29, in which the same construction was given to the statute. Mr. Justice Bronson said: "The judgment or final determination in the cause was rendered in July, 1840, when the motion which had been made to set aside the report of the referees was denied. The record which was afterwards filed was not the judgment, but only a written memorial of the judgment which had been previously rendered."

Opinion of the Court.

The only difference between the language of the New York Act here construed and our own, is, the former has the word "rendering," and the latter "rendition," words of precisely equivalent import in the connection in which they stand.

In this case the judgment announced was not only "indicated by the rule (order) for judgment actually entered in the minutes of the Court on the sixth, but it was drawn up in form in the precise terms in which it was to be entered, signed by the Judge and filed in the cause on the 9th of April. It was the judgment of the Court. Nothing remained to be done but the mere ministerial duty to be performed by the Clerk of copying it into the record. At that date, at least, the judgment had been rendered.

Possibly, the formal judgment thus signed and filed may be regarded in legal contemplation as having been entered from the time of the filing. Such was the rule in the old chancery practice. (Gay v. Gay, 10 Paige, 375; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 341.) But it is unnecessary to determine that question now. We are of the opinion that there was a "rendition of the judgment" within the meaning of section three hundred thirty-six of the Practice Act as early, at least, as the 9th of April. This being the case the appeal was not taken in time.

Appeal dismissed.

THE PEOPLE v. JOHN KELLY.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASE.—An instruction to a jury in a criminal case that they have a right to take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances in making up their verdict, is to be understood as limited to the circumstances in evidence.

POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.—In a trial for larceny, where the testimony for the people consists of many suspicious circumstances, one of which is the possession of the property stolen by the defendant soon after the larceny was committed, if the defendant fails to account for this possession it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration with other circumstances tending to show his guilt.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.—If instructions given in a criminal case embody the law of the case, it is not error to refuse other instructions which also embody the law.

REBUTTING TESTIMONY FOR THE PROSECUTION.—The defendant in a criminal action is as much bound to produce testimony to rebut testimony for the prosecution which merely tends to prove his guilt as any other testimony introduced by the prosecution.

APPEAL from the County Court, Solano County.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Wm. S. Wells, for Appellant.

The second instruction given on behalf of the people is irrelevant, and tended to mislead the jury by reason of its implied assumption that suspicious facts were in evidence which made it necessary to explain the possession. If such were the proper rules, we have gained nothing upon the rules that laid down possession to be prima facie evidence of guilt; for the Government has only to put in evidence the most trivial circumstance, as, for instance, the presence of the defendant at or near the time when and the place where the act is said to have been committed, follow it by proof of possession, and the burden of proof is conclusively thrown upon the prisoner. The instances given in 3 Greenleaf, Sec. 31, show that the character of the testimony required in such cases as the one at bar must be matters or circumstances naturally calculated to awaken suspicion, inconsistent with innocence, and tending ex parte to establish guilt. (The People v. Chambers, 18 Cal. 382; People v. Ah Kee, 20 Cal. 177.)

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The evidence, though only substantially given, is ample to sustain the verdict before this Court. The law is correctly given in the several instructions, and is applicable to the case made out by the evidence. There are many suspicious circumstances shown by the testimony indicative of guilt, which, together with the recent possession of the property, warrant the verdict. In truth, if the law in this State is to be carried any further than People v. Chambers, we may despair of a conviction for larceny from circumstantial evidence. It is exceedingly doubtful if this State has adopted the better rule as to the recent possession of stolen property, and it is presumed the rule will not be made any more liberal to defendants.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted for grand larceny. He was tried and found guilty and sentenced to be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of five years. The evidence against him was mostly of a circumstantial nature, and though it is not insisted, it was not sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty, if the case had been properly submitted to the jury, yet the defendant claims that the Court erred in matters of law on the trial to his prejudice, and that in consequence thereof the verdict and the judgment pronounced upon it should be reversed.

At the request of the District Attorney the Court instructed the jury as follows: "Although the jury are to be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant in order to convict, yet they have a right to take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances in making up their verdict, and if from such circumstances they believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the prisoner is guilty, although there may have been no eye witness of his taking the property, they must find a verdict of guilty." The defendant's counsel insists that the instruction did not limit the jury to the circumstances proved in the case. It must be presumed the Court was speaking of the circumstances which were in evidence, and that the jury understood the charge as referring to those circumstances and none others; because in such cases the jury is presumed to be composed of "good and lawful men," possessed of at least ordinary good sense, and capable of appreciating the obligation of their oaths to render a verdict "according to the evidence." The obvious meaning of the instruction is this, that if the jury, from all the circumstances in evidence, believed without any reasonable doubt intervening, that the defendant was guilty of the crime alleged against him, then the verdict should be in accordance with such belief, even though no one saw the defendant steal the money described in the indictment. The instruction is an inculcation of a plain rule of law, namely, that if the circumstances proved establish the truth of the fact in issue to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment honestly and conscientiously exercised, then the verdict should in effect determine the existence of such facts; or in other words, should be according to the evidence. (Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 320; Sumner v. The State, 5 Blackf. 580.)

The Court also instructed the jury, at the request of the District Attorney, in the following words: "If the jury believe that the property was stolen and was found in the possession of the prisoner very shortly after being stolen, and the prisoner failed to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, it is a circumstance tending to show his guilt; and the accused is bound to explain the possession in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts."

The fact of recent possession of stolen property standing wholly unconnected with any other circumstances, is of very slight persuasive force. (3 Greenleaf's Ev., Sec. 31.). But the circumstance is permitted to be proved as a relevant fact, constituting an item of the aggregate of facts and circumstances necessary to warrant the conclusion of the defendant's guilt. While a single circumstance tending to establish the truth of the charge might not authorize the conclusion that the charge was true, all the circumstances, of which the circumstance merely tending to establish the main fact was one, might, taken together, be of a conclusive nature, and satisfy the jury to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt.

In The People v. Ah Ki, 20 Cal. 178, the Court charged the jury that the accused was bound to explain his possession of goods recently stolen, and how he obtained them. In reviewing this charge Mr. Justice Norton held that its effect was to convey to the jury the idea that the possession of the stolen goods, unexplained, was of itself sufficient to authorize a conviction, contrary to the rule laid down in The People v. Chambers, 18 Cal. 382; but he said: "If this charge could be understood as only stating that the accused was bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, it would not be erroneous."

The instruction under consideration conforms to the law as declared in the case of The People v. Ah Ki, and is in no sense repugnant to the doctrine laid down in The People v. Chambers, (18 Cal. 382), or of the recent case of The People v. Antonio, (27 Cal. 404), and hence we hold the instruction correct.

The counsel for the defendant submitted nine instructions which he asked the Court to give the jury—seven of which the Court gave, but refused the others for reasons assigned, which will be stated hereafter.

The instructions given comprehended in clear and direct language the questions of law involved in the case. If the jury heeded these instructions, as we must intend they did, we do not see how any injury could have resulted to the defendant from the refusal of the Court to give the other instructions requested, of which the jury knew nothing, even were it admitted that they embodied the law as it is; for it is not to be presumed that either the Court or counsel read to or in the presence of the jury the requested instructions which the Court refused to grant. Requested instruction number two the Court refused on the ground that it was calculated to mislead the jury as to the law. It reads as follows: "The People must make out their case by evidence that will amount to proof of the facts alleged in the indictment, and the defendant is not required to produce evidence to rebut such evidence on the part of the prosecution as merely tends to prove the fact in question." The portion of the instructions given was, in effect, the same as that covered by the first proposition contained in the requested proposition here set forth in hæc verba, and in connection therewith the jury were told that proof beyond a reasonable doubt was necessary to establish a fact against the prisoner, and that if there was any such doubt as to any particular fact essential to be proved to establish the defendant's guilt, he was entitled to the benefit of the doubt and to be acquitted; and, also, that if, upon a review of the evidence, there existed in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the defendant taking the property, as charged in the indictment, then he must be acquitted.

The second branch of this requested instruction that "the defendant is not required to produce evidence to rebut such evidence on the part of the prosecution as merely tends to prove the fact in question" in order to secure his acquittal, as abstractly stated, was properly refused because evidence which merely tends to prove a material fact may become a constituent portion of the aggregate of proof which in its sum establishes the principal matter in issue beyond all reasonable doubt. Then, when in the first place a criminal charge is made out by all the evidence taken together, the defendant is bound, in order to overcome the case so made, to produce evidence in rebuttal, which evidence in rebuttal may be directed to and necessary for the overthrow of that produced on the side of the prosecution tending merely to the proof of a material fact. Hence, to have charged the jury as requested would have been improper.

Requested instruction number eight the Court refused to give to the jury on substantially the same ground as in the one noticed. It reads as follows: "Even though the jury should believe from the evidence that the money was stolen, and was found in the possession of defendant within a short time after its taking, the defendant is not bound to show to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury that he became possessed of it otherwise than by stealing. The evidence may fall far short of establishing that, and yet create in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to his guilt." This instruction proceeds upon the theory that the only evidence in the case going to show that the defendant was guilty consisted in the fact that the stolen money was found in his possession soon after it was stolen. If it were admitted that the defendant's recent possession of the stolen property was the only evidence against him, the substantive portion of the requested charge would have been in consonance with the law as declared in The People v. Chambers. The rule relating to the question passed on in the case last cited was well stated in one of the instructions given by the Court to the jury at the defendant's request in the following words: "Even if the jury believe that the defendant had possession of the property, and that the same had been recently stolen, the fact is not of itself sufficient to authorize his conviction; it is merely a circumstance to be considered in determining his guilt."

The charge and instructions given seem to have been full, and a just exposition of the law applicable to the case before the jury. We are of the opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. JONATHAN HUNT v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

WHEN WRIT OF MANDATE MAY BE APPLIED FOR.—The writ of mandate may be applied for to ascertain whether a Board, officer, or tribunal has the power to perform the duty required by the relator, and mandamus is the only speedy and adequate remedy that the relator possesses to test the question of power.

WHEN WRIT OF MANDATE WILL BE REFUSED.—When the Board, officer or tribunal against which the writ of mandate is asked has not the legal authority to perform the act required by the relator, the writ will be refused.

MANDAMUS AGAINST BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.—If a Board of Supervisors of a county refuse to act on a claim against the county presented to them, for the reason that they have not the power to approve of it, mandamus is the proper action to determine whether they possess such power.

Opinion of the Court.

COMMISSIONS OF COLLECTOR OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The Collector of Taxes for the City and County of San Francisco is not entitled to any commissions or salary for the collection of that portion of the revenues assessed and collected for the use of said city and county.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The relator commenced the action on the 6th day of April, 1861, and upon judgment having been rendered against him in the Court below, appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John B. Felton, for Appellant.

Horace Hawes, for Respondents.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

Jonathan Hunt, the former Tax Collector of San Francisco, filed his petition in the District Court for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Supervisors of said city and county to approve his demand upon the Treasury for commissions alleged to be due him for the collection of taxes. The Court, having issued an alternative writ and the cause having been heard, denied the petitioner's motion that the mandamus be made peremptory and dismissed the proceedings, on the ground that the relator was not entitled to his remedy in that proceeding. The respondents now insist that mandamus is not the proper remedy in the case. They state in their answer to the petition that they have not lawful authority to approve the demand of the relator on the Treasury, because the same is not authorized by law. Other grounds of refusal to approve the accounts are alleged, but it is unnecessary to consider them, because if the Board based their refusal upon the want of legal authority to approve the demand, the objection to the account for matters of form, or because the Tax Collector was indebted to the Treasury, or had not discharged his duties according to law, would be idle and useless — as nugatory in every respect as would be the subsequent proceedings of a Court after it had adjudged that it had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action.

The refusal to approve the demand on the alleged ground of the want of lawful authority to approve it, amounts in substance to a refusal to act upon it.

The question whether the Board has, under the law, competent power to allow or approve the demand, which is strictly a jurisdictional question, stands in limine and must be first disposed of, and if determined against the asserted power, the Board can proceed no further; but if the decision is in favor of such jurisdiction, then the Board may consider and pass upon all the questions they have raised in this case or any others that may be presented, bearing any relation to the demand under consideration. If the claimant is dissatisfied with the determination of the Board, after they have proceeded to act upon it, and have disallowed it wholly or in part, he may then commence his action against the county; but he has no cause of action against the county for the recovery of a sum of money until he has presented his claim or demand to the Board for allowance, and the Board, after consideration thereof, have failed or refused to allow the same or some part of it. (Wood's Digest, p. 696, Sec. 24; Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 254; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121.) We are cited to no law, that exempts the City and County of San Francisco from the operation of the general Act above cited.

If the Board, instead of proceeding to consider the claim, refuse to act upon it—and we consider their allegation that they have not legal authority to approve the claim, though coupled with reasons why they cannot approve it, if they should consider it, as simply equivalent to a refusal to act for the want of legal power to approve—then mandamus is the proper remedy, and we think the only plain, speedy and adequate remedy that the claimant possesses, to test this preliminary jurisdictional question. (Frank v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 668; Emeric v. Gilman, 10 Cal. 404; San Francisco Gas Company v. Board of Supervisors of San Francisco, 11 Cal.

Opinion of the Court.

42; People ex rel. Plumb v. Cortland County, 24 How. Pr. 119; People ex rel. Hasbrouck v. New York, 21 Id. 322.)

If the decision of the Board on that question is sustained, the Court refuses to issue the peremptory mandamus and the controversy between the claimant and the Board there ends; but if, on the other hand, the decision is against the Board, then they must proceed to consider the claim, and if the claimant is dissatisfied with their action, he may commence a suit against the county. The Court will not, under the proceedings by mandamus, control or interfere with the discretion of the Board in matters where they possess it, or supervise their actions upon questions of fact. It interposes its authority upon questions of law, and simply directs the Board to proceed to act upon the claim, in the same manner that they would have done, had they determined the legal question, as the Court decide it.

It by no means follows, that because it is held that mandamus is the proper remedy, by which to ascertain whether the Board possesses the power asserted by the relator, that therefore, they must have and exercise that power in the given case, but the Court having investigated the question under the alternative writ, and determined that the Board has not legal authority to proceed as the relator has demanded of them, will refuse the peremptory mandamus and dismiss the proceedings. Cases almost without number are found in the books, in which mandamus was resorted to as the appropriate remedy to ascertain if the Board, officer or tribunal, had the power to perform the duty required by the relator; and the Court refused the peremptory writ and dismissed the proceedings, not because it was not the proper remedy, but because the Board, officer or tribunal were not required by law to perform the duty.

It is said by Mr. Justice Harris, in The People v. Supervisors of Greene, 12 Barb. S. C. 220: "To entitle him to this remedy (mandamus) two things must appear: First, that he has a legal right to have something done by the party to whom he seeks to have the writ directed, which has not been done; and secondly, that he has no specific legal remedy to which he can resort to compel the performance of this duty." We have already seen that he has no legal remedy against the county until the Board has acted on his claim. Has the relator a legal right to have the Board proceed to allow or approve his demands upon the Treasury of the city and county? If he does not possess that right, then the judgment of the Court below refusing to issue the peremptory writ and ordering the proceedings to be dismissed must be affirmed. This brings us to the consideration of the principal question in the case, which, in view of its public importance, we ought to have been permitted to pass upon disembarrassed of the preliminary point we have had before us.

That question is whether the Tax Collector is entitled to be paid from the Treasury of the city and county, the commissions he claims in this case. This involves the consideration of many sections of the Act of the Legislature passed April 19th, 1856, organizing the government of the City and County of San Francisco, commonly known as the Consolidation Act, and of the Acts amendatory thereof; also of the general revenue laws in force from 1854 to 1860, as well as of special revenue laws applicable to San Francisco alone.

The Tax Collector presented to the Board his three accounts, claiming that there was due to him from the city and county, commissions amounting in the aggregate to seven thousand three hundred and three dollars and fifty-nine cents, for the collection of that portion of the revenue which was assessed and collected for the use of the city and county and paid over to the Treasurer by him in 1860, the main portion paid by him having been assessed for the years 1859-60 and 1860-61. The accounts do not include any charge for the collection of the State's portion of the taxes, but the commissions are calculated and charged on that portion which was collected as the portion belonging to the city and county.

The commissions are computed and claimed at the rates provided in the Revenue Act of 1855. (Statutes 1855, p. 120.)

Opinion of the Court.

The Board deny his right to those commissions and say that it was intended by the Consolidation Act that he should be compensated for all his services, by fees and by commissions payable out of the State's portion of the funds.

One of the leading objects intended to be accomplished by the Consolidation Act, was to secure economy in administering the city and county government. A large amount of fees and compensations in various forms, before that time payable out of the County Treasury, was stricken off in the Act, and officers were required in a great measure to look to other sources for the payment of their services.

Instead of keeping up two sets of officers—one for the city, and another for the county, as was previously done—the Act provided for one set of officers, who were required to discharge the duties that had pertained to the officers of both the city and county government. Many other provisions were made, calculated to relieve the Treasury of the city and county in some measure from the burdens of the municipal government.

All the officers charged with the maintenance of that government, were named in the Act, and the compensation to which each of them should be entitled, whether by the way of salaries, fees or commissions, was expressly mentioned—unless the Tax Collector formed an exception—and in case where the compensation was payable out of the City and County Treasury, the amount, or the maximum amount, was specially fixed in the Act.

The Tax Collector, under the Consolidation Act of 1856, was charged with the performance of only a portion of the duties that devolve upon that office in other counties, under the general revenue laws. At the passage of that Act the Sheriff was the Collector of Taxes in San Francisco, but it was provided by section seventy-seven of the Act that all taxes should be directly paid to the Treasurer; “and in default of such payment before the time when the Tax Collector may be authorized by law to seize and sell the property therefor, the said Tax Collector shall proceed to collect said taxes, together with his legal fees, by seizure and sale of the property liable, in the mode prescribed by law for the collection of such State and county taxes," and that upon the payment of the taxes to the Treasurer before the property was sold, and upon the payment to the Tax Collector of his fees, for the services rendered by him, the property should be released from sale. This section clearly entitled him to all the fees for his services, that were allowed by law to the officer, whose duty it was, under the revenue laws, to seize and sell property for delinquent taxes.

The Act has not directly made provision for the payment of any further sum for his services, either by way of salary or a commission on the amount collected by him; and as if to make it clear and unmistakable that it was not intended that he should not receive the commissions given by the general revenue laws upon the city and county taxes, it was provided by section seventy-eight that upon his final settlement, according to the revenue law, he should pay over to the Treasurer "the full amount of taxes by him collected and not previously paid over, without any deduction of commissions, fees or otherwise." Thus, the commissions that the Tax Collectors in other counties were entitled to retain, were, by the Consolidation Act, required to be paid into the Treasury, and if he would claim the repayment thereof, he must show the provision of law authorizing the payment to be made out of the Treasury; for section eighty-two, which seems to have been designed to cut off all constructive fees, commission and compensation, declares that "no payments can be made from the Treasury, or out of the public funds of said city and county, unless the same be specially authorized by this Act." This restriction would not prevent him from receiving from the Treasury, payable out of the State's funds, the commissions for collecting the State's portion of the taxes. Provision is made in the Act for the payment of all other officers, who are entitled to be paid out of the city and county funds in the Treasury; but no section of the Act is cited specially authorizing any payment therefrom to the Tax Collector.

Under the Revenue Act of 1854, which was in force at the time of the passage of the Consolidation Act, the Sheriff was the collector of all the property taxes, and he was authorized to collect his own fees, and on settlement with the Auditor, to retain his commissions on the amount collected, and was required to pay the balance over to the Treasurer; but under the Consolidation Act, the Tax Collector, as we have already seen, was required to pay over the whole amount collected for taxes, without any deductions for commissions. It appears from a review of the Act, that it was intended that the Tax Collector should be charged only with the collection of delinquent taxes, and that he should receive for his compensation the fees allowed by the revenue law for the seizure and sale of property, and his commissions on the State's funds collected by him, but should have no claim upon the city and county funds, for commissions for collecting the same.

Such was the position of the Tax Collector under the Consolidation Act in 1856. The Revenue Act of 1857 effected a material change in the duties as well as the compensation of the Tax Collector in the City and County of San Francisco. He was required to collect all the taxes assessed upon real and personal property, and was entitled to all the fees and commissions on the collection of taxes that the Sheriff would have received under section one hundred eleven of the Revenue Act of 1854, as amended in 1855, except so far as that section was modified or restrained by the Consolidation Act, and the Revenue Act of 1857. The revenue laws of the State at large, after the passage of the Act of 1857, subject to the modifications of the Consolidation Act, were in force in San Francisco at the time the taxes in this case were collected and paid over.

No question is made in respect to the right of the Tax Collector to all the fees that the Tax Collectors in other counties were entitled to, under the revenue laws in force in 1857, and it is conceded that the fees for seizure, advertisement and sale of property, and for the execution of certificates of sale and tax deeds, and any other fees of the like character, belonged to him, and were not required to be accounted for by him; nor is any doubt expressed by the respondents as to his being entitled to the commissions specified in section one hundred eleven, as amended by the Act of 1855, upon the portion of the revenue collected for State purposes, and that is expressly conceded to him. But the issue is made upon his right to commissions under that section, upon that portion of the revenue collected for city and county purposes.

That section, at the time of the passage of the Act of the 17th of April, 1855, establishes the rates of commissions payable to the Tax Collectors throughout the State, except so far as the same were modified or restrained by special enactments; and in respect to the City and County of San Francisco, it had not been expressly repealed at the time of the collection of the taxes on which the commissions in this case are claimed. Has the Act been repealed or modified by implication, in whole or in part?

The ninety-sixth section of the general Revenue Act of 1854, which permitted the Tax Collector to retain his commissions, upon settlement and paying over to the Treasurer the balance of the several funds in his hands, after deducting his commission, was expressly repealed by section fifty-five of the Revenue Act of 1857, and that Act contains no provision similar in substance or effect, nor does any subsequent Act that is applicable to the City and County of San Francisco, that we have been able to find; but the Act of 1857, section thirty-six, provides that the Tax Collector, at the times therein stated, shall "pay to the County Treasurer all money in his hands belonging to or collected for the use of the State and county." This law, the appellant has pursued, and his learned counsel makes no question that it was the Tax Collector's duty to pay to the Treasurer, all the money collected by him for State, and city and county taxes.

The money having been rightfully and properly paid into the City and County Treasury, the question is narrowed down to the inquiry as to the right of the Tax Collector to demand the repayment to him of commissions for the collection of the city and county taxes, as a legal claim on the Treasury. It would seem from the Act of 1857, that the Legislature, while taking from the Treasurer and committing to the Tax Collector, the collection of the taxes upon property, was at the same time studious to preserve unimpaired the several restrictions contained in the Consolidation Act, designed for the protection of the Treasury, and the limiting of the compensation to be paid to the officers of the city and county. It is provided in section fifty-six that nothing in that Act shall be construed "to remove or otherwise affect or impair any restriction now fixed by law, as to the compensation of any officer of said city or county, or otherwise in any manner to authorize any expenditure or payment to be made out of the Treasury, or any public funds of said city or county, beyond what is now authorized by law, except for State purposes." The intention manifested by that provision is too plain to admit of doubt or question.

Officers charged by that Act with the performance of duties, for or on behalf of the State, were not forbidden, but by inference were permitted, to resort to the City and County Treasury for compensation for their services; but all the restrictions then existing calculated to limit the appropriations from the Treasury for services performed for the city and county, were preserved and continued in full force. It is argued with much earnestness, that as the Tax Collector performed great and important services in behalf of the city and county, that therefore it must have been intended by the Legislature, that he should receive all the commissions that the Tax Collectors in other counties were entitled to, under the same general law; and to make the argument more cogent and the presumption of the legislative intent the stronger, the argument proceeds on the theory that a denial of compensation for services rendered for the city and county, is a denial of any compensation whatever. This, as we have seen, is a misapprehension of the law, for he is evidently entitled to his commissions for collecting the State's portion of the revenue, and to his fees in proceedings to collect the delinquent taxes, which together might, in the opinion of the Legislature, amount to an ample compensation. If the position of the respondents is true, it will be found that this is not altogether an exceptional case, for in some of the States, the officers who are paid by fees, receive nothing in criminal cases from the State or county. In most of the States the officers charged with the collection and disbursement of public funds, whose duty it is also to collect and disburse public school funds, receive but small, if any, fees or compensation for administering the school funds. The Consolidation Act presents several instances of the same policy. According to amendments of that Act passed in 1857, the Sheriff, County Clerk, Recorder, Surveyor, Justices of the Peace and Constables are entitled to no fees or compensation for services for which, under the general laws, they would have been authorized to charge the city and county, but in lieu thereof, a part of those officers receive a small salary.

The District Attorney receives a salary, but instead of his receiving the fees that the same officer is entitled to in other counties under the general law, those fees are paid into the Treasury as a special fund. The Compensation of the Treasurer affords another instance. It is provided that he shall receive a salary of four thousand dollars, and such fees and commissions as are by law a State charge or allowable out of the State's funds. If the Legislature had reduced his salary to one dollar it could not have been said with propriety, that therefore it shall be presumed that it was intended that he should receive commissions on the city and county funds, for the Legislature may have deemed his fees and commissions, receivable out of the State's funds, an ample compensation for his services rendered for the city and county as well as the State. No reason can be assigned that will preclude the Legislature from restricting an officer in a particular county, to a given source of compensation, while those in other counties may resort to several sources, that will not apply with equal force, to prevent the Legislature from establishing different salaries and rates of fees and commissions in the several counties.

The third subdivision of section ninety-five of the Consolidation Act is cited by the appellant as conclusive of this question, and clearly showing that the Tax Collector is entitled to the commissions in controversy. The language of the subdivision, as amended in 1857, is in some respects different from that in the original Act. It is as follows: "Third—Out of the General Fund, the fixed salaries or compensation of the Assessor and his deputies, the salaries fixed by law, of the Judge of the Superior Court, and other officers of said city and county, and of the officers of the Fire Department, and the legal fees of jurors and witnesses in criminal cases where the same by law are payable out of the County Treasury." Commissions are not directly mentioned, but perhaps they are included in the more comprehensive term "compensation." Neither this nor any of the subdivisions of that section purport to establish the rates of fees, commissions or salaries of any of the officers; but the main object of this section is to declare out of what fund in the City and County Treasury, payment shall be made on account of the several classes of services and debts rendered for, or owing by the city and county. We must look elsewhere to find the rates of compensation for the services of the officers. In the case of the Tax Collector, the rate is found in section one hundred eleven, of the Act of 1854, as amended April 17th, 1855, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the Consolidation Act, all of which are saved, as before stated, by section fifty-six of the Revenue Act of 1857. It will be observed also, that it is provided by subdivision third, above quoted, that the salaries, fees and compensations are to be paid out of the General Fund, where the same are payable out of the County Treasury; and it is beyond all question that it was not the intention to provide that all the salaries, fees and commissions for county officers that were or might be fixed by general laws, should be satisfied from the Treasury of the city and county without regard to the restrictions of the Consolidation Act. That subdivision does not regulate, either generally or specially, the compensation to be paid, but when the amount of that compensation is ascertained, it directs from what fund it shall be paid.

Opinion of the Court.

We subject the Tax Collector to no rule that we do not equally apply to all the other city and county officers similarly situated. Take the Recorder, as he stood under the amendments of the Consolidation Act in 1857. He has been discharging the duties of his office for one year, and during that time he has performed a large amount of official business, both for private persons and for the city and county. To ascertain the measure of his compensation he examines the general law (unless there was a special one applicable to San Francisco) fixing the Recorder's fees. He claims and receives those fees from private persons; and entertaining the view of the law that the Tax Collector does, he presents to the proper officers his account against the city and county for a large amount of services performed for the city and county at the same rate of fees that he charged private persons, and he is met with the objection that by the Consolidation Act he is entitled to a salary of fifty dollars instead of the fees claimed. In other words, he is entitled to such compensation for his services rendered for the city and county, as the Legislature directs to be paid to him, and no more.

The appellant's construction of subdivision third of section ninety-five, if it could be maintained, would remove most of the restrictions of the Consolidation Act that were intended to limit the appropriations from the city and county funds, for services rendered for her by her officers, who under the general laws receive their compensation in fees and commissions. The Consolidation Act was passed subsequently to the Act establishing the rates of the Tax Collector's commissions; and by the provisions of the Act requiring the taxes to be paid directly to the Treasurer, and allowing him only commissions as Treasurer, not those of the Tax Collector, the Act of 1855 regulating the Tax Collector's fees was suspended, so far as San Francisco was concerned — but perhaps it was not repealed. Upon the passage of the Revenue Act of 1857, the collection of taxes was given to the Tax Collector, an office then existing under the city and county government, and acting under certain restrictions precluding him from receiving payment from the Treasury for services performed for the city and county; and when the collection of taxes was committed to his hands, those restrictions were not expressly repealed, and it cannot be said that they were repealed by implication, because, as already remarked, the Legislature seemed to be careful to preserve all the restrictions and limitations of the Consolidation Act. It is declared in section eleven of said Act, that "no fees or compensation, other than as expressly allowed in this Act, shall be received by any officer of said city and county, or any district, nor shall any allowance be made to them or any of them beyond the fixed compensation aforesaid, under the name of office rent, fuel, lights, stationery, contingencies or otherwise." And the same prohibition, only in more comprehensive language, is found in the Act of 1857, section eleven, amendatory of that Act. This restriction was applicable to the Tax Collector, upon his entering upon the discharge of further duties, as clearly as to the Treasurer, who was relieved of the performance of duties theretofore incumbent upon him, or as to any officer of the city and county government.

We are of the opinion that the Act of the 17th of April, 1855, was not expressly repealed, but that it was modified and restricted in its operation, so as to accord with the provisions of the Consolidation Act, and that so far as it was in conflict with those provisions it was repealed by implication. And we are further of the opinion that the restrictions and limitations of the Consolidation Act, and the amendatory Act of 1857, were not repealed, either expressly or by implication, so far as the Tax Collector is concerned, by the Revenue Act of 1857.

We therefore hold that the appellant was not entitled to the commissions claimed in the accounts presented by him to the Board of Supervisors, and that the Board had not legal power or authority to approve or allow them.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

Mr. Justice SHAFER, having been of counsel, did not sit on the trial of this case.

Mr. Justice SAWYER expressed no opinion.

By the Court, RHODES, J., on petition for rehearing.

We are satisfied of the correctness of the conclusions to which we have arrived in this cause, but in argument we used language more comprehensive than the necessities of the case required, or perhaps was justified by the statutes under consideration. We said that "All the officers charged with the maintenance of that government (the government of the City and County of San Francisco) were named in the Act; and the compensation to which each of them was entitled, whether by way of salaries, fees or commissions, was expressly mentioned — unless the Tax Collector formed an exception — and in case where the compensation was payable out of the City and County Treasury, the amount, or the maximum amount, was specially fixed in the Act." This does not comprehend such officers or employes as are suggested by counsel in his petition for rehearing — such as the officers of the Fire Department, officers and employes of the Hospital, City Attorney, Judge of the Superior Court, etc. We intended to include those officers who, under some name, are more particularly charged with the government of a city or a county, as Mayor, Aldermen, Supervisors, Clerk, Sheriff, Marshal, Treasurer, Assessor, etc., and to officers charged with functions of the character of those mentioned, as well as to some others named in the Consolidation Act, our remarks properly and correctly apply.

If the position of the learned counsel can be sustained, that "where the offices have existed before, the compensation is left to existing laws," it will be found that the grand purpose of the Consolidation Act, which is apparent without great familiarity with the Act, and with no acquaintance with its practical workings — that is, economy in the administration of the municipal government — will be defeated, and a large portion of the wholesome restrictions in the Act become nugatory.

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

We see no difficulty in maintaining that when the Tax Collector is required to collect the delinquent taxes, and in the discharge of that duty he is permitted by the revenue laws to collect from the delinquent, or from the purchaser at the tax sale, certain fees over and above the taxes, and is required to pay over to the Treasurer the taxes collected by him, there is left in his hands the fees he collected. And we find as little difficulty in understanding, that after the general revenue law has committed to the Tax Collector, the collection of all the taxes, and has allowed certain commissions on the collection both of State and city and county taxes, and the law has directed him to pay over all the taxes without any deduction for commissions, and has saved the restrictions of the Consolidation Act, one of which was that "no payment can be made from the Treasury, or out of the public funds of the county unless the same be specially authorized by this Act;" that if the Consolidation Act has not "specially authorized" the payment to the Tax Collector of such commissions out of the funds of the city and county, the Board of Supervisors are not authorized to allow or audit a claim for such commissions, and the Tax Collector is not entitled to receive them; and that if there is no restriction to prevent him from receiving the commissions on the funds collected for the State, he is entitled to have them allowed and paid.

It appears obvious that the appellant's construction of subdivision third, of section ninety-five, of the Consolidation Act, holding that it authorizes the payment of the commissions in controversy, cannot be maintained, for that subdivision merely specifies the General Fund, as the fund out of which fixed salaries or compensations shall be paid; and if his construction could be maintained, it would result in the absurd conclusion, that the commissions for collecting the State tax, would be payable out of the General Fund of the city and county.

Rehearing denied.

THE PEOPLE v. ROBERT DODGE.

PERSONAL ATTENDANCE OF WITNESS IN CRIMINAL CASE.—When an absent witness for a defendant in a criminal action is sick, and it is made to appear that his personal attendance can be procured without unreasonable delay, the statutory mode of taking the testimony of the witness by a commission ought not to be forced upon the defendant against his will, under the penalty of going to trial without it.

CONTINUANCE IN CRIMINAL CASE.—A defendant in a criminal action is entitled to a continuance to enable him to obtain the personal attendance of his witnesses at the trial, if the same can be obtained without unreasonable delay.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

The defendant was indicted for the crime of murder, on the 11th day of February, 1865. On the 15th day of March, 1865, the case was set for trial in the District Court for the 4th day of April, 1865. On the last named day the defendant applied for a continuance, on the ground of the absence of Margaret Dodge, one of his witnesses. It was shown that the witness resided in Nevada County, and a subpoena had been served on her, but she had been ill for several weeks, too ill to leave her house without endangering her health. Her attending physicians testified that if quiet was secured to the witness, she might possibly be able to attend the trial within two months.

The District Attorney opposed the continuance because the witness lived in Nevada County and had been sick for several weeks, and the defendant had made no effort to have her testimony taken by commission, as by law provided.

The motion for a continuance was denied, and the defendant was convicted and sentenced. The defendant appealed.

Dibble & Belden, for Appellant.

In many of the States the defendant in a capital case is allowed a continuance for one term, almost as a matter of course. (2 Graham & Waterman, N. T., 699.) And if the party, when called for trial, still finds himself unprepared, Courts are extremely indulgent in granting adjournments, even where it is simply expedient that a continuance should be had.

Argument for Appellant.

(3 Graham & Waterman, N. T., 894; Turner v. Morrison, 11 Cal. 22.)

The requisite showing for a continuance is: that a material witness is absent; that due diligence has been used to procure his attendance; that the same fact cannot be proven by any other person; the probability of procuring his attendance within a reasonable time, and that the application is not made for delay; and when no suspicious or countervailing circumstances appear, the continuance will be granted. (Jackson v. Granger, 6 Cowen, 578; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cowen, 399; Toy v. State, 9 Georgia, 373; Gross v. State, 5 Indiana, 533; Clark v. Dillbee, 16 Wend. 603; People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 250.)

The Court's discretion is to be exercised within well established legal rules. It is a sound and equitable, and not an arbitrary discretion, he is required to exercise. (3 Graham & Waterman, N. T., 1,001; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cowen, 398.)

That the statute permits a deposition to be taken in this case, does not affect the question. The section permitting a commission to issue in criminal cases is not compulsory; it was designed to furnish to a defendant the means of preserving and perpetuating testimony that would otherwise be wholly lost, and not as a compulsory process to force defendants into trials with insufficient evidence, when a few weeks or days would enable him to procure the personal attendance of his witnesses. The same provision exists in the New York Practice Act; and in adverting to it, said the Court, Mr. Justice Bronson: "The inability of a sick or infirm witness to attend at the trial, although her deposition was taken, and the parties were under a stipulation to try the case, would have been a sufficient excuse for putting off the case." (Clark v. Dillbee, 16 Wend. 603.) Treating the right of the party to a continuance as a matter of course.

The difference in character and effect of evidence presented by deposition, and from that produced by the personal attendance and examination of the witness before the jury, is well stated in The People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cowen, 399; People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 250.

Opinion of the Court.

This continuance should have been granted for the reason that defendant had a right to the personal attendance of his witness, and could not be forced to risk his case and his life upon the meagre and unsatisfactory results of a written deposition.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The defendant failed to take any steps to obtain the testimony by deposition or commission. He had from the time of his arrest to do so. He had nearly two months from the finding of the indictment. He had twenty days from the day the case was called and was set for trial until the day of trial. As the record shows, he knew the witness lived in the county; that she was likely to be too sick to attend the trial. It does not show but that she was able to testify upon deposition. There was an entire want of diligence on the part of defendant. In a civil case he could have obtained no continuance on this state of facts. (Pierson v. Holbrook, 2 Cal. 598.) If there is any difference, the Criminal Practice Act, as to taking depositions in criminal cases, is stricter than the Act making such provision in civil cases. The same rules govern in criminal as in civil cases in these matters of continuances, and the same amount of diligence is required. (Commonwealth v. Gross, 1 Ashland Pa. Rep. 281.) The granting or refusing such orders rests in the sound discretion of the Court below, and this Court will not interfere unless for the most cogent reasons, even though the Court below in its action approached very nearly to an arbitrary exercise of its discretion. Its action must be arbitrary and oppressive to warrant interference by this Court. (Sealy v. State, 1 Kelly Ga. R. 215; Pilot Creek Canal Company v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 162; Griffin v. Polhemus, 20 Cal. 181.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The affidavits upon which the motion for a continuance was made were sufficient to entitle the defendant thereto, unless he was bound under the circumstances to obtain the testimony of the absent witness in the manner authorized by the statute in such cases. (Wood's Digest, p. 314, Secs. 562 to 582 inclusive.) The defendant knew, as appears from the record, that the witness would not, in all probability, be able to attend the trial, and had ample time to obtain her testimony by deposition had he elected to do so; but it also appears that her illness was believed to be temporary, and that she would be able to attend the trial if postponed until the next term of Court. Under these circumstances was the defendant bound to take her testimony on commission or go to trial without it? Such was the only ground urged against the motion in the Court below, and such seems to have been the only ground upon which the motion was denied; and in view of the affidavits used upon the motion, it is clear that there could have been no other ground for the ruling of the Court.

A defendant in a criminal action is undoubtedly entitled to the personal attendance of his witnesses at the trial, if the same can be obtained without unreasonable delay. Such is the policy of the law, not merely from considerations affecting the defendant only, but also from considerations affecting the ends of public justice, irrespective of individual interests, which is manifest from the fact that the depositions of such witnesses are allowed to be read in evidence only upon further evidence at the trial that their personal attendance cannot be obtained. (Section 582.) It is to the interest of the people, as well as the defendant, that the witnesses of the latter should be made to give their testimony in the presence of the jury, for we all know, by daily experience, how much weight is added to or taken from testimony by the personal appearance, bearing and manner of the witness while under examination; if these add to the weight of his testimony, the defendant ought not be deprived of such effect, except upon grounds of necessity; and if they detract therefrom, such effect should be secured to the people, in order that the ends of public justice may be subserved. Thus this rule requiring the personal attendance of witnesses, if the same can be had, is founded upon considerations of the wisest policy, and the provisions of the statute whereby the defendant is enabled to examine conditionally, on commission, a witness who is about to leave the State, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he will be unable to attend the trial, were not designed to impair the rule or abridge the previous rights of the defendant, but, on the contrary, to enlarge those rights by enabling him to secure testimony of which he would otherwise be deprived, and at the same time preserve the rule in full force, so far as the same could be done in view of the right conferred by the statute. When, therefore, it is made to appear that the personal attendance of the absent witness may be procured without unreasonable delay, a resort to the statutory mode of taking his testimony ought not to be forced upon the defendant against his will under penalty of going to trial without it. What would be an unreasonable delay must of course depend upon all the circumstances of the case; but it is certain that a delay of one term of Court upon a first application would not be unreasonable.

Judgment reversed and a new trial ordered.

EZRA BEALS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF WILLIAM BEALS, DECEASED v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF AMADOR COUNTY.

INDEBTEDNESS OF COUNTY WHEN DIVIDED.—When a new county is organized out of a part of the territory before constituting another county, the claim of the old against the new county for the payment of the new county's proportion of the debt of the old county is of an equitable nature only, and requires legislation to enable the old county to enforce it.

DEBT OF AMADOR COUNTY TO CALAVERAS COUNTY.—The Act of 1855 organizing Amador County out of a part of the territory of Calaveras County, and compelling the former to pay a portion of the debt of the latter, does not require Amador County to pay interest on its proportion of the debt due to the County of Calaveras.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eleventh Judicial District, Amador County.

Argument for Respondent.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John W. Armstrong, for Appellant.

Interest is now allowed at common law where there is an express or implied contract to pay interest, but without such contract it is not given, even on written instruments. (Sammis v. Clark, 13 Ill. 546; Hogan v. Page, 1 Bos. & Pul. 337; Foster v. Weston, 7 Bingh. 709, 714; DeBernales v. Fuller, 2 Camp. 427; DeBelloix v. Lord Waterpark, 1 Dow. & Ryl. 16, 19; Chit. on Contracts, 558, 559.) Interest was not recoverable in England for the non-payment of the principal debt due, though often demanded, until the statute of 3 and 4 Will. 4, C. 42. As there is no stipulation to pay interest in the warrant in our case, we insist that no interest is recoverable on common law principles.

But there is another ground upon which we contend that the warrant in question did not draw interest. The State never pays any interest unless she expressly agrees to pay it. It is said, "the general rule is that the State never pays interest unless she expressly engages to do so." (Attorney-General v. Cape Fear Nav. Co. 2 Ired. Eq. Rep. 454. The State v. Mayes, 28 Miss. 709; Auditor v. Duggen, 3 Leigh, 247; U. S. v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 314.) And now, if interest cannot be recovered against the State, as the county government is a portion of the State Government, (Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290; Article IX, Sec. 4, Constitution of the State; The People v. The Supervisors of Alameda County, 26 Cal. 641,) we maintain that by parity of reasoning, interest cannot be recovered from a county unless by express agreement to pay it. (3 Atkins, 636.) Again, the statute of this State which allows interest to creditors for all moneys after they become due does not by name include the State or counties.

P. L. Edwards, and Lewis Ramage, for Respondent.

The warrant in question lawfully bears the interest demanded. California has never had any statute against usury, and that by the general statute regulating interest, a demand like this, as between private individuals, must draw it. (Wood's Dig. 551.) This warrant, drawn in pursuance of the action of the Commissioners, fixed the amount due from the one county to the other, and of itself raised the obligation to pay interest. The Acts do not distinguish between general and special funds. All are equally embraced. The county is expressly bound to pay interest in any and every case within their purview, and that whether there is a State, county, or individual sovereignty involved.

In conclusion, upon this point we submit that in the absence of inhibitory statutes, the whole theory of the counsel regarding interest is at war with all modern authorities. The general principle has long been settled, that if a debt ought to be paid at a particular time, and is not paid through the default of the debtor, compensation in damages equal to the value of the use of the money, which is the legal interest, shall be paid during the continuance of the default. (1 American Leading Cases, 498, top; Renss. Gas Co. v. Reid, 5 Cow. 587.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The County of Amador having been organized out of territory before constituting a part of the County of Calaveras, the Legislature in 1855 passed an Act appointing Commissioners for the purpose, and authorizing them to ascertain the amount of indebtedness of the County of Calaveras at the time of the establishment of the new County of Amador, and to determine the amount of said indebtedness to be paid by the said County of Amador to the County of Calaveras.

Sections nine and ten of the Act are as follows:

"SEC. 9. The Board of Supervisors of Amador County are hereby authorized and required to assess a special tax of thirty cents on the hundred dollars on all taxable property of said county, to create a 'Sinking Fund' for the liquidation of said debt; said tax to be collected at the time and in the same manner as other county taxes; and said Supervisors are required to set apart from the 'General Funds' of said county a sum, which, added to the 'Special Fund,' shall be equal in amount to the one half of the entire 'General Fund' of said county; which 'fund' the Treasurer of Amador County is required to set apart and reserve for the payment of said indebtedness of Amador County to Calaveras County, when ascertained in the manner above prescribed; which said 'fund' shall be appropriated to no other purpose than the extinguishment of said indebtedness; and the creation of which said 'fund' shall continue until said indebtedness be declared, and until an amount equal to said indebtedness shall be set apart and reserved by said Treasurer as aforesaid."

"SEC. 10. When the amount of said indebtedness of Amador County to Calaveras County shall have been determined by said Commissioners, they shall certify the same to the Auditor of said County of Amador, who, immediately on the receipt of such certificate, shall draw his warrant or order on the Treasurer of said County of Amador, in favor of the said County of Calaveras, for the amount of said indebtedness, as certified by said Commissioners; which warrant or order shall state upon its face that it is for the indebtedness due from the County of Amador to the County of Calaveras, as determined by the Commissioners appointed by and under the provisions of this Act; and which said warrant or order shall be delivered by said Auditor to the Treasurer of Calaveras County, and shall be paid by the Treasurer of Amador County out of the funds or moneys required to be set apart and reserved according to the ninth section of this Act."

The Commissioners in pursuance of the provisions of the Act ascertained the indebtedness, and determined that Amador County should pay to Calaveras County the sum of twenty-six thousand five hundred and seventeen dollars and thirty-two cents, for which amount the proper warrant was drawn, in pursuance of the Act, on the Treasurer of Amador County, and delivered to the Treasurer of Calaveras County. The latter immediately presented the warrant to the Treasurer of Amador County for payment, and the fund provided by law for the payment not having been collected, the Treasurer of Amador County indorsed upon the warrant the following: "Presented and not paid for want of funds. February 18th, 1856." Subsequently, as funds for the purpose came into the Treasury, payments were made from time to time, from March 8th, 1859, to February 1st, 1861, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of thirty-one thousand four hundred and twelve dollars and eighty-three cents. The warrant in the meantime had been assigned to William Beals. The plaintiff, who is the administrator of William Beals, claims that the said warrant bore interest at ten per cent per annum from the date of its presentation for payment, and the indorsement of non-payment for want of funds, February 18th, 1856, and that there is consequently now a large amount due and unpaid. He therefore seeks, by a mandate from the District Court, to compel the Board of Supervisors to levy, and cause to be collected, a tax, to create a fund sufficient to pay the balance still due. The respondents, on the contrary, insist that the warrant does not bear interest, and that the warrant has not only been fully paid, but largely overpaid. The District Court allowed interest, and found a balance of seven thousand five hundred and thirty-two dollars and twelve cents to be still due, and accordingly ordered a peremptory mandate to issue. The Board of Supervisors appeal, and the question is whether the warrant bears interest?

There is no express contract to pay interest, and no rule of law independent of statutory provisions that would require interest to be paid. No statutory provision imposing an obligation upon the County of Amador to pay interest on the warrant in question has been brought to our notice, unless it is found in the Act of March 27th, 1850, "concerning the office of County Treasurer." Section ten of that Act provides, that when a warrant is "not paid for want of funds," an indorsement to that effect shall be made thereon, and from the date of such indorsement till redeemed said warrant shall bear ten per cent per annum interest. Subsequent sections provide for payment of such warrants upon notice to be given when there are funds applicable to that object, in the order of presentation as shown by the dates of the indorsements; and that upon such notice being given the interest shall cease. If not presented within sixty days after notice, they cannot be paid till other registered warrants have been paid in their proper order without a special order to that effect made by the Board of Supervisors. The claim to interest on the warrant in question must rest upon these provisions, or it cannot be sustained. But we do not think the rights of the parties are governed by the provisions of this Act. The Act is one of a general character, and has reference to the general and ordinary financial operations of the several counties, and to warrants issued for usual county expenses, payable out of its general and ordinary revenues.

The claim in question was one of an equitable nature, of imperfect obligation upon the County of Amador, arising, not upon contract between the two counties, but out of the legislation of the State in dividing the County of Calaveras, and which required further legislation to ripen it into a legal liability, and enable the County of Calaveras to enforce it against the County of Amador. The Legislature recognized the equitable character of the claim, and provided means for ascertaining the amount of the indebtedness of Calaveras County, at the time of the division, and the proportion that ought to be paid by the new County of Amador; and imposed the payment of that portion, when it should be ascertained, upon the said county. When this proportion so equitably due and required to be paid was ascertained, the amount became the exact measure of the liability thus imposed — this amount became the "indebtedness of Amador County" mentioned in the Act. The warrant was to be drawn "for the amount of said indebtedness, as certified by the Commissioners." A special tax was authorized "to create a Sinking Fund for the liquidation of said debt" * * * "which fund the Treasurer of Amador County is required to set apart and reserve for the payment of said indebtedness of Amador County to Calaveras County, when ascertained in the manner above prescribed." And “said fund shall be appropriated to no other purpose than the extinguishment of said indebtedness, and the creation of which fund shall continue until said indebtedness be declared, and until an amount equal to said indebtedness shall be set apart and reserved by said Treasurer as aforesaid.” Now, the indebtedness here provided for is the amount ascertained by the Commissioners, and for which the warrant was to be drawn. Nothing is said about the addition of other amounts resulting as damages for default in payment of the amount of indebtedness actually ascertained by the Commissioners. The fund authorized to be raised and set apart for payment was limited to the amount of indebtedness ascertained to be due, and for which the warrant was authorized to be drawn. Nothing more was authorized to be paid out of that fund, and no provision was made for payment out of the General Fund. The interest accruing after default was no part of the indebtedness, for it could not exist until after the amount was ascertained and the warrant drawn, presented, and indorsed, “Not paid for want of funds.” The Legislature evidently contemplated that the first year’s tax might not be sufficient to pay the amount due, for it is provided that “the creation of the ‘fund’ shall continue * * * until an amount equal to said indebtedness shall be set apart and reserved by said Treasurer, as aforesaid.” Yet they did not authorize interest to be paid in case of such delay. Only the specific indebtedness found to exist at the time was provided for, and not such indebtedness, and any interest that might accrue thereon. Undoubtedly it was competent for the Legislature to have imposed the payment of interest also, in case of default in payment of the principal, but it did not do it. Nor did it even authorize the money to be paid any faster than the specific revenue authorized to be provided should be sufficient to pay it. If the amount authorized to be raised should be insufficient to pay the full amount during the first, or second, or even third year, there would be no default as to the excess, even admitting that the county was authorized to pay in instalments, for it must be paid out of the specific fund, and such fund was limited in amount by the Act itself.

Argument for Appellant.

The Act in question is specific, relating to a single transaction, imposing a specific liability upon the County of Amador, willing or unwilling, and providing a specific remedy for discharging it. The Act itself prescribes the measure of the liability, and the means of discharging it, and furnishes the entire rules by which the rights of the two counties are to be governed.

We think it was not contemplated that the indebtedness should bear interest. The judgment must therefore be reversed and the District Court directed to deny the mandate, and it is so ordered.

THE PEOPLE v. BARNEY OLWELL.

EVIDENCE TO SHOW INSANITY UPON PLEA OF NOT GUILTY.—Upon a trial for murder, where the defendant pleads not guilty, he is entitled to have testimony introduced on his behalf to show his insanity at the time the alleged offense was committed.

ERROR IN LAW IN CRIMINAL CASE.—If in a criminal case the defendant is tried on a good indictment, and convicted and sentenced, and an error of law occurs in the progress of the trial to defendant's prejudice, and he appeals, the judgment must be reversed, although the defendant does not ask for a new trial.

POWER OF COURT TO GRANT A NEW TRIAL IN A CRIMINAL CASE.—If the defendant in a criminal case is convicted and appeals, and the judgment is reversed, the appellate Court may order a new trial, even though the defendant does not move for a new trial, and denies the power of the Court to grant a new trial.

▲ REVERSED JUDGMENT IN A CRIMINAL CASE NO BAR TO A NEW TRIAL.—If the defendant in a criminal case is convicted and appeals, and asks for a reversal of the judgment, but does not move for a new trial, a reversal of the judgment and an order for a new trial take from him the right of setting up the former trial and conviction in bar of another trial.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Asher B. Bates, for Appellant.

By the common law all Courts are without authority to grant a new trial after a conviction, or discharge the prisoner.

By the statute of this State (Wood's Digest, p. 304, § 440) the District Courts may grant a new trial when certain specified errors or irregularities have occurred, namely: 1st, when the trial has been had in the absence of the accused; 2d, when the jury have received any evidence out of Court; 3d, when the jury have separated without leave, or have been guilty of any misconduct; 4th, when the verdict has been decided by lot; 5th, when the Court has misdirected the jury; or 6th, when the verdict is contrary to law or evidence.

Such specified errors or irregularities did not occur in this case, which furnishes an explanation why a motion for a new trial was not interposed upon the suggestion of the presiding Judge. An appeal therefore became necessary, and by the local law it is declared that by this Court "any decision of the Court (below) in an intermediate order or proceeding forming any part of the record, may be reviewed," (Wood's Digest, p. 308, § 484,) and "the appellate Court may reverse, affirm, or modify the judgment appealed from, and may, if necessary or proper, order a new trial," (Wood's Digest, p. 309, § 500,) and "if a judgment against the defendant be reversed without ordering a new trial, the appellate Court shall direct, if he be in custody, that he be discharged therefrom." (Wood's Digest, p. 309, § 502.)

There is no motion for a new trial pending, and unless this Court orders a new trial upon its own motion, (which is not anticipated,) perpetual imprisonment or a discharge is the alternative.

But even if such a motion was pending, then it would be a grave question, which I shall not discuss, whether the appellant could waive the constitutional inhibition, that "no person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." He has elected to ask to be discharged, and it is claimed this Court is without a choice, as it cannot permit perpetual imprisonment. The judgment being reversed, the appellant stands convicted, and if he cannot be held in perpetual custody, a new trial cannot be ordered after a conviction, as another alternative. It is conceded that it has been a mooted question before many of the State Courts, whether a mistrial for any cause, and no verdict rendered, did not operate as an acquittal. Without specially reviewing the cases, I refer the Court to Judge Story's opinion (2 Sumner, 37, and to 25 N. Y. 416; and Hartung v. The People, 26 N. Y. 167.)

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

Under a plea of "not guilty," a defendant in this State can give in evidence any matter tending to establish a defense, other than that of a former conviction or acquittal, and consequently can show his irresponsibility for the crime. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 304.)

Assuming that the Court erred—

1st. The defendant on his own motion would have been entitled to a new trial. This is now true in England and in this country, and especially in our State, under our statute providing for new trials in criminal cases. The counsel for appellant is wrong both as to our statute and the common law. And it is well settled that the new trial would have been no new jeopardy, as if error occurred defendant was never in jeopardy, and this whether it be an error of the Court or the jury. It is useless at this day to discuss this point. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 632, Amendment 1863, p. 162, 5th subdivision; Reg. v. Scaife, 2 Den. C. C. 281; 2 Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, Sec. 3,061 et seq.; Commonwealth v. Green, 17 Mass. 534; State v. Prescott, 7 N. H. 288; U. S. v. Veen, 1 McLean, 438; Grayson v. Commonwealth, 6 Grattan, 723; Weingarpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. 196; U. S. v. Connor, 3 McLean, 574; People v. Morrison, 1 Parker C. C. N. Y. 643, 635; Hasting v. People, 26 N. Y. 179, 180, 181, 187, 188; People v. March, 6 Cal. 543; People v. McNealy, 17 Cal. 335.)

We have referred to but a few of the leading cases. The cases in New York, relied on by appellant's counsel, are not analogous, and do not sustain his position. In those cases the Legislature had repealed the law providing the punishment, and consequently the defendants could not be punished or retried under another law.

Argument for The People.

2d. Was not Judge Pratt, when discovering an error in his former rulings, right in tendering defendant a new trial? (United States v. McComb, 5 McLean, 287.)

3d. If the defendant does not see fit to move for a new trial, or to accept it when tendered, he has a right to thus waive the error and suffer execution. He may testify against himself before a grand jury. (People v. King, ante.) He may testify against himself before a petit jury. (People v. Bruzzo, 24 Cal. 41.) He may refuse to plead, after demurrer overruled, and let judgment of guilty be passed. (People v. King, ante.) He may waive a trial by jury altogether. (French v. Teschemacher, 24 Cal. 559.) And in this case the defendant might plead guilty, or refuse a new trial, and let the judgment be executed. If he insists upon his right, he is entitled to be hung as the judgment stands against him. If to secure himself against the jeopardy of a second trial he prefers to undergo the sentence upon the first, he is entitled thus to do. (United States v. Kean, 1 McLean, 439; People v. Morrison, 1 Parker, 636, 641; United States v. Harding, 1 Wallace C. O. 143; 2 Whar. Am. Crim. Law, Sec. 3,077.) When the defendant, by entry of record in the Court below, refused a new trial, was he not forever estopped to ask it, and must he not suffer execution? (United States v. Harding, 1 Wallace, Jr. 148.)

4th. But this Court is relieved from such action by our statute, which empowers it to grant a new trial if proper or necessary for the ends of justice, (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 500,) which it is hoped will be done.

5th. Asking affirmative relief of this Court from the judgment below is a waiver on the part of defendant, and on a new trial, if granted, he will be estopped from setting up the former judgment in bar. (Gerard v. People, 3 Scammon, 362; Lane v. People, 5 Gilman, 308.) It is presumed, therefore, that this judgment will be reversed, and that that reversal will run back to the error committed in the proceedings below; that with it, it will carry the verdict and the whole proceedings of the District Court on the trial, leaving standing the indictment. Upon that indictment defendant is to have a trial. It raises against him a presumption of guilt for all purposes except for a fair and impartial trial before a petit jury. (People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 543.) That trial he has never yet had, and that presumption is not yet removed, and this Court will not discharge the defendant, but will award him a fair trial upon a sufficient indictment.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted for the murder of James Irwin. He pleaded not guilty. On the trial it was proposed, on the part of the defendant, to prove that he was insane when he committed the homicide. The counsel for the people objected to the testimony offered, and the Court sustained the objection, on the ground that upon the trial upon the plea of not guilty the defendant could not introduce evidence to show he was insane at the time the offense was alleged to have been committed, assigning as a reason for such decision that it was provided by the Third Chapter of Title XII of the Act to regulate proceedings in criminal cases (Laws 1851, p. 277) that the question of the insanity of the defendant must be tried upon a special issue. To this ruling of the Court the defendant's counsel excepted. The defendant was found guilty of murder in the first degree. At the time appointed for pronouncing judgment, the Court, in the presence and hearing of the defendant, inquired of his counsel if he desired, on behalf of the prisoner, to move for a new trial, stating, at the same time, that if such motion was made the inclination of the Court was to grant it, and also stating that such inclination arose from a conviction that there was error committed by the Court on the trial in making the decision above noticed. The defendant's counsel declined to ask or move for a new trial. The Court then pronounced judgment that on a particular day the defendant be hanged by the neck until he should suffer death.

A bill of exceptions on behalf of the defendant was settled and signed by the Judge of the Court, and then filed, which is brought before this Court by the defendant on appeal from the judgment.

The defendant's counsel does not ask this Court to reverse the judgment and order a new trial of the cause, but to reverse the judgment and order the defendant discharged.

That the Court below erred in rejecting evidence of the defendant's insanity at the time he killed Irwin, the learned Judge of that Court admitted when the suggestion was made that if a new trial was applied for on behalf of the defendant it would be granted; and in this Court the Attorney-General has confessed the error. We deem it unnecessary to say more than that we also are satisfied that the ruling of the Court below was erroneous and that on account of it the judgment should be reversed; but whether it is competent for this Court to order a new trial, upon a reversal of the judgment, involves the consideration of a constitutional provision of grave importance.

The defendant was tried upon a sufficient indictment. The verdict of the jury was that he was guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment. Upon this verdict the judgment of the law was pronounced. By his appeal the defendant asks this Court to reverse this judgment for error of law which occurred prior to the verdict in the progress of the trial, to his injury. For the error assigned the judgment must be reversed, and we are of the opinion it is proper to order a new trial of the case, if it can be done. But on the part of the defendant the power of the Court to do so is denied on the ground that thereby the defendant would be put in jeopardy the second time, when the Constitution declares that "no person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense."

This question was passed upon and decided in this State in the case of The People v. March, 6 Cal. 546. In that case the defendant was indicted for murder, and was convicted of the crime. The judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court for an error committed on the trial, and a new trial was ordered. After the remittitur had been filed in the Court in which the defendant was tried, the indictment was set aside on application of the Prosecuting Attorney, and a new indictment was found against the defendant for the same offense, to which he pleaded not guilty; and he also pleaded specially autrefois convict and the reversal of that conviction by the Supreme Court. He was tried, found guilty and sentenced to death. On appeal from this judgment, March, the defendant, claimed that he was entitled to be discharged on the dismissal of the first indictment against him, and that the trial and the subsequent proceedings under the second indictment were in violation of the constitutional provision before cited. To this the Court in its opinion answered: "This provision was never intended to apply to cases in which a judgment of conviction was reversed in the appellate Court, and a new trial ordered. In such cases it being apparent, from the judgment of the reversal, that such trial was erroneous, the defendant, in fact, was not in jeopardy. The order for a new trial places the party in the same position as though no trial had been had."

It has been a maxim of the common law for centuries, that no person shall be subject for the same offense, to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. (4 Black. Com. 335.) This maxim is incorporated in the Constitution of the United States and also in the Constitutions of many of the States of the Union. That "no person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense," is a part of the Constitution of this State. This constitutional maxim is intended for the protection of the citizen from oppression, and not as a shield to the guilty. If one accused of crime has once been tried and convicted of it, and judgment has passed against him, the law is satisfied. If he has been tried and acquitted, he is in the eye of the law innocent of the offense of which he was accused. But to constitute a former conviction a bar to a second trial for the same offense, it must appear that the judgment or verdict of conviction was final; otherwise the accused cannot say he was in jeopardy. At common law upon a second indictment for the same offense, the prisoner could not avail himself of a former conviction, under the plea of not guilty, but he was required to plead it specially. Then to ascertain what constitutes a complete defense under the clause of the Constitution cited, we need only to ascertain what, in substance, is necessary to constitute at common law a good plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict. (Corn v. Olds, 5 Littell, 139, 140; State v. Ainsworth, 11 Verm. 92.) Now by reference to the precedents of pleas of the kind mentioned, to be found in the early editions of Archibold's Criminal Pleading, it appears that the defendant must aver that the judgment, on which he relies as a bar to the further prosecution of the indictment against him, "remains in full force and effect, and not in the least reversed or made void."

By taking and prosecuting his appeal, the defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment. The reversal of a judgment in such a case, for error in the proceedings prior to the verdict, operates to vacate the verdict. The judgment and verdict being reversed and held for naught, there is nothing left to support the plea of autrefois convict.

As we understand the learned counsel for the appellant, his position is that, while this Court may reverse the judgment of the Court below for error which occurred on the trial, we have no power to order a trial de novo, because by another trial the defendant would be put in jeopardy more than once for the same offense, and in support of his position he cites the case of the United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sumner, 37, in which Mr. Justice Story, in an elaborate opinion, endeavored to show that when a trial had been regularly had before a Court of competent jurisdiction, upon a good indictment, and a verdict has been rendered by a competent jury, the party accused cannot be tried a second time for the same offense. He was of the opinion that the provision of the Constitution which adopts the maxim of the common law that a man shall not be twice put in jeopardy for life or limb for the same offense, presented an insurmountable barrier to a second trial, even if applied for by the defendant himself. But Judge Davis, in the same case, dissented from that part of the opinion of the learned Justice which denied the power to grant a new trial on the merits, upon the application of the prisoner to reverse a verdict of conviction. Referring to the English authorities on the subject, he said: "It is true, that, according to approved authorities, the plea of autrefois convict depends on the same principle as the plea of autrefois acquit — that no man ought to be twice brought in danger of his life for one and the same cause. The doctrine establishes a right in the prisoner to resort to that defense, if it be attempted or moved against his will to subject him to a second trial. The case of a verdict of conviction set aside at the request of the prisoner is not suggested in those authorities, and would stand, in my opinion, on very different ground. The previous question would not, I apprehend, under such circumstances, be considered as a sufficient bar to a second trial." Opposed to the doctrine of Mr. Justice Story is a strong current of decisions to be found in the volumes of reported cases of the Federal Courts, as well as of the highest Courts of many of the States of the Union. Many of these authorities are referred to by Mr. Justice Harris, in his opinion in The People v. Morrison, 1 Parker's Cr. R. 626, in which he says Justice Story stands alone in his construction of the constitutional provision under consideration; "that not a Judge of any Court in the United States has been found to concur in his views." (See also, Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515.)

It is insisted, however, that if it be assumed that this Court has the authority in certain cases to order a new trial, notwithstanding the Constitution provides that "no person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense," such authority cannot be exercised unless it appears that the defendant moved in the Court below for a new trial. The statute provides that on the trial of a person indicted for a felony, exceptions may be taken by the defendant to a decision of the Court upon a matter of law in certain specified cases. Exceptions may be taken for rejecting testimony which ought to be admitted, or for erroneously deciding any question of law, not a matter of discretion. (Laws 1851, p. 259, Sec. 438.) On appeal, this Court is to "give judgment without regard to technical error or defect which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties," and "may reverse, affirm or modify the judgment appealed from, and may, if necessary or proper, order a new trial. (Laws 1851, p. 267, Secs. 499, 500.) If it be necessary or proper in the judgment of the Court to make such order, its power is in nowise abridged because the defendant may fail or intentionally refuse to ask in terms for a new trial upon a reversal of the judgment. The Court is to determine the question of the necessity or propriety of ordering a new trial, and may exercise the power of making the order in such cases unless inhibited by the provision of the Constitution to which we have referred. The taking of an appeal from the judgment of conviction was a matter of the defendant's option. He had his choice to let the judgment stand, and abide the consequence of it, or to move for its reversal in order to relieve himself from the jeopardy in which he was by reason of it. The appeal was taken on his behalf, and for his benefit. The verdict and judgment by which his life was in peril being annulled at his request, the same are as though they never had been, and he is not in a position to set up the former trial and conviction in bar of another trial. (United States v. Kean, 1 McLean, 436; United States v. Harding, 1 Wallace, Jr., 142; Gerard v. The People, 3 Scam. 363.) The reversal of the judgment at the defendant's instance on appeal takes from him the right of setting up the former trial and conviction in bar of another trial as effectually as if he had secured the same end by a motion for a new trial.

The judgment is reversed, the verdict vacated, and a new trial ordered.

THE PEOPLE v. W. A. HENDERSON.

TIME OF OBJECTING TO GRAND JURORS.—If the defendant is in custody, objections to grand jurors, on the ground of not being citizens or taxpayers, must be taken by challenge when the grand jury is impannelled, or they are waived.

CHALLENGE OF TRIAL JURY FOR CAUSE.—Unless it clearly appears from the answers of the juror that the District Court erred in its ruling upon a challenge for cause in a criminal case, the verdict will not be set aside on that ground by an appellate Court.

TESTIMONY OF QUARRELS OF DECEASED ON MURDER TRIAL.—On a trial for murder, testimony of quarrels of the deceased with a person other than the defendant, and threats made by deceased against such person immediately before the homicide, is not admissible on the part of the defense, if the defendant was not present and the facts were not brought to his knowledge before the killing.

ERROR IN REJECTING TESTIMONY CURED.—If, on the trial of a criminal case, the Court erroneously rejects testimony offered by the defense, and the testimony is closed, and the Court adjourns until the next day, and upon the meeting of the Court on the next day it offers to allow the rejected testimony, and to give time to defendant to send for his witness, or to allow him to read the testimony taken down by the Clerk on a former trial, and he elects to read, and does read the testimony taken down, the judgment will not be reversed because of the first error.

INSTRUCTION IN LANGUAGE OF STATUTE.—There was no error in giving section thirty-seven of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, in the language of the statute as an instruction to the jury.

REPUDIATION OF AGREEMENT IN CRIMINAL CASE.—The appellate Court will not reverse a judgment of conviction, in a criminal case, by reason of alleged error in a proceeding had in the course of the trial, by express agreement of the defendant and his counsel, unless bound to do so by some controlling rule of law.

CHANGE OF JUDGES DURING A CRIMINAL TRIAL BY CONSENT.—If, after the evidence is closed on the trial of a criminal case, the Judge of another district, with the consent of the defendant and his counsel, upon the request of the Judge who commenced the trial, takes the place of the presiding Judge, charges the jury, and receives the verdict, a verdict of guilty will not be set aside on the ground of irregularity in this respect.

WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO CHANGE OF JUDGES IN CRIMINAL CASE.—If, in the progress of a criminal trial, the Judge of the district leaves the bench, and another Judge takes his place, and hears the argument and receives the verdict, and the Judge of the district afterwards resumes his seat upon the bench, and passes on a motion for new trial without objection, the defendant waives any objection to the further control of the proceedings and the passing of sentence by the Judge of the district in which the trial was had.

CHANGE OF JUDGES BEFORE SENTENCE IS PRONOUNCED.—The Judge of a district in which the cause was tried may pass sentence on a verdict of guilty when the Judge of another district presided during the argument of the case to the jury and received the verdict.

WHO MAY PRONOUNCE SENTENCE ON VERDICT.—A Judge who did not try the case, if legally presiding, has jurisdiction to pronounce sentence.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The defendant was indicted for killing one James Drew. This was the second trial of the defendant on the indictment.

The defendant appealed from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Jo. Hamilton, for Appellant.

The Court erred in allowing the challenge to the juror tried for cause. He had neither formed nor expressed an unqualified opinion. (Wood's Digest, p. 296, Sec. 347; People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 110.)

Eisner's testimony should have been stricken out. The defendant does not appear to have been cognizant of or had anything to do with Mills' declarations or acts, and his testimony was calculated to prejudice him in the minds of the jury.

The Court should have allowed the testimony of McIntire, Ford, and Harford. The defense was that the act was committed in self defense. Whatever tended to show that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe himself in danger, was admissible. This testimony, although defendant was not present, would have shown the dangerous character of deceased. (People v. Arnold, 14 Cal. 476.)

The Court erred in rejecting the testimony of witness Starr, as to what a witness for the defendant, who had died, had testified to on the first trial of defendant. (1 Phillips on Ev. 337, 338, 339; 1 Greenleaf on Ev., Secs. 163, 166.) The prosecution contend that this error was cured by the subsequent offer of the Court to admit the testimony. A defendant intrusts his case to his attorney, who arranges his testimony and introduces one branch of it at a time. If testimony is improperly rejected and the case closed, and an offer made the next day to allow it, the effect on the jury is prejudicial to the defendant. They had the period of the adjournment of the Court to reflect on the case as it stood, and of course their minds are influenced by it.

The assent of the defendant to a change of Judges cannot cure the error. (Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 78.) The Judge who had not heard the argument or reviewed the verdict, was not authorized to pronounce sentence. (Section 27 of Laws of 1863, page 336, is fully explanatory of this point.)

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The defendant was in custody, and should have challenged the grand jurors in the County Court. Assuming that the challenge of Kind was for implied bias, I contend that allowance of a challenge to a trial juror for implied bias is not a ground of exception. (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 433.) If the defendant challenges, and the challenge is disallowed, this may be a reversible error. Even if the allowance of a challenge is ground of an exception, how can it be said that the defendant suffered any injury? (Crim. Prac. Act, Sec. 499.) The defendant was tried by a competent jury. (People v. Gatewood, 20 Cal. 149.)

The testimony of Eisner about the knife was a part of the res gestæ. The rejection of the testimony of McIntire and others was not error. The acts of the deceased towards persons other than defendant were not relevant. The case of The People v. Arnold decides that where the plea is self defense, the declaration of deceased at the time of borrowing the weapon may be proved to show the purpose for which it was borrowed. The alleged error in rejecting Starr's testimony was cured by the subsequent action of the Court. Merely because the Court made an error and then rectified it, is not ground of reversal. (1 Greenleaf on Ev., Sec. 431.)

Defendant had a right to agree to a change of Judge. (People v. Garcia, 25 Cal. 531; French v. Teschemacher, 24 Cal. 559.) The new Judge had a right to sit and hold a Court (not a term merely, as the law formerly stood) on the request of the presiding Judge. (Laws 1863, p. 336, Sec. 27; People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 207.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The defendant was indicted for murder, tried and found guilty in the second degree.

was summoned, was not a citizen, although he was a citizen at the time the Grand Jury was impanelled, he having, in the meantime, been naturalized; and that Gould Osborne, another grand juror, was not a taxpayer. The defendant, being in custody, was present in Court with his counsel at the time the Grand Jury was impanelled, examined such jurors as he saw fit as to their qualifications, and exercised his right of challenge. No objection was then made to either of these two jurors, nor did defendant question them upon the points referred to. Conceding the point to be otherwise good, under these circumstances the objection came too late, when taken for the first time after indictment found. The objection should have been made by challenge at the time of the impanelling of the jury. (Crim. Prac. Act, Secs. 188, 189, 297; People v. Colmere, 23 Cal. 632; People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 479; People v. Chung Let, 17 Cal. 322; People v. Romero, 18 Cal. 93.)

The answers of the juror, Kind, are such that we should not be justified in saying that the Court erred in allowing the challenge on the part of the prosecution. The most that can be said is, that the answers do not disclose a clear case, and where error is not clearly shown, the ruling of the District Court will not be disturbed.

There was no error in refusing to strike out the testimony of Eisner.

The Court having refused to permit defendant to prove by McIntire, Ford, Harford, and others, that at the public meeting on the evening of the homicide, deceased drew his knife upon a stranger, and would have cut him had he not been prevented, also, that he slapped the naked knife against the cheek of another man, at the same time using threatening language, this ruling is assigned as error. Defendant was admitted not to have been present at the time the transactions offered in evidence took place, and defendant's counsel did not offer to show that these acts were brought to the knowledge of defendant. The counsel for the prosecution at the time stated that he did not object to their giving in evidence any declaration made by deceased against the defendant. We think there was no error in excluding these acts and quarrels of deceased with other parties having no relation to the defendant. With still less plausibility can it be urged that the acts of a similar character, which transpired some ten days before, offered to be proved by other witnesses were admissible.

No exception was taken to the ruling in rejecting Carnahan's testimony to declarations of defendant made an hour or so before the homicide. Besides they were inadmissible. (People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 74.)

The defendant offered to prove by Starr what a witness testified at a former trial, said witness having since died. The Court rejected the testimony, on objection by the District Attorney. The testimony having been closed, Court adjourned till the next morning. On the opening of Court in the morning, the District Attorney stated that he was inclined to think the testimony ought to have been admitted, and offered to allow the case to be opened and the testimony introduced, to which suggestion the Court assented. The defendant then raised the objection that his witness had gone home, whereupon the Court offered to give him any reasonable time to procure the witness, or to allow him, if he preferred it—the District Attorney consenting—to read the testimony of the deceased witness from the minutes of his testimony taken down by the Clerk on the former trial. Defendant finally concluded to read the evidence from said minutes—still reserving his exceptions—and it was so read. It is claimed that these proceedings were erroneous and that the defendant was injured thereby. We do not see how the defendant was injured. The error at first committed was afterwards rectified by the Court. We have read all the testimony in the case, and from the character of the testimony we cannot see that, in this instance, it could be a matter of the slightest consequence at what particular point in the defense it came in. The testimony appears, upon its face to have been very fully and very well taken down, and in that form it is quite evident that it is much more satisfactory than the mere recollection of some other person could well be. At all events, the defendant concluded to put the evidence in, and to read it from the minutes, rather than send for the witness. The Court did not compel the defendant to put in the evidence in any form. It merely gave him the opportunity, of which he concluded to avail himself. There is nothing in this part of the proceeding that would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The observations already made apply to all the testimony rejected. Besides, there is much testimony uncontradicted in the case upon all the points covered by the rejected evidence, and, if admitted, it would only have been cumulative upon points about which there does not seem to have been any controversy. But we think there was no error in the rejection of evidence.

We think the evidence entirely sufficient to sustain the verdict. It is possible, as suggested by defendant's counsel, that the jury, if they erred at all, leaned to the side of mercy in finding the prisoner guilty of murder in the second degree. But if so, he surely has no reason to complain on that ground.

The only instruction complained of was copied from the Act relating to "crimes and punishments," (Laws 1850, p. 232, Sec. 37.) There is no error in giving this instruction.

At the close of the testimony the District Judge, who had thus far presided at the trial, was informed by telegraph that his presence was immediately required at home, in consequence of the dangerous illness of a member of his family. It was thereupon agreed by the parties, the prisoner consenting thereto, that the Judge of the Sixth Judicial District might sit during the remainder of the trial; and, at the request of the presiding Judge, in pursuance of this agreement, the Judge of the Sixth District appeared at the hour appointed for opening the Court on the following morning, and held the Court till the conclusion of the trial and the rendition of the verdict. The testimony was all in, with the exception of the testimony of the deceased witness, which was afterwards read from the minutes of the Court, as before stated. The Judge of the Sixth District heard the argument, charged the jury, and received the verdict. No question is made upon the charge, except upon the instruction given copied from the statute before referred to, and it must therefore be presumed to have been satisfactory. The charge given is manifestly adapted to the evidence in the case, and was probably written by the retiring Judge. After the rendition of the verdict, and before the day appointed for passing sentence, the Judge of the district in which the case was tried—the Fourteenth—resumed his seat on the bench, and finally pronounced the judgment of the Court upon the verdict rendered. Defendant objected, and excepted to his passing sentence.

The defendant now insists that the calling of the Judge of the Sixth Judicial District to preside, after the commencement of the trial, and with the express consent of the defendant, was error. But if not, that it was error for the Judge of the Fourteenth District to resume his place upon the bench and conduct the proceedings subsequent to verdict.

It is not surprising that the first point was not very distinctly made on the oral argument. It is squarely made, however, in the brief, notwithstanding the embarrassment under which counsel must be supposed to have labored in repudiating an express agreement after taking the chances of an acquittal, and losing. This course, it is true, is not without precedent, but the practice is not to be commended, and it cannot be supposed that an experiment of the kind will be successful, unless the Court is bound by some controlling rule of law.

In this case we think the verdict is not vitiated by the violation of any principle of law. The Judge of the Sixth District was authorized by the statute, upon the request of the Judge of the Fourteenth District, to hold the Court. He held the Court upon such request. The Court was a regularly authorized tribunal, having jurisdiction to try the cause. Although it is desirable that the same Judge who commences the trial should sit until it is completed—and in many cases, doubtless, it would be impracticable to do otherwise—yet, in some instances, as in this, there may be no inconvenience resulting from the taking up of the case by another Judge after the testimony closes. And if the parties interested consent to such a course of proceeding, we can see no objection to it. The parties interested are in a condition to judge whether the circumstances of the case are such that they are liable to be affected unfavorably by the change. After deliberately consenting to such a change, and taking the chances of a successful issue, and losing, they cannot be permitted to repudiate the proceedings and avail themselves of the chances of a more favorable result on a second trial.

Appellant claims that the Judge of the Sixth District having taken charge of the case with the consent of the prisoner, it was incompetent for the Judge of the Fourteenth District to again sit in the case without his consent.

After the rendition of the verdict, the Judge of the Fourteenth District resumed his seat, and acted in the subsequent proceedings. Defendant prepared his statement and moved for a new trial before said Judge, and the motion was heard and decided without any objection to his acting. No objection was made to the Judge of the Fourteenth District resuming his functions in the case—although his leaving the bench was made one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial—until the time for passing sentence had arrived, and all other resources had failed, when the objection was taken for the first time on motion in arrest of judgment.

These proceedings taken and voluntarily prosecuted by the defendant himself before the Judge of the Fourteenth District operated as a waiver of any objections to his acting further in the case, and, upon defendant's own theory, it would have been improper for the Judge of the Sixth District, after the denial of the new trial, to again resume a seat on the bench for the purpose of passing sentence; and had he in fact done so, the defendant would, doubtless, have again interposed an objection on that ground. But we think on other grounds the Judge of the Fourteenth District did not err in passing sentence. As before stated, the Court was properly organized. It was a legal Court, and had jurisdiction of the case. The question is one of regularity, or perhaps only of propriety, and not of jurisdiction. The Judge was the Judge of that Court. There was a legal verdict, and it only remained to pronounce the sentence of the law. Had the case been tried before the Judge of the Court, and had the Judge died or resigned after the rendition of the verdict, and before the time for passing sentence had transpired, and another Judge been appointed or elected to fill the vacancy, there can be no doubt that it would have been competent for the Judge newly appointed or elected to pass sentence. The Court is the same, although a different person occupies the position of Judge. This must be so, or no sentence in such cases could be passed. What else could be done? There is no provision for discharging a person under such circumstances, and there would be no propriety in so doing, or in trying him again; for there is already a valid verdict of conviction standing against him, which cannot be got rid of. If the judgment should be reversed, it could only be sent back for the purpose of giving an opportunity to the Judge of the Sixth District to review the proceedings and pass sentence upon the verdict. Nothing arising subsequent to the verdict can vitiate it, if valid when rendered. A Judge who did not try the case, then, may have jurisdiction to pronounce the sentence. In this case the Judge was possessed of all the facts necessary to enable him to intelligently exercise the discretion conferred upon him by law, in fixing the term of punishment. He had heard, at the trial, all the testimony except that of the deceased witness, which was in writing, and was before him on motion for new trial in the same form in which it was presented to the jury. He did not hear the argument to the jury, but he heard the same questions re-argued after more thorough preparation on the part of counsel on the motion for a new trial, where the insufficiency of the evidence was one of the grounds. The Judge who passed the sentence was evidently, then, better prepared to fix the term of punishment than the Judge who read the written charge to the jury and received the verdict could well have been.

Opinion of the Court.

We think the principle of the last two points has been directly decided against appellant in People v. Hobson, 17 Cal. 429. A question as to the propriety of changing the personnel of the Court had been suggested, but not decided in People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 113. But the suggestion was reconsidered and the point determined in People v. Hobson. We quote here the observations of Mr. Justice Baldwin upon both points. He says:

"The first error assigned is that the proceedings were irregular in this: That the motion for a new trial was passed on by a Court composed of different members from those before whom the trial was had. This fact only appears by the minutes, in which the names of the Justices composing the Court on the motion and in the previous stages of the trial are recited. No objection to the hearing of the motion by the Justices then present and acting was made by the prisoner.

"We intimated in a previous case the danger of a reversal of a judgment of conviction for this cause, though no express decision was made upon the point. The question has been more fully argued. We think, under the circumstances here, that the defendant cannot maintain the error assigned. His failure to object to the Justice not sitting before, was itself a waiver of exception for this cause. The objection does not go to the power of the Justice to act, but is merely in the light of an exception to him because it was more proper that the Justice who sat during the trial, and who, therefore, may be supposed to be better acquainted with the history of the case, should pass upon the final motion which involved a review of the previous proceedings. If the defendant was willing that the Justice should sit, he should not be allowed the double advantage of trying his motion before him and of appealing from the decision if adverse, and also the advantage of contesting the propriety of his sitting. Besides, we think that the rule we have recently laid down in People v. Conner, and other cases, covers this assignment. We there held that the proceedings of the Court of Sessions were to be construed like those of the District Court, and that the same presumptions attach to them as to those of the District Court. If, from resignation or other such cause, one of the Justices, after a trial, should not be able to sit on the motion for a new trial, unquestionably this would not prevent the matter from being passed upon by another Justice acting in the place of the one thus incapacitated. We must presume that a sufficient reason existed to justify this change in the Bench—in other words, that the Court acted properly in the premises, when nothing is shown to the contrary. These remarks are made upon the assumption that the point, in the absence of these matters of explanation, is well taken. But upon a reconsideration of the subject we are not disposed so to hold. We think that the ends of justice might generally be better subserved if all the members of the Court who heard the case on the trial should sit on the motion for a new trial; but this is not a statutory right or obligation; and it would be going too far if we were to avoid the action of a Court legally constituted, and having full jurisdiction of the subject, merely upon the suggestion that it was not so constituted as to the particular members as more probably to insure an intelligent and satisfactory decision. Cases might arise where this point alone, or in connection with other matters, would entitle a party to a new trial or to a hearing of his motion before the Justices presiding on the trial; but in the absence of a showing of some special cause, we think this single circumstance does not constitute a ground of reversal of the judgment.”

These views meet our approbation. It follows that the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice CURREY expressed no opinion.

REPORTS OF CASES

DETERMINED IN

THE SUPREME COURT

OCTOBER TERM, 1865.

C. E. GORHAM AND R. S. RAYMOND v. L. GILSON AND
E. M. HAMPTON.

TO COMPEL A RECONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY OBTAINED BY FRAUD.—If a corporation is induced by the fraudulent representations of a part of its stockholders to make a conveyance of its property, and the grantee, in pursuance of a previous arrangement, conveys the property to the stockholders who committed a fraud, the innocent stockholders cannot maintain an action in equity to compel a conveyance to them of such portion of the property as they owned of the stock of the corporation.

Query?—Could the innocent stockholders maintain an action against those committing the fraud for damages?

Query?—Would equity compel a reconveyance of the property to the corporation in an action in the name of the corporation, or if the corporation refused to act in an action commenced in the name of the innocent stockholders in which the corporation was made a party defendant?

How EQUITY WILL RELIEVE AGAINST FRAUD.—If the title to property has been acquired through fraud, equity will grant relief by undoing what has been done, and placing the title where it was before.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, Tuolumne County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John T. Doyle, and Robert F. Morrison, for Appellants.

If a bill in equity had been filed by the corporation, alleging the fraud, and praying to have the deed set aside, it would necessarily have sought to avoid the transaction in toto, and to do this should of like necessity offer to pay the Kryster mortgage, principal, interest, and costs, in full, or to restore his judgment for the deficiency, and his lien on the property (with the right to mesne profits pending redemption) acquired under Sheriff's sale. The property, when conveyed back under a decree made on such a bill, would belong to the corporation, and constitute the fund from which to pay its corporate debts, and distribute any surplus to its stockholders. Such a bill should of necessity have charged that Kryster was privy to the fraudulent representations, else the transfer to him could not have been set aside.

If the corporation brought an action for deceit, the measure of damages would be the difference between the value of the property and what the company obtained for it; and this sum when recovered would also be a fund, first for the payment of its creditors, and thereafter for distribution among its stockholders.

These propositions we deem clear on elementary principles. But neither of these remedies has been sought by the plaintiffs in the present instance. They have filed a bill in equity, alleging acts which they claim constitute a fraud upon the corporation, and praying in effect to be admitted to a participation in the fruits of such fraud. The property was corporate property; the consideration for which it was sold was received by the corporation; whatever loss was sustained by parting with it at less than its value was a loss to the corporation, and hence the damages or redress which the law awards for wrongfully procuring such result can only be awarded to the corporation. The rule is well settled that so long as a corporation exists it must be the plaintiff in an action to obtain redress for an injury to the corporate rights of property. The only exception is that where the Trustees or Directors dishonestly, unfaithfully, or by collusion with the other party, refuse to do their duty to the stockholders by bringing a suit. There, to prevent a failure of justice, an individual corporator is permitted to sue, not for the benefit of himself alone, but for that of the corporation. (Hersey v. Veasie, 11 Shepley, 12; Smith v. Hurd, 12 Metc. 385; Abbott v. Merriam, 8 Cush. 589; Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 494; Robinson v. Smith, 8 Paige, 232.) So that in the present case, after the defendants shall have satisfied the present judgment against them, they will, on precisely similar allegations to those contained in the complaint, be liable to respond to the corporation for the whole of the property acquired by the transaction here complained of as fraudulent. (See Smith v. Hurd et al., 12 Metc. 371; Painter v. Henderson, 7 Barr. 50.)

H. P. Barber, for Respondents.

If two of these by fraud induced the remaining two to assent to a conveyance of their interest, and afterwards, through such fraud, obtained possession of the entire corporate property, holding it as individuals, equity will treat them as trustees for the benefit of their co-corporators thus defrauded to the extent of the interest of the latter in the former corporate property thus fraudulently obtained. (Barbour on Parties, 201; Putnam v. Sweet, 1 Chand. Wis. 286; Silk Co. v. Campbell, 3 Duch. N. J. 539; Sears v. Hotchkiss, 26 Conn. 171; Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. 518; Tiffany & Bullen on Trusts, 169.)

Plaintiffs are not seeking to set aside the sale of this property by the corporation, and possibly could not, for the reason suggested by appellants, that Kryster is an innocent purchaser for value. But although a Court of equity might not have power in such case to vacate the sale, it has ample power to compel the fraudulent parties to make restitution by suffering the sale to stand, and allotting to those who possessed an equitable interest in the property, the quantum of such interest so fraudulently obtained from them.

The complaint alleges that at the time of the execution of the Kryster mortgage, "plaintiffs and defendants were the sole owners, in equal proportions, of the entire stock and property of said corporation.

In Bayless v. Orne, Freeman's Chy. R. 161, and Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige, 233, the stockholders of a corporation are designated as the real parties in interest.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The complaint in this case alleges in substance: That a corporation called the Gilson Quartz Mining Company was duly formed in 1858, which subsequently, in 1861, became indebted to one John Kryster, and to secure the payment of the debt, mortgaged to him its entire corporate property, consisting of a certain quartz vein and quartz mill situated thereon. That subsequently, in 1862, the corporation being unable to pay, Kryster foreclosed, and became the purchaser at the sale at a price less than the amount of his judgment by some three or four hundred dollars. That in consequence of certain false and fraudulent representations as to the condition and value of the corporate property made by defendants, plaintiffs were induced to assent to a sale and conveyance by the corporation of its equity of redemption to Kryster, in consideration of a release of his entire claim. That at the date of the mortgage and deed by the corporation to Kryster, the plaintiffs and defendants were the only stockholders, and each owned a fourth of the stock of the corporation. That after Kryster became vested with the title, the defendants purchased the corporate property from him in pursuance of a previous understanding with him to that effect, but it is not pretended that Kryster was a party to the alleged fraud. That the defendants took possession of the mine and mill under the title thus obtained, and worked the same, making therefrom large profits. Plaintiffs ask a decree directing defendants to convey one half of the mine and mill to them upon the payment by them to the defendants of one half of the sum paid by them to Kryster for the property, and requiring the defendants to account with and pay over to the plaintiffs one half of the profits.

No demurrer to the complaint was interposed, but an answer was filed putting in issue all the material allegations of the complaint so far as the gravamen of the action is concerned. The case was tried, and plaintiffs obtained the relief for which they prayed. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and the defendants have appealed from both the judgment and the order.

Several points have been made which we shall not notice, because in our judgment the first, which is to the effect that the plaintiffs cannot maintain this action, is conclusive of the case.

This action proceeds upon the theory, (and it could be maintained upon no other,) that in equity the defendants, by reason of their fraudulent acts, have become the trustees of the plaintiffs to the extent of an undivided half interest in the property in question, holding and working the same for their use and benefit. But we think it clear that the facts set out in the complaint do not sustain that theory. Where, by fraud and deceit a party is induced to do that which, but for the fraud and deceit, he would not have done, equity will interfere, and, so far as it can be done, restore him to his original rights. If the defrauding party has obtained by such means the title to property, equity will convert him into a trustee for the defrauded party, and will compel the execution of the trust by ordering the deed so obtained to be cancelled or the property reconveyed, thus replacing the property and the parties where they were originally; thus undoing what has been done, and putting the title where it was before, or, in other words, adjudging that the title remains unchanged and unaffected by the conveyance, because the same is in equity null and void, by reason of the fraud and deceit by which it was obtained.

Such relief, however, the plaintiffs are not in a position to claim. They never had any title, legal or equitable, to the property in question. They have not only not conveyed anything to the defendants, but they had nothing to convey. The property belonged to the corporation and not to them, and the corporation and not they conveyed it away under the fraudulent inducements in question. So far as any right to the form of relief sought in this action is concerned, the fraud was committed against the corporation and not against them. It may be that they could maintain an action sounding in damages, but we think it clear that they are not entitled to the kind of relief which they are now seeking. That they can only obtain indirectly through the action of the corporation. Should the corporation refuse to act, however, it is possible that the plaintiffs might maintain an action for the relief in question, by alleging that fact and making the corporation a party defendant, in which case the Court (the requisite parties being before it) might direct an account and transfer of the property to the corporation for the benefit of all concerned. But upon this point we express no opinion. (Hersey v. Veasey, 24 Maine, 9; Smith v. Hurd, 12 Metcalf, 385; Abbott v. Merriam, 8 Cush. 589; Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige, 232.)

The judgment is reversed and the Court below directed to dismiss the action.

H. W. CARPENTIER v. M. MENDENHALL et als.

OUSTER OF TENANT IN COMMON BY CO-TENANT.—A finding, in a special verdict, in an action of ejectment brought by a tenant in common against a co-tenant who is in the occupancy of the land held in common, that the plaintiff demanded of his co-tenant to be let into the immediate possession of the same, and that the co-tenant refused, is not a finding of an ouster, either in terms or by legal conclusions.

THE FACT OF OUSTER OF A CO-TENANT MUST BE FOUND.—The law will not presume from acts of ownership by one tenant in common, nor from his refusal to allow a co-tenant to enter, nor from both combined, that there was an intent to oust, but the intent to oust must be established as a fact by the finding of the jury.

OUSTER OF CO-TENANT MAY BE INFERRED FROM DEMAND AND REFUSAL.—If a tenant in common demand of his co-tenant, who is in the occupancy of the common property, to be let into possession, and the co-tenant refuses and does not give any explanation of his refusal, the Court would be justified in directing or advising the jury to infer an ouster.

PURCHASE OF AN INTEREST IN LAND BY ONE WHO HAS TAKEN POSSESSION WRONGFULLY.—If one who takes possession of land unlawfully afterwards becomes a tenant in common in the ownership of the same, the moment he becomes such tenant in common his possession loses its hostile character, and the presumption is that it remains amicable until the contrary is made to appear.

DAMAGES IN EJECTMENT.—In ejectment by a tenant in common against a co-tenant who took possession wrongfully, but afterwards became a co-tenant, plaintiff cannot in that action recover damages for the period while the defendant was unlawfully in possession.

DAMAGES IN EJECTMENT AGAINST CO-TENANT.—A tenant in common, in ejectment against his co-tenant, cannot in that action recover damages or mesne profits for the period during which the possession of the co-tenant was not adverse.

DAMAGES AFTER OUSTER OF CO-TENANT.—A tenant in common who is ousted by a co-tenant, may recover damages in ejectment from the time of the ouster, according to his right.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. B. Carpentier, for Appellant.

Thomas A. Brown, and John Reynolds, for Respondents.

By the Court, SHAFTER, J.

This is an action of ejectment. The trial was by jury, who returned a special verdict upon issues submitted to them by the Court. Judgment was entered upon the findings in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, and at the July term, 1864, the judgment was reversed by this Court and a new trial ordered, on the authority of Carpentier v. Webster. The appellant moves that the order be vacated, and for judgment in his favor upon the special verdict.

The jury have found: First—That the plaintiff, on and prior to the first day of September, 1858, was, and that he still is, the owner in fee of the equal undivided half of the Rancho of San Ramon, embracing the premises described in the complaint, and of a further undivided interest equal to three hundred and twenty acres. Second—That all the defendants, with the exception of Stout, Slankard and White, entered into possession on the day before named. That Stout took possession July 14, 1862, White on the 14th of May, 1860, and Slankard on the 3d of January, 1863—the day when the complaint was filed. That all the defendants have continued in possession since the date of their respective entries. Third—That none of the defendants had any title to the demanded premises prior to the 9th of March, 1860, nor any right to the possession of the same nor any part thereof; but that on that day they, with the exception of Stout, White and Slankard, became tenants in common with the plaintiff. That Stout became such tenant July 14, 1862; White, May 14, 1860; and Slankard, January 3, 1863. Fourth—That the plaintiff, prior to the commencement of the action, and between the 15th and 20th of December, 1862, served upon each of the defendants, personally, the following written demand:

“SAN RAMON, December 20, 1862.

“SIR: You will please to take notice that the lands and premises now occupied by you are part and parcel of the Rancho San Ramon, of which I am the principal owner, and that I demand to be let into the immediate possession and enjoyment of the same, and every part and parcel thereof.

“Respectfully yours,

“H. W. CARPENTIER.”

Fifth—The rental value of each of the parcels occupied by the respective defendants.

Two questions have been discussed by counsel—first, is the plaintiff entitled to judgment on the special verdict? and if so, then, secondly, for what amount by way of damages?

The second question it will be unnecessary for us to consider, for we are satisfied that the special verdict does not lay an adequate foundation for a judgment in the plaintiff's favor on the main question involved.

The trouble with the verdict is, that it does not find an ouster, either in terms or by legal conclusion. A demand is found, and a refusal matching the demand; but “demand and refusal" does not fall within any definition of "ouster," as that term is used in the law governing the relation of tenants in common. Neither acts of ownership by one tenant in common, nor refusal to allow co-tenants to enter, necessarily work a disseizin. The law will not presume from either the one or the other, nor from both combined, that there was an intent to oust. That intent must be established as a fact by the finding of the jury. Conversion is one of the points to be established in actions of trover; but it is settled that "demand and refusal" is not conversion, but only evidence of it for the consideration of the jury. In the absence of all explanation, the Court would be justified in directing or advising the jury to infer a conversion, or an ouster in a case like the one at bar, from the fact of demand and refusal; but the inference is to be made by the jury and not by the Court. (2 Stark Ev. 683; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason, 330; Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 468; Carpentier v. Webster, 27 Cal. 524.)

But it is insisted that the verdict finds an ouster of the plaintiff by all the defendants, except Stout, White, and Slankard, prior to the demand and refusal, and independent of it, to wit: their unlawful entry upon the premises in September, 1858—a year and a half before the rights of the defendants as tenants in common were acquired.

It is said, in support of this position, that the possession acquired in 1858 was by disseizin, and it is added, "that the possession never lost its hostile character;" and it is upon this assumption of fact that the whole argument turns. But the verdict demonstrates that the possession unlawfully taken in 1858 did lose its hostile character, prima facie, on the 9th of March, 1860, when, as the verdict finds, they became tenants in common with the plaintiff. The moment the defendants became tenants in common with the plaintiff, their possession lost its hostile character by the legal effect of the fact; and it cannot be presumed that the possession was otherwise than amicable thereafter, until the contrary is made to appear.

It is further claimed that an ouster is manifested on the face of the answers; and here we are referred to Harrison v.

Taylor et al., 33 Missouri, 211. The doctrine of that case is that when a defendant, sued in ejectment by a tenant in common, states in his answer that "he holds the premises adversely against all persons," the action will not fall on the ground that there was no demand made previous to the action. The case at bar is not within the rule. The answers here contain no averment or admission of adverse possession on the part of any of the defendants, but deny the ouster alleged in terms.

Though we have declined to pass upon the question of the amount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled, for the reason that on this record it does not appear that he is entitled to any, still, as the case must go back for a new trial, under the order already made, we deem it proper to state the principles by which the question of damage must be controlled.

As to damages which accrued prior to March 9th, 1860, traceable to the ouster of 1858, they cannot be recovered in this action. For the reasons already stated, that ouster has become unavailable as a basis of recovery in chief, and it is therefore unavailable in this action as a ground for the recovery of damages resulting from it. A party may recover specific real property, "with damages or without them," (Prac. Act, Sec. 64,) but when he sues to recover such property with damages, he cannot recover damages if he fails to recover the property. The Practice Act states an exception to this rule, but the case at bar is not within it. (Prac. Act, Sec. 256.)

As to damages during the interval between the 9th of March, 1860, when the defendants, or most of them, became tenants in common with the plaintiff, and the demand and refusal of December, 1863, neither damages nor rents and profits can be recovered in this suit, for in legal judgment the possession of the defendants during that time was not adversary, but amicable, and in strict keeping with the title.

As to damages that have accrued since the demand and refusal, if it shall turn out as matter of fact that the refusal was not supported by some legal right to refuse — having in fact no other or better basis than the assumption that the plaintiff had no right of entry on the premises—then the plaintiff will be entitled to recover damages according to his right, and the plea of the Statute of Limitations will not bar the claim.

FAILURE TO FILE BRIEFS OR POINTS.—When the time for filing briefs has expired, and no briefs or points have been filed, and the case is taken up for decision in its proper order, the judgment will be affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Tyler & Cobb, for Appellant.

John C. Byers, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The time for filing briefs having expired three months ago, and none having been filed, and there being no points on file, as required by rule seventeen, the judgment is affirmed, on the authority of Edmondson v. Alameda County, 24 Cal. 349, and Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 488. A like disposition will be made of all cases similarly situated, when taken up for decision in their proper order.

THE PEOPLE v. J. F. SHULER.

INDICTMENT FOR ROBBERY.—An indictment for robbery is not bad because it charges that the property was forcibly and violently taken from one person and against his will, and that another person was the owner of it, though it fails to aver that it was taken without the consent or against the will of the owner, and also fails to aver the character of the possession of the person from whom it was taken.

CHANGE OF VENUE.—Bias or prejudice of the presiding Judge is no legal ground for a change of the place of trial of a criminal action.

NAME.—An affidavit for a change of venue in a criminal action made by defendant, which states that he is informed by his counsel and believes that the Sheriff and his deputies are biased and prejudiced against him, is insufficient.

AFFIDAVIT FOR CHANGE OF VENUE.—An affidavit for a change of venue in a criminal case, which states upon information and belief that the people of the county are prejudiced against the defendant, is insufficient.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—Where a criminal charge is to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be not only consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis consistent with the proof.

CHARGE OF COURT IN CRIMINAL CASE.—The presumption in the appellate Court is that the charge of the Court to the jury in a criminal case was in writing, unless the record shows it was not.

APPEAL from the County Court, Butte County.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Coffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

It is not charged that Wyckoff was the bailee of Whiting. The ownership is in the latter, while the felonious taking was from the former. It does not aver the character of the possession of Wyckoff, or that he was the agent or servant of the owner of the property. In fact, the indictment charges two distinct and positive offenses. First, in terms, it is complete for an assault upon the person of Wyckoff; and secondly, it charges a larceny of the property of Whiting, and then, to fill up the interstices of bad pleading, technically designated the whole wrongdoing as highway robbery. We hold that to make the indictment sufficient for robbery, the character of the possession of Wyckoff of the property should be fully and substantially set out. The indictment must give the particular circumstances of the offense charged. (Wood's Digest, p. 288, Sec. 239.)

One of the "particular circumstances" in this case is, the character of the possession of Wyckoff of the property alleged to be stolen. As the indictment is drawn, all the averments may be true, and yet the defendant not be guilty of robbery. The money alleged to have been stolen may have first been taken unlawfully by the party put in fear. If so, the forcible retaking of them from him by the defendant would not be the offense of robbery. (Commonwealth v. Clifford, 8 Cushing, 216, 217; Rex v. Hall, 3 Car. & P. 409.) The indictment does not state that money or property was taken against the will of the owner. In fact there is nothing shown whereby we can ascertain how Wyckoff obtained possession of the property from the owner.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the indictment. It was not necessary to set forth the facts and circumstances showing the bailment. It was only necessary to set forth such facts in an indictment for the special statutory offense created by section seventy-one of the Act concerning crimes and punishments where the bailee of goods converts the same to his own use, etc. (Wood's Digest, 339; People v. Poggi, 19 Cal. 600.) This indictment was a good common law indictment for robbery. The two cases referred to by counsel for the appellant are not applicable to such a case as this. The case of Rex v. Hall, 3 Car. and Payne, 409, simply decides that the question whether the defendant entertained a bona fide impression that the property was his or not should be left to the jury. And the case of Commonwealth v. Clifford, simply decides that the indictment must allege that the stolen goods were the property of the defendant or the property of some third person. Here it is alleged that the property was taken from the person of Wyckoff, and that the same was the property of B. F. Whiting, the third person. In the Massachusetts case the property was not alleged to be the property of anybody at all. Certainly it was not necessary for the pleader to set up in the indictment negatively that the defendant was not the agent of Whiting, not even under the common law, and much more so not under the liberal provisions of our statute. (See especially, People v. King, 27 Cal. 507.)

By the Court, CURREY, J.

The defendant was indicted with several others by the Grand Jury of Butte County for the crime of robbing Charles A. Wyckoff of three hundred dollars in money and eighty-five ounces of gold dust of the value of fifteen hundred dollars, and three leather purses of the value of seventy-five cents, which the indictment alleges was the property of one B. F. Whiting. To this indictment the defendant demurred on the ground that the facts stated therein do not constitute a public offense, specifying particularly wherein. The demurrer was overruled and the defendant pleaded not guilty. He was afterwards tried and found guilty, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the State Prison for the term of ten years.

I. The objection made to the indictment the defendant's counsel insists should have been sustained by the Court. The fifty-ninth section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments defines robbery as follows: "Robbery is the felonious and violent taking of money, goods or other valuable thing from the person of another by force or intimidation." This in no material respect is different from the common law definition of the crime of robbery. If the offense is charged essentially and substantially as it is defined by the statute then the indictment must be regarded as sufficient. The Act to regulate proceedings in criminal cases requires that the indictment shall contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense. The party accused must be charged directly, and the offense must be charged in the same unequivocal manner, together with the particular circumstances of it when necessary to constitute a complete offense. (Laws 1851, pp. 237, 238.)

The indictment charges that the defendants, on a certain day, at a particular place in Butte County, "upon Charles A. Wyckoff did feloniously make an assault and put him in fear and danger of his life, and from his person and control, and against his will, did feloniously, forcibly and violently steal, take and carry away certain property and money" which is particularly described of a specified value, alleging the same to be "the property and money of B. F. Whiting." It is claimed on the part of the defendant that the indictment is bad because it is not stated therein that the property was taken from the person or presence of the owner or against his will, or without his knowledge and consent; and further, because it is not stated that Wyckoff had the right of possession of the property, or was in the peaceable possession of it, when it was taken.

The indictment does not state that the property which the defendant with others was charged with feloniously, forcibly and violently taking from Wyckoff was taken from Whiting, or without his knowledge and consent. The statute does not require that the indictment shall in terms contain such a statement, nor a statement in terms that the bailee of it had the right of possession. The indictment does state that from the person and control of Wyckoff, and against his will, the defendants did feloniously, forcibly and violently steal, take and carry away the money and property described. It thus appears that Wyckoff had possession of the property when it was taken, for it was taken from his person and control. Having possession of it, the law deems that possession rightful, and therefore the right of Wyckoff to the possession need not be stated in the indictment. (Laws 1851, p. 289, Sec. 248.)

When money or goods are stolen out of the possession of a bailee, they may be described in the indictment as the property of either bailor or bailee. (State v. Somerville, 21 Maine, 14.) The cases usually given as an illustration of this rule are those of goods left at an inn; cloth given to a tailor to manufacture, and linen to a laundress to wash; chattels intrusted to a person for safe keeping; goods levied upon by a Sheriff er Constable, and in his custody. In such cases the property may be laid in the indictment as the goods and chattels of the bailes or of the owner, at the option of the prosecutor. (Wharton's Prec. of Indictments, 192, and the authorities there cited.) In People v. Vics, 21 Cal. 345, the Court held that an indictment for robbery must contain an allegation as to the ownership of the property of which the party named was robbed, or that it did not belong to the defendant. The Court then say: "It is not necessary that the property should belong to the party from whose possession it was forcibly taken." We think the indictment was properly sustained.

II. Before the trial was commenced the defendant, with his co-defendants, made an application to change the place of trial on the ground that they could not obtain a fair and impartial trial in the Court in which the case was pending. The reasons assigned in support of the ground stated, were that the Judge of the Court and the Sheriff and his deputies were biased and prejudiced against the defendants, and had at divers times and occasions expressed to many citizens of the County of Butte their opinions that the defendants were guilty of the offense with which they stood charged; by which the public, and particularly the citizens of said county, were biased and prejudiced against the defendants. That the newspaper published at Oroville in said county, and the press of the State generally, had teemed with articles of abuse and slander against the defendants, which had been spread broadcast over Butte County to such an extent that the citizens thereof had unanimously become biased and prejudiced against the defendants, and therefore were not qualified to give the defendants a fair trial. The allegation of the defendants respecting the bias and prejudice of the Judge and Sheriff and his deputies, and the people of the county, against them was, as appears from the defendant's affidavit, upon information which they deposed they believed to be true. This application was denied by the Court.

: In respect to the bias and prejudice of the Judge, which the defendants deposed to exist, as informed by their counsel, the cases of The People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 33, and The People v. Mahoney, 18 Cal. 185, are decisive and adverse to defendants' position.

The charge made by the defendants that the Sheriff and his deputies were biased and prejudiced against them and had expressed opinions of their guilt, is made upon information derived from their counsel. If the charge was admitted to be true, we are not satisfied, notwithstanding the impropriety of those officers indulging in the expression of opinions which might contribute to defeat the due administration of justice, that it would be a good and sufficient ground to authorize the Court to change the place of trial. But the charge cannot be regarded as sustained. The affidavit pointed to the source of the defendants' information, which was conveniently accessible. In such cases the party relying upon facts and circumstances of which he is informed and which he believes, should produce from the source or sources of his information, when he can conveniently do so, evidence of their truth. A rule requiring less than this would be attended with great inconvenience and operate in many instances to defeat the ends of justice.

The defendant's affidavit does not establish the fact that the people of the County of Butte were so prejudiced against him as to become disqualified to act as jurors in this case. The statement in this respect was upon his information and belief, which, standing alone, no Court in the exercise of a proper discretion could regard of sufficient probative force to authorize a change of the place of trial.

III. In the general charge of the Court to the jury, it is stated that the evidence in the case is mostly of a circumstantial nature. The defendants' counsel seems to have so considered it, and afterwards requested the Court to instruct the jury in these words: "In the application of circumstantial evidence the utmost caution should be used; it is always insufficient to convict or warrant a verdict, when assuming all to be proved which the evidence tends to prove, some other hypothesis may still be true."

The rule on the point to which this requested instruction seems to have been directed, is that where a criminal charge is to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with every other rational conclusion. (1 Greenleaf's Ev. Sec. 34.) The instruction requested is obscure if not without any definite meaning whatever. The hypothesis supposed to be found in the sentence as the antithesis of the words "other hypothesis" is indefinite, and quite too obscure to serve as a guide to a jury in such cases. If the requested instruction was intended to inculcate the rule above stated, then the hypothesis to which it was sought to refer the proof should have been qualified as reasonable and consistent with such proof. In our judgment the Court properly refused to give to the jury this requested instruction.

IV. The defendant assigns as error that the instructions of the Court to the jury were not in writing. That they were not in writing this Court is, in effect, asked to presume, because it does not appear that they were in writing. But as we held in People v. Chung Lit, 17 Cal. 322, and in The People v. Garcia, 25 Cal. 531, we hold in this case, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the instructions of the Court to the jury were in writing. If the Court erred in this respect, it was the business of the defendant to show it. It will not be presumed.

We have examined the several points which the defendants' counsel have deemed of sufficient importance to present for consideration, and are of the opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice SHAFER and Mr. Justice RHODES expressed no opinion.

W. H. STONE et al. v. BUNKER HILL COPPER, GOLD,

COURT COMMISSIONER.—A Court Commissioner has no jurisdiction to hear a motion or make any order in reference to the dissolution of an injunction, unless the motion is referred to him by the Court.

Query?—Can an appeal be taken from an order of a Court Commissioner dissolving an injunction, without first applying to the District Court to correct the error.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eleventh Judicial District, El Dorado County.

The defendant was a corporation organized for mining purposes in El Dorado County, having its place of business at the Penobscot House, in said county.

The plaintiffs, who were stockholders in the corporation, commenced the action to enjoin the corporation from removing its place of business to San Francisco.

A preliminary injunction was granted. The defendants gave notice that they would move the Court Commissioner of El Dorado County for a dissolution of the injunction. The injunction was dissolved. The plaintiffs appealed from the order dissolving the injunction.

S. & G. E. Williams, for Appellants.

Blanchard & Hornblower, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The only point made by the appellant is, that the Court Commissioner had no jurisdiction to dissolve the injunction. The powers of Court Commissioners are prescribed by the Act of 1863, "concerning the Courts of justice of this State, and judicial officers" (Laws 1863, p. 338, Sec. 40.) This was a contested motion brought before the Commissioner on notice, and not "referred to him by the Court for determination." We think the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear the motion, or make the order without a reference by the Court in pursuance of the second clause of section forty. No question is made as to the regularity of the appeal without first applying to the District Court to rectify the action of its subordinate officer.

Order reversed.

CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE OF SEMINARY LAND.—An unintentional mistake or misrepresentation in an affidavit made by an applicant to purchase land of this State as a portion of the seventy-two sections granted by Congress to this State for a seminary of learning, does not render the certificate of purchase void, so that it may be attacked collaterally by one who brings an action against the purchaser to recover possession of the same, and does not connect himself with the title of the Government.

WHEN STATE CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE VOID.—The question discussed in the opinion whether a certificate of purchase of land, being a contract between the Government and the purchaser, will be declared void for fraud, unless under similar circumstances a contract between two private persons would be held void.

CAN STATE LAND CERTIFICATE BE ATTACKED COLLATERALLY.—Question discussed in opinion whether a State certificate of purchase of land, if not absolutely void, may be attacked collaterally.

STATE CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE OF LAND.—A certificate of purchase of land from the State is prima facie evidence of legal title in the purchaser.

APPEAL from the District Court, Second Judicial District, Tehama County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant, argued that the defendant could not be treated as the trustee of the plaintiff for one half the land in an action at law. He also contended that the defendant could never be treated as the trustee of the plaintiff, unless he could force the plaintiff to pay one half the cost of procuring the title, and cited Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumner, 487. He also contended that a purchase of public land never inured to the benefit of a person other than the purchaser, unless there was an express contract to that effect, and cited Bryant v. Hendricks, 5 Clarke, Iowa, 257.

W. S. Long, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

It appears in this case that on the 24th of March, 1862, the plaintiff commenced an action against Elijah Shepherdson and M. D. Shepherdson to recover a certain sum of money, and on that day caused an attachment to be issued and levied upon the premises in controversy. Judgment was afterwards entered, execution was issued, the premises were sold and conveyed by the Sheriff to the plaintiff, the deed being executed September 12, 1863. In 1858 Elijah Shepherdson and M. D. Shepherdson were in possession of the premises, and so remained up to September, 1861, when M. D. Shepherdson left the premises. On the 25th of February, 1862, Elijah Shepherdson sold and conveyed the premises to the defendant. The conveyance purports to be executed by E. and M. D. Shepherdson, but was in fact executed only by Elijah Shepherdson. On the 8th of December, 1863, the defendant made an application to the State Locating Agent to locate the premises as a portion of the lands to which the State was entitled under the grant of seventy-two sections of land by Congress to the State for a State Seminary. Such proceedings were thereupon had that the location was made, and was approved by the proper officers on the part of the State and by the Register and Receiver of the United States Land Office at Marysville, and on the 5th of October, 1863, the Register of the State Land Office issued to the defendant a certificate of purchase.

The plaintiff sued in ejectment to recover the possession of the premises. The Court below found for the plaintiff as to the undivided half of the premises. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The Court found, among other things, that the Shepherdsons were tenants in common of the premises; that by the deed from Elijah Shepherdson to the defendant he became a tenant in common with M. D. Shepherdson, and that by the execution of the Sheriff's deed the plaintiff became the owner of the half of the premises held by M. D. Shepherdson, and thereupon became a tenant in common with the defendant. In respect to the selection and location of the lands as State Seminary lands, the finding is as follows: "His (the defendant's) first proceeding in that case was a fraud that will vitiate everything that it touches. He was compelled to make an affidavit that there was no valid claim to the land adverse to the one he held, and that there were no improvements upon the land other than his own. He probably believed this to be true, from his deed from E. Shepherdson, not knowing the legal effect of it. But the legal fact was that he was the owner of only an undivided half, and M. D. Shepherdson the other half, as well as of the improvements, and of the share of M. D. Shepherdson plaintiff is now the owner. Defendant's present claim is not a title, but a certificate of location which may ripen into a title hereafter. But an absolute title from the State or United States would place him in no better position."

The defendant, in his motion for a new trial, specifies several particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, as he alleges, to justify the findings; but as we are not apprised of the positions taken by the plaintiff, and have not the assistance of a brief or points and authorities in his behalf, we shall confine our attention to one point, and that is, whether the defendant's certificate of purchase was fraudulent, and therefore void.

No complaint seems to have been made as to the regularity of any of the proceedings, and there is no room for doubt that the land was public land of the United States, subject to be selected on behalf of the State, in part satisfaction of the grant of Congress. We understand the finding to mean that the defendant acquired no right or title in or to any portion of the premises by means of the certificates of location and purchase, but that the whole proceeding was void in toto because of the fraud of the defendant. This fraud consists of the single circumstance that the information upon which the officers of the State acted, which was derived from the affiavits of the defendant and of two other persons, made in connection with the application for the location and purchase of the land, was not true in fact. The defendant stated in his affidavit that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, there was no valid claim existing upon the land adverse to the claim he held, and that there was no improvement on the land other than his own. He is not found guilty of positive fraud, for it is said in the finding that he probably believed his affidavit to be true; and if his proceedings can be held to be fraudulent, he is responsible only for constructive fraud.

Admitting, for the purposes of the argument, that at the time of the application for the location of the land, M. D. Shepherdson was a tenant in common with the defendant, of the possession of the premises as a parcel of public lands; that such tenancy in common constituted a "valid claim existing to said land adverse to his (the defendant's) own," within section four of the Act of 1863 (Statutes 1863, p. 593); and that the one half of the improvements on the land were the property of M. D. Shepherdson; the question recurs, did the mistake in these respects of the defendant — his unintentional misrepresentations — his constructive fraud in making the statements in his affidavit, render the certificate of purchase void, so that the sale might be attacked collaterally? It appears very plainly that it did not. The proceeding amounted to a contract between the State and the purchaser, the State standing in the position of a private proprietor, but simply conducting the negotiations and expressing her assent to the contract in a mode differing from that employed by a private person; and such contract will not be held void, unless, under similar circumstances, a contract between two private persons would be so held. It is evident that a mistake, an unintentional misrepresentation, or any fraud falling short of positive or actual fraud, will not avoid a contract ab initio. If not absolutely void, it may not be attacked collaterally. Those may be proper grounds upon which an action may be brought to set aside the contract and cancel the certificate; and perhaps one who shows a better right than that held by the defendant, entitling him to the preference in making the purchase of a portion or all of the lands, may avail himself of those grounds in proceedings brought by him to have a trust established in his favor in a portion or all of the lands, and to have the defendant declared a trustee holding the legal title for his benefit. But it will be noticed that the parties to this action rely upon the legal title alone; that there is no claim for relief on the ground of fraud, and no equity set up in the complaint; that the State does not complain of the contract, that she is not a party to the action, nor does the plaintiff represent her or in any manner connect himself with her right or title. The issuing of the certificate of purchase completed the contract for the purchase of the lands, and the certificate not being absolutely void, vested in the defendant such legal title in the premises, as it was intended by the Act, should pass prior to the execution by the State, of the patent for the land. The seventeenth section of the Act declares that the certificate of purchase shall be deemed prima facie evidence of legal title to the land for which the certificate of purchase was issued, and conceding that the selection was properly made on behalf of the State, the holder of the certificate will prevail in ejectment over one who does not produce a better title derived from the State.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE ex rel. VANTINE v. ISAAC N. SENTER, COUNTY JUDGE OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

ADMINISTRATION ON ESTATES.—The Mexican system of administration upon the estates of deceased persons was superseded by the adoption of the common law in this State, April 18th, 1850.

PROBATE ACTS RETROACTIVE.—The estates of deceased persons in this State, who died prior to the passage of the Probate Act of 1850, and subsequent to the adoption of the common law, can be administered on in accordance with the provisions of the probate Acts in force.

CASES COMMENTED ON.—Grimes v. Norris, 6 Cal. 621; Toole v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 477; De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 193; Soto v. Kroder, 19 Cal. 87; and Downer v. Smith, 24 Cal. 114, commented on.

THIS was an original proceeding commenced in the Supreme Court.

On the 26th of March, 1864, Joel Harlan and Elisha Harlan, two sons of George Harlan, the deceased, filed a petition in the Probate Court of Santa Clara County, praying that letters of administration be issued to Lucien B. Huff upon the estate of the deceased. The prayer of the petition was granted, and on the 12th day of March, 1864, letters were duly issued and the administrator qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of his trust.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Eugene B. Drake, for Relator.

The probate law of May 1st, 1851, (Statutes of 1851, p. 448,) also repeals in toto the Probate Act of 1850, and makes no provision by which it can be held to operate retrospectively upon the estates of deceased persons who died in 1850. (2 Bouv. Law Dic.—word retrospective, N. 5, on page 475, and authorities there cited.)

The right (and remedy) to probate an estate are the creatures of statutory law, and derive all their vitality and power from legislative enactments; and the moment that our Probate Act of 1850 was repealed, all rights and remedies thereunder were lost except in cases where proceedings were already had or commenced; and it seems to us that the question has already been fully decided by this Court in the cases of Grimes v. Norris, 6 Cal. 624; Tevis v. Pitcher, 10 Id. 477; De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Id. 193; Soto v. Kroder, 19 Id. 87; and Downer v. Smith, 24 Id. 114.

By these decisions it is well settled, that the Act of 1850 did not operate retrospectively, to include the settlement of estates of deceased persons who died prior to its adoption and pari ratione; neither can the probate law of 1851 be held to include within its purview the estates of decedents who died in 1850, or prior to its passage.

Clarke & Carpentier, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court.

The relator seems to regard certain Acts of our Legislature of 1850 and 1851, "concerning Courts of justice and judicial officers," and "An Act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased person," as the source from which our Probate Judges derive their powers, when, in point of fact, neither of those Acts, as we think, confer any jurisdiction additional to that conferred by the Constitution. The Constitution says that the County Judges "shall perform the duties of Surrogate or Probate Judge," while the Acts "concerning Courts of justice and judicial officers," declare that those officers shall have power to do certain acts, enumerating them, which acts constitute the duties of a Surrogate or County Judge. And the "Act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons," merely prescribes the manner in which a jurisdiction already conferred shall be exercised; in a word, it is a "Probate Practice Act," or "Code of Procedure."

The very decisions cited by relator, from that of Grimes v. Norris, in 6 Cal. 624, down to and including Downer v. Smith, so far from giving any support to the views of the relator, seem clearly to indicate that the estates of all persons who have died since the organization of our State Government are within the jurisdiction of our Probate Courts.

The question presented here is res adjudicata. (See Estate of Harlan, 24 Cal. 182.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is a petition for a writ of prohibition to the County Judge of the County of Santa Clara, restraining and prohibiting him from exercising probate jurisdiction in the matter of the estate of George Harlan, who died intestate on the 8th of July, 1850.

It is insisted on behalf of the petitioner that the estate of Harlan is not subject to administration under the Probate Act of 1850, in force at the date of Harlan's death, for the reason that no proceedings were taken under that Act prior to its repeal, May 1st, 1851, (Acts of 1851, p. 489,) for the settlement of the estate; and it is further insisted that the estate is equally unaffected by the Act of 1851, that Act being, as is claimed, prospective and not retroactive in its operation.

The counsel for the petitioner relies, in support of these positions, upon Grimes v. Norris, 6 Cal. 621; Tavis v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 477; De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 193; Soto v. Kroder, 19 Cal. 87; and Downer v. Smith, 24 Cal. 114.

It is to be observed that the owners of the estates referred to in those decisions all died before the organization of the present State Government, while in the case at bar the death was not only subsequent to that event, but occurred while the Act of 1850 was in full operation. It is true that the Court, in the cases cited, say, generally, that the Act of 1851 is not retroactive; still nothing can be considered as having been adjudged by those cases except that estates, the owners of which died under the Mexican system, were not within the purview of the Act. The particular question raised upon this record is now presented for the first time in the Court of last resort.

The Mexican system was superseded in this State by the adoption of the common law on the 13th of April, 1850. (Acts 1850, p. 219.) But the common law method of administration on the estates of persons deceased was opposed in some of its features to the principles upon which our institutions are based and to our long settled habits of public action; and, furthermore, it must necessarily have failed here for the want of the needful agencies to conduct it. Hence the Probate Act of 1850.

We consider that the Legislature intended that all estates whose owners had deceased prior to the passage of the Act, and subsequent to the abrogation of the remedial system of the Mexican law, should be settled according to the method of the Act. To that extent at least the statute was intended to be retroactive. The intention could not have been that this class of estates should be closed out according to the Mexican method, for the Mexican system had been superseded before the Act was passed; and if it was not intended to subject them to the Act of 1850. it follows that it was in the mind of the Legislature to leave their settlement to the rule of the common law — a result which we cannot regard otherwise than absurd.

As to the Act of 1851, we regard it as retroactive to the same extent as the Act which preceded it, and of which it was but a revision. We rest this conclusion not only upon the grounds on which the retroactive effect of the Act of 1850 has been argued, but on the further ground that the repeal of the Act of 1850, and the passage of the Act of 1851, were contemporaneous events; and furthermore, the Act of 1851 contains a provision saving all pending cases from the operation of the repeal. Can it be supposed that the Legislature intended to make a distinction between estates to which the Act of 1850 was in a course of application at the date of its repeal, and other estates like them in every historic and meritorious particular, turning the latter over for settlement to the imperfect and objectionable methods of the common law?

There is nothing in the language of the Act which forbids us to consider it as retrospective. The Act does no more than change the common law mode of administration, and, therefore, it may well be intended that the legislative purpose was that the Act should apply to the "settlement of the estates of deceased persons," irrespective of the dates at which the deaths occurred. (Smith's Com. 308; People v. Tibbets, 4 Cow. 384, Dash v. Kleeck, 7 John. 447; Galland v. Lewis, 26 Cal. 48.) To hold that no estate can be settled under the Act of 1851 where the owner died in advance of its passage, would be to hold in effect, that the numerous amendments which have from time to time been made to the Act, applied only to the estates of persons who deceased subsequent to their adoption. A certain class of estates has been withdrawn from the operation of the Act of 1851, by the decisions upon which the petitioner relies; but the case at bar is not within the scope of those judgments. Those cases can neither be appealed to as precedents nor be used in argument as starting an available analogy.

The other points urged by counsel are not of jurisdictional consequence.

The petition is denied.

Mr. Justice RHODES being disqualified, did not sit in this cause.

INDICTMENT FOR FORGERY.—An indictment for forgery which charges the defendant, in the same count, with having forged an indorsement on a draft, and also with having uttered and passed the draft knowing the forged indorsement to have been written thereon, does not charge two offenses.

SAME.—An indictment for forgery which charges that the defendant forged an indorsement on a draft, and that it was afterwards indorsed by other persons, and that after the true indorsement the defendant uttered it, does not charge two offenses.

FORGING INDORSEMENT UPON AN UNSTAMPED DRAFT.—The crime of forgery may be committed by forging an indorsement upon an unstamped draft.

UNSTAMPED INSTRUMENT AS EVIDENCE.—A forged instrument, though unstamped, may be used as evidence against the person charged with committing the forgery.

EVIDENCE ON TRIAL FOR FORGERY.—On a trial for uttering an instrument with a forged indorsement on it, other instruments claimed to have been forged and uttered by defendant about the same time may be used as evidence for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge, notwithstanding they had been the subject of other indictments on which the defendant had been tried and acquitted.

SAME.—An indictment for forging an indorsement on an instrument and uttering it with a forged indorsement on it, knowing it to have been forged, and a trial and acquittal, does not estop the People from using it as evidence on a trial for forging an indorsement on and uttering another instrument about the same time, unless it appear from the evidence offered in support of the estoppel that the jury by their verdict decided that the defendant did not commit any of the several acts charged as constituting the forgery.

VERDICT OF ACQUITTAL AS AN ESTOPPEL.—A trial and acquittal upon a charge of forging an indorsement on an instrument, and uttering it knowing an indorsement on it to have been forged, does not necessarily make the judgment of acquittal of itself an estoppel upon any matter except the forgery of the indorsement by the defendant.

EVIDENCE TO SHOW GUILTY KNOWLEDGE ON TRIAL FOR FORGERY.—On a trial for forgery no precise rule can be laid down with regard to the distance of time between the offense charged and the occurrence of collateral facts offered in evidence to prove guilty knowledge.

Statement of Facts.

OBJECTION TO TESTIMONY.—A general objection to testimony offered that it is irrelevant is not sufficient if the real ground of objection is that no proper foundation has been laid for its introduction.

EVIDENCE OF ACTING AS A CORPORATION.—Upon a trial for forging a draft on a corporation, evidence that it was acting as a corporation is sufficient.

INTERLINING IN FORGED INSTRUMENT.—If, on a trial for forgery, it appears that an interlineation was made in the instrument after the forgery, by the consent of the defendant, and the indictment sets forth the instrument as interlined, there is no such variance as to entitle the defendant to an acquittal.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

The indictment charged that the defendant, on the 17th day of August, 1864, had in his possession a draft, the tenor of which was as follows:

“UTAH MINING COMPANY,
“Aurora, N. T., August 10th, 1864. } ”

“Ten days after sight, pay to the order of H. Bloomingdale & Co., in United States gold coin, seven hundred and fifty dollars, value received, and charge the same as advised.

“F. J. BAUM, Sup't.

“To Edward Conner, Esq.,

“Sec'y Utah Mining Company, San Francisco.”

And that he feloniously made, forged, and counterfeited, and aided and advised and encouraged another to make, forge, and counterfeit, on the back of the draft, an indorsement in writing in tenor following, “H. Bloomingdale & Co.,” with intent to defraud said Utah Mining Company, a company duly incorporated under the laws of California, and also one James L. Howard, and other persons; and also that the defendant, on the 17th day of August, 1864, had in his possession said draft—the same before the uttering and passing thereof having on its face been accepted by one Edward Conner, then the Secretary of the Utah Mining Company, and having been indorsed on the back thereof “F. J. Baum & Co.,” and then having said forged indorsement thereon—and did feloniously utter, publish, and pass as true and genuine said forged indorsement of said draft with intent to defraud said Utah Mining Company, and said Howard, and that defendant at the time well knew the forged indorsement was false and forged.

On the trial it appeared that defendant took the draft to James L. Howard to be discounted, and that Howard refused to discount it unless it was made payable in gold coin, and that he then, with the consent of defendant, interlined the words "in United States gold coin," and purchased it.

Defendant by his attorney objected to the draft being received in evidence, because the draft offered in evidence and set forth in the indictment was not the same one the indorsement was forged on, having been changed by the interlineation. The Court overruled the objection. The defendant by his attorney also objected to the draft being received in evidence because it was not stamped, and this objection was overruled.

The People called as a witness Charles Oppenheimer, and showed him draft number three, which was as follows:

"$600.	"UTAH MINING COMPANY,	}
[Stamp 10 cts.]	"Aurora, N. T., Sept. 2d, 1864.

"Ten days after sight, pay to the order of H. Bloomingdale & Co., six hundred dollars, value received, and charge the same as advised, payable in U. S. gold coin.

"F. J. BAUM, Sup't.

"To Edward Conner, Esq.,

"Sec'y Utah Mining Company, San Francisco."

Which draft was indorsed as follows:

"H. Bloomingdale & Co.,

"F. J. Baum & Co."

And offered to prove by him that the signature of H. Bloomingdale & Co. was not the signature of any member of that firm, or of any one authorized by them; and also offered to prove that defendant, on the 6th day of September, 1864, passed draft number three to J. L. Howard with the forged indorsement of Bloomingdale & Co. thereon. Defendant objected to the testimony.

Statement of Facts.

It was admitted in open Court by the District Attorney, such admission being taken as proof of the fact, that defendant had been indicted in this Court for writing the alleged forged indorsement of H. Bloomingdale & Co. on the back of number three, and for passing it with such alleged forged indorsement, knowing it to be forged; that he had been tried on such indictment and acquitted, and a judgment of acquittal duly entered in this Court thereon.

Defendant objected to any evidence tending to show that such draft, number three, was either forged or uttered by defendant, on the ground of his said acquittal, and to its admissibility in evidence against defendant, as irrelevant and incompetent, and tending to contradict the verdict and judgment of acquittal. That this draft, number three, is dated long subsequent to the date of the instrument set out in the indictment, and cannot tend to prove guilty knowledge of a prior date.

The Court overruled the objections. Testimony was then given tending to prove the matters proposed, and the draft was received in evidence. The People, by R. Newby, a witness, then gave evidence to the effect following:

Witness produced a draft, number nine. "I found this draft with the vouchers of the Utah Company. I am President of that company."

Draft number nine was then offered in evidence, to the admissibility of which the defendant objected, on the ground that it was irrelevant and incompetent. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted, and his exception was entered. The draft, number nine, was then read in evidence, and is as follows:

"UTAH MINING COMPANY,
"Aurora, N. T., Sept. 18th, 1864. }

"$334.56. Ten days after sight, pay to the order of H. Bloomingdale & Co. three hundred and thirty-four fifty-six one hundredths dollars, value received, and charge the same as advised.

"F. J. BAUM, Sup't.

"To M. Frank, Esq.,

"President Utah Mining Company, San Francisco."

On the back of which draft was indorsed "H. Bloomingdale & Co.," and across the face of which draft was written, "Accepted, payable in thirty days. Edward Conner."

The defendant was convicted and sentenced, and appealed.

Alexander Campbell, and A. Campbell, for Appellant.

We do not question the correctness of the decisions of the Court in People v. Shotwell, January term, 1865, or People v. Thompson, ante, 214, but distinguish this indictment from these respectively, in this: That here, in the charge of forging the indorsement, the draft is set out without the acceptance of Conner upon it, and without the indorsement of F. J. Baum & Co. on the back; while the charge of uttering, alleges that defendant, on the 17th August, having in his possession, etc., the same before the uttering, etc., and having on the face thereof been accepted in writing by Conner, thus: "Accepted, August 16, 1864. Edward Conner, Secretary U. M. Co." and indorsed on the back thereof, "F. J. Baum & Co.;" uttered the said forged indorsement knowing it to be forged, etc. We contend, therefore, that on the indictment it appears that the forging of the indorsement was before, and the uttering after the acceptance by Conner and the indorsement by Baum & Co. That this acceptance, and the indorsement by Baum & Co., intermediate the alleged forgery and uttering, makes the forgery and uttering two distinct and separate offenses. The draft could not have been enforced for want of a stamp, and no one could have been defrauded by paying it. (2 East, P. Crown, 958, 954.)

The defendant had been acquitted on the very charge of forging the indorsement, and of uttering No. 3, knowing such forged indorsement. The jury said, and the judgment held, that he did neither; and these points are allowed to be again agitated between the same parties in the same Court. (Outram v. Morewood, 3 East, 346; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 663, 667; 3 Cowen, 120; Gardner v. Buckley; 1 Iowa, 421, George v. Gillespie; 7 Comstock, 71, Doty v. Brown; 26 Maine, 555, Chase v. Walker. Vide also, Bell v. Raymond, 18 Conn. 91.)

The true rule would probably be found to be, that if a subsequent uttering be made the subject of a distinct indictment, it cannot be given in evidence to show guilty knowledge of a former uttering. (Wharton, 1,457; 2 Car. & P. 633; 4 Car. & P. 411; 10 Metcalf, 256; 29 Eng. L. and E. 548.)

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

The forging and the uttering were one continuing act. It is alleged that the uttering was "on said 17th day of August," which just before was alleged to be the time of forging. Clearly under our statute and decisions, and we think at common law, the indictment is sufficient. (People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394.)

Though the instrument was insufficiently stamped, it was still the subject of forgery, and properly admissible in evidence. (1 Harrison's Digest, "Forgery," 2,091, 2,092; 2 Russell on Crimes, 346, 347, 348; Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 489; Byles on Bills, star page 84.) And since our stamp laws have been passed, the same cases have been adopted in this county. (Edwards on the Stamp Act, 243.)

To prove guilty knowledge it was admissible to introduce in evidence draft No. 3. It was made about eighteen days after defendant uttered the draft on which the indictment was found. (Roscoe on Criminal Evidence, 90 to 95, and 515; 2 Russell on Crimes, 403 to 407; 1 Whart. Am. Crim. Law, Sec. 631 et seq.; 1 Phillipps on Evidence, Cow. & H. Notes, 768, 769; 3 Greenleaf on Evidence, Sec. 15.) Nor does it matter that draft No. 3 was the subject of a separate indictment, nor does it affect the question of the admissibility that defendant had been tried and acquitted for forging draft No. 3. (2 Russell on Crimes, 406; 1 Phillipps on Evidence, C. & H. Notes, 768; 2 Wharton on Crim. Law, Sec. 1,457; State v. Houston, 1 Bailey Rep. 303; Commonwealth v. Percival, Thacher, 294; Commonwealth v. Stearns, 10 Metcalf, 257.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

I. The indictment is good, whether it be regarded as containing two counts or but one. Where, in defining an offense, a statute enumerates a series of acts, either of which separately, or all together, may constitute the offense, all such acts may be charged in a single count, for the reason that notwithstanding each act may by itself constitute the offense, all of them together do no more, and likewise constitute but one and the same offense. To illustrate our meaning, take the statute against forgery, under which the indictment in this case was found, where we find several acts enumerated, all of which are declared to be forgery. Thus "the falsely making," "altering," "forging," "counterfeiting," "uttering," "publishing," "passing," "attempting to pass" any of the instruments or things therein mentioned, with the intent specified, is declared to be forgery. Now, each of those acts singly, or all together, if committed with reference to the same instrument, constitute but one offense. Whoever is guilty of either one of these acts is guilty of forgery; but if he is guilty of all of them, in reference to the same instrument, he is not therefore guilty of as many forgeries as there are acts, but of one forgery only. Hence an indictment which charges all the acts enumerated in the statute, with reference to the same instrument, charges but one offense, and the pleader may therefore at his option charge them all in the same count, or each in separate counts, and in either form the indictment will be good. (Wharton on Crim. Law, Sec. 390, 5th edition; People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394; and The People v. Thompson, ante, 214.)

But it is claimed that this case is distinguishable from the cases of Shotwell and Thompson, because intermediate the alleged forgery and uttering, the draft in question was accepted by the drawee and indorsed by F. J. Baum & Co., thereby becoming a different instrument, and making, therefore, two offenses instead of one. To this proposition we cannot assent. The mere adding of other parties did not destroy the identity of the instrument nor the unity of the transaction, under the rule in Shotwell's case, and the act of forging and the act of uttering were therefore both committed with reference to the same instrument. And we may add, that so long as the various acts mentioned in the statute are committed with reference to the same instrument, they must be regarded as constituting one continuous transaction within the meaning of Shotwell's case, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the intervention of acts, which do not destroy the identity of the instrument.

II. Upon the point that the indorsement upon the draft in question cannot be the subject of forgery, for the reason that the draft was insufficiently stamped, we are disposed to adopt the rule which is now well settled in England, that the forged instrument, though unstamped, is evidence against the defendant, and that the offense is complete whether the instrument be stamped or not. It has there been repeatedly held that in order to constitute forgery, it is not necessary that the forged instrument should be available. That though a compulsory payment by course of law cannot be enforced for the want of a proper stamp, yet a man may be equally defrauded by a voluntary payment being lost to him; and that the Acts of Parliament touching stamp duties, being mere revenue laws, do not make any change in the law of forgery, but only provide that the instrument shall not be available for the purpose of recovering on it in a Court of justice, and that it may be used as evidence for collateral purposes. (Rex v. Hawkeswood, Rex v. Morton, Rex v. Roculist, and Rex v. Davis, East's Pleas of the Crown, 955, et sequens; Edwards on the Stamp Act, 243.) We do this the more readily because our Stamp Act is substantially a copy of the English statute under which the foregoing cases were decided.

III. The exception to the admission of certain other drafts claimed to have been forged and uttered by defendant about the same time, for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge, on the score that they had been the subject of other indictments upon which the defendant had been tried and acquitted, is not in our judgment well taken. It is well settled that in cases like the present it may be shown that the defendant uttered, at or about the same time, other forged notes or bills, whether of the same kind or a different kind, or that he had in his possession other forged notes or bills, tending to prove that he knew the note or bill in question to be forged. (Roscoe on Criminal Evidence, 90 et sequens; 1 Phil. on Ev., Cowen & Hill's notes, 768; 8 Greenleaf on Ev., Sec. 15.) Nor does it matter if such other notes or bills are the subjects of other indictments pending at the time. (Commonwealth v. Sterns, 10 Met. 256.) And in Houston's case, 1 Bailey, 300, it was held that the principle upon which such evidence is admitted is unaffected by the fact that the defendant has been tried and acquitted upon the notes or bills produced in evidence, although the force of the evidence may be thereby weakened. But it is earnestly claimed by counsel for the appellant in this case that the rule declared in Houston's case nullifies the doctrine of res adjudicata and is not law.

The soundness of the doctrine to the effect that the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction directly upon the point is as a plea a bar, or as evidence conclusive upon the same matter coming directly or incidentally in question in another action between the same parties, cannot be doubted, but a strict application of this rule to the case before us does not, as it will be found, exclude the evidence in question.

In order to render the verdict and judgment of not guilty upon the draft offered in evidence conclusive upon the facts which the prosecution sought to prove for the purpose of showing guilty knowledge, it must appear with certainty from the evidence offered in support of the alleged estoppel that those facts were directly and necessarily found by the verdict in that case in favor of the defendant; or in other words that the jury could not have found the verdict which they did without having passed directly upon the facts offered to be proved, and found them against the prosecution; for if it be doubtful upon which of several points the verdict was founded, it will not be an estoppel as to either. (Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. 40; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 575; Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 182.) No evidence as to the estoppel, either by the record or by parol, was offered, and the whole question as to what facts were directly determined by the verdict in the first case is to be determined upon the bald admission of the District Attorney that the defendant had been indicted for forging the indorsement upon the draft in question, and for uttering the draft, knowing the indorsement to be forged, and that he had been tried upon such indictment and found not guilty by the jury, and that a judgment in accordance with the verdict had been entered by the Court.

Leaving out of view the question of estoppel, the District Attorney was at liberty to prove all of the following propositions in connection with the draft offered in evidence for the purpose of showing guilty knowledge: First—That the indorsement upon the draft offered in evidence was forged by the defendant. Second—That it was forged, though not forged by him. Third—That he had it in his possession, knowing it to be forged; and, Fourth—That knowing it to be forged, he uttered or passed it to another with fraudulent intent. Now if all these propositions were directly and necessarily decided in favor of the defendant by the verdict and judgment in question, then the District Attorney was estopped from making the proof; or if either of them was so decided, as to such he was estopped, upon the principle that matters which have been once judicially determined cannot be again drawn into controversy as between the parties and privies to the determination; but if the verdict may have been founded upon one or more of those propositions without determining the others, and it is impossible to determine from the evidence offered in support of the estoppel, upon which proposition the verdict was founded, the District Attorney was not estopped from making the proof in question; for the law does not favor estoppels, and a party cannot be precluded from giving evidence touching matters directly or collaterally involved in the issue upon the mere suspicion that they have already been determined against him by competent judicial authority; before that can be done it must appear with certainty that such matters have been so determined.

Upon the evidence offered in support of the estoppel in this case it cannot be affirmed with certainty that the jury passed upon and determined any of the propositions above specified except the charge that the defendant forged the indorsement. If he did forge the indorsement the verdict must have been guilty, hence a verdict of not guilty is conclusive upon that allegation. But this cannot be affirmed of either of the other allegations. It cannot be affirmed of the allegation that the indorsement was actually forged, though not forged by him; or that he had it in his possession; or that he knew it to be forged; or that he uttered it with intent to defraud; for it may be true that the indorsement was forged and that he knew it and had it in his possession but did not utter it, and the verdict would be right; or it may be true that he uttered it not knowing it to be a forgery and the verdict would be right. It cannot therefore be determined with certainty what the jury did decide, and hence as we have seen the verdict cannot operate as an estoppel except as to the allegation that the defendant forged the indorsement. Upon that allegation the prosecution offered no evidence. Evidence that the indorsement was forged was offered, but none was offered to show that the forgery was committed by the defendant. Thus it seems that the doctrine of res adjudicata which counsel has invoked has not been violated in this instance; for under a just application of that doctrine he fails to sustain by his evidence the estoppel for which he contends.

Nor do we think the points made by counsel for appellant grounded upon the claim that the drafts offered in evidence were not sufficiently connected, in point of time or otherwise, with the forgery charged in the indictment in this case to create the presumption of guilty knowledge, well taken. In regard to the distance of time between the principal fact and the collateral facts proposed to be shown in proof of guilty knowledge no precise rule can be established so far as the question as to the admissibility of the evidence is concerned. To prove guilty knowledge in a charge of forgery, evidence of facts transacted three months before and one month afterwards has been received. But evidence of facts occurring five weeks afterwards has been rejected. (Rex v. Ball, 1 Camp. 324; Rex v. Smith, 4 C. and P. 411; Rex v. Taverner, 4 C. and P. 418, note a.)

Doubtless subsequent facts should appear to have some connection with the principal fact charged. But in a charge of forgery evidence of the subsequent uttering of other forged notes which are of the same manufacture is admissible. (Rex v. Taverner, supra.) Here the forged drafts offered in evidence may be said to be of the same manufacture as the one which is the subject of the indictment, for they were all drawn by the same party. In conclusion upon this point, it is sufficient to say that, from the very nature of the question, the admissibility of this character of evidence must be left in a great measure to the discretion of the Judge who tries the case. The inference of guilty knowledge to be drawn from such evidence may be safely intrusted to the jury, who will hardly fail, under the arguments of counsel, to discover whether such knowledge is fairly deducible from the facts in evidence or not.

The foregoing remarks apply alike to the exceptions to the admission of "drafts Nos. 2 and 3," as they are called in the record. The mere fact that "draft No. 2" was drawn in favor of other parties makes no difference in the rule under which this character of evidence is admitted.

IV. Undoubtedly "draft No. 9" was inadmissible unless accompanied by proof tending to connect the defendant with it in some manner, and the further proof that it was a forgery. etc. With such proof, however, it was admissible. The order in which this evidence ought to be received is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court, and the fact that the draft was admitted in advance of the other evidence would be of itself no ground of error. The only objection made to its admission by counsel for the defendant was the very broad and general one that it was "irrelevant and incompetent," which the Court doubtless understood as covering not only the draft, but the other evidence of forgery, etc., which had been introduced in connection with "drafts Nos. 2 and 3," and which the Court, doubtless guided by the previous course of the trial, supposed at the time he ruled upon the objection would follow the admission of "draft No. 9." At the time of the ruling the Court undoubtedly supposed that such evidence would follow, and upon that hypothesis his ruling was correct. When it appeared that there was no such evidence to be given, counsel should have renewed their objection on that ground. Had they done so, the Court would undoubtedly have struck out the draft as evidence or instructed the jury to disregard it. We have repeatedly held that counsel must make their objections in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to the precise ground upon which it is placed. We do not think that was done in the present case, and we do not think that we should be justified in reversing the judgment on this ground, especially as it is more than probable that "draft No. 9" had no effect on the result.

The other two points made by counsel to the effect that the Utah Mining Company is not a corporation as alleged, and therefore could not be defrauded, and that the interlining of the words "payable in U. S. gold coin" by Howard before he discounted the draft and after the defendant had forged the indorsement, made the draft other and different from what it was at the time of the forgery, are also untenable. Whether the Utah Mining Co. was a corporation de jure or not was not an issue in this case. If it was acting as such that was sufficient. (Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434; United States v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. 392; Dannbroge Gold Quartz Mining Company v. Allment, 26 Cal. 286.) But admitting that the Utah Mining Company is not a corporation, the indictment also charges an intent to defraud Howard who certainly had a legal existence; and so far as the interlineation is concerned it was made with the knowledge and tacit consent of the defendant and may be regarded as his act and deed.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr Justice RHODES expressed no opinion.

E. P. CULVER, AND ELSIE CULVER HIS WIFE, v. W. H. ROGERS, SHERIFF OF EL DORADO COUNTY, AND B. T. HUNT.

WHEN JUDGMENT ON MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE BECOMES A LIEN.—If, in an action brought to recover judgment for a debt, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the same, a judgment in personam is rendered for the amount due, and directing a sale of the mortgaged premises and an application of the proceeds to the payment of the judgment, the judgment, even if docketed, does not become a lien on the real property of the defendant until the mortgaged property has been sold by the Sheriff, and the balance, if any, reported by him and docketed by the Clerk, and then only for such balance.

ENJOINING SALE OF HOMESTEAD.—If a judgment in personam and decree foreclosing a mortgage given to secure the debt, but not covering the homestead, is rendered against a husband, the Sheriff will be enjoined from a sale of the homestead on an execution issued for a balance reported and docketed after a sale of the mortgaged property, if a declaration of homestead is filed and recorded before such balance is reported and docketed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Eleventh Judicial District, El Dorado County.

The personal judgment in case of Hunt v. Culver was as follows: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the finding aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that B. T. Hunt, plaintiff, have and recover of and from E. P. Culver, defendant, eight hundred and nine dollars and twenty-three cents debt, with interest thereon at the rate of two and a half per cent per month from the date hereof until paid; together with sixteen dollars and thirty-five cents costs of suit." Then followed the usual decree for the sale of the mortgaged premises.

The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George G. Blanchard, and A. C. Searle, for Appellants.

If the lien attached before the 9th day of July, 1863, (the time when the property in controversy became a homestead,) then the sale should not be restrained, and the judgment of the District Court is correct. But if no lien attached before that date, the sale should not be made, and the judgment is erroneous. In England v. Lewis et al., it is determined that before the amendment of section two hundred and forty-six of the Practice Act, plaintiff might primarily pursue either the judgment or the decree at his election, but could only pursue one at a time; while in Cormerais v. Genella, and Vandewater v. McRea, et al., 27 Cal. 596, it is held that under section two hundred and forty-six, as amended in 1861, plaintiff "must exhaust the mortgaged property before his judgment can become a lien or he can have execution thereon." These seem to be, and are decisive of the case.

A critical examination of section two hundred and forty-six, before and after the amendment referred to, will convince the most sceptical that it was the intention of the Legislature to compel the plaintiff first to exhaust the security before acquiring any lien on the other property of the judgment debtor. The amended section differs from the original: First, by providing that actions for the foreclosure of liens and mortgages shall be in accordance with the provisions of Chapter One, and section two hundred and forty-six is the only one in this chapter that treats of the judgment or decree in such cases. Second, it uses the words "decree or judgment," when in the original the word "judgment" is only used. Third, it provides for the sale of the mortgaged property, and ascertainment of any deficiency thereafter due, and the paying over of surplus, and then the docketing of the judgment for such unpaid balance. Fourth, that the judgment so docketed shall then become a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, and then for an execution for this balance. Fifth, the execution shall be issued by the Clerk of the Court in like manner and form as upon other judgments to collect such balance, etc. The statute makes a distinction between judgments rendered under this section and ordinary judgments, for it speaks of other judgments, and until after sale of the property, ascertainment of deficiency, and docketing of the same, it is not like an ordinary judgment. It is a judgment without lien attributes, as provided in section two hundred and four.

S. & G. E. Williams, for Respondents.

We think that the Legislature did not intend to restrict a party to the decree alone, and this Court, in view of the many advantages of the other system, as explained in England v. Lewis, would be unwilling so to decide, unless it is plain that the Legislature so intended. What the Legislature intended by the alterations made in the statute was to conform the statute to the decisions of the Supreme Court, or in other words, to make the statute express in plain language what the Courts had construed it to mean. The first two clauses of section two hundred and forty-six are not essentially different from the old section; the third clause was only intended to apply to the case of a decree alone, and not where a personal judgment had been rendered. That clause, until amended, said nothing about docketing the deficiency so as to become a lien, and you could only obtain a lien by execution. It is this third clause that appellants rely upon, but we are unable to see how it makes so great a change in the statute as to prevent a party from taking and enforcing his personal judgment.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

In January, 1863, the defendant Hunt, as plaintiff, commenced an action in the District Court in El Dorado County against the plaintiff E. P. Culver, as defendant, to recover the amount of two promissory notes, and to foreclose a mortgage on certain real property, executed by him to secure the payment of the amount due on the notes. On the 20th of May following the Court "ordered, adjudged and decreed that B. T. Hunt, plaintiff, have and recover of and from E. P. Culver, defendant, eight hundred and nine dollars and twenty-three cents debt, with interest thereon at the rate of two and a half per cent per month from the date hereof until paid, together with sixteen dollars and twenty-five cents costs of suit;" and immediately following this, the Court decreed that the mortgaged premises be sold by the Sheriff of the county in the same manner as the sales of real property are made under execution, and that the proceeds thereof be applied to the payment of said judgment, and that if the proceeds be insufficient for the purpose, then an execution be issued for the balance remaining due and unpaid. On the day after this judgment was entered, the Clerk of the Court docketed the same in the Judgment Docket Book. The mortgaged premises were sold under the decree on the 20th of July, but not for sufficient to satisfy the amount due. The Sheriff made his return, from which the balance remaining due appeared, and this balance was duly docketed in the Judgment Docket Book on the 18th of August, 1863. On the 9th of July of the same year the plaintiff, Elsie Culver, caused to be filed and recorded in the Recorder's office of El Dorado County a declaration of homestead on certain real property belonging to herself and husband as common property, on which she and her husband and their family resided and continued to reside to the time of the trial of this action. The property thus selected by Mrs. Culver as a homestead belonged to herself and husband at the time the judgment and decree was first docketed, and was not a part of the mortgaged premises. When the same was so selected as a homestead, and when this cause was tried, it was not of the value of five thousand dollars. In January, 1865, Hunt caused execution to be issued to collect the balance remaining due him on his judgment, and the same was placed in the hands of the defendant, Rogers, Sheriff of said county, who levied the execution upon the property selected by Mrs.

Culver as a homestead, and was proceeding to sell the same thereunder when he was restrained by an injunction granted in this suit.

The object of this action was to perpetually enjoin the defendants from selling on the execution so issued the property selected and claimed as a homestead.

The appellants' counsel admit that if Hunt's judgment became a general lien on the real property of the judgment debtor in the county, before the time of the filing of the homestead claim, then it would not be proper to restrain the defendants, and we do not understand the respondent's counsel as maintaining that the judgment found for the defendants can be upheld, unless on the ground that the judgment in the foreclosure case, from the time it was first docketed, became a lien on all the real property of the debtor in the county not exempt at the time from execution. So that the question to be decided is divested of all complications.

A judgment becomes a lien on the real estate of the debtor only by force of the statute, and depends for its existence upon conditions of statutory origin. For the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage lien upon real estate or personal property the statute declares there shall be but one action. The statute then further provides: "In such action the Court shall have power by its decree or judgment to direct a sale of the encumbered property (or of such part thereof as shall be necessary) and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the costs and expenses of sale, the costs of suit, and the amount due the plaintiff." (Prac. Act, Sec. 246.) To this extent this section is substantially as the section was prior to the amendment of it in 1860. In a foreclosure case under the statute, as it formerly stood, a judgment in personam might be rendered against a debtor for the amount due, as well as a decree for the sale of the premises mortgaged (England v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 349, 349, and the cases there cited); and when a judgment in personam was rendered in an action of foreclosure, it was held in Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 422, that when such judgment was docketed, it became a lien in accordance with the statute — that is, as we understand the opinion, a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor in the county not exempt from execution. (Practice Act, Sec. 204.)

The two hundred and forty-sixth section of the Practice Act as amended in 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 306) contains an additional provision which reads as follows: "If it shall appear from the Sheriff's return that there is a deficiency of such proceeds, and a balance still due to the plaintiff, the judgment shall then be docketed for such balance against the defendant or defendants personally liable for the debt, and shall from the time of such docketing be a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, and an execution may thereupon be issued by the Clerk of the Court, in like manner and form as upon other judgments, to collect such balance or deficiency from the property of the judgment debtor." If it be assumed that the recovery obtained on the 20th of May, 1863, was a judgment in personam, followed by a decree of foreclosure and sale, the fact that the debt, to recover which the action was brought, was secured by mortgage, and the further fact that the action was to make the money due by a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, operated to limit the plaintiff to his remedy to the premises mortgaged, until the same should be exhausted. When exhausted by a sale thereof under the decree, and a balance is ascertained in the mode prescribed to be still due to the plaintiff, the judgment shall be docketed for such balance, and shall from the time of such docketing be a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, and an execution may thereupon be issued in like manner and form as upon other judgments. If this was the only statutory provision relating to the creation of a lien by judgment, we apprehend no question would be made as to the point of time determining its inception. But the two hundred and fourth section of the Act, which has reference to judgments in personam generally, provides that from the time the judgment is docketed it shall become a lien on all the real property of the judgment debtor, etc., and that the lien shall continue for two years, unless the judgment be previously satisfied. The section here referred to does not provide at what time the judgment must be docketed. It may be docketed immediately after the judgment roll is filed, or at any time afterwards while the judgment subsists, for aught that appears in the statute. From the docketing, the judgment encumbers the debtor's real property, and may continue a lien upon it for two years. But with respect to a judgment in personam coupled with a decree foreclosing a mortgage, and directing a sale of the mortgaged premises, the judgment is to be docketed for the balance which may remain due after the mortgaged property is exhausted, and from that event, that is, the docketing, the judgment shall be a lien on the debtor's real property, and may thereafter subsist as a lien for two years. If the theory of the respondents was accepted, the entire judgment might exist as a lien for two years from the time it was first docketed, and then, if the mortgaged premises were sold under the decree without satisfying the amount due, the judgment to the extent of the balance remaining due might be docketed again, and from that time the judgment for the balance would be a lien on the debtor's real estate, which would continue for two years, if not sooner paid. Besides this consequence, we should in substance determine the amendment of section two hundred and forty-six to be without purpose or effect. The statute as amended seems to have been designed to limit the remedy of the mortgage creditor to his security, in cases when a decree for sale of mortgaged premises is had, until that was exhausted, and then to give him a lien on all his debtor's real property subject to execution for the balance remaining due, from the time the same should be duly ascertained and the judgment docketed for that balance.

Until the judgment was docketed for the balance due the plaintiff, the premises in controversy did not become encumbered by the judgment, and before then it became the plaintiff's homestead, and consequently was not subject to be sold on the execution issued for the balance due on the judgment.

Upon the facts as they appear in the record, the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief they sought. (Alverson v. Jones, 10 Cal. 9; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Id. 167; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 132; Pettit v. Shepherd, 5 Paige, 501.)

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

WILLIAM THOMPSON v. E. D. SMITH.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—Where one person has a house upon a portion of a tract of land of one hundred acres which he is occupying, and another person enters upon another part of the tract and erects a house, without doing anything further, this act does not constitute a forcible entry upon and detainer of the whole tract.

DAMAGES IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—In forcible entry and detainer, if the proofs show that plaintiff was ousted from a portion only of the tract of land, described in complaint, he is not entitled to recover damages for the detention of the whole.

TITLE DEEDS AS EVIDENCE IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—
In an action under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, if the plaintiff relies on the unlawful entry and a subsequent forcible detainer, a deed of conveyance of the property to the defendant or his lessor is admissible in evidence in his behalf to show the good faith of his entry; but if the plaintiff relies on a forcible entry and detainer, such deed is not admissible.

VIOLENCE, OR FEAR OF VIOLENCE, TO BE SHOWN IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—If the plaintiff seeks to recover on the ground of a forcible entry and detainer, and the proofs show that there was no actual force, and that he neither apprehended nor had any ground to apprehend any positive act of violence from the defendant, he cannot recover.

ORDER GRANTING A NEW TRIAL.—An order vacating a verdict or finding and granting a new trial, necessarily vacates the judgment in the case resting on such verdict or finding.

APPEAL from the County Court, City and County of San Francisco.

This action was commenced on the 13th of October, 1863. The complaint alleged, first, that plaintiff was in the quiet and peaceable possession of the premises in question on the 5th of October, 1863, and that on or about that day the defendant, with force and violence, entered upon the premises and expelled the plaintiff therefrom; and secondly, that on the same day, the plaintiff being in the quiet and peaceable possession of the premises, and entitled to the possession of the same, the defendant unlawfully entered on said premises and put out and expelled the plaintiff therefrom, and took possession of the same, and has ever since illegally and unlawfully retained possession of the same from the plaintiff.

On the 1st day of October, Smith, the defendant, went on the ground and marked out a place to build a house, and on the fifth went there with his lumber and commenced its erection. On the seventh, while at work on it, Thompson came to him and objected to his building the house, and told him he claimed the premises, and that he should not allow him to build, and ordered him to remove the lumber, and upon his refusal to do so, took hold of a board to carry it away, when Smith also took hold of the board and pushed Thompson gently aside.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John B. Felton, for Appellant.

The plaintiff had not that exclusive possession which is necessary to a recovery in this action. Of course the plaintiff's possession must be exclusive, for if the defendant also is in possession he necessarily has a right to maintain, even by force, his possession or part possession. The only possession, therefore, which can sustain a plaintiff in this quasi criminal action, is such an actual exclusive possession as is inconsistent with and negatives the idea of any use or occupation other than his own. (House v. Keiser, 8 Cal. 501; Preston v. Kehoe, 15 Ib. 318; Cummins v. Scott, 20 Ib. 84; Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Ib. 306; Cummins v. Scott, 23 Ib. 527.)

If this proceeding of forcible entry is to be resorted to whenever a plaintiff has acquired a scrambling, uncertain, or secret possession, it is apparent that the issues involved in the proceeding will be changed from the questions of force and breach of the peace, which are its legitimate objects of inquiry, to nice questions of possession, more fitted for actions of eject-ment than for these summary proceedings. The entry cannot be called forcible where the intention to proceed to violence is matter of conjecture. It must be betrayed by act, or word, or manner. And it must be an actual immediate intention to use violence, for it is only that which threatens a breach of the peace. The cases on force are: Frasier v. Hanlon, 5 Cal. 156; Buckman v. Whitney; Polack v. McGrath, 25 Cal. 54; People ex rel. Niles v. Smith, 24 Barb. 16; Willard v. Warren, 17 Wend. 257.

P. G. Buchan, for Respondent.

It will be observed in this case that a motion was made for a new trial in the Court below and denied. In such a case the Court says, in Walton v. Maguire, 17 Cal. 92: "Where the Court below refuses a new trial, asked on the ground that the evidence does not sustain the finding and judgment, the Court acts in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, and the Supreme Court will not interfere unless there was an abuse of discretion." (Lewis v. Covillaud, 21 Cal. 178; Lubeck v. Bullock, 24 Ib. 338.)

The object of the appellant in the case at bar was evidently to try the title, and not the question of forcible entry. "When the possession of the premises is demanded of the party, if he, by word, or act, look, or gesture, gives reasonable ground to apprehend the use of force to prevent the rightful claimant from obtaining peaceable possession, this would be sufficient." (Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 49.)

"The statute was intended to prevent bloodshed, violence, and breaches of the peace, too likely to result from wrongful entries into the possessions of others, and it would be absurd to say that to enable a party to avail himself of its provisions there must have occurred precisely the evil which it was the object of the law to prevent." (McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 527.) Such is the opinion of Mr. Justice Field in that case, and in the opinion of the Chief Justice, in the same case, (page 529,) he quotes with approbation Okilders v. Black, 9 Yerg. 317; 1 Scam. 407.

Opinion of the Court.

If defendant had a right to introduce his patent, then we had a right to show it was a forgery, and we had a right to show our title, or to show that we derived title from the grantees in that grant, or were entitled by a prior grant; in short, was asking nothing more of the Court than to abrogate the statute of forcible entry and detainer in that respect, and allow the parties to contest the legal title to the land. As the Court very properly remarked in the case of Ladd v. Stevenson, already cited, when the plaintiff "has been restored to the possession of which he was thus improperly deprived, it will then be time to try the issue of title."

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action under the Act relating to forcible entries and detainers, to recover possession of one hundred acres of land in the vicinity of the City of San Francisco. The answer denies the forcible entry and detainer charged, and denies possession of the whole, but admits possession of a part of the demanded premises, describing said part by metes and bounds, and claims that said possession was quietly, peacefully and rightfully obtained.

Plaintiff alleges the monthly value at fifty dollars.

The Court found a forcible entry and forcible detainer, and two hundred and fifty dollars damages. Judgment was thereupon entered for restitution of the demanded premises, and for the damage found.

There was no forcible entry at the time of the interview with Thompson, for, according to all the testimony, defendant's entry had taken place several days before, and he was then actually in possession. If there was any forcible entry, it was at the time of the transactions between defendant and Weeks; and admitting that there was force at that time, it is not clear that the entry had not before that time been peaceably accomplished. The defendant had himself actually been upon the premises several hours manifesting an intent to hold the property. Weeks found him upon the premises waiting for his teams and lumber an hour before the alleged force was employed, and at that time he informed Weeks that he claimed the premises under a lease from Bayerque, and was going to put up a house. It is at least doubtful whether the acts at the time the lumber arrived constituted a forcible entry within the meaning of the Act. But however this may be, there is no shadow of testimony to extend the entry of defendant and ouster of plaintiff to the whole premises described in the complaint. Plaintiff retained possession of his cabin. His servants were not turned out of that, or in any respect molested in its enjoyment. Such is the plaintiff's testimony, and there is nothing to the contrary. Nor does his possession, such as it was, appear to have been disturbed in any of the other portions of the hundred acres claimed, beyond the immediate vicinity of the particular spot where defendant erected his house. For aught that appears, plaintiff is still in the quiet and undisturbed possession of all besides. Nor does it appear to what extent defendant claimed possession under his lease. The evidence which the defendant himself offered on that point was ruled out on objection of plaintiff. The complaint alleges damages resulting from an entry upon, and detention of, the whole of the land claimed. The testimony as to the value of the premises and damages is applicable to the whole, and the finding and judgment award damages for the detention, as well as restitution of the whole. Clearly, if the plaintiff was only ousted from a part, he was not entitled to recover damages for the detention of the whole. In these respects there is no conflict in the evidence, and it does not support the findings. A new trial must, therefore, be had.

The defendant offered in evidence a patent of the United States, and the conveyance under it, for the purpose of showing the good faith of the entry and to define the limits of the possession of defendant's lessor. Plaintiff objected and defendant excepted. Defendant had introduced evidence tending to show that at the time of defendant's entry, his lessor, Bayerque, and not plaintiff, was in possession. In connection with such evidence we think those documents were admissible to prove the extent of the possession, which the evidence before introduced tended to prove. (Hoag v. Pierce, ante 187.) It may be that for the want of sufficiently definite testimony on that point, the Court found against possession in Bayerque. If the plaintiff relied upon an unlawful entry and a forcible detainer after such unlawful entry, and not upon a forcible entry, then it was necessary to inquire into the good faith of the entry by defendant, for under the Act of 1850, which controls this action, "it is not every peaceable entry, where the right of entry does not, in fact, exist, that constitutes an unlawful entry within the meaning of the statute. There must be some ingredient of fraud or wilful wrong on the part of the party making the entry." (Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 48.)

In discussing the meaning of the term unlawful entry, as used in the Act relating to forcible entries in Janson v. Brooks, (29 Cal. 214), we approved of the following language of Mr. Chief Justice Cope, in Buckman v. Whitney: "We regard it as applying only in those cases where the entry is mala fide as well as wrongful, and beyond this its provisions cannot with any propriety be extended." We think the construction put upon the Act upon this point in those cases correct. In this case, then, if the plaintiff relied upon an unlawful entry as distinguished from a forcible one, and a subsequent forcible detainer — and there was a count, though insufficient, framed upon that theory — the patent and subsequent conveyances were admissible, not for the purpose of establishing title, but to show that the entry was made in good faith under claim and color of title, and therefore not unlawful within the meaning of the term as used in the Act under which the suit was brought. But if the plaintiff relied upon a forcible entry, then these documents were inadmissible. He doubtless claimed on both grounds. We think, however, that upon the pleadings as they now stand the plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the ground of a forcible entry.

The evidence to show a distinct, peaceable, exclusive possession of plaintiff as against Bayerque, defendant's lessor, as distinguished from what has sometimes been called a "scrambling possession," is not so clear as desirable in cases for forcible entry.

The claim that the plaintiff's possession had continued through Osborne from 1855, in view of the other testimony in the case, appears to us to be but a flimsy pretext. Such possession as the plaintiff had resulted from his own acts since his return from a seven years' residence in the mountains, without reference to his former lease for an indefinite period of time, made ten years ago to Osborne. The evidence and claim connected with the Osborne lease, however, in our judgment, afford a clue to the objects of the plaintiff. Upon a review of the evidence—and it is all in the record—it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the plaintiff was himself acting in bad faith and endeavoring to acquire and maintain a possession by unlawful means; that he hoped, by putting up a few boards—which, to expedite the work, he had previously framed and fitted for the purpose—that he might enter, as he did, upon land which had been for a long time under the actual control and dominion of other parties, and in a single afternoon put up a cabin, without floor or other convenience for habitation, put a man in to sleep merely, while going elsewhere for his meals, and thereby acquire possession of a hundred acres of land; that he might, through Osborne, by means of the old lease of which the parties long in possession and exercising dominion over the land had never heard, connect the possession so acquired with his possession ten years before, and thereby, with the aid of the Statute of Limitations, secure the land against the parties, whoever they might be, holding the actual title. On the other hand, doubtless, as soon as this proceeding was discovered, the parties who had been exercising control and dominion over the premises under claim of title derived through a patent from the United States (for to show a claim in good faith, defendant having offered in evidence such patent and conveyance under it, and the testimony having been rejected as irrelevant, we must presume the proof would have been made,) were endeavoring through defendant to continue the control, dominion and possession which they had before acquired. Manifestly, from the evidence, no breach of the peace was contemplated in their proceedings at the time of the entry complained of by either party. But it seems equally evident that the plaintiff was manœuvering to acquire without violence, if possible, a right of action for forcible entry, while the defendant was manœuvering to avoid that result, and these objects of the respective parties were clearly manifest to each other. We cannot see from the evidence, that either apprehended, or had any ground to apprehend, any positive act of violence from the other. If the facts are really such as the evidence indicates, it would be a perversion of the action of forcible entry and detainer from its legitimate uses, and a reproach upon the administration of justice, for the plaintiff to recover. This action is, doubtless, often employed in this State in cases, and to accomplish objects, never contemplated by those who adopted it. It is highly penal in its character, and recoveries under it should be confined by the Courts to cases falling strictly within its provisions. Undoubtedly many cases will arise where it will be extremely difficult to determine whether this action should be maintained or not. But in such cases the Court should bear in mind the object and scope of the action, and determine from the peculiar facts of the case whether, upon the whole, it can be fairly brought within the provisions of the Act relating to forcible entries and detainers.

COTTLE v. JOHN A. REICHERT.

AGAINST WHOM EJECTMENT MUST BE BROUGHT.—The action to recover the possession of real estate must be brought against the person who at the commencement of the action is the occupant and withholds possession.

SAME — WHEN OCCUPANT IS SERVANT OF ANOTHER.—Where the occupant is a mere servant or employé, his occupation may be the occupation of his employer, and if so, the employer should be made the defendant in ejectment.

PLEADINGS IN EJECTMENT.—If, in ejectment, the entry and ouster are denied in the answer, the withholding of possession at the commencement of the action is not admitted by the pleadings, although it be not specially denied.

WHEN NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED.—If, on the trial, the Court finds from the evidence all the facts necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and renders a judgment for plaintiff, and, upon a re-examination of the case on motion for a new trial, finds that a fact essential to plaintiff's recovery is not proved, it is the duty of the Court to grant a new trial.

FINDING FACTS ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—The Court, if the evidence is conflicting, may, on a re-examination of the same on motion for a new trial, find the facts differently from what they were found on the trial, and on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, the latter finding will be conclusive of the facts of the case.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court on the trial found the following facts: "That on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1862, plaintiff was in the actual possession as owner in fee simple of the premises described in the complaint, and that plaintiff was lawfully entitled to the possession thereof at the time of the commencement of this action; and that on said day defendant unlawfully entered and excluded plaintiff therefrom, and still withholds the possession thereof from the plaintiff;" and the statement on motion for a new trial embodied the evidence. From this statement on the argument of the motion for a new trial, the Court found that the defendant was in possession of the premises by his tenant at the commencement of the action.

The defendant appealed from the order denying a new trial. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Spencer & Jarboe, for Appellant.

The Court, on motion for a new trial, found as a fact that the defendant was in possession by his tenant at the time the action was commenced. The action not being against the tenant, a new trial should have been granted.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

The omission to traverse Hawkins' averment of actual possession on the first day of May, 1862, was equivalent to a direct admission of the fact, the complaint being verified. (Burke v. Table M. & S. Co., 12 Cal. 403.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.

The facts in each of these cases being quite similar, the actions were submitted together. What we shall say of the first case will be applicable to the second also. The action was ejectment; trial by the Court without a jury, and finding and judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant's motion for a new trial having been denied, he appeals. The Court, among other things, found that on a certain day, before the commencement of the action, the defendant unlawfully entered and excluded the plaintiff from the premises, and still withholds the possession thereof from the plaintiff. The error assigned is the ground specified in his motion for a new trial, which is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that the defendant, at the commencement of the action, withheld the possession of the premises.

The doctrine is very clear that as the action lies only to recover the possession of the premises wrongfully withheld from the plaintiff, it must be brought against the person who, at the commencement of the action, withholds the possession—that is to say, it must be brought against the occupant. (Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270; Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 403; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 148; Owen v. Fowler, 24 Cal. 192; Lyle v. Rollins, 25 Cal. 440.) The tenant—and not his landlord, unless he is also an occupant—should be made the defendant. (Dutton v. Warschauer, supra.) In this case the evidence is conflicting as to who was the occupant of the small portion of land in controversy at the commencement of the action. Some of the evidence tended to prove that the defendant resided on another portion of the one hundred vara lot that includes the premises in controversy; that he moved the small wooden building back on to the premises—which seems to have been the beginning of the ouster—and was in possession and claimed the premises as his own at the commencement of the suit; that Mr. Klatt, who lived in the house that was moved upon the premises was but the servant of the defendant; that he was working upon the premises under the direction of the defendant, and moved the house under his orders. On the other hand, the testimony tended to prove that Klatt was the tenant of the defendant, the defendant testifying positively that Klatt was his tenant, and other testimony tending to the same conclusion. It will be readily seen that a mere servant or employé may, in one sense, have the occupation of the premises of which he has no control, and in which he claims no right, but his occupation is the occupation of his employer, within the meaning of that term, as employed when treating of the action of ejectment. Conceding that Klatt was personally present and living in the house, it was still a question of fact for the Court to determine whether he was there in his own behalf or only and solely as the employé of the defendant. In view of the apparent conflict in the testimony, we would not be justified, under the oft repeated rule applicable in such case, in disturbing the finding, although we might be of the opinion that the evidence, as it comes to us in the record, preponderated against the finding.

When the cause came up on motion for a new trial, the order was made by the successor in office of the Judge who heard the testimony, and on denying the motion he filed an opinion in which he says: "From the agreed statement it appears that the defendant was in possession by his tenant, at the commencement of this action; consequently the tenant was the person who should have been sued; yet under the pleadings the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the possession of the premises without costs," and he ordered that a new trial be granted unless the plaintiff should enter a satis-has found that the evidence fails to establish the essential fact in question, the Court is bound to grant a new trial, and has no discretion to refuse it. Such we understand to be the case here. The Court, upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial, finds that the defendant was not the occupant of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action, but instead of granting a new trial on that ground, refuses a new trial for a reason, which we are of the opinion is not a sufficient reason. The Court had no discretion under such circumstances to refuse a new trial, though it had the discretion to attach such weight and conclusiveness to the several items of evidence bearing upon the point of occupation at the given time as it might deem proper. The Court must be satisfied that the fact is as alleged in the complaint — that the defendant withheld the possession at the commencement of the action — otherwise the plaintiff is not entitled to a recovery; for, as we said in Owen v. Fowler, 24 Cal. 194, "in order to entitle a plaintiff in ejectment to recover, he must show a right to the possession in himself, and a possession in the defendant at the time the action is brought; and if he fails to establish either proposition he cannot recover."

EDWARD LALLY v. MORRIS WISE AND M. STERN.

WHO MAY SUE FOR DAMAGES ON AN INJUNCTION BOND.—M., a Sheriff, had in his hands money belonging to L., which he had collected on an execution in favor of L. and D., and against S. W. and C. commenced an action against M., L., and others, to enjoin M. from paying the money to L., and procured a preliminary injunction, which was served on M. alone, but L. appeared in the action, and defended. The injunction bond ran to all the defendants. Held, that L. could maintain an action for damages on the injunction bond.

SEVERAL ACTION ON INJUNCTION BOND.—Each of the parties to whom an injunction bond is made payable may sue on the same for his several damages, even if the bond is made payable to the obligees jointly.

DAMAGES FOR DETAINING MONEY WHEN ENJOINED.—Where an officer is enjoined from paying over money in his hands, legal interest only can be recovered as damages for its detention in an action on the injunction bond.

ADMISSION OF ERRONEOUS EVIDENCE.—If erroneous evidence is admitted, and the record does not negative the presumption that injury was sustained thereby, the judgment will be reversed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The execution on which the money was collected was in favor of Lally and Day, and against Schwartz. Murphy, the Sheriff, suffered default in the injunction suit, but Lally defended, and judgment was entered upon the merits, dissolving the injunction and dismissing the complaint as to him.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellants.

Respondent was never enjoined. The writ was never served upon Lally, and without personal service upon him the injunction was not effective. (Becker v. Hagar, 8 Howard's Pr. 69; Watson v. Fuller, 9 Howard's Pr. 426; Coddington v. Webb, 4 Sandford, 639; Eden on Injunctions, 93; Summers v. Farrish, 10 Cal. 347; Mallice v. Gifford, 16 Abb. 247.)

The only damages which the law allows for the detention of money under its process is the legal interest. Ten per cent per annum is the only rate of interest recoverable in actions upon undertakings on injunction for moneys detained. (Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 107; 2 Parsons on Cont. 489.)

Edward Tompkins, for Respondent.

It is alleged in the complaint, and not denied by the answer, that by the injunction Murphy was prevented from paying and Lally from receiving the money. So soon as an action was commenced against him, Lally had a right to appear and defend. When his money was enjoined he was damaged. The undertaking recites that the injunction is to prevent his getting his money. The record shows the character of the suit. This point, then, if it has any force whatever, involves this absurdity: that Lally's money could be enjoined in the Sheriff's hands, who, as between the parties, was a mere stakeholder, and had no interest in defending, and so long as the plaintiff did not choose to serve Lally personally, he could take no steps to get his money released, and is entirely without indemnity for the damages he sustains. The learned counsel for the appellants have apparently confounded this case with the cases where the only question involved was whether a party could be punished for contempt who had not been personally served. Becker v. Hagar only decides that a defendant who has appeared and not answered, is not entitled to notice of a motion for an injunction. Watson v. Fuller decides that an injunction only affects persons named as parties to the action. Coddington v. Webb establishes that personal service of an injunction is necessary to put a party in contempt for disobeying it.

Legal interest in California is whatever parties fix by their contracts, except when they fail to agree in writing, and then it is ten per cent per annum. In New York and other States a different rule prevails. There the rate of interest is fixed, and it is made an offense to take more than the prescribed rate, and the Courts there have adopted as a rule to mulct the wrongdoer in the very highest rate that the use of the money can produce.

In California it has been attempted to adopt the same rule, but the Supreme Court, in two hastily considered cases, cited by the counsel for the appellants, have failed in its application. They decide in substance that "interest" and "damages" are synonymous — that in matters of contract, "legal interest" is what the party can get for his money, but in cases arising out of wrongs his damages are not what he is thus prevented from getting; that torts are cheaper than breaches of contract; that the man whose contract makes two per cent a month "legal interest" has only to get the payment stayed by injunction, and the rate is forthwith reduced to ten per cent per annum; that the law thus offers a premium to fraud and wrong, and that compensatory damages no longer mean compensation for direct injury, but an arbitrary rule by which he who has sustained damages to ten per cent shall be paid in full, and he who has been injured in the same direct manner one hundred per cent shall be cut off by the administration of the law with ten cents on the dollar of his loss.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action on an injunction bond executed by the appellants in the suit of Uhlfelder et al v. Schwartz, Murphy, Lally, et als. Murphy was Sheriff of the County of Santa Clara, and he, amongst other things, was restrained by the injunction from paying over to Lally the sum of one thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars forty-one cents collected on an execution in favor of Lally against the said Schwartz. It was thereafter determined that the injunction had in that particular been improperly granted. The plaintiff herein, recovered a judgment for one thousand forty-two dollars as damages sustained by reason of a breach of the undertaking declared on. The defendants moved for a new trial, and the appeal is from the order denying the motion.

First—It is claimed that the respondent was never enjoined, for the reason that the injunction was never served upon him.

The undertaking was entitled in the suit of "S. Uhlfelder & L. Cahn v. Henry Schwartz, Edward Lally, Henry Heilburner, Samuel Day and John M. Murphy, Sheriff of the County of Santa Clara. It appeared from the judgment roll in that action, given in evidence in this, that the only injunction asked for was against Murphy, restraining him, so far as Lally was concerned, in the manner before mentioned. Lally, though served neither with the injunction, nor in the action, appeared; and it was through his intervention that the injunction was dissolved as to the money belonging to him. The appellants, by the very terms of the undertaking, "acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the defendants in the above entitled action, and to each or either of them, in the sum of two thousand dollars; for the payment of which, well and truly to be made, they jointly and severally bind themselves and their heirs, executors and administrators firmly by these presents." The condition, after reciting the pendency of the action and that the County Judge was about to order an injunction restraining Murphy from paying over to "said defendant Lally and to said Day certain moneys now in his hands by the sale of property under execution in favor of said Lally and said Day severally," provides "that if the plaintiffs in said action above entitled shall pay to said parties so enjoined such damages not exceeding two thousand dollars, as such party may sustain by reason of said injunction, if the Court having jurisdiction thereof shall finally decide that the plaintiff was not entitled thereto, then this undertaking shall be void; otherwise of full force." Lally was not personally enjoined, nor was there any occasion for restraining him. By the service of the writ upon the Sheriff, Lally's money was effectually intercepted, and the plaintiffs in the proceeding had no motive to go further. Though there may be some question, in view of the fact that Lally was not personally enjoined, as to whether the strictly legal right is in him, yet it is apparent on the face of the undertaking that the bond was given for his and not the Sheriff's protection; and as the party beneficially interested in the damages claimed herein, Lally is competent to sue for their recovery. (Prac. Act, Sec. 6; Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 551.)

Second—It is further insisted that Day should have been joined as a party plaintiff.

The indebtedness confessed in the undertaking is to "each and every" of the defendants in the action in which it was given, as well as to them all jointly. But if the undertaking did not run to the obligees severally still each could sue for his several damages. (Summers v. Farrish, 10 Cal. 351.)

Third—At the trial the plaintiff offered to prove that money was worth one and a half per cent per month during the time that the payment of it was restrained by the injunction. The defendants objected to the evidence; the objection was overruled and the defendants excepted.

The question of the admissibility of the evidence is concluded by Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 107. It is now more than six years since that decision was made, and it has been steadily followed during the interval as a correct exposition of the law. We are far from being convinced by the very able argument submitted by counsel for the respondent, that the decision is erroneous; but, if it be so, the rule which it establishes must be changed, if at all, by the Legislature.

But it is insisted for the respondent that it does not "appear" that the finding of the referee was at all influenced by the evidence in question.

It was held in Grimes et al. v. Fall et als., 15 Cal. 63, that "injury is presumed from evidence erroneously admitted, and the adverse party must show clearly that no injury accrued or the judgment cannot stand." The record in this case does not negative the presumption named. Should it be admitted that the answer does not deny effectually the grounds or causes of damage laid in the complaint, still it is not pretended that an issue is not well taken upon the question of the amount of the damages. Aside from the testimony relating to the counsel fee, and the current rates of interest, there was no evidence bearing upon that issue; and we must therefore intend that the damages found by the referee ($1,042) were made up of the counsel fee and interest on the plaintiff's money during the time it was enjoined in the Sheriff's hands. There was no conflict in the evidence concerning either of these items, and the counsel fee as claimed and proved, together with ten per cent interest upon the one thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars and forty-one cents during the period of its detention would amount to only seven hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty cents. The record then not only fails to show that the testimony erroneously admitted was not prejudicial to the appellants, but shows affirmatively that they were in fact prejudiced thereby.

The judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered, unless the respondent within twenty days file a release of the judgment to the extent of two hundred and forty-eight dollars and eighty cents, parcel thereof, in which event the judgment will stand as affirmed, but the respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

T. D. JOHNSON AND J. N. BROWN v. THE COUNTY OF SANTA CLARA.

LIABILITY OF A COUNTY FOR MEDICAL CARE OF SICK.—A complaint in an action against a county, to recover for medical care and treatment of sick persons, fails to state a cause of action if it does not aver that the sick persons treated were both indigent and residents of the county.

LIABILITY OF COUNTY TO COUNTY PHYSICIAN.—Physicians who contract with a county to attend and treat all the inmates of the County Infirmary, whether afflicted with contagious diseases or not, and to receive a stipulated price therefor, cannot recover anything beyond the stipulated price for attending persons sick with contagious diseases and placed in a building apart from the one usually used as a County Hospital, by order of the county authorities.

COUNTY HOSPITAL.—The County Infirmary or Hospital may consist of different buildings used by the county for hospital purposes.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The plaintiffs were physicians and surgeons at San José, and on the 3d day of January, 1862, entered into a contract with the Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County and ex officio Directors of the Santa Clara County Infirmary, to prescribe for and attend all the inmates of said Infirmary who might be subjects of medical and surgical treatment for one year thereafter. In February, 1862, the small pox appeared in San José. The building used as a County Hospital was outside the limits of the City of San José, and the Board of Directors of the County Infirmary procured another building to which the persons sick with the small pox were removed. Plaintiffs, as physicians, attended on these persons. No new contract was made with the Directors of the Infirmary. The present action was brought to recover for the value of plaintiffs' services as physicians upon the persons who had been removed to the pest house. The complaint averred an indebtedness of the county to plaintiffs for the medical treatment and care of forty-three persons who were sick with the small pox at Santa Clara County, and for the vaccination of other persons, but contained no averment that the persons treated were indigent or residents of the county.

Argument for Respondents.

Defendant demurred to the complaint and the demurrer was overruled. Defendant then answered, and plaintiffs recovered judgment, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

F. E. Spencer, for Appellant.

The complaint is bad in not stating that the persons treated were indigent, and residents of the county, and the Court should have sustained the demurrer. (Supervisor Act, 5th clause, Wood's Dig. Art. 3,319; Act to provide for the indigent sick, Ib. Art. 3,279.)

The Supervisors cannot create a debt or liability on the part of the county for any purpose except as provided by law. (Foster v. Coleman, 10 Cal. 278.) Every fact which, if controverted, the plaintiff will be compelled to prove in order to maintain the action must be stated. (Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 458; Green v. Palmer, 15 Ib. 415; Practice Act, Sec. 66.) The complaint is verified. (Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 322.) A county is not bound to support persons who are not paupers. (Alton v. Madison, 21 Ill. 115.)

J. M. Williams, and S. O. Houghton, for Respondents.

The Boards of Supervisors have general power under the statute to provide for the preservation of the public health. They are the agents constituted by law to take care of the health of the indigent, "to take care of and provide for the indigent sick of the county, to do and perform all such other acts and things as may be strictly necessary to the full discharge of the powers and jurisdiction conferred on the Board." (Wood's Digest, Art. 3,319.) It was the duty then of the Board of Supervisors to take care of these small pox patients, and to take measures to arrest the progress of the disease and prevent its spreading over the county. In employing the respondents as physicians for that purpose they only performed a duty imposed on them by law, and created a liability on the part of the county to pay for those services what they were reasonably worth, as no price was stipulated.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The power of "The Board of Directors of the County Infirmary of Santa Clara County" to provide for the care and medical treatment of sick persons, is limited to such as are indigent and are also residents of the county. A contract providing for the care and treatment of sick persons not indigent, or if indigent not residents of the county, would be void for the want of power in the Board to make it. A county is not liable generally for the care and treatment of sick persons, and therefore when it is sought to make it liable it must appear from the complaint that the care and treatment was bestowed upon the class of persons described in the twentieth section of the Act concerning County Infirmaries for the relief of the indigent sick. (Laws 1860, p. 217.) No recovery can be had in such an action except upon proof, if the facts are controverted, that the persons so treated are indigent and are residents of the county; and it is a familiar rule of pleading that every fact which, if controverted, the plaintiff would be compelled to prove in order to sustain his action, must be alleged in his complaint. (Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 457; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411.)

This error alone makes it necessary to reverse the judgment. But as there is another point which is, in our judgment, fatal to the plaintiff's cause of action, and which no amendment of the complaint can obviate, we deem it advisable to pass upon it now, in order that the parties may be spared further and useless litigation.

We are of the opinion that the services sued for in this action are covered by the contract between the plaintiffs and the Board of Directors of the County Infirmary of the 3d of

Opinion of the Court.

January, 1862, set out at length in the defendant's answer. In that contract the plaintiffs "covenant and agree to attend the County Infirmary and County Jail of said county as physicians and surgeons, and as physicians and surgeons to prescribe for and attend all the inmates of said Infirmary and Jail who may be subjects of medical and surgical treatment, and perform all surgical operations upon any and all of the inmates of said Infirmary and Jail who may require the same." Under this agreement the plaintiffs were bound to attend and treat "all inmates of the County Infirmary," whether afflicted with contagious diseases or not. What, then, is the "County Infirmary?" Is it one building, or may it be more, and if more, must they all be adjacent, or may they be distant from each other, and yet altogether constitute the "County Infirmary?" That the "County Infirmary" is not necessarily limited to one building is apparent from the eleventh section of the Act under which it was created and established, which provides that "when necessary, it shall be the duty of the Board of Directors to provide a suitable building or buildings for the separate accommodation of the indigent laboring under contagious disease." Obviously buildings so provided are as much a part of the "County Infirmary" as any building previously provided for the accommodation of those who are not laboring under contagious disease; and the inmates of the former buildings are in every sense as much inmates of the "County Infirmary" as are the inmates of the latter. This contract must be read by the light of the statute by which it was authorized to be made. Thus read, it is clear that the services sued for in this action are covered by the contract in question, and if, as alleged in the answer, the plaintiffs have been paid the price stipulated therein, they have no cause of action.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Mr. Justice RHODES, being disqualified, did not sit in this cause.

A. ST. CLAIR DENVER v. C. H. BURTON, JOHN E. P. SPILLMAN, JEFFERSON WILCOXSON, JACKSON WILCOXSON, REDDINGTON & WILLIAMS, JOHN BURTON, AND ED. McCARTY.

AVERTMENT OF FACT IN PLEADING.— It is not sufficient to state a material fact in a complaint by way of recital; it should be directly averred.

SAME.— A judgment creditor, made such by confession of judgment, who seeks to reach money of the judgment debtor in the hands of junior judgment creditors, upon the ground that he has a prior lien on the same, must aver in his complaint that at the time his judgment was rendered, the amount for which it was rendered was unpaid and due.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The complaint averred that John Burton and Ed. McCarty, who were engaged in the mercantile business in Sacramento, on the 2d day of October, 1861, confessed two judgments, one in favor of C. H. Burton, a brother of John Burton, for twenty-four thousand dollars, and the other in favor of E. P. Spillman, for about ten thousand dollars, and that executions were issued on the judgment and immediately levied on the goods of Burton & McCarty, and that later in the same day, Burton & McCarty confessed a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of one thousand eight hundred dollars, and that an execution was issued and levied on the same goods, and that Jefferson Wilcoxson and Jackson Wilcoxson, later in the same day, levied on the same goods, and also obtained judgment against Burton & McCarty, and that the judgments in favor of C. H. Burton and E. P. Spillman were fraudulent. That the goods levied on had been sold by the Sheriff for six thousand dollars, by consent of parties litigant in the case of Wilcoxson v. Burton, 27 Cal. 228, and the money deposited in Court and paid over to the County Treasurer, and that the Wilcoxsons had obtained the money. That plaintiff had a lien on the money prior to the Wilcoxsons. Plaintiff prayed that the Wilcoxsons might be adjudged to hold the money in trust for him, or sufficient thereof to satisfy his judgment, and for judgment against them for that amount.

The averments as to the confession and entry of plaintiff's judgment, were in the following language:

"Plaintiff further shows that the said defendants, Burton & McCarty, on the 2d day of October aforesaid, in the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County, upon request of plaintiff, confessed judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount then due on said due bill, to wit: one thousand eight hundred dollars; and that judgment was thereupon regularly entered in said Court on said day for said amount, in favor of plaintiffs, and against said Burton & McCarty."

Defendants Wilcoxson demurred to the complaint. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

Ooffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

H. H. Hartley, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

There is no direct allegation in the complaint that, at the time judgment by confession was entered against Burton & McCarty in favor of the plaintiff, the money for which judgment was confessed was unpaid or then due. It was assumed, but not averred, that the money was due, and on that assumption the amount stated. This mode of statement is insufficient. (Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 577.) In an action to secure a priority of lien over Wilcoxson, who subsequently obtained the proceeds of sale of defendants' property under his own judgment, such an allegation is, in our opinion, material. For this defect the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

SHAFTER, J., concurring specially.

I concur. Admitting for the purposes of argument that there is a sufficient averment that the eighteen hundred dollars "was due on the 2d of October, 1861," still it is not alleged that it remained due at the point of time when, on the same day, the confession was filed. The law does not generally take notice of the fractions of a day, but in a case like the present it should appear by some form of direct statement that at the very instant when the judgment was confessed the relation of creditor and debtor was on foot and to the extent stated in the judgment.

H. M. MOORE v. W. R. MORROW.

TENANCY BY SUFFERANCE.—A tenancy by sufferance ... not by the consent but by the laches of the owner, and where the owner has been guilty of no laches there can be no tenancy by sufferance.

WHEN A TENANT FOR A TERM BECOMES TENANT BY SUFFERANCE.—A tenant under a lease for a term does not become a tenant by sufferance upon the expiration of his lease, and is only made such by the laches of the landlord in not re-entering, or in not giving him notice to quit.

WHEN LANDLORD MAY BRING EJECTMENT.—If the landlord give notice to quit immediately upon the expiration of the tenant's term, and the tenant hold over, the landlord may maintain ejectment without waiting one month after the notice.

EJECTMENT BEFORE TENANT BECOMES SUCH BY SUFFERANCE.—The landlord is not required to wait one month after notice to the tenant to quit before bringing ejectment to remove the tenant, unless by the laches of the landlord the relation of tenancy by sufferance has been established.

AN INSOLVENT MAY SUE TO RECOVER HOMESTEAD.—The husband may maintain ejectment to recover possession of the homestead during the pendency of an application on his part to be discharged from his debts under the insolvent laws.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

The defendant set up in his answer that prior to the commencement of the action the plaintiff had filed his petition in insolvency and asked to be discharged from his debts.

During the pendency of this suit plaintiff had obtained his discharge in insolvency, and the Sheriff had been appointed assignee. On the trial defendant offered in evidence the judg-

the lease. There were no laches on the part of the landlord to enlarge the term. Notice of the landlord's desire to enter and a demand for possession were immediately given. The circumstances utterly rebut the idea of permission or sufferance. The tenant became simply a trespasser. The right to notice never arises where a lease expires by its own limitation. (So held in 21 Wend. 628.) Especially is this the case where all the acts of the landlord rebut any presumption that he consented to the continuance of the holding. The tenant, by the construction contended for by appellant, could avail himself of his own wrong to extend his term. We hold that the statutory provision requiring thirty days' notice to a tenant by sufferance does not apply to this case, where no such tenancy exists. The original entry of the tenant was lawful, it being under a written lease for one year, and if he had held over under such circumstances or for such length of time as to create a presumption of acquiescence of the landlord, he would be a tenant by sufferance. The necessity of reasonable notice to quit exists in cases of uncertain tenancy, to prevent the mischievous effects of a capricious and unreasonable determination of the estate. (2 Pick. 71; 4 Kent Com. 118.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action to recover the possession of real estate. The complaint states a case within the Act relating to forcible entry, etc., but by the consent of parties the action was turned into an action of ejectment in the Court below. The appeal is taken from an order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial.

First—It is insisted by the appellant that the judgment should be reversed, for the reason that there was no evidence tending to prove that the plaintiff made a written demand upon the defendant to surrender the possession of the premises thirty days before the commencement of the action.

The defendant held under a lease from the plaintiff for one year. The term ended July 28th, 1864, and a demand in writing for a surrender of the premises was duly served by the plaintiff on the defendant the next day. The service was on the premises—the plaintiff having entered thereon for that purpose. The action was commenced on the 3d of August following.

When a tenant held over after the expiration of his lease, he was regarded at common law as a tenant at sufferance; but the estate might be destroyed by an entry on the part of the landlord, and he might thereupon proceed in ejectment. (Uridias v. Morrill, 25 Cal. 34.)

The Act of 1861 (Statutes of 1861, p. 514) relates to tenancies at will and by sufferance, and the first section provides that "the same may be terminated by the landlord's giving one month's notice in writing to the tenant, requiring him to remove from the premises." It is further provided by the third section that "at the expiration of one month from the service of such notice, the landlord may re-enter, or maintain ejectment, or proceed in the manner prescribed by law to remove such tenant, without any other or further notice to quit;" and section five gives the landlord a right to double damages in the action.

A tenancy by sufferance is not by the consent, but by the laches of the owner (2 Black Com. 150), and it follows that where the owner has been guilty of no laches there can be no tenancy by sufferance to which the provision of the statute as to notice can apply. In this case the defendant never became tenant by sufferance, for the indispensable condition of laches on the part of the plaintiff is not only not found, but is shown affirmatively never to have existed. In view of the principle that the law rejects fractions of days, we consider the record as showing that the plaintiff entered upon the premises on the instant the defendant's term expired, and for the avowed purpose of asserting his rights as owner. Instead of laches then, we have a singular exhibition of diligence in the conduct of the plaintiff which forestalled the possibility of a tenancy by sufferance arising in the defendant's favor. It was held in

Opinion of the Court.

Rowan v. Little, 11 Wend. 616, under a statute of New York from which our Act of 1861 appears to have been copied (see note in Adams on Ejectment, 145,) that there could be no tenancy by sufferance where there were no laches by the landlord, and that the burden of proving some degree of negligence at least, on his part, was on the party asserting the tenancy. In that case the landlord delayed proceedings for three months after the expiration of the lease; but it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the delay did not amount to laches, and therefore that the tenant was not entitled to notice to quit as a prerequisite to an action of ejectment against him. In the case at bar, the question is not upon the sufficiency of delay for any given period, for there was no delay. The plaintiff entered not for the purpose of recovering from the consequences of neglect, but with a view to prevent the consequences by practising diligence, instead of its opposite, from the start.

The plaintiff filed his petition in insolvency prior to the bringing of this action, and the Sheriff was appointed assignee before the trial. The appropriate evidence of these facts was offered at the trial, but inasmuch as it appeared by the record that the plaintiff had a perfected title to the premises as a homestead when he filed his petition, which title was recognized and established by the decree in pursuance of the prayer of the applicant, the evidence was rejected by the Court; and we consider that there was no error in the ruling.

Judgment affirmed.

A. BUCKMAN v. GEORGE O. WHITNEY AND J. HENRY WOOD.

PAPERS TO BE USED ON APPEAL.—District Courts have no jurisdiction to determine what papers may be used on appeal to the Supreme Court.

HOW TO SUPPLY LOST RECORD.—If the judgment roll or any part of the record in the District Court has been lost, the District Court, upon proper proofs, may supply its place by copies, and direct that the proved copies be substituted for the lost papers, and that they shall constitute the record or portion of it lost, and here the functions of the District Court end.

Opinion of the Court.

APPEAL FROM ORDER SUPPLYING LOST RECORD.—If either party is dissatisfied with an order of the District Court in supplying a lost record, it may be reviewed by an appeal from the order.

IN LOST RECORD NOT SUPPLIED NO APPEAL CAN BE TAKEN.—If the record or a portion of it in the District Court has been lost, and either party desires to appeal, an order of the District Court reciting that copies of the lost papers have been furnished, and directing that such copies may be used on appeal to the Supreme Court, is not an order substituting and supplying the lost record, and there is no record in the District Court from which a transcript on appeal can be taken.

LOSS OF MATERIAL PORTIONS OF A STATEMENT.—If material portions of the statement on motion for new trial or of the papers referred to in the statement have been lost, and are not supplied and substituted by the District Court, an appeal from the order denying a new trial will be dismissed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellants.

J. McM. Shafter, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

At the January term, 1864, a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on the ground of delay in filing the transcript in this Court. As an excuse for delay, appellants alleged an inability to make up a transcript on account of a loss of the judgment roll, and asked permission to supply the missing papers. We then said: "This Court has no control over the records of the Court below, and cannot properly make any order to supply a lost record; but that duty is within the province of the District Court. * * * Upon proper application being made, it will be the duty of the Court below to supply the lost judgment roll by the aid of copies, or by some other means under its control." It was then ordered that appellants have thirty days from and after the next term of the District Court "in which to prepare and file in this Court the transcript on appeal in this cause, and that, in the meantime, all proceedings on said motion in this Court be stayed." (24 Cal. 267.) The object of the stay was to give appellants an opportunity, by motion in the Court below, to supply, if possible, the lost judgment roll, and restore the record of the District Court, thereby enabling them to obtain a transcript on appeal of the record thus restored, to be filed in this Court.

A document, claimed by appellants to be a transcript of the record, was filed in this Court in October, 1864, and some amendments were subsequently made in March last. Respondent now renews the motion to dismiss, on the ground that the document filed is not a transcript of the record in the Court below, and that no transcript has yet been filed in the case. A transcript on appeal is a true copy of the record, or part of a record, actually existing in the Court below. Essential portions of the record in this case having been lost, the first thing necessary to be done, to enable the party to procure a transcript was, if possible, to have the record in some way restored. And this could only be done by the Court below in the mode before indicated. Instead of applying to the Court below, upon notice to the opposite party, to restore its own record by supplying the defects occasioned by the loss, and then taking a transcript of the record thus restored, and filing it in this Court, appellants seem to have applied to the District Court to aid them in making up a record, to be used in this Court on appeal. And the Court after certain proceedings were had, accordingly ordered as follows: "But to the end that said defendants may be able to perfect an appeal to the Supreme Court of this State, it is hereby ordered by the Court that the defendants, in order to perfect an appeal, to the Supreme Court of this State, may substitute and use copies of all or any papers in said cause which may be necessary for or requisite to the perfecting of said appeal as aforesaid, with like force and effect as the originals.

"And it is further ordered by the Court, that in the event copies of said judgment roll, or any part of the same, or any of the lost papers in said cause necessary to be used in said appeal, cannot be produced, then that the said defendants may, from such data as may be at their command, make out the necessary papers, containing and embodying as near as may be the several matters contained in the originals lost herein as aforesaid, and that said papers and each thereof may be used on said appeal with like effect as the original."

The Court not only directs what kind of papers may be used on appeal, but intrusted appellants with the duty of making out the necessary papers from such data as might be at their command. Appellants, however, are, by further order, required to file such papers with the Clerk within thirty days, and serve copies on respondent's counsel, and respondent's counsel are authorized within thirty days thereafter, in like manner, to file and serve appellants' attorneys with such papers as they may desire to supply; and in case of any disagreement, the same is to be settled on five days notice.

Afterwards, on the 21st of September, 1864—the appellants appearing to the motion, and the respondent failing to appear, and without any legal notice having been served on him—further proceedings are had. After reciting the prior proceedings, and that, "It further appearing to the Court that the defendants have furnished the originals and copies of the originals necessary to make up the transcript on appeal to the Supreme Court," etc. * * * * *

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the Court that the papers so furnished as aforesaid be used in said appeal to the Supreme Court, and that all copies or other papers so furnished be used with like effect as the originals on said appeal, inasmuch as the originals cannot, after due diligence, be found or produced in Court, to be used on said appeal." The proceedings, therefore, were not to restore the record of the Court below, but an effort to make up a case for this Court, and the order merely directs what papers shall be used on appeal in this Court. The District Court is not authorized to say what papers shall be used on appeal in this Court. The law designates what shall constitute the transcript on appeal. It consists of a copy of the record, or a part of the record, of the case in the Court below; and, when the appeal is from the judgment, it must include a copy of the judgment roll, or a part of the judgment roll, which constitutes a part of such record. The Court below has not determined that the papers directed to be used on this appeal shall constitute the judgment roll in the District Court in this case, or form any part of it. They have not been adopted for any purpose, other than to be used on this appeal. And if for any other purpose—as to introduce in evidence on the trial of another cause—a party should require the judgment roll in this case, he would find none among the records of the District Court. These papers in the transcript, then, cannot be copies from the judgment roll, for there is no such roll. Nor do they even purport to be copies from the judgment roll. They do not, therefore, constitute any portion of a transcript on appeal.

The proceeding should have been for the Court, upon due notice to the parties, to have ascertained what particular papers should constitute the judgment roll in that Court, and to order that such papers be substituted for those which were lost; that they be attached together, filed in the cause, and thenceforth constitute the judgment roll. Here the functions of that Court would have ended. On appeal, under the law, the Clerk, without further order, would then have included a certified copy of this judgment roll, or so much of it as might be required, in the transcript. The roll thus certified up would be the only one that this Court could notice. If either party should be dissatisfied with the roll, as thus constituted, on account of errors committed by the District Court in making it up, the proper mode of reviewing the action of the Court in that particular would be to appeal from the order subsequent to judgment, and by statement on appeal from the order bring into the record so much of the proceedings resulting in the order as would be necessary to explain the ground of error relied on. But no such proceeding has been had, and the parties are now just where they were eighteen months ago, without any judgment roll in the Court below, and consequently without any certified copy of a judgment roll in the document filed as a transcript, and without any record in the District Court from which a proper transcript can be made up.

The appellant, then, has failed to furnish the papers requisite on an appeal from the judgment.

It is claimed, however, that the necessary papers on appeal from the order denying a new trial have been furnished, and that the appeal from the order must be retained. Upon looking into the transcript we find a part of a statement on motion for new trial, but portions of it essential to the consideration of the grounds specified have also been lost from the files of the Court, and consequently omitted in the transcript. Among the absent papers is the charge of the Court, which is excepted to, and which it is also necessary to have to enable the Court to determine the question whether the case was properly submitted to the jury upon the law applicable to it. Most of the other grounds assigned for new trial are the erroneous admission and rejection of evidence because it is "inadmissible under the pleadings." And the pleadings are repeatedly directly referred to in the objections, and also in the instructions asked, and must necessarily have been referred to in the argument of the motion, and have been considered by the Court below in deciding it. The pleadings are not in the transcript, and it contains no statement in any form of the issues. It is impossible to determine, except inferentially, what the issues were, or even the general object and scope of the action, and without knowing something of the issues it is impossible to tell whether the rulings complained of are correct or not, or whether the points in which it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the special verdict are material to a determination of the rights of the parties. There was, also, a general verdict. There is not, it seems to us, a single ground of error that can be intelligently determined upon the transcript presented. But we cannot undertake to determine important rights upon records manifestly so largely mutilated in material parts.

Section one hundred ninety-five provides, among other things; that "the statement thus used in connection with such pleadings, depositions and minutes of the Court as are read or referred to on the hearing, constitute, without further statement, the papers to be used on appeal from the order granting or refusing the new trial." "The statement thus used" is not here, as many material portions appear to be wanting, and only a mutilated statement is brought up. The pleadings were necessarily used on the hearing below, as we have seen, and they are wanting. Section three hundred forty-six requires the appellant to furnish "a copy of the papers used on the hearing of the Court below;" and further provides, that "if the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers, the appeal may be dismissed." Of course, immaterial portions of the record in the Court below may be dispensed with in the proper mode. But in this case much that is material to an intelligent determination of the propriety of the order appealed from is wanting.

We think the appeals both from the judgment and the order should be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

J. N. RANDOLPH v. L. B. HARRIS.

ACTION ON LOST NOTE.—In an action upon a lost note the better practice is to tender indemnity before suit and allege the same in the complaint; but such a course is not absolutely necessary. A failure to do so is not fatal to the cause of action; it only affects the question of costs. In other respects, a tender at the trial is sufficient.

COSTS IN AN ACTION ON LOST NOTE.—Where there has been no tender of indemnity before suit, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the defendant has waived a tender, in which case the costs are in the discretion of the Court.

NOTE DESTROYED BY FIRE.—On the question of indemnity no distinction can be made between a note which has been destroyed, and one which has been merely lost.

And whether the note is known to be destroyed or not, the maker is entitled to his indemnity. (Story on Promissory Notes, Sec. 449; Welton and Wife v. Adams & Co., 4 Cal. 37.)

Coffroth & Spaulding, for Respondent.

When a note has been destroyed by fire, no indemnifying bond is required. (Story on Promissory Notes, Sec. 449.) The authorities cited by appellant have no application in this case, and none of them go so far as to say that an indemnifying bond must be tendered before suit is commenced. The evidence shows that an indemnifying bond was tendered or offered in this case before the commencement of the suit, and that defendant stated substantially that he did not require any bond. But a good and sufficient bond was tendered (though not required by law) before the entry of judgment, and filed amongst the papers in the case.

Appellant's counsel contends that there was not sufficient proof of the assignment. The answer to this is, that there is no sufficient denial of the assignment. The denial in the answer is in the alternative, and the pleading bad. (Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 624; Woodworth v. Knowlton, 22 Cal. 168.)

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

This is an action upon a lost promissory note, by an assignee against the maker—or, as averred in the complaint, a note which had been “totally destroyed by fire.” There is no averment in the complaint to the effect that the plaintiff had tendered to the defendant a good and sufficient bond of indemnity before bringing the action. The only averment upon that subject is in the following words: “Plaintiff avers that he has offered, and now offers, to indemnify defendant against any loss or damage he may sustain on account of the destruction of said note.” The action was commenced on the 27th day of June, 1864. On the 13th of August following the plaintiff filed a bond of indemnity with the Clerk of the Court, and at the trial tendered the same to the defendant, who refused to accept it because it was insufficiently stamped and because it had not been tendered before suit. No objection was made to the form of the bond or the sufficiency of the security. The Court held that the plaintiff was not bound to tender indemnity before suit, but that the bond was insufficiently stamped, and permitted the plaintiff to add the requisite amount of stamps. In this connection the record contains the following: "The plaintiff also testified that he offered an indemnity bond before the suit was commenced, and that the defendant made some remark that amounted to a waiver of such bond." The case was tried by the Court, but no findings were filed. Judgment was for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, but is silent upon the subject of indemnity.

It is first insisted that the complaint is fatally defective in not averring that a proper indemnifying bond had been prepared and tendered before the commencement of the action.

It was held in Wellon v. Adams & Co., 4 Cal. 37, and reaffirmed in Price v. Dunlap, 5 Cal. 483, that where it appears that a negotiable security has been lost or destroyed, the maker has a right to require indemnity against all future claims under it before its payment can be enforced. In the former case, as in this, the security had been destroyed by fire, but it was held that there was no distinction to be made between a lost instrument and one proved to have been destroyed. We are satisfied with the doctrine of that case, but we do not understand that it goes to the length of holding that the bond must be prepared and tendered in advance of suit. The complaint in that case did not aver the tender of a bond, nor, as in the present case, contain an offer to give one, but on the contrary sought to excuse the plaintiffs from giving a bond on the ground of their inability to do so. The Court held that they must give one before the defendants could be compelled to pay, and the judgment of the Court was that "the judgment (which was for the plaintiffs) be reversed and the cause remanded." No direction was given to the Court below to dismiss the action, on the ground that the complaint contained no cause of action, which would doubtless have been done had the Court been of that opinion. We therefore regard the case as merely establishing the rule that the law will not enforce the payment of a lost note or bill without first requiring the holder to indemnify the maker if he demands it, and that, contrary to some American authorities, there is no difference in this respect between a merely lost bill and one which the evidence shows has been destroyed.

The only question, then, which we are called upon to determine is whether it is absolutely necessary for the plaintiff to tender a bond before he brings his action.

With the question as to which forum, whether a Court of law or equity, can afford relief in a case like the present, we have nothing to do, for under our system the two are blended, except so far as that question may be collaterally involved in the one before us. In England a suit at common law cannot be maintained in such a case, but resort must be had to a Court of Chancery, which always decrees indemnity (Hansard v. Robinson, 7 Barn. & Cress. 90,) upon the ground that upon the payment of a note or bill the maker or acceptor is entitled by the law merchant to its possession as a voucher of its payment, or, if that cannot be had, to an equivalent in the shape of reasonable indemnity against all future claims upon him. The English doctrine was in effect, as we understand it, adopted in Welton v. Adams & Co., supra. Treating the case, then, as one of equitable cognizance, we think the failure to tender indemnity before suit is not fatal to a recovery, and only affects the question of costs.

The tender of indemnity cannot be considered as any part of the plaintiff's cause of action or as a fact or event upon which his right of action accrues. It is merely a condition which the law imposes upon his right to enforce his cause of action, the performance of which is exacted as a substitute for the delivery of the note or bill, which otherwise he is bound to make upon payment. But it is inequitable to subject the defendant to costs when he may be willing to pay upon reasonable indemnity and before he is placed in the wrong by a tender and refusal. Hence, if the plaintiff desires to recover costs, he must make the tender before suit or show a waiver of indemnity on the part of the defendant. On the other hand, all that the defendant can rightfully ask is that he be not required by the Court to pay the money or subjected to costs until reasonable indemnity has been furnished.

The proper course to pursue in such cases is for the plaintiff to prepare and tender before suit reasonable indemnity. If it be refused he can then sue, alleging the tender and refusal, and keep the tender good by filing the bond in Court. If, at the trial, the Court shall be of the opinion that the indemnity is reasonable and sufficient, he will be entitled to judgment with costs. But he may sue and offer in his complaint to give such indemnity as the Court may adjudge reasonable, and upon complying with the order of the Court in that respect, take his judgment, but without costs. This last course was adopted in Tersey v. Gary, commented on by Lord Chancellor Hardwick in Walmsley v. Childs, 1 Vesey Sr. 345, and sustained. The same principle was recognized in Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 282. In cases like the present the costs are regulated by the four hundred and ninety-eighth section of the Practice Act, and are left to the discretion of the Court to be awarded or apportioned according to the equity of the case.

In this case, as before stated, there is no averment of a previous tender, and but for the fact that such tender seems to have been waived by the defendant, we should be compelled to reverse the judgment so far as the allowance of costs is concerned. We think, however, that the allowance of costs was correct in view of that fact.

The exceptions taken to the admission of the written assignment of the note by the original payee to the plaintiff are answered by the fact that the assignment was not in issue and no proof of it was therefore required. The attempted denial of the assignment in the answer is in these words: "And this defendant further answering on information and belief, denies that said Daniel Richards, for a valuable consideration, assigned, by a written instrument, the indebtedness due upon said note, or that the said assignment was stamped with United States revenue stamps of the required amount and denomination, or that any written assignment was made." This is not a denial of the assignment. If it can be considered as a denial at all, it can only be considered as a denial that the assignment was in writing, and that it was made for a valuable consideration. Such a denial was held bad in Burke v. Table Mountain Water Company, 12 Cal. 407, and Morrill v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 292. The pleadings being verified and the assignment not specifically denied, it must be taken as admitted for all the purposes of the trial.

AND C. W. HOWARD, ADMINISTRATORS OF THE ESTATE OF CHARLES DOANE, DECEASED.

ACTION AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR FOR TORT OF INTESTATE.—A cause of action for the wrongful taking and conversion of personal property survives against the personal representatives of the wrongdoer after his decease.

PRESSENTATION OF CLAIM TO ADMINISTRATOR.—An objection that a claim against the estate of the intestate has not been presented to the administrator for allowance or rejection, if not made in the Court below, cannot be raised in the Supreme Court.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Charles Doane was Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, and as such, an execution on a judgment in favor of N. C. Lane and against Harvey Dickinson was placed in his hands. By virtue of the execution, Doane seized personal property claimed by plaintiffs, and they brought an action against him for the wrongful taking and conversion of the same. Pending the action Doane died, and plaintiffs' attorneys suggested his death, and moved that his administrators be substituted as defendants in the action. The Court granted the motion, defendants' counsel excepting.

Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Jabish Clement, for Appellants.

The rule of law is, that where the wrongful act of the decedent did not result in any benefit to the estate, no cause of action survives against the administrator. This rule is laid down, and all the previous authorities upon the subject are cited and discussed in People v. Gibb, 9 Wend. 30. To the same effect are Wilbur v. Gilmore, 21 Pick. 252; Osborne v. Bell, 5 Denio, 370-76.

George F. & Wm. H. Sharp, for Respondents.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

I. The first point made by counsel for appellants, to the effect that the cause of action set forth in the complaint does not survive against the personal representative of the defendants' intestate, is answered by the one hundred and ninety-seventh section of the Act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, which provides that "any person or his personal representatives shall have an action against the executor or administrator of any testator or intestate who in his lifetime shall have wasted, destroyed, taken or carried away, or converted to his own use the goods or chattels of any such person, or committed any trespass upon the real estate of such person."

II. The second point, to the effect that no proof was made of the presentment of the claim to the defendants for their allowance or rejection, as provided in the one hundred and thirty-eighth section of the Act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, is answered by the case of Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555, where it was held that the objection in question must be made in the Court below, and cannot be made for the first time in this Court. It does not appear from the record that the defendants, either at the trial, or on the motion for a new trial, in any form objected to a recovery on that ground. For the reasons stated in Hentsch v. Porter, the objection cannot be entertained by us.

We cannot disturb the judgment upon the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Upon the question of title the evidence was conflicting, and we think it was fairly submitted to the jury by the instructions of the Court.

WILLIAM H. DURYEA v. HIRAM BURT, JOHN DE-PUY, AND EDWARD BURRELL.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A MINING PARTNERSHIP.—If two or more persons acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working the same and extracting the mineral therefrom, and actually engage in working the same, and share, according to the interest of each, the profit and loss, the partnership relation subsists between them, although there is no express agreement between them to become partners, or to share the profits and losses.

DISSOLUTION OF MINING PARTNERSHIP.—One of the partners in a mining partnership may convey his interest in the mine and business without dissolving the partnership.

MINING CLAIM OF A MINING PARTNERSHIP IS PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY.—The mining ground belonging to and worked by a mining partnership and acquired for mining purposes, whether purchased with partnership funds or brought into the concern by individual members as a portion of the capital stock, is, in equity, for the purpose of a settlement of the partnership affairs, to be treated as partnership property.

LIEN OF MEMBER OF MINING PARTNERSHIP ON ITS PROPERTY.—Each member of a mining partnership has a lien upon the partnership property for the debts due the creditors of the concern, and for moneys advanced by him for its use, which he may enforce in equity, even if there has been no agreement among the partners that such lien shall exist.

PURCHASER OF INTEREST OF ONE MINING PARTNER HOLDS IT SUBJECT TO LIEN.—If a member of a mining partnership sells his interest in the mine, the purchaser takes it subject to any lien existing in favor of a copartner for debts due the creditors, or advances made for the uses of the concern, unless he becomes a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration, without notice of such lien.

rules governing commercial partnership. I shall now endeavor to show that in an ordinary mining partnership, such as this is found to have been, the equitable lien in favor of the partnership is extended rather than limited. Says Story: "Thus, for example, there may be a partnership in the working of the mine, for Courts of equity constantly treat the working of a mine as a species of trade, and apply the same remedial justice to such cases as they do to ordinary partnerships," (Story on Part. Sec. 82;) and quotes with approbation the language of Lord Eldon, in Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst Rep. 518, 523, 526: "Whatever may be the rights and liabilities of tenants in common of a mine not being worked, it is clear that where the several owners unite and co-operate in working the mine, then a new relation exists between them, and to a certain extent they are governed by the rules relating to partnerships, and this relation of partnership may be constituted either by express stipulation, or by implication deduced from the acts of the parties."

The case of Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. and Myl. 45, is precisely like the present. Said Sir John Leach: "This property was acquired by these partners for the purposes of the partnership concern; therefore, though in the nature of real property, it is subject to all the debts of the partnership, and to the claim of one of the partners incurred in the administration of the property." (Collyer on Mines, 79.) The same case afterwards appeared in 1 Tam., quoted in 2 Harrison's Digest, 3,876.

The learned Judge whose findings and conclusions of law accompany this case, states that there was no agreement between Duryea and Burt that there should be a lien upon either interest for the company debt, and his legal conclusions would seem to indicate that without such an agreement the partnership lien would not exist. With all deference, we submit that this lien does not spring from express agreement, but is created by operation of law upon the partnership relation and the equitable necessities of the case, and that where real property has been acquired with partnership funds, or for the uses of the partnership, or where the partners by their conduct or management indicate an intention to treat it as partnership property, and do so treat it, equity will, in furtherance of justice, so consider it.

Hawley & Williams, for Respondents.

The question to be determined is, whether in an ordinary mining company, such as that in the case at bar is found to have been, the relationship of proper partnership and the equitable lien peculiar to such relation exists between the members, in the absence of any express understanding of any nature as to the relationship existing, and in the absence of any agreement or contract whatever, that the interest of either in the claims was to be held subject to a lien for the common liabilities. Were the case at bar one of proper partnership, and the interest purchased by Depuy and Burrell of defendant Burt, held by him in trust for the purposes of such partnership, yet, Burrell being a bona fide purchaser, without notice of the character of the property, would take to the extent of one half the interest conveyed by Burt to himself and Depuy, a title discharged of the lien of the copartnership and of the claims of the joint creditors. (Story on Part. Sec. 358; Collyer on Part. 3d Edition, 120-122; Dyer v. Clark, 5 Mete. 580; Hoxie v. Carr, 1 Sumner, 182, 183; 8 Ohio Rep. 365; Depuy v. Leavenworth, 17 Cal. 262.)

But we contend that a proper partnership did not exist between the parties Duryea and Burt in the case at bar, and that the facts as found are wholly insufficient to raise such relation and the equitable lien incident thereto by implication. Appellant in support of his position cites Story on Partnership, Sec. 82, to the point that there may be a partnership in the working of a mine, and that in such cases Courts of equity apply the same remedial justice as they do to ordinary partnerships; that is to say, that working a mine may be the subject of partnership; and where a partnership is shown, although its subject be the working of a mine, the same remedial justice will be applied as in ordinary copartnerships. The case of Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & Myl. 45, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case the parties had a mere chattel interest in the mine — being lessees. Besides, they were engaged in purchasing ore from other mines, and were manufacturing large quantities of iron, as well from pig iron and ore purchased as from ore taken from their leasehold lands. Lord Eldon, upon this array of circumstances showing trade and manufacture in connection with the chattel interest of the parties in the land, after much doubt and deliberation held that a partnership had subsisted.

Jones v. Parsons, 25 Cal. 100, also cited, has no application to the facts as found in this case. There the fact of partnership was alleged and found by the Court. No assertion of the existence of a partnership lien is found in the case until the sale of Burt to Depuy and Burrell. Now, in the absence of the assent of Burt to a partnership relation with Duryea — and no such assent appears, but on the contrary the Court finds there was no such assent on the part of either of the parties — we know of no rule of law or equity which will enable the plaintiff to declare the existence of a partnership and assert his lien after a sale of his co-tenants' interest in the property or before such sale. Partnership is the result of an agreement, and cannot be raised by a proceeding in invitum. (Story on Part. Sec. 5; Collyer on Part. 3d Ed. p. 5, Sec. 8.)

The fact that additional ground was purchased with the common funds of the parties could have no bearing in raising the presumption of partnership in the land so purchased. (Collyer on Part. 3d Ed. 180; Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. and K. 649; Townsend v. Devaynes, 1 Russ. & M. 45.)

Again: in no case can the equitable lien peculiar to partnership exist between tenants in common of lands unless a proper partnership be first shown, as also that such lands are held for the purposes of the partnership. Now, admitting the truth of the doctrine that the equitable lien of one tenant in common upon the interest of his co-tenant attaches in all such cases, then, in a suit against such copartnership for a common liability, if service of process be had upon one member of such firm, and judgment be had against all, as it may be under our practice, the whole of the lands owned by such partnership could be sold under execution issued on such judgment and the title pass by such sale. Wherever the lien of partnership exists, this result may be accomplished under our practice by a service upon one copartner in a suit against all. (Prac. Act, Sec. 32.) Yet this Court have decided in several cases, that as between members of an ordinary mining company this cannot be done; in other words, that the property is not joint, as partnership property certainly is, but is held as tenants in common. (Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 280.)

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

This action was brought to dissolve a partnership alleged to have existed between the plaintiff and the defendant Burt, from the 1st of June, 1860, to the time of filing the complaint which was on the 25th of February, 1864, and to obtain an accounting between them and a sale of the partnership property for the payment of the partnership debts. The defendants, Depuy and Burrell, on the 5th of February, 1864, purchased of Burt his interest in a portion of the property owned by him and the plaintiff, which the plaintiff maintains was purchased by them subject to a partnership lien for the payment of the partnership debts then due. The Court before which the cause was tried found in substance the following facts:

First—That early in May, 1860, Burt and five other persons, of whom the plaintiff was not one, owned a part of the property described in the complaint.

Second—That afterwards, and at different times, the plaintiff purchased the interest of all these owners, except Burt, until in December, 1861, he had acquired the undivided five-sixths of the property, at which time the other undivided sixth of the same belonged to Burt.

Third—During the period from the 1st of May, 1860, to the 1st of December, 1861, the owners of the property as a mining company acquired by several purchases other property, consisting of a ditch and mining grounds, which is a part of the property described in the plaintiff's complaint. These purchases were paid for out of the common funds of the company. The parties owning the property, worked the ground as a mining company, and used the water of their ditch in carrying on such work. The work was prosecuted by the parties interested both before and after the plaintiff and Burt became the only parties having an interest in the property.

Fourth — The profits obtained and the losses sustained in working the mines were to be shared among the parties in proportion to their several and respective interests. Such, at least, it is found, was the tacit understanding among the members of the company, though it is found that there was no written agreement or express understanding among or between the members of the company on the subject, nor any agreement or contract that the interest of either of them in the mining claims was to be held for the company's debts, nor that there should be any lien on the undivided interests of the different owners of the land for the company's liabilities.

Fifth — That after the plaintiff and Burt became the only owners of the property, they became indebted to third parties in about two thousand dollars, that about one thousand two hundred dollars of it was to be paid for running a tunnel on a part of the company's mining ground, but the tunnel was not completed or accepted when Burt sold and conveyed to Depuy and Burrell.

Sixth — After the plaintiff and Burt became the only owners of the property, the latter used a large amount of the water from the ditch on some mining ground of his own; and it is found by the Court that upon an accounting between them as to their company business, Burt was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of one thousand five hundred and seventy-two dollars and fifty-five cents.

Seventh — That when Burt sold and conveyed to Depuy and Burrell, he informed Depuy that he was owing plaintiff seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars on their company account, and that plaintiff claimed a lien for it. But that it did not appear that Burrell had any such notice.

Eighth — That at the time of such sale and conveyance Burt was insolvent and so had continued.

Upon the facts so found the Court came to the conclusion that as against Depuy and Burrell the plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed, and that as against Burt he should have a personal judgment for one thousand five hundred and seventy-two dollars and fifty-five cents, and judgment was accordingly so entered. The plaintiff applied to the Court to set aside the judgment entered against him, and for a new trial, which application was denied.

The defendants Depuy and Burrell controverted by answer the existence of any copartnership between the plaintiff and Burt; and as the rights of the parties depend in part upon the solution of this question, it will be first considered.

It does not appear distinctly from the findings of the Court when the mining business was commenced by the several owners of the mining grounds involved in this controversy. They are called, in the finding of the Court, and by the counsel for the respective parties, in their arguments, a company, who worked these mining grounds in the usual manner of working mining claims in California. The company made purchases of mining ground lying adjacent to that already owned by it, for which payment was made out of the common fund of the company. This company originally consisted of six persons, of whom Burt was one, but the plaintiff was not then a member of it. In May, 1860, the plaintiff first became a party in interest in the mining grounds which the company then owned, and he continued from that time until December, 1861, to purchase interests therein, by which means all the original members of the company, except Burt, became divested of their interest in the property, and the plaintiff became the owner of the undivided five sixths of it. After the plaintiff and Burt became the only parties in interest, and constituted the company or firm, it is fairly to be inferred from the pleadings and finding that they continued to work the mines as usual, and used the ditch as a means for the purpose. They shared the profits and losses of the enterprise in accordance with their respective interests in the property; that is, the plaintiff received five sixths of the profits, and Burt one sixth of the same, and the burdens and losses were borne by them in the same proportions. Though the Court does not find that a partnership was created by express agreement, yet it is found that by a tacit understanding between the parties they were to share the profits and losses of the enterprise according to their several interests.

To constitute a partnership between parties engaged in a business there must be a communion of profit between them. A communion of profit implies a communion of loss. (Coll. on Part. Sec. 18; Grace v. Smith, 2 W. Black. 998; Dob v. Halsey, 16 John. 40; Story on Part. Secs. 18, 19; 3 Kent, 24, 25.) It is not necessary that there should be an express stipulation between the partners to share the profits and losses, as that is an incident to the prosecution of their joint business. (Barrett v. Swann, 17 Maine, 180.) So far then the elements of a partnership among the different owners of the property of this mining company is found to have existed.

Mining partnerships are said to possess some features peculiar to themselves which distinguish them from ordinary trading concerns. Collyer, in his treatise on the law relating to mines, at page 88, says: "A question of some nicety sometimes arises whether persons working mines are trading partners, or mere joint occupiers of land, using the mineral as a part of its produce;" and he then states as a result of the cases "that this question will turn on the consideration, whether the land be obtained wholly or principally for the purpose of trading in the ore, or whether the selling of the ore be only incidental or appurtenant to the occupation of the land," and he observes that "when companies of adventurers have been formed for the purpose of mining, and obtained leases either of the land or the minerals, or license to work in pursuance of that object, the Courts of equity have long since recognized such associations as a species of trading partnerships." In Skillman v.

Lachman, 23 Cal. 203, it is said, "whatever may be the rights and liabilities of tenants in common of a mine not being worked, it is clear that when the several owners unite and co-operate in working the mine, then a new relation exists between them, and to a certain extent they are governed by the rules relating to partnerships. They form what is termed a mining partnership, which is governed by many of the rules relating to ordinary partnerships, but which has some rules peculiar to itself—one of which is that one person may convey his interest in the mine and business without dissolving the partnership." Mines are often and perhaps generally owned and worked by associations more numerous than ordinary trading partnerships. Accordingly, in the language of Collyer, mining partnerships were early recognized as differing from ordinary trading partnerships, in not being founded on the delectus personarum, from which principle the rights and obligations of ordinary trading partners are ordinarily derived; and he observes that "the dissolution of partnerships so numerous, by the death, bankruptcy, outlawry or felony of any one partner, would have been incompatible with that continuous working of a mine which is necessary to success. It would have been highly inconvenient if no partner had been allowed to part with his share without the consent of each of his copartners," and hence it was decided, after many doubts, that a mining partner had the right to assign and transfer his share without the consent of his copartners; and that neither such assignment nor the death or bankruptcy of the owner of an interest in the mining concern operated to dissolve the partnership. (Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. and Myl. 49.) Another peculiarity of a mining partnership noticed by the Court in Skilman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198, is that one mining partner has not the power to bind his associates by engagements with third persons to the extent that an individual partner of an ordinary trading concern is competent to bind the firm of which he is a member. The reason for the distinction is because a mining partnership which is subject to changes in its membership, as already indicated, is not founded on the delectus personarum, while an ordinary commercial partnership is—a difference which limits the powers of partners, for reasons which are obvious, to the performance of such acts in the name of the partnership as may be necessary to the carrying on of its business, or which are usual in like concerns. (Ricketts v. Bennett, 4 C. B. 686; Dickerson v. Valpy, 10 B. & C. 128.)

The plaintiff maintains that from the facts found a partnership lien existed in favor of the partnership for the debts of the firm, and also for advances made by the plaintiff beyond his share for the benefit of Burt; and that a lien for such debts and advances existed at the time of the sale and conveyance by Burt to Depuy and Burrell upon the interest so conveyed, and remained subsisting thereon when this action was commenced, and that the Court erred in deciding otherwise.

It may be laid down as a general principle that each member of a partnership has a specific lien on the partnership property, not only for the debts and liabilities due to third persons, but also for his own share of the capital stock and funds, and for all moneys advanced by him for the use of the concern. In the words of Lord Hardwick, “when an account is to be taken, each is entitled to be allowed against the other everything he has advanced or brought in as a partnership transaction, and to charge the other in the account with what the other has not brought in, or has taken out more than he ought; and nothing is to be considered his share but the proportion of the residue on the balance of the account.” (Coll. on Part. Sec. 125; Story on Part. Sec. 97; Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. R. 167.) The subjection of personal property of a partnership, constituting its capital stock, to the principle stated, is generally of no difficulty; but where the property employed in the partnership enterprise is real estate, held by the several partners as tenants in common, the question has been regarded as one of more embarrassment; mainly, we apprehend, because of the nature of the property itself and the law controlling its descent, and the inability of any one of the tenants in common to charge or dispose of any greater or other interest in such real property than that which he may have and hold.

Without entering at much length upon an examination of the English and American authorities on the subject, we may say that the doctrine is well established in America, that real estate purchased by partners, with partnership funds for partnership purposes, is at law held by them as tenants in common; but in equity it is deemed as held in trust as a part of the partnership property applicable, in the first place, exclusive to pay the partnership debts. (Burnside v. Merrick, 4 Metcalf, 541; Hoxie v. Carr, 1 Sumner, 173; Story on Part. Secs. 91, 92; Jones v. Parsons, 25 Cal. 104, 105; Pierce v. Trigg, 10 Leigh, 406; Sigourney v. Munn, 7 Conn. 11; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. 74, 76; Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. R. 197, 206; Divine v. Michum, 4 B. Monroe, 488; Dyer v. Clark, 5 Metcalf, 562.) In the case last cited, at page 577, Mr. Chief Justice Shaw said: "It appears to us, that considering the nature of the partnership and the mutual confidence in each other which that relation implies, it is not putting a forced construction upon their act and intent, to hold that when property is purchased in the name of the partners, out of partnership funds and for partnership use, though by force of common law they take the legal estate as tenants in common, yet that each is under a conscientious obligation to hold that legal estate, until the purposes for which it was so purchased are accomplished, and to appropriate it to those purposes, by first applying it to the payment of the partnership debts, for which both his partner and he himself are liable, and until he has come to a just account with his partner. Each has an equitable interest in that portion of the legal estate held by the other, until the debts, obligatory on both, are paid, and his own share of the outlay for partnership stock is restored to him." And in Howard v. Priest, the same learned Judge decided that real estate thus acquired is held in trust, "each holding his property in trust for the partnership, until the partnership account is settled, and the partnership debts paid." (Id. 585.)

In Buchan v. Sumner, Chancellor Walworth, in an elaborate opinion in which he reviewed the English and American cases on the subject, considered the American decisions in relation to real estate purchased with partnership funds, or for the use of the firm, as establishing these two principles: "First—That such real estate is, in equity, chargeable with the debts of the copartnership, and with any balance which may be due from one copartner to another upon the winding up of the affairs of the firm. Second—That as between the personal representative and the heirs at law of a deceased partner, his share of the surplus of the real estate of the copartnership which remains after paying the debts of the copartnership, and adjusting all the equitable claims of the different members of the firm as between themselves, is considered and treated as real estate, (2 Barb. Ch. 200, 201;) and at page 206 he said: "Although a Court of equity considers and treats real property as part of the stock of the firm, it leaves the legal title undisturbed, except so far as is necessary to protect the equitable rights of the several members of the firm therein." In Pierce v. Trigg, the Court of Appeals of Virginia held that land purchased by two partners with partnership funds, for partnership purposes, and used as part of the stock in trade, is to be regarded in equity as partnership property; and though, if the conveyance has been made to both partners, there will, upon the death of one, pass to his heirs a legal title, yet the whole beneficial interest devolves upon the survivor, and he may sue the heirs, compel a sale and dispose of the proceeds as he would of the personal estate of the firm. The principles declared in these cases, it is said by Collyer, "are founded in sound policy and obvious justice, and the correctness of them appears to be incontestible." (Coll. on Part. Sec. 135, and of this opinion was Chancellor Kent, 3 Kent's Com. 39.) The case of Jones v. Parsons, 25 Cal. 100, accords in doctrine with the cases from which we have quoted.

In Smith v. Jackson, 2 Edw. Ch. 28, the Vice Chancellor held that, though real estate be purchased with joint funds for partnership purposes, there is no survivorship as to the real estate, and that upon the death of one of the partners, his share, as a tenant in common, decends to his heirs, unless it is agreed by the partners themselves to consider it as personalty, and then the agreement works the change. That when real property is acquired by partners with partnership funds, and used for partnership purposes, it will not be deemed partnership property, liable to partnership debts, by the mere taking of the deed in the joint names of the partners. To render it partnership property, and liable as such, he held it must appear that it was acquired for the purposes of the partnership by some express act or understanding of the partners; in which case equity would apply the lands to pay the partnership debts. This decision, and others to the same effect, Chancellor Kent observed, appeared to him to be a sacrifice of a principle of policy, and, above all, a principle of justice, to a technical rule of doubtful authority. There is no need, he said, of any other agreement than what the law will necessarily imply from the fact of the investment of partnership funds by the firm in real estate for partnership purposes. If the partners mean to deal honestly they cannot have any other intention than the appropriation of the investment, if wanted, to pay the partnership debts. (3 Kent's Com. 39, note.) Chancellor Kent evidently favored the doctrine held by Lord Eldon in Selkirk v. Davies, 2 Dow Parl. R. 231, 242, and in Townsend v. Devaynes, reported in 1 Mont. on Part. 97, and by Sir John Leach in Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ and Myl. 45, and Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. and K. 649, and Broom v. Broom, 3 Myl. and K. 433, that all property involved in a partnership ought to be considered as personalty, even in the absence of any special agreement in respect to it. In the case of Thornton v. Dixon, 3 Bro. C. C. 199, Lord Thurlow held that in the absence of any agreement or other act affecting its general character, real estate, held as part of the partnership property, retained its original character as real estate, and upon the death of one of the partners, his share passed to his heir or devisee, and Sir William Grant, (in Bell v. Phyn, 7 Vesey, 453, and Belmain v. Shore, 9 Vesey, 501,) adopted the same opinion. While the doctrine of the cases is somewhat conflicting, we think the principles stated by Chancellor Walworth, in Buchan v. Sumner, as rules deduced from the American decisions, are a sound and just exposition of the law on the subject, (2 Barb. Ch. 200, 201,) and as a corollary of these rules, the real property of the partnership may be considered and treated as part of its capital stock, leaving the legal title undisturbed, subject to the law controlling as to its alienation, descent and distribution, except in so far as may be necessary to protect the rights of creditors and of the several members of the firm. We do not think the jurisdiction of a Court of equity depends for its exercise, subjecting real estate thus acquired and used by a partnership to the payment of the debts of the concern upon an express agreement of the parties to that effect. That real property shall be subject to the purposes for which it was purchased or brought into the partnership, involves the assumption that the partners understood among themselves and intended that it should be held in trust for the uses of the partnership by the several tenants in common. This understanding may be implied from the acts or conduct of the parties. The circumstance that property, whether it be real or personal, is invested in a partnership enterprise, affords cogent evidence of intention that it shall constitute a part of its capital stock. Therefore we do not deem it essential that such intention must be manifested by an express agreement. The agreement is implied from the circumstances, by the rules of law and logic; and it is only equitable to the creditors and members of the partnership that the property should not be withdrawn until the affairs of the association may be adjusted and each of its members shall have his just due. (3 Kent Com. 39, note.)

A portion of the real estate involved in the controversy, as we understand the case, was acquired by the persons originally interested prior to their actually engaging in the business of mining, and it may perhaps be supposed the authorities cited do not therefore apply. If such mining ground was obtained by the parties solely for the purpose of extracting gold from it, and for that object was brought into the partnership as its capital, it must be regarded as partnership property in the qualified character already expressed. The land being obtained for the sole object of mining, and invested in the mining partnership, it is impossible on principle to distinguish it as resting upon any other footing in its relation to the partnership than mining land acquired by the partnership for mining purposes after the joint enterprise is fully in operation. (Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst. 523; Coll. on Mines, 88; Rockwell on Mines, 578.) Mr. Rockwell, after noticing what was said by Sir John Leach in Fereday v. Wightwick, observes that "it may be concluded that when persons acquire interests in lands apparently for the sole purpose of working the mines in them, they must be considered as entering into a commercial partnership. There does not appear," he continues, "to be any ground for distinction in such cases, if the parties have even acquired a permanent and absolute interest in the property." But he submits it as a general rule in such cases that "there must not only be an express intention to work the mines, but this object must have been either solely contemplated by the parties, or of such paramount consequence as to effectually overbalance any other advantages anticipated from the estate." This, in our judgment, refers the rule to a principle just in itself and easily to be understood.

In support of the right of the plaintiff to the relief which he seeks, as well as to the doctrines which, it may be, are already sufficiently sustained by the foregoing authorities, we may refer more at length to the judgment of the Court in the case of Fereday v. Wightwick. From the report of that case it appears that six persons had taken a lease for years of mines, and also another lease of the surface of the property, and had worked the mines as a joint concern. One of them mortgaged his interest or share for money borrowed, and then became bankrupt, at which time he was greatly indebted to the concern, of which he had been the manager. A bill was filed by such of the original parties as continued to be interested in the concern, and by other persons who were either representatives of deceased original partners or claimed as purchasers of shares. The plaintiffs sought a decree directing the shares of the partner, who had become bankrupt, to be applied in repaying the debt due from him to the partnership. The defendants, who claimed under the bankrupt partner, insisted that the common principles of partnership were not applicable to the case of mines, which were of the nature of real property. In deciding the case, the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Leach, said: "The mines and surface were used with a communion of expense and a communion of profit. The first question is, whether this is partnership property, liable to be sold and disposed of to pay the partnership debts; and whether a partner, having sold part of his share, his interest is to be considered, subject, in the first place to repayment of what is due from him to the partnership. This question is concluded by authority, but I am willing to decide it upon principle. Mining concerns are to some purposes trading concerns, but they are not so to all. They are not so in this particular, viz: that they are not, as an ordinary partnership trade, subject to dissolution on the death or bankruptcy of any of the partners, and the shares are transferable without the consent of the partners. In these particular instances they have not all the incidents of a trading concern; in other respects, it has been repeatedly held that they have. Now, it is a universal principle in regard to all property, whether real or personal, acquired for the purpose of a partnership, that property so acquired, is, upon the dissolution of the partnership, subject to sale and accounts between the partners, and to payment of the partnership debts—that is a universal principle. To apply the rule to this particular case, the property was acquired by these partners for the purposes of the partnership concern. Therefore, though in the nature of real property, it is subject to all the debts of the partnership, and subject to the debts of one of the partners incurred in the administration of the property. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the plaintiffs have a right to make this claim." (Taml. 250; Coll. on Mines, 128.)

In the case before us, the plaintiff had a lien upon the partnership property for the debts due the creditors of the concern, and also for moneys advanced by him for its use, and such lien subsisted after the conveyance made by Burt to Depuy and Burrell, unless it was lost by reason of their having become purchasers in good faith, for a valuable consideration, without notice on their part of the existence of such lien. In their answer they claimed the benefits accruing to innocent purchasers in such cases.

It appears from the finding of the Court that Depuy had actual notice at the time from Burt that he was in debt on the partnership account in a considerable sum, though it did not appear that Burrell had such notice. It also sufficiently appears that at the time of Depuy's and Burrell's purchase, the plaintiff and Burt were prosecuting the mining business upon these mining grounds. While we do not undertake to say in this place that one partner may not convey or charge his interest in mining ground, on his private account, to the extent of his legal title, provided the purchaser or mortgagee deals with him in good faith and without notice of the partnership rights, and there is nothing in the transaction or in the circumstances connected with it or the subject matter of it from which notice might be inferred, (Coll. on Part. Sec. 135,) yet if a purchaser or mortgagee in such case is apprised of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry and to lead him by a diligent investigation to a discovery of the truth, he will be deemed to have notice of the truth as it may be. Here the defendants Depuy and Burrell were necessarily aware of the working of these mining grounds by plaintiff and Burt as mining partners, and it was their duty to ascertain, as they might have done, the condition of the affairs of the concern, and whether or not there existed upon the property which they purchased a lien resulting from the relation of the partners to each other and to the creditors of the partnership. Besides this, one of the parties had actual notice of the existence of the partnership lien of the plaintiff. They must therefore be deemed to have taken the property cum onere — subject to an adjustment of the account between the partners and the payment of the partnership debts, and also of the amount due the plaintiff on the partnership account.

The judgment must be and is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

SAWYER, J., concurring.

The determination of the rights of the parties to this suit depends upon the question whether the property was held in the ordinary mode of holding ditches and mining ground in this State, as tenants in common, or held as partnership property in the strict sense in which these terms are used in relation to mercantile transactions. I have no doubt that mining claims, ditches and lands may be held as partnership property, as well as any other, and when so held, for the purposes of discharging the partnership obligations or settling the partnership affairs, that such property will be subject in equity to all the incidents of other partnership property. The title to claims may be held by parties as tenants in common, while there may be a strict partnership for the purpose of working them; or there may be a partnership both in the ownership and in the working of the claims. Whether the relationship of the parties is one or the other, or neither, must depend upon the facts of each particular case. These principles are distinctly indicated in Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 76. Parties purchasing the interest of one of the copartners in partnership property acquire such interest only as the vendor had, and that is, his share of the residue, after the affairs of the concern are wound up and the debts paid, including the balance due one partner from the other on the partnership account. (Jones v. Parsons, 25 Cal. 104.) And this rule in equity applies to real estate constituting a part of the assets of the firm, as well as to personalty. True if the record legal title to realty be in one of the partners alone, and he should convey to an innocent party for a valuable consideration without notice of the trust, such party might take a title under the recording Acts; but whether he would or would not, would depend upon principles having no peculiar relation to partnership rights. In such case, also, all the rules of law relating to possession, as affecting the question of notice, would, doubtless, be applicable as in other cases between individuals having no connection with partnership transactions. And these rules would, doubtless, obviate many of the difficulties suggested by the learned Judge who tried the case.

The finding in this case is an opinion rather than a finding, and liable to the criticisms suggested in Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 305; but from the facts stated, I think there was a partnership in working the mines, and that a large portion at least of the property in question was partnership property. Much of it—including a considerable portion of the claims and of the water rights—was purchased by the two parties interested with the common funds resulting from the joint working of the claims and from the common proceeds of sales of water. The profits and losses were to be shared according to their respective interest. This state of facts, without any specific agreement modifying the rights of the parties, would constitute the property so purchased, and the proceeds of the same, and of their joint labor, partnership property. As to this portion of the property the judgment is, therefore, erroneous.

It may be that the claims before owned and purchased in severalty in undivided interests were held by them throughout their connection as tenants in common. Whether they were or were not is not distinctly found as a fact, and we should not be justified in determining the question from the facts found. Those interests were, doubtless, originally purchased as tenancies in common; but whether from the evidence before the Court, and the manner in which the parties blended their interests in those claims with their subsequent purchases and in working the whole, the Court would be justified in finding that they put in the claims originally held, with the new purchases as partnership property, it is not our province now to determine. This will be a fact to be determined on the new trial. If so, it became partnership property and subject to all the incidents of such property. If not, and it was originally held and still continues to be held as a tenancy in common, then it was not partnership property, and the plaintiff has no claim to have the sum due him from his cotenant or co-partner in other matters charged upon it.

The complaint alleges a partnership, and seeks a dissolution and settlement of the affairs of the concern. It avers all the property to be partnership property. On the next trial it will devolve upon the Court to determine the facts whether a partnership existed or not; and if so, whether the whole, or only a part, and in that event, what part of the property described in the complaint is partnership property, and, unless other equities appear requiring a different disposition, to subject that part to plaintiff's demand in case any balance shall be found due him on partnership account.

For these reasons I think the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded.

THE PEOPLE v. DE LACEY.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASE FOR ERROR IN REFUSING A CONTINUANCE.—Where the defendant in a criminal case moves for a new trial on the ground that the Court erred in not granting him a continuance by reason of the absence of his witnesses, he should procure the affidavits of the witnesses to show that they could testify to the facts desired to be proved by them.

DENIAL OF CONTINUANCE IN A CRIMINAL CASE.—If, on application for a continuance made on affidavit, on the ground of the absence of witnesses in a criminal case, there is a counter affidavit tending to show that the application is not made in good faith, the appellate Court will not disturb the judgment because the continuance was denied.

APPEAL from the County Court, Amador County.

The defendant was indicted for robbery. When the cause was called for trial he moved for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses. The defendant stated in his affidavit that the desired witnesses resided at Sacramento, distant about forty-three miles from the place of trial. There was a counter affidavit filed by the District Attorney for the purpose of showing that the application was not made in good faith. The Court denied the continuance, and the defendant was convicted. He then moved for a new trial, and assigned as error the refusal of the Court to grant the continuance, and filed a new affidavit setting up what he expected to prove by the witnesses, but did not procure the affidavits of the witnesses. A new trial was denied, and the defendant appealed.

M. W. Gordon, and J. W. Coffroth, for Appellant.

J. G. McCullough, Attorney-General, for the People.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

On the motion for continuance there was a counter affidavit tending strongly to show that the application was not made in good faith. And on the motion for new trial no effort appears to have been made to procure the affidavits of the absent witnesses to show that they could testify to the facts desired to be proved by them. One of the witnesses appears to be a police officer, and the other a keeper of a public house in Sacramento, and their affidavits could doubtless have been obtained. If not, the fact could have been made to appear. This ground of the motion, under the circumstances, should have been supported by the affidavits of the absent witnesses. Such is the imperative requirement of the statute where the defendant moves for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. (Laws 1863, p. 161, Sec. 440, clause 7.) Then there is no reason why the same rule should not be adopted where a continuance has been denied; and particularly so when, as in this case, there is reason to suspect that the affidavit for continuance was not made in good faith. There was no abuse of discretion in this case. (11 Cal. 163; 8 Cal. 47; 20 Cal. 180; 9 Cal. 212.) No other point requires notice.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES H. LUCAS et al. v. CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

DECISION OF APPELLATE COURT BECOMES THE LAW OF THE CASE.—The judgment of an appellate Court upon a point in issue involved in the case becomes the law of the case in all its stages, not only in the Court below, but in the appellate Court whenever the cause is again brought before it.

FAILING TO EXCEPT TO A FINDING OF FACTS.—If a cause is tried by the Court, the losing party cannot object in the appellate Court that there is no finding of facts, or that the facts found are defective, unless he asks for a finding, or that the facts omitted may be found, and excepts to the refusal of the Court below to do so.

FAILURE TO ASK THAT AN OMITTED FACT BE FOUND.—When a cause is tried by the Court the judgment will not be reversed because the findings omit some fact necessary to be proved to warrant the judgment, unless the Court below was requested to find the fact omitted, and failed to do so, and an exception was taken on that ground.

SECTION ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-ONE OF PRACTICE ACT.—The one hundred and ninety-first section of the Practice Act allowing an exception to the decision of a Court or referee does not do away with the necessity of asking the Court to find the facts, or the omitted facts, and actually excepting to the refusal to do so.

FACTS FOUND NOT WARRANTING A JUDGMENT.—If a finding of facts is inconsistent with the judgment, it is fatal to the judgment without an exception being taken in the Court below.

ONE GOOD COUNT IN COMPLAINT SUSTAINS JUDGMENT.—If the complaint contains one good count, and the findings of fact are defective, but the Court below is not asked to find the omitted facts, the judgment will not be disturbed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. W. Dwinelle, and Delos Lake, for Appellant.

A. C. Whitcomb, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.

This action was brought by the plaintiffs as the assignees of one Wetmore, to recover a certain sum of money for improving Powell street in San Francisco, which it is alleged was performed by Wetmore under a contract made between him and the city. The cause was formerly appealed by the plaintiffs, and this Court reversed the judgment for the defendant, and remanded the cause for further proceedings. (See 7 Cal. 463.) After the return of the cause to the Court below, it was referred to a referee to try all the issues, whether of law or of fact, and report a judgment; and the cause having been heard by the referee, he reported his findings of fact and conclusions of law, together with a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and they were filed and judgment was entered October 9th, 1861. The appeal is taken from the judgment alone, and there is neither a statement nor bill of exceptions in the record.

The propositions presented on the part of the defendant are substantially that the judgment is erroneous, because no count in the complaint discloses a sufficient cause of action; and because the findings of fact reported by the referee do not sustain any good count in the complaint, (if it is held that any count is sufficient,) but apply only to those counts which do not state a sufficient cause of action.

Upon the first proposition, the case is in such a condition that the task of investigation and decision is far from being agreeable; and upon the second, it may not be improper to say, that the statute which we shall have occasion to comment upon, can scarcely be regarded as conducive to the precision and certainty that should characterize judicial proceedings.

When the case was formerly before the Court, it came up on appeal from the judgment sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. The defendant filed a general demurrer to the whole complaint, and to each count separately. Mr. Justice Burnett entered into a very elaborate discussion of the principal questions arising in respect to the contract, and matters growing out of it, upon the idea that they must arise in the future progress of the case, and would have to be settled by the appellate Court. At the outset of his opinion, after having stated what the judgment appealed from was, he says: "The objections raised by the demurrer can only apply to some of the counts, and for that reason, if for no other, the judgment of the Court below must be reversed. But it was evidently the intention of all parties to obtain the decision of this Court.

upon all the points raised, as they involve interests of great magnitude that must be settled sooner or later on appeal." The learned Judge, after holding that the corporation had power to ratify or adopt, in proper form, an act which was within the legitimate powers of the corporation, but which had been done informally and not in the mode prescribed by law; and that an ordinance would estop the city, while acts in pais would not, stated as the only questions in the case: "First— Was it (the contract) made in the proper mode? and, second—if not made in the proper mode, was it afterwards affirmed in the proper manner?" The conclusion attained was that the contract was made in the proper mode. The remainder of the opinion is devoted to the discussion of two questions: whether the city was responsible for the cost of the entire work, under the circumstances of the case; and whether she was liable upon the warrants issued to the contractor, on account of the work performed under the contract; and the first was answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative. Mr. Chief Justice Murray and Mr. Justice Terry, who joined in a special concurrence, said: "We concur in reversing the judgment of the Court below on the first ground stated in the opinion of Judge Burnett, but differ with him as to the other questions passed upon in his opinion." We understand them to mean that their concurrence in reversing the judgment was placed on the ground that the alleged contract was made in the mode prescribed by law, for that is first the ground, and the general statement that the objections raised by the demurrer were not applicable to all the counts, is certainly not one of the grounds assigned why the demurrer should be overruled, but is rather the result, the consequence—necessarily following from the first and second grounds maintained in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Cope when referring to the case in Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255, has not given a different interpretation to the language of the special concurrence, but he evidently regarded the first ground discussed by Mr. Justice Burnett, that the city had entered into the contract in the proper mode, but could not be estopped by matters in pais, as the ground upon which all the Justices concurred. He was maintaining that the city could be thus estopped, and his citation of the case, with the statement that on that point it was in "direct antagonism to Seale v. The City of San Francisco," would be devoid of all purpose and significance, unless he understood the meaning of the special concurrence to be as we have stated.

Whatever our views might be, if the case was now before the Court for the first time, upon the questions whether under the law as it then existed, an ordinance must necessarily precede the making of the contract, after the reception of the proposals, or whether the execution of the contract was sufficiently alleged in the complaint; or upon the more general question whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the city, is now a matter of no moment in this case, for the decision that some one of the counts in the complaint is sufficient, became the law of the case, obligatory not only upon the Court below, but also upon the appellate Court whenever the cause should be again brought before them. (Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 75, and cases cited; Phelan v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 39.) It is the law of the case in the most exact and restricted sense, in which it can be claimed that the doctrine of res judicata should have application, for it is not the reasoning of the Court, nor any mere legal principles announced, but the judgment itself, which is relied on as conclusive of the question in controversy. The judgment reversed was to the effect that the complaint was insufficient, and the judgment of the appellate Court in reversing that judgment definitely established that the complaint was sufficient.

We have, then, at least one good and sufficient count in the complaint, but the case is such that we are not called upon to specify which were held to be sufficient, though we would be safe in rejecting from the number of counts based on the warrants, and including the first count, which is upon the contract, and the fourth count, which is, in substance, for money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiffs. The counsel for the defendant substantially admit the fourth count to be sufficient, when they say: "This count is probably good, but not sustained by the finding of fact." There is no one of the counts which, if it is held to state a sufficient cause of action, will not support the judgment. The only material defect that counsel claim is found in the first count is, that the making of the contract is not well alleged — that the allegation in that count, in fact, showed that the city did not execute the contract. If it is held that the count does properly and sufficiently state the making of the contract, it is in all other respects sufficient to support the judgment; and the same may be said of the fourth count, which alleges that the money sought to be recovered was collected by the city to be applied to the payment of the work in the first count mentioned. Upon its being determined that any one of the counts states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the only other question that could arise upon the pleadings and judgment is, whether such count authorizes a judgment for the amount for which it was rendered, and upon that point it is enough to say that the judgment does not exceed the amount claimed in either of the counts.

The second proposition has relation to the findings of fact filed by the referee. The counsel for the respective parties are at issue upon almost every point that is presented; but we find it unnecessary to pass upon many of the points that have been so very ably and ingeniously argued. It may be conceded for the purposes of the case, that the finding filed by the referee occupies the same position and has the same value as if made by the Court, and that, though it did not, under the statute then in force, from a part of the judgment roll, it became, according to the doctrine of Reynolds v. Harris, 8 Cal. 617, matter of record, and that as such it properly came up in the record on appeal from the judgment, without a statement or bill of exceptions, for we do not consider it necessary to dispose of the findings upon the authority of Connor v. Morris, 23 Cal. 447, in which it was held that it was unnecessary to examine the findings reported by the referee, because he was ordered to try all the issues both of law and of fact, and report a judgment, but was not ordered to report the facts; nor do we express any opinion upon the authority of that case, or say that it is or is not applicable to the facts of this case. It may be further conceded, also, for the same purpose, that the defendant's counsel are right in the point, that objections to the transcript in respect to the findings, should, under Rule 18, have been taken at the first term after the transcript was filed, and at least one day before the argument.

But accepting the finding, as the finding of the Court, and as such, subject to examination in the appellate Court in connection with the pleadings and judgment, it falls within the provisions of the Act of 1861 to regulate appeals. (Statutes 1861, p. 589.) This Act has worked a material change in the practice in relation to the findings of fact. Previous to the taking effect of the Act, the judgment, in cases tried by the Court, without a jury, was not only required to be warranted by the pleadings of the prevailing party, but also to be supported by a finding of the facts in issue between the parties. Every fact essential to the support of the judgment, if controverted, was required to be stated in the finding, and a failure in this respect was visited with the penalty of a reversal of the judgment. The finding was in most respects similar to a special verdict of a jury, and like the verdict in cases tried by a jury, it served as the basis of the judgment. (Russell v. Amador, 2 Cal. 305; Semple v. Burkey, Id. 321; Swift v. Maygridge, 8 Cal. 445; Breeze v. Doyle, 19 Cal. 101.)

The Act provides that the judgment, when the case has been tried by the Court without a jury, shall not be reversed because of the entire absence of a finding of facts, nor because material facts are wanting from the finding, unless objections were made in the Court below to the want of a finding or to the defective finding, and the Court failed to supply the finding or remedy the defect, on its being pointed out. There must, of course, be a decision in favor of the prevailing party, but no finding of the facts is required, and if one is made it need not respond to all the issues unless the party complaining of the decision requires that a finding shall be made, or that the one already filed shall be perfected by inserting the omitted facts. All the facts necessary to the support of the judgment, and which are embraced within the issues, will, in the absence from the finding of any facts inconsistent with the relief granted, or the allegation upon which it is based, be presumed to have been proven, if no exception is taken to the finding or the want of a finding. (Lyons v. Leimback, decided at the present term.) No exceptions were taken to the findings in the Court below, within the meaning of the Act. The defendant is not assisted by section one hundred and ninety-one, of the Practice Act, for the exception there interposed by the law, without having been actually taken, stands merely as the foundation for the appropriate proceeding to set the finding aside. It could not by any possibility fill the place designed for the exception in the Act of 1861, for the Act is framed on the theory that upon the want of a finding, or a defect in the finding being brought to the attention of the Court, the finding or the missing fact in the finding will be supplied. This could not be accomplished by an exception interposed by the law itself. It results, that if there be no exception, as provided for in the Act, the finding, if there happened to be one, may bear a very faint resemblance to a special verdict of a jury. The party who is satisfied with the decision, is concerned, not in seeing that the finding sets forth any of the controverted facts which being proven in his favor, serve as the basis of the decision and judgment, but only in excluding from it any facts that might sustain the case of the opposite party, and militate against the decision and judgment. The Act renders a defective finding, to which no exception has been taken, harmless; and it is, of course, of no conceivable value, for if it is wanting in one material fact in issue, that is requisite to sustain the judgment, it is no better than if it lacked every fact in the case, and the Act itself places it on that footing but the Act has not provided against the consequences arising from a finding, that is inconsistent with the judgment. FRANCES M. BENNETT v. EDWARD L. BENNETT.

SIX MONTHS' RESIDENCE REQUIRED FOR A DIVORCE.—The Court has no jurisdiction to grant a divorce unless the applicant aver and prove that he or she has been a bona fide resident of this State six months before making the application.

IN A DIVORCE SUIT, RESIDENCE MUST BE PROVED.—An averment in a complaint for a divorce, that the applicant has been six months a resident of this State, and a failure to deny the averment in the answer, does not do away with the necessity of proving the residence.

APPEAL from the District Court, Thirteenth Judicial District, Mariposa county.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Henry H. Hartley, for Appellant.

As a condition precedent to the right of a party to apply for a divorce, it must be shown that the applicant has been a resident of the State for a period of six months immediately preceding the application. (Wood's Digest, Art. 2,634.) This means a bona fide residence; not one acquired for the purpose alone of bringing the suit, for that is a fraud on the jurisdiction of the Court. The whole question is elaborately discussed in Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, Secs. 150, 709, 720, 721, where it is clearly laid down that any attempt to impose upon the Court by a fictitious claim of residence will authorize the Court to refuse the application. Residence is purely a question of intention, (4 Cal. 175,) and from the acts and declarations of the party the fact must be established.

Opinion of the Court.

J. G. McCullough, for Respondent.

Residence is a question of fact and of intent, not purely a question of intention, as urged by the appellant's counsel. The factum et animus must concur. It surely at this day requires no citation of authorities to sustain this doctrine, and when residence is averred in a complaint it means a legal residence. A residence of six months our statute requires as a condition on which the application is to be made. It is a condition precedent. It must be pleaded. It is just as necessary to allege the fact of a six months' residence, as it is to allege the fact of a lawful marriage. Both must be alleged, and if denied, both must be proved. Neither is a "ground for a divorce," and neither if admitted need be proven.

The fact of plaintiff's six months' residence in Mariposa, and her marriage to defendant, are both positively and specifically alleged in this complaint, and neither being denied in the answer, both are admitted, and admitted as fully as if the defendant had expressly alleged them to be true. It is also alleged that at the time of the commencement of the suit the defendant was residing in Mariposa County. This he is careful to deny, while he says nothing of the plaintiff's residence. This question is settled by a late decision of this Court, and is no longer an open one. (Fox v. Fox, 25 Cal. 590.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action for divorce. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order overruling his motion for a new trial.

It is insisted that the finding that the plaintiff had resided in this State six months immediately preceding the application is contrary to the evidence.

We have examined the evidence bearing upon the point. It came from one of the plaintiff's witnesses on cross examination, and its direct tendency was to prove that the plaintiff came to California from the State of New York, her place of domicile, "to get a divorce," and that she intended to return to that State and reside there with her father in Otsego County, as soon as the divorce should be obtained. The main ground of reply to his objection is, that the residence is charged in the complaint and not denied in the answer, and it is claimed that the point is within the analogy of Fox v. Fox, 25 Cal. 587. To this position we do not agree. In that case the marriage was the fact charged and admitted; and it was held that under the statute, the Court was bound to require proof only of the facts alleged as the "grounds of divorce," and that the marriage itself could in no sense be regarded as a ground for its own dissolution. It was further considered "that the statute was framed to prevent collusion between the parties," and that the question of marriage was one upon which there could never be any motive to collude, inasmuch as the very object of the proceeding was to dissolve and not to establish that relation. Residence is not in itself a cause of divorce, but it is a ground upon which the jurisdiction to grant a divorce rests in all cases, both under the statute and by international law. (Bishop, Secs. 150, 720, 721.) The tribunals of a country have no jurisdiction over a cause of divorce, wherever the offense may have been committed, if neither of the parties has an actual bona fide domicile within its territory. A divorce granted here without this prerequisite would not be binding in the State of New York, nor in any third State or country. While marriage does not go to the causes of divorce, it is also true that it is not a fact of jurisdictional consequence. Its relations to the question are not only distinct from, but are much more comprehensive than either; for it goes to the possibility of a divorce on any ground by any tribunal in any country. But residence, though it does not enter into the statute causes of divorce, does enter into the "grounds" of divorce, or constitutes rather the sole ground upon which a decree dissolving the marriage relation in any given instance, can be regarded otherwise than as a piece of judicial usurpation.

Statement of Facts.

But over and beyond this, residence is palpably within the mischiefs against which it was the object of the statute to guard, and therefore it must be proved. Should the judgment in this case be affirmed, the affirmance would be but a letter of invitation to the married, domiciled abroad, who have, with or without reason, become enamored of divorce, to take a trip, one or both, to this State for the purpose of avoiding delays, or yet more serious impediments at home, with the intention to return thereto as soon as the purpose of their coming shall have been hurried to accomplishment by the aid of an accommodation answer admitting the averment of a six months' residence on the part of the applicant. Against this prostitution of the judicial power the statute interposes the only available barrier by requiring, as we construe it, not only that the causes of divorce should be proved to the Court, but the residence of the applicant also, as the sole ground on which it can take cognizance of the question.

The judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered.

ARTHUR THORNTON v. JOHN THOMPSON AND R. B. THOMPSON.

ORAL TESTIMONY TO SHOW THAT LAND IS NOT SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED.—In an action to recover possession of land, where one of the parties claims the same by virtue of some right or title derived from the United States, and the other claims the same as a purchaser from the State as swamp and overflowed land, the party claiming under the United States has a right to introduce oral testimony to show that the land is not swamp and overflowed.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

This was an action to recover possession of a tract of land in San Joaquin County. On the trial it was admitted that plaintiff had been in possession of the land from 1854 up to March, 1863, and that he claimed the same under the pre-emption laws of the United States, and had complied with said laws, and that in March, 1863, he was forcibly ejected from the premises by defendants, and that since that time defendants had been in possession; that March 19th, 1863, defendant John Thompson received a certificate of purchase of the same from the State of California as swamp and overflowed land, and that the land was surveyed by the United States, and the plats returned to the Land Office on the 1st day of July, 1864, and by the survey and plats it appears that the land is swamp and overflowed.

Plaintiff then offered oral testimony to prove that the land was not swamp and overflowed within the true intent and meaning of the Act of Congress. Defendants' attorney objected to the evidence, and the Court sustained the objection.

Defendants recovered judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

Tyler & Cobb, for Appellant, cited Kyle v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 442.

T. A. Caldwell, and George Cadwalader, for Respondents.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The refusal of the Court to allow the plaintiff to prove by oral testimony that the land in controversy was not swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the Act of Congress ceding the swamp and overflowed lands within their borders to the several States, was error. (Kyle v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 432; Kernan v. Griffith, 27 Cal. 87.)

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. HENRY CARLTON, JR., v. JOHN MIDDLETON, WM. HOOPER, SAMUEL KNIGHT, AND WILLIAM M. LENT, COMMISSIONERS OF THE FUNDED DEBT OF THE CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMISSIONERS OF FUNDED DEBT OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The Commissioners of the Funded Debt of San Francisco are not officers within the meaning of Article XI, section seven, of the Constitution, and the term during which the Commissioners are authorized to act is not limited to four years.

Opinion of the Court.

THIS was an application for a writ of mandate, commenced in the Supreme Court.

The relator averred in his petition that Charles M. Hitchcock was appointed one of the Commissioners of the Funded Debt of San Francisco, and duly qualified, more than four years prior to October 1st, 1864, and that his term of office as such expired at the end of four years after he qualified, and that after the expiration of his term the relator was appointed by the Governor of the State a member of the Board to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of his term, and that the relator had requested the defendants to unite with him in the execution of a joint and several bond, required by the Act constituting the Board, to the end that he might enter upon the duties of the office, but they had refused to comply with his request.

The object of the suit was to compel the other Commissioners to unite with him in the bond.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Relator.

H. Haight, for Respondents.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The Commissioners appointed under "An Act to fund the floating debt of the City of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same," passed May 1st, 1851, and the various Acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, are not, in our opinion, officers within the meaning of Article XI, Section seven, of the Constitution. They exercise none of the governmental or police powers of the municipal corporation. They simply stand in the position of trustees between the city and certain designated creditors in relation to a designated class of the indebtedness of the city, to receive certain moneys appropriated by law for the payment of the interest, and to constitute a sinking fund for the ultimate extinction of the debt, and manage and dispose of the same in the mode prescribed. They are trustees of the creditors, as well as of the city, in respect to the matters committed to their charge, each being equally interested in the trust, and in having the funds managed by experienced and competent men, appointed in the manner designated before the creditors accepted the proposition of the city to surrender their evidence of indebtedness, and accept in its stead the stock issued under the provisions of the Act, and upon the terms and conditions therein provided. As soon as the debt is all paid, and the trusts assumed are discharged, the powers and duties of the Commissioners, or trustees, cease without any further legislative action. We think the term during which the Commissioners are authorized to act not limited by the constitutional provision cited.

The order to show cause is discharged, and mandamus denied.

WHAT IS ADVERSE POSSESSION OF PUBLIC LANDS.—To constitute adverse possession of public land, it is sufficient if the party in possession and claiming that his possession is adverse as against a prior possessor, claims the right to the possession as against all the world except the United States. It is not necessary that he possess under color of title.

PROOF OF ATTEMPT TO PRE-EMPT TO SHOW ADVERSE POSSESSION.—Where one enters upon public lands in the prior possession of another, and the prior possession brings an action against him to replevy hay cut by him on the land, he has a right to prove that he has filed his declaratory statement of intention to pre-empt, and possesses the necessary qualifications of a pre-emptor, to show his adverse possession.

REPLEVIN BY A PRIOR POSSESSOR FOR HAY CUT ON PUBLIC LAND.—Replevin for hay cut on public lands cannot be maintained by a prior possessor against one who was in adverse possession, claiming a pre-emption right when he cut the hay.

PERSONAL ACTION FOR CROPS CUT ON THE SUSCOL RANCH.—A purchaser from Vallejo of a portion of the Suscol Ranch, who entered into possession, cannot maintain a personal action for crops cut on the land by one who under a claim of a pre-emption right entered on his possession in 1862.

PERSONAL ACTION TO TRY RIGHT TO POSSESSION OF PUBLIC LAND.—A personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the right to the possession of real property as between conflicting claimants to the possession where the title is in the United States.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Argument for Respondent.

The defendants appealed from the judgment.
The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Stanley & Hays, and M. A. Wheaton, for Appellants.

The defendants remaining in quiet and undisturbed possession of the land from October, 1862, (at which time the crops had not commenced to grow,) during all the time the crops were growing until they harvested them, and even at the time this action was tried, constitutes a good and sufficient defense to this action. Admitting the plaintiff proved prior possession, which would have been sufficient evidence of title to have enabled him to maintain ejectment against a mere naked trespasser, he could not upon such evidence recover the crops raised in specie while the defendants held adverse possession of the land, for the reason that it would change a local into a transitory action. (Mathers v. Ministers Trinity Church, 3 Sergt. & R. 516; Baker v. Howell, 6 Ib. 482; DeMott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. 220; Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579; Harlan v. Harlan, 15 Penn. 518.)

"Title cannot be decided in an action merely personal and transitory, no matter whether replevin, trover, or assumpsit. Nor can there be maintained by one not in the actual exclusive possession, whatever his title may be, against one who is in the possession, claiming right." (Brown v. Caldwell, 10 Sergt. & R. 118.)

Patterson, Wallace & Stow, for Respondent.

The condition of the plaintiff's title to the premises on which the hay grew is similar to that of the plaintiff in Page v. Hobbs, 27 Cal. 483, except that in the case at bar plaintiff had taken the necessary steps as a purchaser from Vallejo, under Act of March 3d, 1863, "to grant the right of pre-emption to certain purchasers on the Suscol Rancho, in the State of California." This fact, in connection with the proof of possession of the plaintiff, upon which defendants had entered "through the opening in the fence," showed the defendants to be mere tort-feazors, and none of the evidence offered by them tended to relieve them of this character.

Their pretended pre-emption proceedings in the United States Land Office were of no validity; they had no adverse possession in good faith, accompanied with claim of title, and therefore the hay they cut on the plaintiff's land might be recovered in this action. (Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579; McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 636; Green v. Lighter, 8 Cranch. 250; Hunt v. Wickliffe, 2 Peters, 211; Potts v. Gilbert, 3 Wash. Cir. Court Rep. 478; Clark v. Courtney, 5 Peters, 353; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 John. 234.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.

Replevin to recover the possession of a lot of hay, or the value thereof, described as six hundred tons, more or less, of great value, to wit, of the value of six thousand dollars. The hay replevied and delivered to the plaintiff amounted to one hundred and twenty-four tons, of the value of twelve hundred and fifty dollars, and the plaintiff had verdict and judgment for that amount.

The hay was produced during the year 1863, upon a tract of land forming a part of a larger tract, known as the Suscol Rancho, in Solano County. The plaintiff was in possession of the tract, containing about two thousand acres, inclosed with a substantial fence, from some time in 1860 to August or September, 1862, when the defendants entered upon the land, the fence being down in places, so as to leave gaps from two to three hundred feet in length, and they have since resided on and had possession of the land, each of them claiming the right to enter upon and hold a quarter section of land, under the pre-emption laws of the United States. The defendants claim the right of entry and of pre-emption under the general pre-emption laws of the United States and under the Act of Congress of May 30th, 1862. (12 U. S. Statutes at Large, 410, Sec. 7.)

The plaintiff claims, by virtue of his prior possession, and under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1863, granting the right of pre-emption to certain purchasers in the Suscol Rancho. It was admitted that the lands were part of the Suscol Rancho, the title to which had been rejected by the Supreme Court of the United States; that the rancho was public lands of the United States; that the plaintiff had a conveyance of about two thousand acres of land, including the lands upon which the hay was produced, made to him in 1851 by M. G. Vallejo, under which the plaintiff entered; that the plaintiff had taken the necessary steps under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1863, to present his claim to the Register and Receiver of the proper Land Office, to pre-empt the said two thousand acres, which claim was still pending, it being resisted by the defendants, who claimed the right of pre-emption, under the general laws of the United States.

The defendants offered to prove that each of them possessed the qualifications requisite to entitle him to pre-empt public lands in California, and had filed his declaratory statement of intention, to pre-empt the quarter section upon which he entered and had resided since October, 1862, and that they had procured their several tracts to be surveyed by the United States Surveyor-General; and the evidence was rejected by the Court. It was admitted that the claims of the defendants were then pending before the United States Register and Receiver. This decision of the Court is assigned as error, and it is claimed by the defendants that the evidence was admissible for two purposes: First—to show that their entry was lawful, and that they had the right to the possession of the land until they failed to comply with the provisions of the pre-emption laws; and, therefore, the crops raised on the land during the time they so held the possession were their property. And, second—To prove that they held adversely to the plaintiff, in good faith, under claim and color of title—and for that reason the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover the specific crops raised on the land during such adverse possession.

The evidence introduced or offered in the case fails to show any legal right or title to the land in controversy derived from the United States, in either the plaintiff or the defendants. The Act of 1863 grants to the bona fide purchasers from Vallejo the right to purchase from the United States the lands they have reduced to possession, but the plaintiff has not yet effected the purchase from the United States. The defendants' claim of pre-emption, either under the general pre-emption law, or the Act of May 30th, 1862, has not ripened into a title. It was held by this Court, in Hastings v. McGoogin, 27 Cal. 84, and Page v. Hobbs, 27 Cal. 483, that those portions of the Suscol Rancho which had been reduced to possession by the "bona fide purchasers from said Vallejo or his assigns" were withdrawn from the operation of the general pre-emption laws by the Act of March 3d, 1863, which gave to such purchasers the right of pre-emption, upon certain terms and conditions in the Act specified. And there can be no doubt that Congress had the power to thus withdraw the lands from pre-emption and sale under the general laws, at any time prior to the acquisition, by a settler, of a right in the lands that he could maintain against the United States, so as to secure ultimately the legal title.

At the time of the entry of the defendants, however, neither they nor the plaintiff held the legal title, but both parties claimed such right and interest in and to the lands as under the laws of the United States accrues to the person who has taken the first steps to secure a pre-emption claim to the land, but which has not been approved by the proper officer; that is to say, such would have appeared to be the state of the title and claim on the part of the defendants also, had the evidence offered by them been admitted. It is unnecessary therefore for the purposes of this case to determine whether the defendants had acquired such a right to the land under the Act of 1862 and the general pre-emption laws of Congress as would preclude Congress from withdrawing the land from the operation of the pre-emption laws, or whether the Act of 1863, granting the right of pre-emption to purchasers in the Suscol Rancho, did in effect divest whatever incipient right or interest the defendants may have acquired. The title being, by the admission of the parties, in the United States, neither party, as has been repeatedly held by this Court, can rely upon it for a recovery, nor can they set it up as a defense, in a contest for the possession, or in respect to rights of property growing out of the fact of possession. Conceding to the plaintiff the benefit of his prior possession, and regarding him as engaged in perfecting his claim to the pre-emption, the evidence offered by the defendants to prove that they were taking the necessary steps to establish their claims to the pre-emptions was clearly admissible and competent, in connection with proof of their entry in October, 1862, and actual possession of the premises up to the time when the hay was cut in 1863, to show that during that period they were in adverse possession of the premises.

Both parties refer to Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579, as authority upon the second branch of the question, defining the character of the adverse possession that the defendants must have in order to prevent a recovery of the specific crops raised on the land. Mr. Chief Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the Court said: "The true rule is this: "The plaintiff out of possession cannot sue for property severed from the freehold when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed—holding them adversely, in good faith, under claim and color of title. In other words: The personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property, as between conflicting claimants." The Court referred to Harlan v. Harlan, 15 Penn. 513, as containing a correct exposition of the doctrine. In that case the Court commented on and affirmed the principle of Mather v. Trinity Church, 3 Serg. and Rawle, 509, in which the Court held that "trover for stone and gravel from land does not lie by one who has the right of possession against the person who has the actual adverse possession of the land and sets up title to it. It will be remarked that it is not the actual possession, but it is the actual adverse possession of a person who claims title to it, that is the criterion. * * * What is alone material is that he (the plaintiff) had the title and the right to the possession, and there was no claim of title to the realty made by the defendants. * * * The mere assertion of a title would be nothing.

The defendants' possession in this case was adverse to the plaintiff, in every sense in which that term is applicable between parties, neither of whom set up color or claim of title, but where each is diligently seeking to acquire the title of the United States to the same parcel of public lands, in the honest belief that under the laws of the United States he is entitled to the pre-emption, and will ultimately acquire the legal title. The earlier doctrine of the common law, that the possession, to be deemed adverse, must be under color and claim of title, never had any just application to cases where the parties were contesting the right to the possession of parcels of the public lands of the United States, for no color or claim of title could be shown or asserted that was not palpably inconsistent with their admission of title in the United States. To constitute adverse possession in such cases, it is sufficient if the defendant in possession claims the right to the possession against all the world except the United States. Still we think that cases of that sort may be brought within and solved by the rule in Halleck v. Mixer, and the case from Pennsylvania. The rule when stated as applicable to cases where the title is outstanding in the United States, is that the personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the right to the possession of real property, as between conflicting claimants. The mere trespasser who casually or temporarily enters, for the purpose of severing or removing property attached to and forming a part of the realty, cannot invoke the rule, for he does not hold the adverse possession. The case of a defendant who has entered upon the public land then in the plaintiff's possession, claiming in good faith the right to pre-empt the same, and who is proceeding according to the forms of law to perfect and enforce his right of pre-emption, is clearly within the reason of the rule laid down in Halleck v. Mixer; for, although he does not claim title,

Argument for Appellant.

he claims all the right that can be held in the land, consistent with the fact of title in the United States, and, as we have remarked, the title cannot be made use of by either party, for attack or defense. The rule is designed to prevent parties claiming conflicting rights in land, from litigating them indirectly in a personal action, and such rights as persons may have, consistently with the acknowledgment that the ultimate title has not passed from the paramount source of title, has been uniformly regarded in this State as amounting to an interest in lands — to title — and as such it evidently falls within the rule. The evidence offered by the defendants was therefore admissible, to show that their possession was adverse to the plaintiff, and thus to bring them within the rule just mentioned.

THE PEOPLE v. SNEATH & ARNOLD.

ASSESSMENT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—Personal property may be assessed for taxes in bulk, without any statement of the character of the property.

ASSESSMENT OF INDIVIDUAL PROPERTY TO A FIRM.—An assessment for taxes of the personal property of a former member of a firm made to the firm after its dissolution, is void. Such assessment cannot be legalised by legislative enactment.

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Henry H. Hartley, for Appellant.

The case is susceptible of illustration, thus: A. is assessed for a certain amount of personal property, supposed to be owned by him during a particular year, the assessment having been made on information to the Assessor that A. was the owner; it subsequently appears that before the assessment was made, A. had sold the property to B.; could it be held that B. was liable for the payment of the taxes? Again, to state another case: Suppose that A. and B. were assessed as a firm for partnership property which they did not possess at the time the assessment was made, and were not even a firm at that time, and A. had individual property, could that be levied on for the tax claimed against the firm which had no legal existence at the time the taxes were levied, and had no firm property?

But it may be urged, the suppositions cases are too broad. In the case at bar, Arnold was a member of the old firm, and possessed property of equal value to the assessment, and therefore was liable. We reply that that makes no difference. The question is, did Sneath & Arnold, as a firm, own property in 1863, and not whether Arnold did. Arnold is liable for his taxes individually, and the record nowhere shows that he has not paid them, the Court only finding that Sneath & Arnold had not paid theirs. And even if he had not, he is still liable under the general law to be re-assessed for them if they were accidentally omitted from the tax roll of that year. (People v. Reynolds, ante, 107.)

M. M. Estee, for Respondent, referred to Laws of 1861, p. 425, Sec. 20; and to People v. Paine, No. 2, 23 Cal. 125; and also to Laws of 1863, p. 436, Secs. 63-65.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action to recover a tax on personal property levied by the City of Sacramento on the 23d day of June, 1863. The complaint alleges, amongst other things, that the property assessed was within the city limits at the date of the assessment; that it belonged to the firm of "Sneath & Arnold," and that it was valued at thirteen thousand two hundred and fifty dollars. The answer avers that the firm of Sneath & Arnold was dissolved on the 1st day of January, 1863, and that since that time it has neither owned nor possessed any personal property in Sacramento. The trial was by the Court, and judgment was entered on the findings against Arnold alone. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order overruling the motion of Arnold for a new trial.

The Court has found that the firm was dissolved as alleged in the answer, and that at the date of the assessment there was no personal property in the city possessed by or belonging to the defendants jointly. But it is also found that Arnold at the date of the assessment had in his possession and was the owner of personal property of the value named in the assessment.

First. It is insisted that the assessment was illegal and void for the reason that it was on "personal property" in bulk, without any more minute description of the character of the property.

By the eleventh section of the Act incorporating the City of Sacramento, passed April 25th, 1863, (Acts 1863, p. 415,) it is provided that "the manner of making the assessments and roll shall be the same as is described by an Act entitled an Act to provide revenue for the government of this State, approved May 17th, 1861." By the sixth subdivision of the twentieth section of the Act referred to, it is provided that no further description of personal property need be given in the assessment roll than that furnished by a statement of its value, and the name of its owner or owners.

The case of People v. Holladay, 25 Cal. 300, cited for the respondents, was an action to collect a delinquent tax under the Act of 1861, entitled "An act to legalize and provide for the collection of delinquent taxes in the counties of this State," and the Act is limited by the first section to taxes assessed for the fiscal years ending March 1st, 1859, 1860 and 1861. (Statutes 1861, p. 471.) The decision in the case of People v. Holladay is therefore inapplicable to this.

Second. It is further insisted that neither Sneath nor Arnold, nor the firm of Sneath & Arnold, is responsible for the tax, on the ground that everything entering into the description in the assessment is fictitious and unreal.

This objection is well taken. Though the assessment was copied from the assessment roll of 1862, as required by sections sixty-three and sixty-four of the Act of incorporation, (Acts 1863, p. 486,) still, for all the purposes of the question, the assessment is to be regarded as original. Under the revenue laws of 1861, an assessment of personal property is essential to the validity of a tax upon it, and a description of the property, such as the Act calls for, is essential to the validity of the assessment. By the thirteenth section of the Act, the Assessor is to make diligent search for all property, both real and personal, within his jurisdiction, and is put also upon ascertaining the name or names of its owner or owners; and is furthermore required to determine the cash value of the property; and "to list or assess the same to the person, firm, copartnership, association or company owning or having the possession, charge, or control thereof." Under certain circumstances the property may be listed to "unknown owners." An assessment not made substantially in conformity to these requirements is utterly void, no matter whether the property be real or personal. (Black. on Tax Titles, 173, 174, and cases there cited; Kelsey v. Abbot, 13 Cal. 617; Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 44.) It must be admitted that the assessment in this case is made in exact conformity to the statute, and therefore it is not a nullity upon its face. The difficulty with the assessment lies in the fact that it is made up entirely of false assumptions. There was no personal property in the City of Sacramento in 1863, falling within the description, as the case finds. There was not only no personal property that year in Sacramento belonging to Sneath & Arnold, but what is more decisive, there was no Sneath & Arnold there to own property of any kind; or if there was, neither of the defendants were members of the concern. It is no answer to say that Arnold owned personal property in 1863 in Sacramento of the value of thirteen thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, unless, indeed, the general doctrine that no person is to be held liable for a tax except upon the production of an assessment against him made in the manner required by law, is to be abandoned as fallacious. The object of the rule as now settled is, to enable the citizen to ascertain from the list itself, what property, if any, belonging to him has been listed, and to ascertain further, what tax, if any, has been imposed upon any firm or association of which he may chance to be a member, and how much upon himself individually.

But it is urged that the assessment is legalized by the Act of 1864, (Acts 1864, p. 350,) if defective in the first instance. The answer is that the assessment is not defective, but something worse. The matters which it puts forward as realities, had no existence in fact. Further, by the Act of 1864 the defective assessments referred to therein are made valid only "against the person and property assessed." All that follows from that is, that if there was any such firm as "Sneath & Arnold" in Sacramento in 1863 the tax is good as against the firm and as against its members, whoever they may have been, if the firm has been dissolved. But if there was no firm in 1863 answering the description, it would be beyond the power of the Legislature to alter the fact, even if it had attempted to do so.

The judgment is reversed, and it is ordered that a judgment be entered upon the findings in favor of the defendants.

SNODGRASS.

PURCHASER OF LAND WITHOUT NOTICE OF PRIOR UNRECORDED MORTGAGE.—A judgment creditor who buys at Sheriff's sale the land of the judgment debtor, and receives a Sheriff's deed without knowledge of a prior unrecorded mortgage given by the judgment debtor on the land, must show that his Sheriff's deed was first recorded, before he can claim to be a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

Opinion of the Court.

This was an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendant Snodgrass to plaintiff. After the mortgage had been given, defendant Vanlieu obtained judgment against Snodgrass, and sold the mortgaged property, and received a Sheriff's deed. Plaintiff's mortgage had not been properly recorded, and Vanlieu had no actual notice of it prior to his purchase. Plaintiff claimed that Vanlieu's purchase was subject to the lien of his mortgage. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendant Vanlieu appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Tuttle & Fellows, for Appellant.

Jo. Hamilton, for Respondent.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

Upon the facts as found by the Court below we are unable to determine whether the defendant Vanlieu was or was not a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, within the meaning of the twenty-sixth section of the Act concerning conveyances, for it does not appear that his deed had ever been recorded. In order to bring himself within the provisions of that section, a party must show not only that he is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, but he must show that his conveyance was first duly recorded. This latter fact the Court below failed to find either way. No exception was taken to the finding on the score of insufficiency, and we cannot therefore reverse the judgment on that ground. (Statutes of 1861, p. 589.) On the contrary, we must assume the facts not found would, if found, support the judgment; or, in other words, we must assume that Vanlieu had never put his conveyance upon record, because the judgment of the Court points that way.

It follows that the question as to whether the plaintiff's mortgage had been recorded in such a manner as to impart to subsequent purchasers constructive notice, and the further question as to whether a judgment creditor purchasing at his own sale without parting with any further or new consideration, is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration within the meaning of the Act concerning conveyances, become abstract questions, upon which it is not necessary to express an opinion in order to finally determine this case.

Judgment affirmed.

JOHN FICKEN v. FREDERICK S. JONES AND G. P. SWIFT.

LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO A PERSON DONE BY CATTLE.—The law governing the liability of persons driving cattle through the streets of a city, for damages caused by the cattle injuring a person lawfully in the street, without any fault on his part, is the same as that by which carriers of passengers are governed.

ACTION FOR DAMAGE DONE TO THE PERSON BY CATTLE.—In an action to recover damages for injuries to the person, done by cattle of defendant while being driven through a city, when the plaintiff has proved that he sustained the injury without fault on his part, he has made a case of prima facie negligence, and the burden is cast on the defendant of showing that he was not at fault.

SAME.—In such case, when the cattle were driven by persons employed by the owner, the owner is entitled to show in defense that the persons employed by him were persons of competent skill in the business.

PLAINTIFF recovered judgment in the Twelfth District Court, and defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Patterson, Wallace, & Stow, for Appellants.

Baxendin v. Sharp, 2 Salkeld's Reports, is as follows: "The plaintiff declared that the defendant kept a bull that used to run at men, but did not say sciens or scienter. This was held naught after verdict, for the action lies not unless the master knows of this quality, and we cannot intend it was proved at the trial, for the plaintiff need not prove more than is in his declaration." (1 Lord Raym. 109; 2 Ib. 1,583; Hinckley v. Emerson, 4 Cowen, 351.)

Brock v. Copeland, 1 Espinasse's Reps. 208, was an action on the case to recover damages for an injury received from defendant's dog. The declaration alleged that the defendant knowingly kept a dog used to bite. The plaintiff failed under the circumstances of that case; but in that case Lord Kenyon said, "that the injury which this action was calculated to redress was where an animal known to be mischievous was permitted to go at large," etc.

In Vrooman v. Sawyer, 13 John. 339, the Supreme Court of New York said: * * * "the owner is not liable to action on the ground of negligence, without proof that he knew that the animal was accustomed to do mischief." In Lyke v. Van Leuven, 4 Denio R. 128, the Court say: "The scienter is the gist of the action in these cases, and the principle applies to swine as it does to other animals which are mansuetæ naturæ."

This case went to the Court of Appeals, (1 Comstock's Rep. 515,) and the Court there say: "It is a well settled principle that in all cases where an action of trespass or case is brought for mischief done to the person or personal property of another by animals mansuetæ naturæ, such as horses, oxen, cows, sheep, swine, and the like, the owner must be shown to have had notice of their viciousness before he can be charged, because such animals are not by nature fierce or dangerous, and such notice must be alleged in the declaration; but as to animals feræ naturæ, such as lions, tigers, and the like, the person who keeps them is liable for any damage they may do, without notice, on the ground that by nature such animals are fierce and dangerous." The Court then cites a number of authorities sustaining this view, and adds: "But this rule does not apply where the mischief is done by such animals while committing a trespass upon the close of another."

In Steele v. Smith, 3 E. D. Smith's Rep. 322, there was some evidence to show that the defendant's servant had set his dog on the plaintiff's cattle. The Court, after observing that if it was the wilful act of the servant the master would not be liable, says: "It was not the act of the dog alone, and if it had been, the defendant was not liable without evidence that the dog had done the like mischief before, and that the defendant knew it."

Argument for Respondents.

In Coggswell v. Baldwin, 15 Vermont Rep. 412, the law is admitted by Court and counsel to be in accordance with the foregoing authorities. In Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunton's Rep. 491: "Case against the owner of an ox, which was driven from Essex to London for sale; it was tranquil when it left home, but being fevered by the journey, it gored the plaintiff in Whitechapel, and held, the action lay not." That is precisely the case shown in the record here.

Defendant Smith was sought to be charged as employer of defendant Jones, and was sought to be held liable for the negligence of his supposed employé, Jones. It is reasonable that a party who is sued in effect for employing a negligent agent or servant may be allowed to prove if he can that the person selected by him to act for him was in fact a safe and prudent man. What employer can do more than select such a man?

Shafters & Gould, for Respondent.

Upon the first proposition contained in the argument for appellant, we may well admit the position in the abstract to be true, and the authorities cited to sustain it as sound law, but we insist that neither one nor the other is necessary to be considered for the purposes of this case.

It is true that in the complaint we allege the ferocity of the animal and the scienter of the defendants; and if we had rested on this ground alone, the position of the defense would be unanswerable, and we should acknowledge our failure. But it is not the fact that we relied singly upon that cause of grievance. The complaint in addition to that avers the negligence of the defendants in driving and handling the animal, and that averment is denied by the answer, and an issue distinctly formed upon it and submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the Court.

This issue, involving the charge of want of proper care and diligence, was in no sense abstract, remote, or foreign to the facts eliminated in the course of the trial; it was in every sense proper and legitimate. It seems undeniable that prior to the accident the ox had become unruly and unmanageable, to such an extent as to require the defendants to tie him up. Now, even if we admit the previous good character of the animal, and attribute his then ferocity to some temporary cause, such as being fevered and overheated, yet it is clear that the defendants had notice of his change of temper, and saw that he was in a condition to be dangerous.

It is proper, also, to refer to the fact that the animal was fevered and overheated, and it might well be presumed that this arose from negligent and unskilful driving. When it is taken into consideration that the ox had just arrived from a cool voyage over the waters, and the shortness of the distance he had been driven, and that the theory of the defense is that he was not of a ferocious temper, but was only overheated, it is difficult to reach any other conclusion than that his ill favored condition was produced by reckless and negligent handling.

These were facts which had to be left to the jury, and if they found the defendants guilty of negligence, then that becomes our distinct ground of recovery, and the question as to whether the beast was ferocious, and the scienter of the defendants, has no connection with the issue. That was at first, upon the pleadings, an issue, but it became an abandoned issue by the force of circumstances, and we recovered upon the other issue — the one involving the question of negligence.

The cases in which similar issues have arisen are frequent and familiar, and date from the earliest history of the law.

Where a carman ran over a boy in the streets and maimed him by negligence of driving his horse. (1 Raym. 379.)

Where a servant is guilty of misconduct in driving his master's horses. (Joel v. Morrison, 6 C. & P. 501.)

Where the defendants brought a coach with two ungovernable horses to Lincoln's Inn Fields, there drove them to make them tractable, and the horses, because of their ferocity, ran upon the plaintiff and wounded him. The defendants, master and servant, were found guilty. It was moved in arrest of judgment that no sciens was laid of the horses being unruly, nor any negligence alleged. Yet judgment was given for the plaintiff on the ground of the inappropriateness of the place. (Michael v. Alestree, 2 Leving, 172.)

This last case demonstrates that in cases of injury from animals, the right of recovery does not rest solely upon the owner's knowledge of the beast's ferocity, but that the right to recover exists where there is no scienter, and, indeed, where there is no ferocity of temper; and that this right may be enforced, not only where the injury arises from negligence, but even where there is no negligence, if the animal is taken by his owner to an improper place.

The second error complained of by the appellant is the refusal of the Court to permit a witness to be asked "Do you know whether he (meaning defendant Jones) is a safe and prudent man in that business?" (meaning the business of driving cattle.) The question was properly excluded. The character or capacity of Jones was not in issue, and could not affect the issue. The question was as to his negligence at the particular point of time when the injury was done. If his character was ever so good for safety and prudence, it could not excuse or palliate the one act of neglect; it could not even be used in mitigation of damages. It might as well be said that a man's good character for prompt payment ought to release him from a debt or reduce the recovery. Swift was not sued for employing a negligent agent or servant; no such allegation is made or attempted to be proved. He is sued simply for the negligence on one occasion of his servant; and whether that servant was on all other occasions skilful and prudent, or the reverse, is foreign to the issue.

By the Court, CURREY, J.

Action to recover damages for injuries which the plaintiff received from a steer belonging to the defendant Swift, while in the charge of the defendant Jones. While driving the steer through Brannan street, near Sixth street, in San Francisco, he became affrighted, and afterwards separated from the herd of cattle to which he belonged. In the effort to capture him he became wild and apparently alarmed, and escaped for a time from his keepers, and while at large he ran against the plaintiff, knocking him down and goring him in a terrible manner. The plaintiff charged in his complaint that the cattle constituting the herd, which consisted of nineteen head, and particularly the steer in question, were wild, untamed and dangerous, of which the defendants had notice. The plaintiff also averred that the cattle composing the herd were negligently driven by the defendants along certain streets named, without any precautions to restrain or prevent them from attacking and goring people passing along the streets, and that while the plaintiff was lawfully passing along the street between Harrison and Folsom streets, the steer escaped from the herd, and of his "own vicious instincts then and there attacked, threw down and gored the plaintiff," describing the injuries done, and alleging that the same were not the result of a want of ordinary care and prudence on the part of the plaintiff, but the result of the defendants' wrongs and negligence. These allegations of the plaintiff the defendants controverted.

There was no evidence on the trial showing that the cattle were wild, untamed or vicious, nor that the defendants had cause to believe they were so. The question at issue became narrowed down to the point whether Jones, who had charge of the cattle, and the persons assisting him, were guilty of negligence and want of due care in driving the cattle from the place where they were landed to the slaughter house at the outskirts of the city, and also in their endeavor to capture the steer after he became separated from the herd. Whether the defendants were negligent and careless in the conduct and management of the business in which they were so engaged, was a question in issue, concerning which the parties respectively produced witnesses, who detailed circumstances connected with the matter as they saw and understood them.

To overcome and avoid, in some degree, at least, the force of the evidence on the plaintiff's behalf, the defendants proposed to prove by a witness on the stand that Jones was a safe and prudent man in the business of driving and conducting cattle through the city; and this evidence was urged especially on behalf of Swift, as competent and material in his defense, as he was sought to be charged for the alleged negligence and carelessness of his subordinate, Jones; but the Court excluded it on the plaintiffs' objection that it was incompetent and irrelevant. The point is made on appeal from the judgment, which passed against the defendants jointly, that this ruling of the Court was erroneous.

In argument, the plaintiff's counsel admit that the allegation of the complaint of the ferocious and vicious disposition of the animal, and of consequence any scienter of the defendants of such fact was not sustained; but they say the plaintiff's grievance is attributable to the negligence of the defendants in driving and handling the animal, upon which fact an issue was distinctly formed and submitted to the jury; and it is argued that if the steer was docile and tractable previous to his separation from the herd, but then, from some temporary cause, became wild and ferocious, the defendants thereupon had notice of the change in his temper, and should have confined him by means which would have effectually prevented his escaping; that the facts show that though the method for securing the beast by tying him to the fence by the side of Brannan street was the proper one, if it had been well done, yet it was so carelessly and ineffectually done as to allow the steer to effect his escape. That, assuming the animal to have been overheated and feverish, it might be presumed this arose from negligent and unskillful driving before he became separated from the herd. These were facts, counsel say, which had to be left to the jury, and if they found the defendants guilty of negligence then that became a distinct ground of recovery, and the question as to whether the beast was ferocious and the defendants aware of it, had no connection with the issue. That was, at first, upon the pleadings, an issue, but it became an abandoned issue by the force of circumstances, and the plaintiff recovered upon the other issue — the one involving the question of negligence.

Opinion of the Court.

We have thus referred to the argument for the respondent in order that the question before the jury and which they were required to pass upon, may be exhibited in the nude aspect in which it was finally submitted.

It is a matter of importance to understand what is the rule in respect to the degree of care and diligence which parties engaged in driving cattle, reared in the rural portions of the country, through the streets of a populous town or city must observe and exercise, in order to prevent the happening of injuries to those lawfully in such streets, and necessarily exposed to dangers which they may not have the power to avert, and from which there may be no way of escape. It is impossible for a person acquainted with the disposition of cattle raised upon farms or in the open country, notwithstanding they may be what are commonly known as tame cattle, to be oblivious to the fact, that when brought into and conducted through the highways of a city, they are apt to become alarmed and excited by the presence of many people and at the sight of new and strange objects, and by the noise and confusion around them on every side. From such exposure cattle often become wild and difficult of management, and not unfrequently some of them become fierce from fright, if not so before then, and dangerous to people who may not be aware of their presence.

In all cases where, by the conducting of any lawful business, the lives and limbs of human beings are placed in peril, the law requires of the proprietors and managers of that business the utmost care and diligence. The driving of cattle through the streets of a city is attended with danger to persons who are of right there, and who can justly demand that the care, diligence and skill essential to their safety shall be commensurate with the necessities of the case. It is not impossible that injuries may happen in such cases, even though the utmost care and skill which the law exacts of the managers of such business may have been exercised; and before a person can be condemned in damages by the verdict of a jury the party complaining of an injury resulting from negligence or want of skill in the conduct of that business must establish facts constituting a basis from which the fact in issue may be found. In the case under consideration the ultimate fact to be found was whether the defendants were guilty of negligence and want of due care, as in substance charged in the complaint. The burden was on the plaintiff to prove, in the first place, that he received the injury for which he sought redress, and that such injury was done by the animal of the defendants described in the complaint, within the City of San Francisco, and that it happened without fault on his part. These facts proved, afforded prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants, and then the burden of proof became cast on them to show that the injury did not occur by reason of any default on their part. How was it competent for the defendants to show this in exoneration of themselves of all liability whatever, or by way of reducing the damages? This might have been done by showing that the defendant who had the business in charge at the time performed his duty with proper care and skill; and tending to this end it was admissible to show that he was a person of experience in the business, and had therein proved himself to be prudent, careful and of competent skill, and in every respect qualified for the duties which he undertook to perform. The proof of this, standing alone, might not have been of much force, but as connected with the facts and circumstances that transpired in driving the cattle through the city, and in the endeavor to capture the steer after his separation from the herd, it might properly have had some weight. As it was incumbent on the defendants, in order to overcome the prima facie case made out against them, to establish that the injury to the plaintiff did not result from want of due care and skill on their part, they should have been permitted to have shown, in the first place, the important fact that Jones was competent, careful and skillful in the conduct and management of that kind of business. It was competent to make such proof because the law exacts of those engaged in the business of driving such cattle through a city, by which lives and limbs of people are imperiled, the utmost care and circumspection. If it had been proved that Jones possessed the qualities requisite for the business in which he was employed, then it would to that extent have appeared that the defendants exercised due care, though that alone might not have amounted to enough to have exonerated the defendants from all liability. Whether Jones' assistants were also competent and skillful and of a number reasonably sufficient, under all the circumstances, it may be, might have been a proper subject of inquiry. In addition to these matters the defendants would undoubtedly have been required to show what was done in the effort to recapture the animal, and if it had appeared that those engaged in the business were persons of competent skill, care and diligence, the jury, in the first place, would have been apt to have regarded their efforts as comporting with their established character and capacity in the management of such business; and as accidents sometimes happen, notwithstanding the utmost care and diligence may be exercised to prevent them, and damage results from causes which human care and foresight cannot avert, it is not impossible that the jury might have come to the conclusion that the defendants were not at fault in this instance, and therefore not liable in damages to the plaintiff.

The rule of law governing in the case under consideration rests for its foundation in the same principle as that by which the duties and liabilities of the carriers of passengers are governed. In the one case the proprietor of the business must exercise the care, circumspection and skill which is characteristic of cautious persons where the lives and limbs of human beings are liable to injury from exposure to the fury of excited cattle; and in the other the carrier is to convey his passenger safely and securely; and because of the value of human life and limbs, the law requires the utmost degree of care and skill in the preparation and management of the means of conveyance, and will hold the proprietor liable for the slightest negligence. If the passenger sustains injury without fault on his part, by the oversetting of a stage coach, or from a railroad disaster, or the like, such accidents are, in the first place, attributed to the default of the proprietor, and are prima facie evidence of negligence on his part. (Boyce v. California Stage Company, 25 Cal. 467; McKinney v. Niel, 1 McLean, 540; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Peters, 181; Ware v. Gay, 11 Pick. 106; Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 6; Carpue v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 5 Adol. and Ellis, 747; Ang. on Com. Carriers, Chap. 11.) In such case it is well settled to be competent for and incumbent on the defendant to show that those in charge of and conducting the business, were persons of good and careful habits and competent skill, and also whatever else is necessary to establish the fact of the utmost care and prudence on the defendants' part. The defendants in this case being required by the law to observe and exercise the greatest care and prudence, and reasonable skill, from the beginning throughout in a business which was attended with danger to the people lawfully in the streets of the city, ought to have been permitted to make the proof proposed.

JULIA CASSACIA v. PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY.

PLEDINGS IN ACTION ON INSURANCE POLICY.—If a policy of insurance contains a clause that if the assured keep gunpowder, the same shall be void and the complaint avers that the plaintiff faithfully complied with the terms of the policy, and the answer does not deny the same, nor set up as new matter the keeping of gunpowder as a defense, the fact that gunpowder was kept cannot be insisted on as a defense.

JUDGMENT FOR INTEREST WHEN COMPLAINT DOES NOT ASK FOR IT.—If an answer is filed, judgment may be rendered for the principal and interest added thereto, although the complaint only pray for judgment for the principal.

Opinion of the Court.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The complaint averred that the property insured was destroyed by fire July 30th, 1863, and that immediately thereafter the plaintiff furnished the defendant with the proof of the loss as required by the policy. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff December 15th, 1864, for two thousand and thirty-three dollars and twenty-eight cents and costs, the judgment to bear interest at ten per cent per annum.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Goold, and Dwinelle, for Appellant.

The Court below clearly erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiff kept gunpowder without written permission in the policy. By the express terms of the instrument, the policy thereupon became inoperative and void.

T. J. Bergen, for Respondent.

There are two clear and well settled propositions of law upon which the action of the Court below in refusing to nonsuit may be safely rested, namely: First, that the written controls the printed portion of the policy, the former of which clearly covers the stock of which it is conceded the gunpowder formed a component part; and secondly, that the alleged violation, not having been set up in the answer, no advantage can now be taken thereof. (Harper v. The Albany Mutual Insurance Co. 17 N. Y. 194; Wall v. Howard Insurance Co. 14 Barbour, 383; The Phoenix Insurance Co. v. Taylor, 5 Minnesota, 492.)

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action on a policy of insurance for the value of the goods insured destroyed by fire. The policy contained a clause that, "if the assured shall keep gunpowder * * * this policy shall be void." At the trial it appeared, that at the time of the fire plaintiff had in her store "eleven cans of gunpowder for sale in her business." Thereupon the defendant, at the close of plaintiff's case, moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the policy had become void under the provision cited. The motion was denied, and this ruling constitutes the principal ground of the appeal.

The complaint, which is verified, alleges that the "plaintiff on her part 'in all respects' faithfully complied with all the terms and conditions of the said policy on her part to be kept, observed and performed." This allegation is not denied, and if material, is admitted for the purposes of the action. And the answer does not set up the keeping of gunpowder as a defense. The contract was valid at the time it was made. If it is void, it has become so by acts of the plaintiff contrary to the conditions of the contract that have happened since it was made; and these matters should have been put in issue in some mode, and we think, set up by the defendant. The fact relied on to sustain a nonsuit was not relevant to any issue taken on the allegations of the complaint, and no issue was tendered by new matter set up in the answer. It was, consequently, irrelevant to any issue in the case. We think there was no error in denying the nonsuit.

The only other point is, as to whether the Court erred in allowing interest under the prayer of the complaint—for the excess over the specific amount demanded is evidently interest at the legal rate from the date of filing the complaint till the verdict. The judgment was not by default, and under section one hundred and forty-seven of the Practice Act, the Court was authorized to "grant any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issues." The contract was to "make good unto the assured * * all such immediate loss or damage not exceeding two thousand dollars, as shall happen by fire to the property" insured, "the amount of loss or damage to be estimated according to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, and to be paid sixty days after due notice and proof of the same made by the assured and received at the office in accordance with the terms of said policy." The fire was alleged to have occurred, the proofs made and notice given, more than sixty days before the commencement of suit. It was also alleged that the amount of the loss thus sustained was two thousand dollars; that the company had sold remnants of the goods for one hundred and twenty-three dollars and paid the proceeds over to the plaintiff, and that there remained due one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven dollars, for which sum plaintiff prayed judgment, and for such other and further relief as may seem meet. Here was a contract, substantially, to pay a certain sum to be ascertained, in case of fire, in a certain mode, and payable at a time specified, also to be ascertained in a prescribed manner. The facts showing that the amount had been ascertained and become payable, and that it remained unpaid, were averred, and from the time the money falls due the statute says it shall bear interest, and the interest shall be included in the judgment. No further allegation was required to entitle the party to interest. She only recovered the amount due at the time under the contract, and subsequently accrued interest. We think the allowance of interest from the commencement of suit was consistent with the case made, and embraced within the issues. (Lane v. Gluckauf, ante, 292.) The cause of action in Hooper v. Wells, Fargo & Co., referred to by appellant, sounded in tort, and the suit was brought to recover damages eo nomine, and the plaintiff alleged that the "damages" sustained by reason of the acts complained of amounted to a specified sum, and he claimed judgment for that sum. Whatever the measure of damages might have been, the amount alleged, and therefore embraced within the issue, was limited, and could not be exceeded by the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES M. BURT, EXECUTOR OF THE ESTATE OF THOMAS B. WALKER, DECEASED v. E. P. WILSON, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF JAMES C. WILSON, DECEASED, et als.

TRUSTS, EITHER EXPRESS OR BY IMPLICATION OF LAW.—If two partners are embarrassed with debts, and one executes a deed to the other, absolute on its face, with a consideration expressed, of both his individual property and interest in the partnership property, for the purpose of enabling the grantee to raise money by mortgaging the same to pay the firm debts, there is no express trust, nor does a trust arise by implication of law.

MISTAKE AS TO LEGAL EFFECT OF DEED.—If the language of a deed is the language intended to be used by the grantor, his mistake as to the legal effect of the language used will not afford him any ground for relief in equity.

WAIVER OF PROTECTION OF STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—If a defendant, sought to be charged as trustee on a contract within the Statute of Frauds, admits the contract in his answer, and does not claim the benefit of the statute, he is considered as waiving its protection; but if he claims the benefit of the statute in his answer, he is entitled to it.

VENDOR'S LIEN AS AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR OF GRANTEE.—If one sells land to another, and executes an absolute conveyance, and does not receive payment, the grantee holds the land in trust for the grantor to the extent of the purchase money, which trust descends to the representatives and heirs of the grantee, against whom a lien for the purchase money will be enforced.

COMPLAINT TO ENFORCE TRUSTS.—A claim to enforce an express or implied trust may be joined in a complaint with a claim to enforce a vendor's lien existing without any written contract.

Conveyances without a consideration expressed in the instrument, create a resulting trust to the grantor.

The demurrer admits that the deed of January 6th, 1862, was without a consideration, and that the consideration expressed therein was never paid, and was inserted through ignorance of the parties and misapprehension as to the effect of expressing a consideration where none was paid. Those admissions put the deed upon the same footing as if no consideration had been expressed in the instrument. It is the payment of the consideration, though nominal, that creates the presumption that the grantee should have the use, and not the grantor. (Story's Eq. Juris., Secs. 1,196 to 1,200.)

The ignorance of the law, in a manner and form charged in the complaints, amounts to a mistake of fact that would warrant a Court of equity in reforming the deed to the true intent and meaning of the parties. (1 Story's Eq., Sec. 115; Id., Secs. 121, 122, 136; vide Note to Sec. 122; Hunt v. Roussimaniere, Adm'r, 1 Peters Sup. C. R. 13, 17; Hyde v. Tanner, 1 Barb. S. C. R. 75; Barnes v. Carnack, 2 Barb. S. C. R. 392; Taylor v. Fleet, Id. 471; Taylor v. Luther, Sum. 133.)

Upon the showing that the trust should be established by some instrument in writing, signed by the party sought to be charged with it, or declared in the deed, the averments in the complaints as to how the proceeds of the ditch were shared, how the books in relation to the ditch property were kept, and how the ditch property was managed, and that Wilson, during his lifetime, acknowledged the trust, and that Walker never gave possession of the ranch, but remained in the possession thereof to and at the time of his death, are evidence enough in writing to bring the case within the provisions of the statute. (Sanderson v. Jackson, 2 Bos. Pull. 238; Penniman v. Hartshorn, 13 Mass. 87; also the principle enunciated in Taylor v. Luther, 2 Sum. 233.)

The statute excepts trusts "arising from or being extinguished by implication or operation of law." (Wood's Digest, Art. 395.) Our statute, like the English statute, does not prescribe any particular form or solemnity in writing, nor that the writing should be under seal. Hence, any writing sufficiently evincent of a trust, as a letter or other writing of a trustee stating the trust, or any language in writing clearly expressive of a trust, is sufficient. (Story's Eq. Juris., Sec. 972, and Note 2.)

In those cases where the deed expresses a consideration, when in truth and fact none was paid, and it was inserted by fraud in fact, or by a mistake, or by a misapprehension of the parties as to the effect of the deed, and in such like cases, the Court will permit evidence to show that the deed was intended between the parties as a trust, and on proof of those facts, by intendment of law, a trust is created for the use and benefit of the grantor, subject to the mortgage given. (Cripps v. Jee, 4 Bro. Ch. R. 472; 7 U. S. Digest, p. 193, Sec. 108; 15 U. S. Digest, p. 203, Sec. 58; 11 U. S. Digest, p. 163, Sec. 36; 4 Kent, 306; vide Note 1, Sub. 12.)

On the hypothesis that it was a sale by deed absolute, the grantor is entitled to the consideration expressed in the deed. The defendants cannot hold the property and refuse to pay what they contend was the consideration of the deed, to wit: seventeen thousand dollars. If they ask equity, they must do equity. (Leman v. Whitney, 4 Russ. 422; Squire v. Harder, 1 Paige, 494; Story's Eq. Juris., Secs. 1,196 to 1,199; Bruen v. Hone et al., 1 Barb. S. C. R. 586.)

The cestui que trust is seized of the freehold in contemplation of equity. The trust is regarded as the land, and the declaration of trust is the disposition of the land. (4 Kent, 1 Ed. 304.) A trust, in the general and enlarged sense, is a right on the part of the cestui que trust to receive the profits. Mr. Chief Justice Kent says that "the contrast between uses and estates at law were extremely striking. When uses were created before the statute of uses, there was a confidence that the feoffee would suffer the feoffor to take the profits, and that the feoffee, upon the request of the feoffor, or notice of his will, would execute the estate to the feoffor and his heirs, or according to his directions. When the direction was complied with it was essentially a conveyance by the feoffor, through his agent the feoffee." (4 Kent, 1 Ed. 292.) Trusts are now what uses were before the statute. (4 Kent, 1 Ed. 303.) A trust need not be created by writing, but must be evidenced by writing. (4 Kent, 1 Ed. 305, 306, and Note b, citing Lord Alvanley, 3 Vesey, 707; Leman v. Whitney, 4 Russell, 423; Fisher v. Fields, 10 Johns. 495; Steeve v. Steeve, 5 Johns. Ch. 1.)

Hatch & McQuaid, for Respondent.

There was no express trust, because there was no writing evidencing it. The Statute of Frauds of this State provides that "no estate or interest in lands, other than for leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted, assigned, surrendered or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." (Sec. 6, Act concerning fraudulent conveyances.) There can be no express trust without a writing, subscribed, etc. There was no implied trust, or such trust as results "by act or operation of law," because the deed from Walker to Wilson was absolute on its face and expressed a consideration. A trust may result by operation of law where no consideration is expressed in the deed. To constitute a trust there must either be no consideration expressed or some writing inconsistent with the fact that the deed is absolute. Walker, if living, would not be permitted to impeach his own deed, expressing a valuable consideration, nor can his representative do it. We refer the Court to Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 350, and the cases there cited, as being conclusive upon this point.

The amendatory and supplementary complaint in the record makes the original complaint no stronger upon this trust question. It sets up ignorance of the law on Walker's part, which cannot be pleaded in this action. It also details certain facts as evidence of the trust. The pleading is bad, and might be stricken out. It does not in the least affect the case. The amendment, however, sets up a new cause of action. Taken with the original complaint there is an improper joinder of actions. The original complaint makes an action for the enforcement of a trust and the re-conveyance of real estate. The amendment makes an action for a money judgment against the administrator of Wilson, and for the enforcement of a vendor's lien. It charges that the plaintiff's claim for seventeen thousand dollars, the amount of the purchase money, was duly presented to the administrator of Wilson, and by him rejected.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This action was brought by Walker, in his lifetime, to compel the execution of a trust, or, alternatively, to enforce a vendor's lien.

The complaint alleges that on or about the 6th of January, 1862, Walker and J. C. Wilson were partners in business, and were about closing up their partnership affairs; that the firm was embarrassed with debts and that some of the creditors had commenced attachment suits against the firm; that by reason of the dissipated habits of Walker, and with a view to a more speedy liquidation of their debts, Walker executed to Wilson a deed, absolute on its face and expressing a consideration of seventeen thousand dollars, of a certain ranch, the same being the individual property of Walker; that the deed was, in fact, a trust, and was made solely for the purpose of enabling Wilson to raise money, by mortgaging the premises, to pay off the debts of the firm; and that, on the day of the execution of the deed, he borrowed several large sums for the benefit of the firm and secured the payment thereof by mortgages on the premises so conveyed to him by Walker. That Walker also, and by the same deed, conveyed to Wilson his interest in certain ditches belonging to the firm, for the purpose aforesaid, and that said ditches were included in the said mortgages. That the possession of the ranch remained with Walker after the deed, as before, and that he participated as before in the management of the ditch property. That Wilson, in his lifetime, never denied the trust; but, on the contrary, always admitted it. That the defendant, E. P. Wilson, his administrator and one of his heirs at law, admitted the trust in his answer first filed, but which he afterwards withdrew by the Court's leave. That the grantor and grantee were intimate friends, and that the deed was given under a misapprehension as to its legal effect. Under this aspect of the complaint the plaintiff prays that the administrator may be decreed to execute the trust by reconveying the property, subject to the aforesaid mortgages.

In a supplemental complaint, filed by leave of the Court and by the consent of the defendants, it is alleged as a further cause of action, that the aforesaid conveyance was in pursuance of a sale for the sum of seventeen thousand dollars, expressed in the deed; that the money is due and unpaid; that a claim for that amount was presented in due form to Wilson's administrator for allowance, June 21st, 1864, together with the evidence in support of a vendor's lien on the property embraced in the deed, and that the claim was rejected by the administrator on that day. On these allegations the plaintiff claims judgment for the seventeen thousand dollars and interest thereon from the date of the deed, and that the land conveyed may be sold and the avails applied to the liquidation of the debt and for other relief.

The complaint as amended was demurred to for want of facts, misjoinder of causes and for uncertainty and ambiguity. The demurrer was sustained by the Court, and the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered dismissing the action.

First — The complaint not only fails to disclose an express trust but it appears affirmatively that there was none; and it sets forth no facts from which a trust would arise by implication of law. Nor can the complaint be sustained as a bill to reform the deed. However Walker may have mistaken the legal effect of its terms, there is no averment that the language of the deed is not the very language which he intended to use; and against the mistake of law alleged there can be no redress. The class of cases in which mistakes of that character are corrected in equity is very limited, and this is not brought within any recognized exception to the general rule, by the necessary averments. (1 Sto. Eq. Chap. 5; 4 Rus. 424; 16 Cal. 351.)

Opinion of the Court.

The position that the trust is rescued from the operation of the Statute of Frauds by the allegation that the answer first filed by the administrator admitted the trust, is not tenable for a number of reasons, only one of which, however, need be specified here. If a defendant sought to be charged upon a contract within the Statute of Frauds, admits the contract in his answer and does not claim the benefit of the statute, he is considered as waiving its protection and as furnishing by his answer the very proof which the statute requires. But if the admission is coupled with a claim to the protection of the statute, the rights of the party stand as though the admission had not been made. (2 Story's Eq. Jud. Sec. 757.) While the complaint in this case avers the admission, it fails to fill or complete the legal proposition by an averment that the statute was waived as a defense by an omission to assert it in the answer.

Second—Under the second aspect in which the general transaction is presented in the complaint, the plaintiff is entitled to relief.

If, as the supplemental complaint alleges, Walker sold the land to Wilson for seventeen thousand dollars, and the purchase money has not been paid, then the plaintiff is a creditor of Wilson's estate to that amount, and on general principles has a lien on the land sold as security for the debt. (Leman v. Whitney, 4 Rus. 427.) To that extent Wilson in his lifetime held the land in trust for his vendor, and the trust has descended to his representative and heirs. The principle upon which Courts of equity proceed in establishing this lien is, that a person who has gotten the estate of another ought not in conscience, as between them, to keep it and not pay the full consideration money. (Cahoon v. Robinson, 8 Cal. 226; Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 192.) Nor do we understand that these principles are disputed by the respondents; but they insist, first, that the claim in question is improperly joined in the complaint with the claim based upon the alleged trust; and second, that the money claimed and the lien as collateral thereto are barred on the ground "that more than ten months had elapsed after the appointment and qualification of the defendant, E. P. Wilson, as administrator of J. C. Wilson, and after the first publication of notice by said administrator to the creditors of said estate, requiring them to present their claims to said administrator for allowance, before the claim was in fact presented."

There is no misjoinder of causes. Both of the claims stated in the complaint are founded on trusts—one lying in contract and the other arising by act and operation of law. (Practice Act, Sec. 64.) And as to the second objection, it is sufficient to say that it does not appear, from the complaint, when the notice to creditors was first published; nor, in fact, that any publication has been made or ordered.

The objection that there can be no recovery of the seventeen thousand dollars, and no enforcement of the vendor's lien as collateral thereto, until the affairs of the partnership shall have been adjusted, is not well taken. The supplemental complaint treats the sale and conveyance of the land by Walker to Wilson as a matter having no connection with the business of the partnership, and as being, in short, what it purports to have been by the terms of the deed—a transaction between the two men, each acting for himself alone.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded. And it is ordered that the defendants have twenty days to answer from the time notice shall have been given them of the filing of the remittitur.

M. A. Wheaton, in pro. per., for Relator.

G. W. McMurtrie, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

The County Court dismissed the appeal from the Justice's Court on the ground that there was no stamp on the return, under the provision of the Act of Congress requiring "writs or other process on appeal from Justices' Courts, or other Courts of inferior jurisdiction to a Court of record" to be stamped with a fifty cent stamp. The Court doubtless erred in dismissing the appeal. There is no "writ," or "process," within the meaning of those terms required under our practice. If there is anything in the proceeding in any sense analogous to a "writ," or "process," it is the notice of appeal. The terms "writ," and "process," have well established legal significations, which do not include our notice of appeal, and these terms must be presumed to have been used in their established legal sense.

But the Court had jurisdiction to inquire and determine whether the appeal had been properly taken, and was then pending in that Court or not, and in determining that question acted judicially. The Court did not refuse to act, but acted, and judicially determined that the appeal had not been properly taken, and upon this ground dismissed it.

Where the act to be done is judicial in its character the writ will not direct in what manner the inferior Court shall act, but only direct it to act. It has been so held in many strictly analogous cases. (Commonwealth v. Judges of Common Pleas, Phil. Co., 3 Bin. 275; Ex parte Ostrander, 1 Den. 681; *Judges Oneida Com. P. v. EUGENE B. BUFFENDEAU v. BENJAMIN S. BROOKS
AND THOMAS B. VALENTINE.

TIME A BOND TAKES EFFECT.—A bond to indemnify a Sheriff takes effect from the time of its delivery.

BOND TO INDEMNIFY SHERIFF FOR UNLAWFUL ACT.—A bond given to a Sheriff to indemnify him for any loss or damage he may sustain by selling property levied on by him by virtue of an execution in violation of an order enjoining its sale, is void, because an unlawful contract.

UNLAWFUL PURPOSE OF BOND GIVEN TO SHERIFF MAY BE SHOWN.—The fact that a bond was given to a Sheriff to indemnify him against selling property in violation of an order enjoining its sale may be shown, though the bond discloses no unlawful purpose on its face.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Buffendeau, on the 28th of March, 1859, sued the Sheriff for selling the cattle under the execution, and recovered judgment against him for about four thousand five hundred dollars, damages and costs. The bond of indemnity was then assigned to the appellant, and this action was instituted by him against the respondents.

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

James C. Carey, for Appellant.

Argument for Appellant.

1st. The Court will sustain this bond if possible, and will not presume that the Sheriff intended a violation of his duty or the law. The fact is, the tendency of the Courts at this day is to reduce rather than increase the grounds that render contracts void on public policy. In Richardson v. Meilish, 2 Bing. 229, one objection was that the contract was contrary to public policy, and Mr. Chief Justice Best said he was not much disposed to yield to such arguments, and he thought an unquestionable case should be made out before the Court would set aside a contract on that ground. And Mr. Justice Burrough protested against arguing too strongly upon public policy. He said: "It is a very unruly horse, and when once you get astride it, you never know where it will carry you. It may lead you from the sound law."

2d. The bond may be good in part, and bad in part. "The common law," it is said, "doth decide according to common reason, and having made that void that is against law, lets the rest stand. A statute, however, is like a tyrant; where he comes he makes all void. But the common law is like a nursing father; it only makes void that part where the fault is, and preserves the rest."

The proofs show that at the time the bond was delivered the Sheriff had notice that the judgment which he was about to enforce by a sale of the cattle under the execution had been discharged by operation of law, and also that an injunction was out against New, the plaintiff, restraining the sale. Now, conceding that the bond was void in so far as it contemplated indemnity to the Sheriff for violating the injunction, still it was good as an indemnity for acting under the execution after notice of the discharge in insolvency. The Sheriff might lawfully demand indemnity for that. (2 Kent, top p. 639, marg. p. 468; Greenwood v. Hammersley, 5 Taunt. 727; See on Dem. of Thompson v. Pitcher, 6 Taunt. 359.)

Brooks & Whitney, for Respondents.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The motion for a nonsuit was properly granted by the Court below. The action was upon a bond given by the defendants to P. E. Edmondson, Sheriff of Alameda County, "to indemnify and save him harmless from all damages, expenses, costs and charges, and against all loss and liability, which he, the said Sheriff, shall sustain or in anywise be put to for or by reason of the retention of said property, the levy, advertisement or delivery thereof, or for any act done under or by virtue of the said execution." The execution referred to issued upon a judgment against Buffendeau in favor of one New; it had been delivered previously to Edmondson for service, and he had, prior to the delivery of the bond, levied upon one hundred and fifty head of cattle as the property of Buffendeau, which is the "property" to the sale of which the indemnity relates. Buffendeau sues as the assignee of Edmondson.

The nonsuit was granted on the ground that the contract was unlawful.

The evidence of the plaintiff tended to prove that the levy was made on the 2d day of June, 1858; that the cattle were advertised for sale on the 17th, but were, in fact, sold on the 28th. That on the 16th Buffendeau instituted an action against New, for the purpose of enjoining him, "his agents, attorneys and servants, and all other persons claiming to act for him, from selling, or exposing for sale, said cattle, under and by virtue of said execution," on an allegation that he, Buffendeau, had been discharged from the judgment named under the Act relating to insolvency. That a temporary injunction was granted, and that Edmondson was duly served with a copy of the complaint and order on the same day. That Edmondson had, prior to the service of the injunction, been notified by Buffendeau's attorney, of his client's discharge in insolvency, and that he immediately after the service, sent the papers to the defendant Brooks, attorney of New. That Brooks told the Sheriff that "the injunction was irregular and he must not register it." That Edmondson, after he was notified of

Opinion of the Court.

Buffendean's discharge and before the service of the injunction order, "told Brooks that he had been notified, and that he would not sell the cattle unless he (Brooks) would indemnify him, and that Brooks promised that he would do so." And that Edmondson, after the service of the injunction order, "told Brooks again that he must indemnify him." The evidence further tended to prove that the bond in suit, though dated on the 16th, was not in fact delivered until the 28th of June, the day of the sale.

The bond took effect from its delivery, and its legality is to be determined by reference to the state of things then existing. Though the undertaking discloses no unlawful purpose on its face, still it is entirely manifest that it was given for the purpose of inducing the Sheriff to violate an existing judicial order. Edmondson knew of the injunction and so did Brooks. Edmondson considered the discharge in insolvency as a reason why he should not sell without indemnity, and made known his views to Brooks on that subject soon after notice of the discharge was given; and when the injunction was served thereafter, he seems to have regarded it as an additional obstacle in the way of a safe and profitable vendue. Brooks made an effort to convince him that he was mistaken, but finding him not amenable to argument, he and his co-defendant executed the bond and the sale immediately followed.

The character of the bond depends upon the character of the sale; and the sale was not merely a civil injury to Buffendean, assuming that the judgment against him had been discharged in insolvency, but it involved a wilful and apparently deliberate disobedience to public authority. Edmondson could not maintain an action on this bond, and his assignee stands in no better position.

The judgment is affirmed.

Argument for Appellant.

BENJAMIN F. FERRIS v. HENRY P. IRVING, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF JOSEPH K. IRVING, DECEASED, WILLIAM MCKENZIE, AND AMBROSE S. HURLBURT et als.

ACTION TO DETERMINE ADVERSE CLAIM TO LAND.—An action cannot be maintained to quiet a legal title to land vested in the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff is in possession of the property in dispute at the commencement of the action.

ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACT OF INTESTATE TO CONVEY LAND.—An administrator will not be compelled to perform specifically a contract of the intestate to convey land, unless it is found as a fact that the intestate had contracted to convey the particular land described in the complaint. An agreement of the intestate to convey a parcel of his land, when he owned several parcels, without describing any particular tract, will not be enforced.

DEATH OF PRINCIPAL IN POWER OF ATTORNEY.—The death of the principal operates as a revocation of a power of attorney to convey land, and if, after the death of the principal, the attorney in fact makes a deed under the power, the deed is void, even if the attorney is ignorant of the death.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, Alameda County.

Defendants recovered judgment in the Court below, and plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Sharp & Lloyd, for Appellant.

The act of Fair, done in ignorance of the death of his principal, was good, and we refer the Court to Cassaday v. McKenzie, 4 Watts and Sergt. 282, which contains a full, learned, and logical discussion of the question, both upon reason and principle. Indeed, no stronger authority in favor of the soundness of our position can be cited than Smout v. Ilberry, 10 Mees. and Wels. 1, in which it is held that the agent is not liable, where he acts in good faith, without knowledge of the decease of the principal, and according to which authority neither Fair nor his estate is bound to us; we are to be the victims; we protest. We say that the old technical rule of the common law was that the power ceased with the death of the principal. The rule was the same in the civil law, but there we find the exception stated: "The acts of the agent done bona fide in ignorance of the death of his principal were held valid and binding on the heirs of the latter." (Story on Agency, Sec. 491.) The same rule has been adopted as the rule of commercial law in Continental Europe. (Ib. pp. 1-9.)

Samuel J. Clarke, Jr., and William H. Glascock, for Respondents.

The plaintiff's counsel relies much upon the fact that the death of J. K. Irving was not known either to Fair or Valdez at the time of the execution of the deed and release. This case, as well as the authorities referred to therein, make no such exception in favor of an act of an agent done bona fide and in ignorance of the fact of the revocation by the death of the principal. On the contrary, this very case of Travers v. Crane, contains a citation from Judge Kent, expressly repudiating any such position. Judge Kent remarks: "By the civil law and the law of those countries that have adopted the civil law, the act of an agent done bona fide after the death of the principal and before notice of his death, is binding upon his representatives.

"But this equitable principle does not prevail in the English law, and the death of the principal is an instantaneous and absolute revocation of the authority of the agent unless the power be coupled with an interest."

Upon this point the authorities are overwhelming. We contend, then, that at the instant of the death of J. K. Irving the title to these lots descended to his heirs; and that the title could not be divested by the act of an agent, whose authority had ceased to exist.

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

The complaint in this action is framed with a double aspect: first, as a bill filed under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the Practice Act to quiet a legal title already vested in the plaintiff; and second, as a proceeding to compel the specific performance of a contract to convey. The action is not maintainable under the first aspect, for there is no allegation that the plaintiff was in possession of any of the lots in controversy at the time the suit was instituted; nor can it be maintained under its second aspect, for it does not appear by the findings that any contract to convey the particular lots named in the complaint was ever made by J. K. Irving with Valdez, the plaintiff's assignor.

Should the complaint be considered as having a third aspect, viz: that of a bill quia timet to clear off a cloud upon title, still the action cannot stand, for the reason that the plaintiff has no title, legal or equitable, to be clouded or endangered.

It appears by the findings that on the 17th of August, 1853, Joseph K. Irving, then in life, was seized of the lots in controversy, together with a large number of other lots, in the City of Oakland, and a tract lying outside of said city known as a part of the Peralta Rancho; and that he on that day, for a good and valuable consideration, executed and delivered to José M. Valdez a certain instrument in writing, whereby he agreed to convey to said Valdez fifty acres of said ranch, outside of said city, to be located where said Valdez should think proper. It further appears that the parties, thereafter in the early part of 1854, entered into a parol agreement to exchange the fifty acres mentioned in said written contract for "some city lots in the City of Oakland." On the 16th of May, 1854, Irving executed a power of attorney to one William D. Fair, and before departing from the State he introduced Valdez to his said attorney and told him to make the exchange which Valdez and he had agreed upon. A few days thereafter Irving left for the East, and died in the City of New York on the 28th of June, 1854. Two days thereafter Fair, as attorney in fact of Irving, executed a deed of conveyance to Valdez of the lots in controversy, and the latter released Irving from his covenant to convey the outside lands. The defendants Hurlburt and McKenzie claim the city lots in dispute under an administrator's sale and deed.

First—The deed executed by Fair as attorney in fact of J. K. Irving is not the deed of Irving, nor can it be treated as a contract by him to convey the city lots named in it. Irving was dead at the time the deed was executed, and his death operated as a revocation of the power of attorney to Fair. The correctness of the doctrine that the death of the principal revokes the authority of the agent is disputed by the counsel of the appellant, but in view of the decision in Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12, we do not consider its correctness to be an open question in this State.

Second — Nor is it found that Irving before he left for the East agreed in person to exchange the city lots in controversy for the outside lands; on the contrary, it is found, in effect, that he did not so agree.

The finding is that Irving agreed to exchange "some of the city lots," etc. But he owned a large number of city lots, and nothing was said as to how many Valdez was to receive, nor was any clue given to their location nor to their value, except as it may be inferred that they were to be equivalent in that particular to the value of Valdez's existing rights in the outside lands. A contract, in legal contemplation, is an agreement between two or more parties for the doing or not doing of some specified thing. Whatever else may have been specified in the parol agreement in question, it is apparent that a conveyance of the lots named in the complaint was not. Valdez called on Irving on the eve of his departure and proposed, in the most general form, an exchange of country for city property; and Irving assented to the overture in language as general as that in which it was made. To that extent there was undoubtedly a meeting of minds. Irving introduced Valdez to Fair, and told Fair to "make the exchange which he, Irving, and Valdez had agreed upon." But they had agreed upon nothing except as above stated. The clear result of all this is, that at the date of Irving's death he was, at the most, bound only by an agreement to make an agreement which, when made, would bind him to convey two or more of his city lots; and they might turn out to be the lots now in question; but it is just as true that they might not.

Under this view of the matter, it becomes unimportant to consider the questions made by the counsel respectively, bearing upon the defense of the Statute of Frauds, or any of the other points which have been argued.

Judgment affirmed.

SAWYER, J., concurring specially.

I concur on the second ground stated and discussed in the opinion.

In the other aspect presented by the complaint, the action, in my opinion, is not one of the new class of cases of which the Court is authorized to take cognizance under section two hundred fifty-four of the Practice Act; and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to aver that he was in possession to enable him to maintain the action, had his own title been otherwise sufficient to entitle him to have defendant's conveyances annulled as a cloud on his title. In this particular the principle announced in Hagar v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 471, applies. The action in this aspect of the case is aimed at a particular conveyance from the same source of title, subsequent in time and claimed to be a cloud upon the plaintiff's title. Such an action could have been maintained without the aid of section two hundred fifty-four, and the jurisdiction of the Court does not depend upon its provisions, or upon the possession of the complaining party at the time of the institution of the suit.

A. K. P. GLIDDEN v. J. A. PACKARD.

APPEAL FROM ORDER MADE AFTER FINAL JUDGMENT.—On an appeal from an order made after final judgment, the transcript should contain a copy of the order appealed from, and copies of all the papers used on the hearing when the order was made by the Court below.

AN APPEARANCE IN AN ACTION.—A notice given by an attorney on behalf of defendant to plaintiff's attorney that defendant will move before a Court Commissioner that an attachment issued in the case be dissolved, does not constitute an appearance in the action.

Opinion of the Court.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.—A notice that defendant will move before a Court Commissioner to dissolve an attachment issued in a cause is not such an appearance in an action as will authorize the Clerk to enter a judgment by default.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—WHEN VOID.—A judgment entered by the Clerk by default, where there has been no service of summons or appearance, is utterly void.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. P. Treadwell, for Appellant.

Sharpstein & Smyth, for Respondent.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an appeal from an order subsequent to judgment on default, "that the defendant have leave to file his answer" to the merits. The only papers brought up in the transcript were the judgment in the case; the order appealed from allowing defendant to answer; the notice of motion for the order; and the proposed answer. A diminution of the record having been suggested by respondent, and the papers said to be omitted having been ordered to be certified to this Court, a full transcript of the judgment roll and the proceedings on attachment has been filed. The appellant insists that the original transcript contains all the papers required to be brought up on appeal from the order under section three hundred forty-six of the Practice Act; and that for this reason, the papers certified up in pursuance of the order of this Court cannot be considered. In this he is mistaken. The section referred to requires the appellant to furnish the Court "a copy of the order appealed from, and a copy of the papers used in the hearing of the Court below." In this case the notice is, that the motion will be made "upon the papers filed in this action, and upon a verified answer, * * * a copy of which answer is hereto annexed." Now, the only paper on file at the time of giving the notice brought up was a copy of the judgment, and there was manifestly an omission of portions of the moving papers, which are necessary to understand the action of the Court. And it was for this reason that the remaining papers were directed to be certified up. Upon an examination of the judgment roll, which was on file, and therefore, under the notice, a part of the moving papers, it appears that the summons was returned without service, the defendant not having been found. It also appears that the judgment was entered in the Clerk's office by the Clerk, on application of plaintiff's attorney, and not in open Court, or by order of the Court; that the Clerk entered the judgment, not upon evidence of service, but upon the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney that the defendant had appeared in the action; and the mode of appearance was shown by the affidavit to have been by an attorney giving notice on behalf of defendant to plaintiff's attorney of a motion before a Court Commissioner to dissolve the attachment issued in the case, on the ground that it was irregularly issued. The Clerk, regarding this as a general appearance in the case, entered judgment by default. This state of facts is shown by the judgment roll.

We think the notice of motion to dissolve the attachment, on the ground that it was irregularly issued, was not such an appearance in the case as would authorize the Clerk to enter judgment by default. (Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295.) Had the motion been made under section one hundred and thirty-six, the plaintiff might have required an appearance as a condition of moving to dissolve the attachment. And this very provision, requiring the defendant to appear before moving to dissolve, shows that the Legislature did not contemplate that the motion itself should constitute an appearance.

In Kelly v. Van Austin, Mr. Chief Justice Field said: "The Clerk in entering judgment upon default acts in a mere ministerial capacity. He exercises no judicial functions. The statute authorizes the judgment, and the Clerk is only an agent by whom it is written out and placed among the records of the Court. He must, therefore, conform strictly to the provisions of the statute, or his proceedings will be without binding force." (17 Cal. 565. See also Wallace v. Eldridge, 27 Cal. 495; Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 449.) The action of the Clerk in entering judgment was without authority of law. It was not merely error, to be corrected on appeal, but utterly void for any purpose whatever. There was in fact no judgment, (the order does not purport to vacate any judgment,) and the defendant was entitled to answer as a matter of right. And the moving papers, as we have seen, show this right. But there having been neither personal service nor appearance by defendant, the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act would apply, whether the construction claimed for it by respondent be correct or not. It does not appear upon what ground the Court based the order appealed from; but whatever reason may have been assigned, the order is undoubtedly correct.

Points decided.

It is therefore affirmed.

J. G. TREADWAY v. CHARLES D. SEMPLE.

CASE COMMENTED ON.—Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 552, commented on and explained, and erroneous citation corrected.

LOCATION OF MEXICAN GRANTS.—The system of locating, by final survey, Mexican and Spanish grants of land in California, under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, was essentially modified by the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860.

DECREES OF COURT UPON SURVEY OF MEXICAN GRANT.—The proceedings had under the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, after the return of a survey and plat of a Mexican grant into the District Court, are strictly judicial in their character, and the decree rendered by the Court upon the survey is res adjudicata, and final and conclusive upon the rights of all those who become parties to it.

DECREES CONFIRMING TWO SURVEYS OF SAME LAND.—If after a decree confirming a survey of a Mexican grant, made in pursuance of the Act of June 14th, 1860, a decree is made confirming a survey of another prior grant covering the same land, and the confirmee in the first decree is a party to the second decree consenting thereto, he is bound by it.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Colusa County.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Argument for Appellant.

Charles D. Semple, in propria persona, and P. L. Edwards, for Appellant.

The official survey of the Colus grant, being first approved and adopted by the United States District Court, from that time gave to appellant a perfect legal title to the land embraced in it, which could not be afterwards disturbed by any action of the Government. (Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 373, and authorities there cited; Act of Congress, June 14, 1860; Brewer v. Minturn, 24 Cal. 645.)

The doctrine of relation has no application to this case. The parties had no privity the one with the other, but both had a just claim to the application of that doctrine as against intervening claimants and trespassers. (Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johnson, 234; 1 Johnson's Cases, 90, and Note; Heath v. Ross, 12 Johnson, 140; Barnes v. Stark, 4 Cal. 418.)

The claimants of "Colus" and "Jimeno" set forth in their petitions that they had claims against the Government. On the same day their claims are admitted to be valid. They both then demand that the proper officers shall point out the particular tract of land to which they were entitled, (since they cannot do this themselves — see Fremont's Case,) and pass to them the fee which was still in the United States. On the 2d day of February, 1861, the officer having the power of final approval, passed the fee of two leagues by metes and bounds to the Colus claimant. This act put a perfect legal title in the claimant which could not be disturbed by any subsequent action of the Government. (See Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal.; Fremont's Case, 17 Howard, and cases cited.) Two months afterwards the same officer attempted to pass the fee of a part of the same land to the claimant of Jimeno. Was this last act a nullity? Was there any title in the United States to pass?

A. C. Whitcomb, for Respondent.

It is quite certain that until the Colus survey was filed in Court it was a mere private survey, and that its character remained unchanged until the 2d day of February, 1861, when it was approved by the Court. Indeed, no validity is claimed for it until then.

It is not equally certain that on the 12th day of April, 1861, — the date of the order of appeal therefrom — it was not final or conclusive? From that time up to December, 1864, did not its inconclusive character remain unchanged? Was it not liable to be ordered set aside, and another survey approved in its place, just as the Supreme Court of the United States at its last term ordered the Sutter survey to be set aside, and an entirely different one approved?

So far from such a survey making "a perfect legal title," it has been held by this Court, over and over again, (commencing with Thornton v. Mahoney et als., 24 Cal. 583,) that it was not operative for any purpose whatever until the appeal was disposed of by the appellate Court.

The survey law of June, 1860, provides for interventions; and this appellant was an intervenor in the Jimeno case, appearing in person in open Court, and consenting to the decree. And so consenting, the decree bound every interest he had in the land, whether under Jimeno or Colusa, under a pre-emption or a swamp land location. It was adjudged thereby, not only as between the claimants and the United States, but as against the intervenor, Charles D. Sample, that the land embraced in the survey (approved by that decree) was truly, properly, and correctly appropriated to the Jimeno grant of November 4th, 1844; and that said grant rightfully attached to the identical eleven square leagues of land embraced and described in said survey. In fact, that said land was the identical tract granted in 1844 to Jimeno; and, of course, if granted to him in 1844, it could not have been granted to Bidwell in 1845; or if any part of it was included within the description of any grant in 1845 to Bidwell, such latter grant was to that extent inoperative and of no effect.

Opinion of the Court.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an action brought under the provisions of section two hundred fifty-four of the Practice Act by the party in possession of Lot No. 1, in Block 32, in the Town of Colusa, for the purpose of determining a claim of title adverse to him, made by the defendant. The complaint—which is verified—sets out with great particularity a deraignment of the respective titles under which both of the parties claim. None of the material allegations of the complaint are denied, and they are, therefore, for the purposes of the action to be taken as true. Both claim under grants from the Mexican Government—the plaintiff under a grant to Manuel Jimeno, called the “Jimeno Grant”—the defendant under a grant to John Bidwell, called the “Colus Grant.” Both have been confirmed, and finally located so as to include the lot in dispute, and the question is, which party has the better title?

The grant to Jimeno of eleven leagues within larger boundaries, as shown by the record, was made November 4th, 1844; that to Bidwell of four leagues within the same larger area, October 4th, 1845. The claimants under the Jimeno grant presented their claim to the Board of Land Commissioners for confirmation March 24th, 1852, in pursuance of the provisions of the Act of March 3d, 1851; the claimants under the Colus grant, March 31st, 1852. The Jimeno grant was confirmed by the Board January 10th, 1853; the Colus grant rejected October 25th, 1853. Both cases having been appealed to the District Court for the Northern District of California, the decree confirming the Jimeno grant was affirmed, and that rejecting the Colus grant reversed, and the grant confirmed on the same day—July 5th, 1855. Both cases were again appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and at the December term, 1855, of that Court, the decree confirming the Jimeno grant was finally affirmed, and the appeal in the case of the Colus grant dismissed—the decree of confirmation thereby becoming final. The Jimeno grant was afterwards, in 1858, surveyed so as to include the lot in controversy, which survey was approved by the United States Surveyor-General for California, November 4th, 1858. Said official survey was, on application of defendant, Semple, claimant under the Colus grant, by the United States District Court ordered to be returned into Court, and having been filed, the said Semple, by leave of the Court, granted on his own motion, on the 26th day of September, 1860, under the provisions of the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, filed in the proceeding his intervention, as he alleged, "for the protection of his rights and interest as owner and claimant of Rancho Colus finally confirmed to him," and filed therein his written exceptions to the said official survey of the Jimeno Rancho, on the ground that it embraced lands (of which the lot in question was a part) claimed by him as being within the limits of the Colus Rancho. Testimony having been taken and arguments of the respective counsel had, the Court by order directed said survey to be set aside and another to be made in accordance with specifications in said order contained.

"On the third day of April, 1861, the said United States Surveyor-General returned to and filed in said Court in said proceeding a certified copy of the original plat of an official survey of the said Jimeno Rancho, made in conformity with the said order of said Court, and marked as approved by the said United States Surveyor-General, on the twenty-sixth day of March, 1861. On the sixth day of April, 1861, on the motion of the claimants' counsel to confirm said last named official survey, 'the counsel for the respective parties and Charles D. Semple, intervenor, in person appearing in Court and consenting to said motion and said official survey,' the said United States District Court rendered and entered a decree finally confirming, approving and adopting the said survey as the true, proper and correct survey of the said land finally confirmed to the said Larkin and Missroon, as the Jimeno Rancho as aforesaid." From this decree thus entered no appeal was taken either by claimants or defendant, Semple; but said Semple, as intervenor, in April, 1861, "especially waived, in writing under his hand, all right of appeal from said decrees." On the 12th of April, 1861, the United States appealed, which appeal was dismissed by the Attorney-General of the United States, May 29th, 1862, and the survey therefore became final and a patent issued thereon to the claimants under the Jimeno grant, July 18th, 1862, which patent embraces the premises in question.

A survey of the Colus grant was in the meantime made by the Surveyor-General, and also approved November 4th, 1858. Said survey did not embrace the land in controversy, or any land included in the survey of the Jimeno grant before mentioned, approved by the Surveyor-General on the same day. This survey was also on the application of said Semple returned into Court, and, October 17th, 1859, set aside, the said Court ordering a new survey to be made, "with the right to the said Semple to select a location of two square leagues of land within the exterior limits of the said Colus grant." November 5th, 1859, said Semple notified the Surveyor-General that he had elected the two square leagues of land embraced and contained in a certain private survey made in October, 1858, and that he consented that said last named survey should be adopted by the Surveyor-General as the proper location of said grant, and that the same be returned into Court in the room and stead of the new one directed to be made by said order of said Court. The said survey and another having been returned into Court, the survey so elected was confirmed by said District Court, February 2d, 1861. An appeal from said order of confirmation to the Supreme Court of the United States was taken by the United States, April 12th, 1861, and subsequently dismissed by the Attorney-General at the December term, 1864, of said Court. Said survey embraces the lot in question, but no patent has yet issued.

Although plaintiff has the elder grant (which was also first presented to the Board of Land Commissioners for confirmation,) and is in most respects prior in point of time, yet the defendant insists, that, under the principles advanced in Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 373, his title is to be preferred, because the order confirming his survey was in fact entered by the District Court before the order confirming plaintiff's survey; that notwithstanding plaintiff's survey became final, and his patent issued long before the defendant's survey became final by dismissal of the appeal, that upon such dismissal his confirmation by relation took effect from the date of the decree of the District Court, and that his land was thereby first segregated. The claimant, on the contrary, insists that it was held by this Court in Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 582, that the decree confirming the survey was not operative until the appeal was disposed of by the appellate Court, and that the finality of the respective decrees confirming the survey in these cases must therefore date from the time of the dismissal of the respective appeals. The question in that case was not whether, when the appeal is dismissed or the decree affirmed by the appellate Court, the rights of the parties become fixed by relation from the date of the decree of the District Court thus made final. It was simply whether, pending the appeal, the decree appealed from is to be regarded as finally locating the land, within the meaning of the provisions of the Act passed by the Legislature of California, April 26th, 1858, entitled "An Act for the better protection of settlers on public lands in this State, and to secure the rights of parties in certain cases" (Laws 1858, p. 345,) so as to enable parties to recover the lands under said Act before a final disposition of the appeal. There is an error in a reference in the case cited which may tend to produce some obscurity, and which we now desire to correct. The phrase, "the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860" (page 582,) should read, "the Act of the Legislature of California of April 26th, 1858." We also take occasion, while the case is before us, to supply an inadvertent omission in the second line of page 584. The sentence should read, "It is not the practice for the United States when appellants in cases of appeals from the decree of the District Court," etc.

Without deciding the question, we shall, for the purposes of this decision, assume that the defendant's location, on dismissing the appeal, became final by relation from the date of the decree confirming his survey by the District Court, and that the final decree is equivalent to a patent. Assuming these points, and accepting the decision in Waterman v. Smith as correctly determining the matters in controversy in that case, it does not follow that the principles of that decision are applicable to the facts of the case now under consideration.

The grant in question in Waterman v. Smith was located by the Executive Department of the Government in pursuance of the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851. But the system of locating grants was essentially modified by the Act of June 14th, 1860, and the surveys of the grants in controversy in this case were finally confirmed under the provisions of that Act. The Act provides that, when the Surveyor-General has completed and platted the survey of any confirmed claim, he shall give notice of the fact in some newspaper for a prescribed period of time, and that during that time the survey and plat shall remain in his office subject to inspection; that upon the application of any party interested, the said survey and plat may, upon the order of the District Court of the district within which the land is situate, be returned into said "District Court for examination and adjudication;" that notice shall be given in a mode prescribed "to all parties interested, that objection has been made to such survey and location, and admonishing all parties in interest to intervene for the protection of such interest;" that said parties in interest, after having intervened, may proceed to take testimony and contest the same, and that, "on hearing the allegations and proofs, the Court shall render judgment thereon; and if, in its opinion, the location and survey are erroneous, it is authorized to set aside and annul the same, or correct and modify it." It then provides for an appeal from the decree finally confirming the survey. (12 U. S. Stata. at Large, 33, 34.) The proceedings had under this Act after the return of the survey and plat, are strictly judicial in their character. The parties interested have an opportunity to be heard, and those appearing actually are heard, and their rights litigated and adjudicated; and when thus finally determined we see no reason why the matters determined should not, like all other judicial determinations upon points directly in issue, be regarded as res adjudicata, and be final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties. Such is the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, expressed in the recent case of Rodriguez v. United States, 1 Wallace, 587. In 1838 a provisional grant of a league of land was made to Ramona Sanchez, "known by the name of 'Butano,' which tract, in 1844, Governor Micheltorena granted to her, reciting his deed to be a ratification of the provisional title given to her in 1838." Rodriguez claimed under this grant. In 1842, subsequent to the provisional grant, a grant was also made to Simeon Castro. Castro's grant had been confirmed, surveyed and patented prior to June 14th, 1860, and to his proceedings neither Sanchez nor Rodriguez was a party. Sanchez's grant having been confirmed and subsequently surveyed, the survey and plat were ordered to be returned into Court, and after a contest there under the provisions of the Act of 1860, to which proceedings the claimants under the Castro grant made themselves parties — the grant was finally located in part upon lands already surveyed and patented to the claimants under the Castro grant. In reviewing this final location on appeal the Supreme Court of the United States — Mr. Justice Miller delivering the opinion — say:

"It is objected to this location of the grant that it places it on land which has already been confirmed, surveyed and patented to the representatives of Castro. The answer to this is, that we are called on in this proceeding to determine where the grant to the present claimant ought rightfully to be located, who was not a party to any of the proceedings by which Castro's claim was confirmed, surveyed or patented, and is not therefore bound or concluded by either the decree, survey, or patent, as expressly enacted by the fifteenth section of the Act of 1851. For Castro's survey was made before the Act of 1860, and there was no opportunity for this claimant to contest its location. And lastly it may be added, that the holder of the Castro claim has made himself a party to the present proceeding, and must be bound by its result."

Now the representative of the Castro claim held a subsequent grant, which was first finally segregated and patented. Under the act of 1860, he made himself a party to the subsequent proceedings, for locating a prior grant to Sanchez, which was, notwithstanding his opposition, located in part upon lands already patented to him. This is precisely the case under consideration, and if Castro's representatives by making himself a party to the proceedings, "must be bound by its results," as observed by Mr. Justice Miller — and we think he must — then defendant, Semple, is concluded in this case. Plaintiff's is the elder grant, and it was first presented for confirmation to the Board of Land Commissioners. Both claims having been surveyed so as not to interfere, they were ordered to be returned into Court, "for examination and adjudication," on application of defendant. On leave of the Court he intervened in plaintiff's proceedings; had plaintiff's survey — and in another proceeding his own — set aside, and new surveys ordered; and succeeded in getting his second survey first confirmed. Afterwards plaintiff's survey came up for determination and although embracing the lot in question, which had already been included in defendant's survey, on motion of plaintiff's counsel to confirm his survey, the Court rendered a "decree finally confirming, approving and adopting the said survey as the true, proper and correct survey of the said land finally confirmed as the Jimeno Rancho, 'Charles D. Semple, intervenor, in person appearing in Court and consenting to said motion and official survey.'" And said defendant, Semple, also afterwards on the same day "waived in writing, under his hand, all right to appeal from said decree." This must be regarded as an adjudication between the parties, and with the consent of defendant, that the plaintiff's prior grant is properly located; and that the defendant's subsequent grant to the extent of the interference was improperly located, and this determination is final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties. It follows that the title is in the plaintiff and the judgment must be affirmed.

And it is so ordered.

JEROME LINCOLN v. COLUSA COUNTY.

COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES FOR LAYING OUT HIGHWAY.—A complaint in an action against a county for damages sustained by the location of a public highway over plaintiff's land, laid out under the Act of 1861, fails to state a cause of action, unless it avers that the plaintiff had attempted to come to an agreement with the Board of Supervisors as to the amount of damages sustained, and could not agree with the Board as to such amount.

DAMAGES FOR LAYING OUT A PUBLIC HIGHWAY.—Under the Act of 1861 a person whose lands have been taken for a public road has no right of action against the county for damages until after a fair and honest attempt on his part to agree upon the amount with the Board of Supervisors.

EVIDENCE AS TO AGREEMENT WITH BOARD FOR DAMAGES FOR LAYING OUT ROAD.—The filing of a petition with the Board of Supervisors claiming damages in the event of a public road being laid out over the petitioner's land, is no evidence in an action brought by him for damages, that he could not compromise or agree with the Board respecting the damages.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE IN RELATION TO DAMAGES FOR OPENING ROADS.—It is competent for the Legislature to fix the mode of condemnation of land for public highways, and the method by which damages shall be ascertained, and the proceedings to be had for their recovery, and as strict a compliance with the Act is required by those claiming damages as by the public making the condemnation.

APPEAL from the District Court, Tenth Judicial District, Colusa County.

The complaint described the tract of land, and alleged that plaintiff was the owner of it; that a petition was presented to the Board of Supervisors of Colusa County, praying for the location and establishment of a public road from the Town of Colusa to the northern boundary line of Colusa County; that the Board appointed viewers to survey and lay out the road: that on the day that these proceedings were had, the plaintiff presented his petition protesting against and objecting to the action of the Board in laying out said road, and claiming damages therefor, should said road be laid out; that subsequently, the viewers thus appointed made their report to the

Argument for Appellant.

Board, to the effect that they had surveyed the road, which ran about one mile and a half through plaintiff's land, and that they had awarded to him, as damages, only one dollar therefor; that the report of the viewers was thereupon accepted and approved by the Board, the road declared a public highway, and ordered to be opened by the Road Overseer of the proper district. The complaint charged that the plaintiff had been greatly damaged by the location of the road; that he was dissatisfied with the award of the viewers, and refused to receive the same. The complaint further charged that the road as located took from the plaintiff a considerable portion of valuable farming land, and necessitated the building of several miles of fencing for the inclosure of plaintiff's land, besides cutting off a portion of the tract of land from the benefits of the water of the Sacramento River, all to plaintiff's damage to the amount of three thousand dollars.

Upon the trial of the case the plaintiff, after proving that he was the owner of the land, and after making his proof upon the question of damages, introduced in evidence a copy of his petition or protest against the action of the Board of Supervisors, and rested his case.

The petition did not state what damages the petitioner would sustain, nor what amount he claimed.

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

H. H. Hartley, for Appellant.

It is not shown that there was any objection to the demand for damages, because there was no specific amount claimed. That the Board knew that the plaintiff, by his remonstrance and petition, claimed more than nominal damages, is beyond question; they could have allowed him one cent. If the Board was made to understand what plaintiff desired, it was all the law requires, and their refusal to comply with what is reasonable, puts an end to the discussion.

Argument for Appellant.

It was the duty of the Board, under the Constitution, to have allowed and tendered him an equivalent for the loss. (Henry v. Underwood, 1 Dana, 257.) If, then, the plaintiff has presented his petition to the Board of Supervisors of said county, and said Board has acted upon it and refused to allow him a reasonable sum for his damages, or any more than nominal damages, and that he was dissatisfied with the allowance, and that the Board and he could not agree as to the amount, and that he has refused to receive the sum allowed, then the law, as contended for by the respondent's attorneys and the District Court, has been fully complied with, and the plaintiff is entitled to his action and his actual damages. The law gives the damages, and the Court should not have refused them to him.

A party damaged by acts of a county, city or State, by taking his property for public uses, has his remedy without statutory enactment; he has his right of action independent of the statute.

It should be borne in mind that this Road Act provides no time for the final hearing, mentioned in Section 7 of the Act. The order of the Board confirming the award may be made, the Board adjourn, and not meet again for three months. How, then, is a damnified land owner going to make an effort even to agree with the Board within ten days? There are ten chances to one that there will be no meeting of the Board within ten days. Negotiating with the individual Supervisors will do no good.

The language in the seventh section of the Road Act of 1861, in reference to the person damaged not being able to agree with the Board of Supervisors, means nothing more than that if he accepts the award of viewers, or makes any agreement with the Board for any other sum, he shall not sue the county. And there is no more necessity for his proving that he has not made an agreement with the Board, or has made any effort to do so and failed, than there would be in any action of tort in proving that the plaintiff had not made any agreement with the defendant as to the amount of damages.

Hatch & McQuaid, for Respondent.

We maintain that the plaintiff has no right of action against the county. He had no right to sue the county until he had first presented his claim to the Board of Supervisors of the county for allowance, and until after they had rejected it in whole or in part. He had no right to sue the county until he had made an effort to "agree with the Board of Supervisors as to the amount of damages sustained" by him. (Road Law Statute, 1861, Sec. 7.)

It has been said that a county is not a person or a corporation. Again, it has been said that counties are quasi corporations. At common law, an action did not lie against a county; and such was the law of this State until the Legislature passed "An Act prescribing the manner of commencing and maintaining suits by or against counties," passed May 11th, 1854. The rule at common law proceeded upon the principle that a county government is part of the State government, and is, pro tanto, a part of the sovereign power. (Hunsaker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 228; Gilman v. Contra Costa Co., 8 Cal. 52.)

The twenty-fourth section of the Act creating a Board of Supervisors in the several counties of this State, passed March 20th, 1855, shows how a person having a claim against a county may acquire a right to commence his action. The Supreme Court of this State have frequently had occasion to consider the section of the statute, above quoted, with reference to the right of the citizen to bring and maintain actions against a county. (Price v. Sacramento Co., 6 Cal. 254; McCann v. Sierra Co., 7 Cal. 121.)

By the Court, SHAFER, J.

This is an action to recover three thousand dollars as damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the location of a public highway over his land by order of the Board of Supervisors of the defendant county.

A nonsuit was ordered at the trial on the ground that it was neither alleged in the complaint nor proved as a fact, that the plaintiff prior to the commencement of the action "could not agree with the Board of Supervisors as to the amount of damages sustained," nor that he had even attempted such agreement.

The language of the statute is as follows: "If any person or persons claiming damages on account of the location or alteration of any road under the provisions of this Act shall be dissatisfied with the award of the road viewers, and cannot agree with the Board of Supervisors as to the amount of damages sustained, and shall refuse to receive the same, such person or persons shall within ten days from the time of the final hearing, commence an action against the county by name for such damages in a Court of competent jurisdiction; which action shall be conducted in like manner as other actions in civil cases in the Courts of Justice in this State." (Acts of 1861, p. 392, Sec. 7.)

Under the Constitution, private property cannot be taken for public use except upon compensation made. It is competent for the Legislature to fix the mode of condemnation, the method by which the damages to individuals shall be determined and the proceedings for their recovery. This power has been fully exercised, in relation to lands taken for public highways, in the Act of 1861. Strict compliance with the requirements of the Act is necessary to accomplish a condemnation on the part of the public, and a like compliance with all the provisions relating to the assessment of damages and their recovery is essential also on the part of the landowner. Under the Act of 1861, a person whose lands have been taken for a public road has no right of action against the county for damages until after a fair and honest attempt on his part to agree upon the amount with the Board of Supervisors. Such endeavor is a condition precedent to his right to sue. The provision is contained in most if not in all of our statutes relating to the condemnation of private property to public use, whether directly, or indirectly through the action of corporations. The object of the provision, wherever it appears, is to prevent a waste of money by needless litigation, and to expedite condemnations whenever the public good requires that they should be made. But it is unnecessary to pursue the argument, for in Harper v. Richardson (22 Cal. 251), the question was presented and decided, and it is broadly within the analogy of Gilmer v. Lime Point (19 Cal. 47).

Not only was the complaint defective on the ground that it contained no averment that the plaintiff "could not agree" with the Board of Supervisors on the damages, but the evidence upon which appellant relies as making out the fact itself, has no tendency to prove it. The petition for the road was presented to the Board of Supervisors on the 4th of August, 1862; and on the same day the plaintiff filed with the Clerk of the Board a petition for "just and reasonable damages," in the event that the road should be laid out. The filing of this paper with the Clerk was the only step taken by the plaintiff from first to last, in the matter of the damages. The fourth section of the Act of 1861 provides that "any person owning land through which it is proposed to locate a public highway, and desiring to apply for damages in consequence of such location, shall make application by petition in writing to the Board of Supervisors on the day on which such application shall be made, wherein he shall set forth the particular road referred to, the amount and character of the land affected thereby, and other circumstances relating to the subject of damages upon such land; and all persons who fail to do so shall be considered as waiving all rights to damages." Obviously, the plaintiff's purpose in filing his petition with the Clerk was to avert the consequence with the statute would have coupled with a failure on his part so to do. The petition was in the nature of a pleading, and was as essential to the life of his claim as is an answer in an ordinary action at law to save a defendant from judgment by default. It was a statute step taken by the plaintiff by way of initiating a claim for damages against the county, and the most that can be said concerning the document is, that the plaintiff, by filing it, took the first step in the statute series toward establishing his claim. The petition and the filing of it begin and end in that. If the plaintiff had not filed the petition, there would have been nothing to agree about, for the right would have been lost, and the Supervisors would have been guilty of malversation in office if they had allowed damages to the plaintiff in any amount. An attempt, at least, "to agree with the Board," is a condition precedent to a right of action; and we do not consider that the taking of one step amounts, in legal effect, to the taking of another differing from the first in purpose and essential nature. Nor is the filing of the petition to be set down for evidence that any overture or other move was ever made by the plaintiff looking to a compromise or agreement respecting his claim. He had his statute opportunity of making the merits of his claim known to the Board on the 22d of September, when they met under the sixth section of the Act, for the purpose of final action on the general question and all collateral matters connected therewith. But the plaintiff did not make known to the Board on that occasion, nor thereafter, what he conceived to be the amount of his "just and reasonable damages," nor the amount he would take in conciliation. He did not even attend the meeting. Under this state of facts we cannot consider that the evidence of the plaintiff had any tendency to show that he "could not agree with the Board of Supervisors as to the amount of damages sustained," and that he was driven to his action by necessity.

HENRY W. SEALE v. CHARLES McLAUGHLIN

VACATING JUDGMENT AND ALLOWING DEFENDANT TO ANSWER.—A defendant upon whom no service of summons was made, but against whom a judgment has been entered upon his demurrer, after an attorney had appeared and demurred for him without authority, is not entitled to have the judgment vacated where he is informed before judgment that an attorney has appeared for him, and a long time elapses before judgment, and he does not show that he has a meritorious defense.

AFFIRMED BY APPELLANT.

APPEARANCE OF ATTORNEY WITHOUT AUTHORITY.—The appearance of an attorney for a defendant, who has not been served with summons, gives the Court jurisdiction of the person, even if the attorney appears without authority.

JUDGMENT UPON OVERRULING DEMURRER.—Where a frivolous demurrer is filed, and no leave is asked to file an answer, it is not error for the Court to enter a default and judgment for plaintiff upon overruling the demurrer.

• APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

There were several defendants in the action, and upon overruling the demurrer, the Court entered a default against McLaughlin. The attorney did not ask for leave to answer for McLaughlin. McLaughlin alone appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Charles N. Fox, for Appellant.

We claim that the Court erred, whatever may have been the facts in regard to the authority under which McLaughlin had been brought into Court:

First—In treating the joint demurrer of several defendants as the separate demurrer of McLaughlin alone.

Second—In entering default instantan upon overruling demurrer, without giving defendant an opportunity to answer. We think the same rule should apply in such cases as that laid down in the case of Gallagher v. Delany, 10 Cal. 410, where the Court held that it was error to render judgment final upon demurrer to plaintiff's complaint; that if the demurrer was sustained, it should have been with leave to amend; and in case plaintiff declined to amend, then the judgment should be entered.

We are entitled to relief under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act. This section "applies not only to cases where judgment has been taken regularly, without personal service, as upon publication, but also to cases of judgments entered erroneously, without any service of summons or appearance of defendant." (Lewis v. Rigney et als., 21 Cal. 268.)

In this case there was no service of summons and no authorized appearance. "It is sufficient that the judgment and final process against an individual are unauthorized, to justify an application by him to set them aside." (Lambert v. Converse, 22 Howard Pr. R. 265.)

And the granting of the relief in this case will not affect the rights of the plaintiff as against the other defendants, and consequently our rights to it need not be affected by the judgment or claim against them. (See Lewis v. Bigney, above cited.)

S. O. Houghton, for Respondent.

The judgment had become final by the expiration of the term at which it was rendered. (Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 583; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; De Castro v. Richardson, 25 Cal. 49.)

Even though the Court had power to grant the motion of defendant, it would not do so unless it was made to appear that the defendant had or would sustain some injury by the judgment.

By the Court, SAWYER, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon default against defendant, McLaughlin, after overruling demurrer to the complaint, and from an order subsequent to the judgment denying motion to vacate it. The motion was made on affidavits of defendant, Gordon, and his attorney, on the ground that the appearance on behalf of McLaughlin was by mistake and without authority. The action was brought against Gordon and several of his tenants to recover certain lands claimed by Gordon. It does not appear in the affidavits by direct averment that McLaughlin was not also a tenant of Gordon. In fact, there seems to be in Gordon's affidavit, a studied avoidance of any statement as to the relation of McLaughlin to Gordon, or the land. There was, however, conversation between Gordon's clerks and McLaughlin upon the subject, and Gordon states that McLaughlin declined to join in the defense, and said he would defend for himself when served. The time to answer being about to expire, Gordon's attorney, by his direction, telegraphed to plaintiff's attorney: "Give us some ten days extension as to all the defendants except McGovern and Ramirez, who are not on our ranch." No answer having been received, to save a default till a stipulation for time could be procured, Gordon's attorney filed a demurrer for Gordon and all the defendants, (including McLaughlin by name,) except McGovern and Ramirez; and notified the plaintiff's attorney that he only did it to procure time, and that he did not intend to argue it. Time was subsequently given to all the defendants for whom the attorneys appeared. When the answer was filed McLaughlin's name was omitted. Gordon and his attorneys disavow any authority to appear for McLaughlin.

On the 12th of January the demurrer of McLaughlin was overruled, and his default for want of answer entered. The defendants who answered appeared, and proofs having been heard, judgment was rendered against all the defendants on the 13th of January. No proceedings were instituted to vacate the judgment against McLaughlin till May 2d, when notice of the motion was served — nearly four months after the entry of judgment, and long after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered.

There is no pretense set up in the affidavits that McLaughlin has any shadow of right to the land, or defense to the action; and McLaughlin himself does not even take the trouble to make an affidavit on his own behalf in the case. On the other hand, it appears by the affidavit of respondent — which is not in any particular contradicted — that he had taken a copy of summons and complaint for the purpose of having it sent to San Francisco for service on McLaughlin; that before service he was informed by his attorney that McLaughlin had appeared, and service was unnecessary; and, in consequence of this information, the summons was returned without service; that soon after receiving this information he saw defendant (McLaughlin) and informed him that Gordon had caused an appearance to be entered for him (McLaughlin); that considerable conversation was had between them upon the subject, and that McLaughlin treated the subject with such apparent indifference as to induce respondent to suppose that he (McLaughlin) cared little how the case would result. He also avers — and the averment is wholly uncontradicted — that McLaughlin has no right, title or interest of any kind whatever in the premises, and is but a trespasser thereon without any right whatever.

Conceding, for the purposes of the argument, that the defendant is one of the parties who is entitled to apply to have the judgment vacated after the expiration of the term under section sixty-eight of the Practice Act, we think the Court clearly right in denying the motion, under the circumstances of this case. There was an appearance, which gave the Court jurisdiction. The appearance, by filing demurrer, was on August 20th, 1863, and the judgment was not entered till January 13th, 1864. The defendant was informed of the fact of the appearance, made no objection, and took no steps to vacate it. The other party was misled by his action, and for that reason did not procure a service which he might have done. He does not pretend to show that he has any defense whatever; and the other party, without any contradiction, shows that he had none, but was a mere trespasser. If he has any meritorious defense he has not shown it, and he has manifested a great degree of laches, and a singular indifference in regard to his rights by which the plaintiff was misled to his injury. We think the motion properly denied.

There was no error in entering judgment for want of an answer upon the overruling of the demurrer. "When a demurrer to a complaint is overruled, and there is no answer filed, the Court may, upon such terms as may be just, and upon payment of costs, allow an answer to be filed." (Practice Act, Sec. 67.) But it does not follow that it must in all cases be done. Ordinarily, the Court should doubtless allow an answer to be filed where the demurrer has been interposed in good faith, with some ground for supposing that it would be sustained. But in this case no leave was asked to file an answer, and the demurrer was manifestly frivolous, and confessedly put in to obtain time, without any intention to rely upon it. Under the circumstances there was, it is true, no improper use intended or attempted to be made of it by the attorneys who put it in. But there was no error in entering judgment upon overruling the demurrer thus interposed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

ORIGINAL AND AMENDED COMPLAINTS.—For the purpose of determining whether new matter contained in an amended complaint is entirely foreign to the cause of action contained in the original complaint, the original complaint must receive a liberal construction.

AMENDMENTS TO COMPLAINT FOR WATER RIGHTS.—If the complaint avers the ownership of land in the bed of and near the banks of a stream, and work done thereon to dig a canal and build a dam to use the waters of the stream, and is framed for a judgment to recover possession of the property from one who is averred to have ousted plaintiff, if the plaintiff asks it, he should be allowed to amend his complaint by inserting therein averments of his prior appropriation of the water and a diversion by defendant, with prayer for an injunction.

ALLOWANCE OF AMENDMENTS TO A COMPLAINT.—An amendment should be allowed to a complaint at the request of the plaintiff, so as to make it express the cause of action originally intended but ambiguously expressed, if the intention is manifest on the face of the complaint.

CONSTRUCTION OF A PLEADING.—The common law rule that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader where the language used is ambiguous, has no application where the pleader confesses that his pleading is ambiguous and asks to amend it.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

The following was the original complaint in this action:

"The plaintiff, a body corporate under the laws of the State of California, created on or about the 28th day of June, A. D. 1851, under the name and style of 'The South Yuba Mining and Sacramento Canal Company,' but now exercising its functions and using the corporate name of the 'Nevada County and Sacramento Canal Company,' by virtue of a special Act of the Legislature of the said State of California, which was duly signed, and on the same day approved by his excellency the Governor of said State, to wit: on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1855, whereby the same became a law, said plaintiff in its capacity of a corporate body, and by its name, complaining, charges and avers that on and before, and for a long time prior to the 14th, the 15th, and 16th days of February, A. D. 1855, the plaintiff was the owner in fee, as he is informed and believes, and had been in the peaceable and quite possession of the following described sections, lots, pieces, or parcels of land, enjoying the rents and profits thereof, to wit: the first commencing on the South Yuba River, four hundred and twenty rods above the summit of the gap which divides the south branch of the said Yuba from the waters of Bear River, and which summit is a part of a small valley reaching within eighty rods of the said Yuba River, and better known by the name of "Bear Valley Gap." Said point of commencement is designated by being a short distance above some falls or rapids in said river, and where a pine or fir tree had fallen, and on or about the said 14th, 15th, and 16th days of February, A. D. 1855, did lie quite across the stream of the said South Yuba River, above the water thereof; thence down the east side of said river with its meanders three hundred and forty rods; and thence eighty rods or thereabout into said valley to a cabin or small house erected by plaintiff; said section, lot, piece, or parcel of land having a width of six hundred and sixty feet, more or less, for its whole length, with the bank of the river and the mountains on the north and north-east, and on the south and southeast, Bear Valley; said premises being situated in part in said Bear Valley Gap, and a gorge running down from the mountains on the right hand side of said river, as the same is ascended from said gap, as he is informed and verily believes.

"The other section, lot, piece, or parcel of land, adjoins the first above described premises, commencing at said cabin or small house, having the same length and width, to wit: a length of four hundred and twenty rods, by a width of six hundred and sixty feet, more or less, and extending southwest into the said Bear Valley, and being a part thereof, as he is informed and verily believes.

"That by virtue of its ownership of said sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, said plaintiff entered on said land with all and singular the appurtenances appertaining thereto, and was possessed thereof; and the said plaintiff being so possessed of said land and premises, caused levels to be taken, and a survey to be made for a flume, canal or ditch, and caused notices to be posted to the effect that plaintiff claimed all the waters of the South Yuba River for mining and other purposes, and thereupon plaintiff erected a cabin or small house, and commenced to work upon said flume, canal or ditch, and for a long time, to wit: from on or about the month of June, A. D. 1851, until on or about the 16th day of February, A. D. 1855, did work thereon by its representatives, agents, and servants, and did enjoy the profits and revenues thereof, as he is informed and verily believes. And that the point above described, where said pine or fir tree had fallen and lay across said stream, was located, held, enjoyed, and possessed by the plaintiff, as a location for a dam to turn the waters of the said South Yuba River into its flume, canal or ditch, and that upon said location and premises said plaintiff had expended large sums of money; that the defendants in the above entitled cause afterwards, to wit: on or about the sixteenth day of February, A. D. 1855, with force and arms, entered into and upon the above described two sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, with the appurtenances belonging thereto, in the possession of said plaintiff, and the said defendants ejected said plaintiff out of the possession of the said two sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, and out of all and singular the appurtenances thereunto belonging. And that said defendants did, on or about the 16th day of February, A. D. 1855, wrongfully and unlawfully, with force and arms, drive off the agents and servants of said plaintiff, who were then, in behalf of plaintiff, employed in the construction of the said dam which plaintiff was then building at the aforesaid point, for the purpose of diverting the waters of the stream of the said Yuba River, and that said defendants have, since said 16th day of February, constructed a flume, which runs from the point above described where said pine or fir tree lay across the said Yuba River, through the two sections of land above described belonging as aforesaid to plaintiff, southwest towards the summit dividing the waters of Bear River and Steep Hollow Creek, on the line surveyed through said lands of plaintiff, and upon which plaintiff has had his agents and servants employed in constructing its said flume, canal or ditch, and that said defendants unlawfully detain from plaintiff all said lots of land, and the appurtenances thereunto belonging, together with all the improvements made by said plaintiff as aforesaid, together with its line of survey, and have wrongfully and unlawfully, with force and arms, obstructed and prevented the erection of the works designed by plaintiff, thereby causing to plaintiff great damages and loss, to wit: damages in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, and that said amount has accrued on account of said wrongful acts since the 6th day of March, A. D. 1855.

"Wherefore plaintiff brings this suit, and prays for a judgment for a restitution of all the above described premises, and one hundred thousand dollars damages, together with costs and money expended, and disbursements, and for general relief."

The Court, on defendants' motion, struck out of the amended complaint, as irrelevant and redundant, the following:

Statement of Facts.

"That said land and said point on said river was owned, possessed, and occupied by plaintiff, for the purpose of constructing a canal through and upon the same, to divert and carry the water of said river flowing down to said point into the mining region below said Bear Valley, to be used for mining and other purposes, and that plaintiff did locate and survey a line of ditch or canal for the purpose aforesaid, upon and through the land aforesaid, from the point aforesaid on said river, and located and occupied said point for the purpose of constructing a dam thereat and thereon, to divert all the water of said river at said point into the canal located by plaintiff as aforesaid. That having made said location of said claim and said canal, and having taken and acquired actual and peaceable possession of the premises aforesaid, plaintiff commenced the actual construction of a dam at the point aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, and the construction of a canal for the purpose aforesaid, on the line and upon the premises aforesaid, whereby plaintiff alleges that by reason of the matter hereinbefore stated it became entitled to the exclusive use and possession of the water flowing down said river at the point aforesaid, and the right to divert the same from its natural bed." * * * "and soon thereafter commenced the construction of a canal upon the line located by plaintiff as aforesaid, and through the land aforesaid, and the construction of a dam at the point aforesaid, for the purpose of diverting the water of said Yuba River into such canal, and continued such construction until they completed said dam and canal, the same being the canal known and called the South Yuba Canal, and diverted the water of said river at the point aforesaid by means of said dam and canal through said canal."

The amended complaint contained a prayer for an injunction. Defendant recovered judgment, and plaintiff appealed and assigned as error the order of the Court striking out portions of the complaint. The complaint as left, after the Court had made the order striking out, stated a cause of action for recovery of possession of the land.

Argument for Appellant.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. Casserly, and W. H. L. Barnes, for Appellant.

The complaint, though inartificially, or even imperfectly drawn, indicates distinctly enough the scope and purpose of the suit. The action is for a series of trespasses upon the plaintiff's lands and property, but mainly upon its water rights in and connected with the same, and especially its rights to appropriate and divert all the waters of the South Yuba River, for mining and other purposes, by and through a dam connecting with a ditch or flume in course of construction at and from a point on the river, and passing through and over the plaintiff's lands.

In this State the liberal exercise of the right of amendment of pleadings is deemed to be highly conducive to the full and prompt administration of justice, and is broadly sustained by this Court. A few cases will be cited: first, for the general doctrine, and next for the particular applications of it:

General doctrine:—McMillan v. Dana, 18 Cal. 349, subd. 4; Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 457; Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 130, 131; Lestrade v. Barth, 17 Cal. 289; Gillen v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156, sub. fin.; Smith v. Yreka County, 14 Cal. 201, 202; Connolly v. Peck, 3 Cal. 82; Gallagher v. Delany, 10 Cal. 410; and see 12 Cal. 449.

Particular applications:—McDonald v. Bear River Company, 15 Cal. 145, 149—complaint held by this Court fatally defective as “looking to equitable relief only, and not sufficient to authorize a determination of the legal rights of the parties,” (p. 148,) allowed in this Court, upon remanding the cause, to be amended so as to obviate the defect. Connolly v. Peck, 3 Cal. 75–82—to the same effect. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254—joint plea of Statute of Limitations amended on the trial, after it was held bad, by the filing of a separate plea. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 490, 493, 494—complaint on assignment of a mortgage by a married woman without her husband's concurrence; held fatally defective, but allowed to be amended.

George Cadwalader, for Respondents.

It was a pure and simple complaint in ejectment, averring title and possession in plaintiff, an ouster and detention by defendants, and claiming judgment for restitution. Instead of a simple allegation of ouster by defendants, the complaint averred at length the manner of the ouster, or the intention of the defendants in seizing the land, etc. These comments were unnecessary and improper, (Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95; Boles v. Weifenback, 15 Cal. 144; Payne & Dewey v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243,) and could have been stricken out on motion, (Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 571;) but they do not alter the nature of the action, which was simple ejectment to recover possession of certain parcels of land.

The amendments raise the question of the right to the use of the waters of the Yuba, and claim damages for their diversion by defendants. Now, the defendants could admit every material allegation of the original complaint, and it would not follow that plaintiff is entitled to use a drop of the Yuba water. The plaintiff may have owned the strip of land, as claimed, and the defendants, by prior appropriation, or subsequent appropriation and adverse use, may have acquired a right to the water. The numerous cases cited by appellant's counsel in their brief merely show that where there has been no gross abuse of discretion by an inferior Court in the matter of an amendment, the appellate Court will not interfere.

By the Court, SANDERSON, C. J.

The motion to strike out certain portions of the amended complaint was made upon two grounds: first, because the same were irrelevant and redundant; and second, because they contained a cause or causes of action not embraced in the original complaint.

So far as the first ground is concerned, our examination must be confined to the amended complaint, for it cannot be said that any matter contained in one pleading is irrelevant or redundant to a cause of action set out in another and different pleading. It is obvious on inspection that the matter stricken from the amended complaint was not irrelevant or redundant to the cause of action therein set forth, and we do not understand counsel for the respondents as claiming that it was. We may therefore dismiss that branch of the motion without further comment.

It is unnecessary to discuss the questions (so elaborately argued by counsel) which would be presented were we to assume, as alleged in the second ground upon which the motion was made, that the amended complaint contains a cause or causes of action not alleged, or more properly speaking, attempted to be alleged in the original, for the reason that, after a careful examination and comparison of both, we have come to the conclusion that such is not the fact.

The matter stricken out of the amended complaint mainly relates to the alleged right of the plaintiff to the use of the waters of the South Yuba River, and the alleged interference by the defendants with the enjoyment of that right, to the damage and prejudice of the plaintiff. Is this matter entirely foreign to the original complaint? If it is, the question as to whether the amended complaint goes further than is allowed by our code of procedure touching amendments arises, otherwise not.

For the purpose of determining this question, the allegations of the original complaint must receive a liberal construction, with a view to substantial justice between the parties, (Prac. Act, Sec. 70;) and we may add, that they must be read in the light of the law governing water rights in the mineral regions of this State, as it stood at the time the complaint was drawn, which was as far back as October, 1855. At that time this branch of our local law had not altogether cast off its milk and swaddling clothes. The rules governing the acquisition and tenures of water rights by miners and ditch or canal companies had not been so clearly defined as they have been since that time. The profession had not fully learned to regard those rights as something separate and apart from an ownership of the soil, but to some extent, at least, continued to regard them as in some measure dependent upon a right or title to the land. There was also some doubt and conflict of opinion as to what was the proper remedy in case of an ouster or interference with the possession and enjoyment of such rights — whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to sue for the possession of the land, or content himself with alleging a prior appropriation of the water merely. The original complaint in this case, as will appear hereafter, was drawn upon the former theory. When, therefore, we read it for the purpose of ascertaining what is the substantial cause of action therein set forth, or attempted to be set forth, we must not overlook the condition of the law as above described.

The complaint commences by averring that the plaintiff is a corporation, and, although it is not expressly averred, yet it is apparent from the name and style of the corporation and other matters set out in the complaint, that the corporation was formed for the purpose of carrying on the canal or ditch business, as known and understood in the mineral regions of the State. Being a corporation, the plaintiff had no capacity to take or hold land beyond the necessities of its business. The very object and purpose of its formation was the acquisition and use of water rights and privileges as a principal thing, and not the acquisition and use of land except as something incidental to the main purpose. It is true that this fact, by itself considered, is not entitled to much weight, but when considered in connection with other facts and circumstances which appear, as we shall presently see, in the body of the complaint, it is worthy of notice in determining what was the substantial cause of action upon which the plaintiff relied, and which it intended to allege.

The complaint thereafter substantially takes on the form of a complaint for the recovery of real property and avers that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of certain lands, describing them in part as bounded by the South Yuba River; but it is apparent from what follows the description of the lands that a recovery of the possession of the lands was not the sole and only purpose of the action. On the contrary, the plaintiff seems to have alleged its ownership of the land more by way of inducement than as a principal thing, or as a supposed necessary foundation for the water rights or privileges subsequently asserted and claimed; for immediately upon the heel of the description of the lands, the complaint proceeds in these words: "That by virtue of its ownership of said sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, said plaintiff entered on said land with all and singular the appurtenances pertaining thereto, and was possessed thereof; and the said plaintiff, being so possessed of said land and premises, caused levels to be taken and a survey to be made for a flume, canal or ditch, and caused notices to be posted to the effect that plaintiff claimed all the waters of the South Yuba River, for mining and other purposes, and thereupon the plaintiff erected a cabin or small house and commenced to work upon said flume, canal or ditch, and for a long time, to wit: from on or about the month of June, 1851, until on or about the 16th day of February, 1855, did work thereon by its representatives, agents and servants, and did enjoy the profits and revenues thereof, as it is informed and verily believes. And that the point above described, where said pine or fir tree had fallen and lay across said stream, was located, held, enjoyed and possessed by the plaintiff as a location for a dam to turn the waters of the said South Yuba River into its flume, canal or ditch, and that upon said location and premises said plaintiff had expended large sums of money; that the defendants in the above entitled cause afterwards, to wit: on or about the 16th day of February, 1855, with force and arms, entered into and upon the above described two sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, with the appurtenances belonging thereto, in the possession of said plaintiff, and the said defendants ejected said plaintiff out of the possession of the said two sections, lots, pieces or parcels of land, and out of all and singular the appurtenances thereunto belonging." By the word "appurtenances" the pleader manifestly refers to the plaintiff's alleged water rights.

Thereafter it is averred in substance that defendants entered and drove off the plaintiff's agents at work upon the dam and canal, and took forcible possession of the plaintiff's dam and survey, and constructed for themselves a dam and flume and forcibly prevented the plaintiff from proceeding with the erection of the works designed by it, to its damage, in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, and closing with a prayer for restitution, damages and general relief.

To hold that this complaint was framed solely for the purpose of recovering the possession of the lands therein described, regardless of all right or claim to the waters of the South Yuba River for canal purposes, would be to hold that more than half of the body of the complaint is meaningless, and was inserted without design and for no useful purpose. We cannot so regard it. On the contrary, we are satisfied, from the whole tenor and scope of the complaint, that in the mind of the pleader the trespass upon the plaintiff's alleged water rights by the defendants was the gravamen of the action, and that a restoration to those rights was the principal object sought by the institution of the suit.

It follows that the Court below erred in allowing the motion to strike out, and that the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Ordered accordingly.

SAWYER, J., dissenting.

I dissent.

On petition for rehearing, SANDERSON, C. J., delivered the following opinion, CURREY, J., concurring:

A petition for rehearing has been filed in which it is suggested that in the interpretation of the original complaint in this case we have adopted the wrong rule of construction. We adopted the rule prescribed in the seventieth section of the code of procedure, which is in the following language:

"In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effects, its allegations shall be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties."

Opinion of the Court on Petition for Rehearing.

If the foregoing rule can have any application whatever it is to a case like the present.

The common law rule that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader where the language used is ambiguous has not, as counsel seems to suppose, been forgotten by us; but we did not fall into the error of supposing that it had any application to the question presented by the record in this case. Where the pleader stands upon his pleading and maintains its sufficiency in law in the presence of a demurrer or other hostile attack, the rule to which counsel appeals with so much confidence undoubtedly applies. In such a case all doubts are to be resolved against the pleader. He asks no mercy and is entitled to no quarter. But that is not this case. Here the pleader confesses that his pleading is bad, and that it imperfectly and ambiguously expresses his meaning and intent, and he therefore appeals to the mercy of the Court to be allowed to amend it "in furtherance of justice," so as to present more clearly his cause of complaint. To such a case, the rule under consideration, which is a rule of war and not of mercy, can have no possible application; on the contrary, the utmost liberality, consistent with the ends of justice, ought to be exercised by the Court.

But it is, in effect, further claimed that the rule in question ought to be applied to this case at least, because the plaintiff has allowed it to sleep in the Clerk's office for nearly ten years. If the case has been allowed to sleep to the prejudice of the defendants, the fault is theirs. They have had it in their power to force the case to a final result at any time, as much so as the plaintiff. Why the case was thus allowed to sleep is entirely unexplained by the record, and we are bound to presume that it was by mutual consent. Such being the case, neither party can complain of the delay, whether there was any good cause for it or not.

Rehearing denied.

I concur in the order.

Mr. Justice RHODES and Mr. Justice SAWYER did not express any opinion on the petition for rehearing.
